Stumble, do you, christian friend? At what? Do you stumble because others stumble? stumble over those who profess the higher christian life? Meanwhile it is said of them, "What do ye more than others?" Is this wise, prudent or safe? What does this stumbling of yours differ in principle from the unregenerate, who, instead of looking into the perfect law of liberty, to see and know what pure and undefiled religion is before God and the Father, fix their eye on some painted hypocrite, some whitened sepulchre, or one who makes clean the outside of the cup and the platter, but within is full of extortion and excess? tithes mint, anise and cummin, and omits the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith? "Have all the workers of iniquity no knowledge? who eat up my people, as they eat bread, and call not upon the Lord?"—Isa. 14: 4.

Brother, instead of gazing at these stumbling stones in the church, that profess to be holy, entirely sanctified, and at the same time by their works deny they are holy, why not take the word of God, like the noble Bereans, search the Scriptures daily to see and know for yourself whether or not there is in very deed such a thing as being dead to sin and alive to God through our Lord Jesus Christ, and of being sanctified wholly, spirit, soul, and body; such a thing as being crucified to the world, and the world to us; such a thing as being steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord?

Suppose many professing holiness of heart and life stumble, mar the peace of Jerusalem, deny their profession, by their wicked works bring guilt, disgrace and misery on themselves, and cause the enemies to rejoice and blaspheme? Suppose some do bring an evil report concerning the goodly land? does this invalidate or nullify Bible facts, or the testimony of the steadfast and the immovable? those in very deed enjoying gospel fullness? Discard all truth, then, on the same principle. This would be trifling with the experience and memory of the useful dead, these who have lived and died in the full enjoyment of this blessed assurance of hope.

It would grieve the Holy Spirit to speak lightly or doubtfully of this doctrine, or withhold its prominence in the pulpit and out of it, because the lives of some of its professors demonstrate that they mistook its real nature. Some object, others are discouraged, because the doctrine has been so often dishonored. It has been preached occasionally, and more frequently professed, by some whose spirit and tempers were rude, uncouth, coarse, proud, selfish, egotistical, dogmatical. Shall we, for this reason, abandon this blessed Bible truth? Why not, on the same principle, give up repentance, justification, and every other Bible doctrine? Stumbling blocks and crooked sticks there are not a few—reprobate silver, also. But, because there are counterfeits in our currency, is there no pure coin? We speak as to wise men; judge ye what we say.

"Let us, to perfect love restored,
Thy image here retrieve,
And in the knowledge of our Lord,
The life of angels live."

NICKNAMES.

Some whole families are nicknamed. John is called "Jack," James is called "Jim," Joseph is called "Joe," and so on to the last. Sometimes these names are intended for pet names, and are sometimes given from pure dislike. But when the whole town gets to calling Joseph Smith "Joe Smith" in his youth, he is Joe Smith through life, at home and abroad. Even after he is dead, his children are called "Joe Smith's family."

Perhaps, on this account some people are afraid of nicknames. But the most important thing is to know the cause of the name's being given, and whether those that name us be friends or foes.

Now professing christians, from some cause or causes, have a variety of names. But most of them have been given by outsiders. Thus, the followers of Wesley are called Wesleyans; the followers of Calvin are called Calvinists. But I doubt if Wesley or Calvin ever asked the church of God to be called by their respective names.

But to come home to my own family, there are a few of us now and then hailed by the name "Millerite." How is this? Why, one William Miller proclaimed the speedy coming of the Lord, and hence, according to nickname laws, all who agree with him on this point, though they may differ on every other, are called "Millerites."

In the same way the church of Christ, in the beginning of the gospel dispensation, were called "Christians." The old Jewish church looked upon Jesus Christ as a rude founder of a fanatical sect, and to distinguish them from others that believed in God the Father, they were named for their leader by their enemies. And however sweet the name Christian may sound, it is no more a Bible name than God-ist would be, for we follow God if we follow Christ. I do not believe the disciples took this name upon themselves: for the record says they were "called Christians first at Antioch,"—not "they called themselves Christians."

The Master calls his followers by very many endearing names, and the names he gives are as suitable for us as the name given by the people of Antioch. He calls his disciples "sheep," "lambs," "servants," "friends," "believers," "saints," "brethren," "little flock," etc., etc., but it would not be convenient for us to take all these names as a society. God has given the world, through his church, startling messages from time to time. In these last days, when every body is searching for something new, when the first inquiry is, from all you meet, "What's the news?" the church of Christ has "news" to tell them. So they prophecy—men and women—for the spirit of prophecy is poured on male and female,—"The Bridegroom cometh! Go ye out to meet him." And while the church is proclaiming the second advent of Christ, those who stand by and hear seize the expressive word "Advent," and with it nickname us "Adventists," thereby distinguishing us from other Christians, who do not proclaim the Advent of the Lord.

"O," says one, "I see you are full of Adventism, but it's all I can do to be a christian, without troubling myself about the 'ists,' or 'ites,' or 'isms.'"

Well, if believing in the near coming of my Savior makes me an "Adventist," I can afford to be a Christian and an Adventist too. I mean to stand up boldly for these latter-day truths, and if people think I need a new name, I don't know but its time to have one; and as the name they give me so fully expresses my views, what is the use to hang my head, blush, and say, "That isn't my name; I was called a Christian down at Antioch." No doubt the people of Antioch would call you a "Millerite," if you lived there now, and strange if they didn't call you a half-crazed one at that.

I love the coming-of-the-Lord doctrine. It is all through me and my house. It keeps me from worldliness and foolishness. It is truth, and will purify the heart when the heart has it. And if my name can proclaim the Lord's coming to poor, blind, perishing men, I could willingly bear as many names as English princes have. Glory be to God, the truth grows brighter every day. And I shall not be satisfied till Jesus comes and is crowned Lord of lords and King of kings. Other rulers make such sad work that I sigh for the reign of Christ. Lord, hasten the time, according to thy wisdom.

Dear pilgrims, be of good courage. In a little while the conflict will be over, and O, how blessed it will be when we once get where we can know that "former things have passed away." There we can feel safe, and forever be at home. All God's family will be there. O, I shall look for the patriarchs of old, and the holy prophets. When God calls, they will answer with shouts.

Let us search ourselves, and see if there be any evil ways with us. The "Bride" is to make "herself ready." It does not belong to the Bridegroom to prepare the Bride for the wedding, but when once they are made one, his utmost is done to make her happy, and to provide for her a pleasant home. And what a "sweet, sweet home" the heavenly Bridegroom will prepare for us. Ought we not to qualify ourselves for the kingly courts into which we are to enter. May this be our daily employment. Amen.

DEATH AND THE GRAVE.

Death and the grave have been by many considered only in a doleful and frightful aspect. Christ our Redeemer hath burst the bars of death and led captivity captive;—obtained victory over death and the grave, and provided a way whereby the christian believer can be rescued from the grave and participate in the joys of eternal bliss.

But, notwithstanding all that Christ hath done for us through his infinite mercy, we have something to do ourselves to insure our salvation. Christ hath enjoined upon us to take up our cross and follow him; to keep sacred his commandments, obey his precepts, and lead a holy and upright life. This must we do before we can be made heirs of his grace and his kingdom. Surely, we must keep his commands with a humble spirit and a contrite heart, in order to secure our salvation. It is our reasonable duty so to do. Hence we can rejoice in the following assurance that Christ has promised in his word, whose word can never fail, to restore all those who will come to him with a humble spirit and a contrite heart.

To illustrate the subject more fully, let me speak a little upon the efficacy of true and undefiled religion; it is the source in and through the merits of Christ of all our happiness, both here and hereafter. Wherever we see the light of divine grace planted in the heart of man, there shines the holy ray of religion to soothe the mind and spread around it a heavenly calm. It is a bright emanation from the throne of God, shining into the soul to illumine its dark resources, and call into action our noblest faculties, to adore and serve him who gave us our existence. The possessor of this heavenly boon,—the christian religion,—can without fear ride over the storms of life which beat upon him.

Now my humble prayer to God is, that he may sanctify his word to us, that we may become heirs of his grace and kingdom, where we may sit down among his redeemed ones and sing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

Fisherville, N. H. John Elkins.

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

1. This word, I have learned, is a word importing difficulty. It shows how hardly the apostle Paul came by his contentment of mind. St. Paul did not come naturally by it, but he had learned it. It cost him many a prayer and tear—it was taught him by the Spirit of God.

From whence we may learn that 2. Good things are hard to come by. The business of religion is not so easy as most do imagine. I have learned, saith St. Paul. Indeed, you need not learn a man to sin. This is natural, (Ps. 58,) and therefore easy; it comes as water out of a spring. It is an easy thing to be wicked; hell will be taken without storm, but matter of religion must be learned. To cut the flesh is easy; but to prick a vein and not cut an artery is hard. The trade of sin needs not to be learned; but divine contentment is not achieved without holy industry. I have learned.

There are two pregnant reasons why there must be so much study and exercise.

1. Because spiritual things are against nature. Every thing in religion is antipodes to nature. There are, in religion, two things: faith and practice; and both are against nature. 1. Faith, or matters of faith; as, for a man to be justified by the righteousness of another; to become a fool, that he may be wise; to save all, by losing all—this is against nature. 2. Matters of practice. As, 1. Self-denial; for a man to deny his own wisdom, and see himself blind; his own will, and have it melted into the will of God; plucking out the right eye, beheading and crucifying that sin, which is the favorite, and lies nearest to the heart; for a man to be dead to the world; and, in the midst of want, to abound: for a man to take up the cross, and follow Christ, was only in golden, but bloody paths; to embrace religion, when it is dressed in its night-clothes, all the jewels of honor and preferment being pulled off. This is against nature; and, therefore, must be learned. 3. Self-examination: for a man to take his heart, as a watch, all in pieces; to set up a spiritual inquisition, or court of conscience, and traverse things in his own soul; to take David's candle and lantern, (Ps. 119: 105.) and search for sin; nay, as judge, to pass the sentence upon himself. 2 Sam. 15: 17. This is against nature, and will not easily be attained to without learning. 3. Self-reformation. To see a man, as Caleb, of another spirit, walking antipodes to himself, the current of his life altered, and running into the channel of religion—this is wholly against nature. When a stone ascends, it is not a natural motion, but a violent; the motion of the soul heaven-ward, is a violent motion—it must be learned. Flesh and blood are not skilled in these things. Nature can no more cast out nature than Satan can cast out Satan.

A Chain of Truths.—Rarely has so golden a chain of verities been linked together in one short paragraph as the following, by President Quincy: "The great comprehensive truths written in letters of living light on every page of history, are these: human happiness has no perfect security but freedom; freedom none but virtue; virtue none but knowledge; and neither freedom nor virtue has any vigor or immortal hope except in the principles of the christian faith and in the sanctions of the christian religion."

FROM HATTIE.

Mr. Miles Grant:—Dear Bro.,—I have read your paper for some time, and like it very much indeed, the "Children's Corner" particularly. I am trying to do right and love the Savior. Although I am young, I know I am not too young to die.

There is no "Try Company" in this place. We have a very nice Sabbath school of one hundred and nineteen scholars. I am but twelve years old. I am trying to serve the Lord, and will try to be faithful.

NO USE IN THE WORLD.

In a lonely cottage, on the borders of a thick wood, lived an old woman. She was past eighty, bent, infirm, and ailing. She was sitting in her little room, with a book on her knee. No fire in the grate, no bread in the cupboard, no tea in the canister, no blanket on the old bedstead; no, nothing at all did the old woman possess but her large book, over which she was poring. The last crust of bread, and the remaining cup of tea, had been consumed the day before. Her last penny was gone, her last blanket was pawned long ago; and nothing now remained but to pawn her book. Would she do so? Wait and see.

She read on, pointing to each word with her wrinkled finger. "What!" she at last exclaimed, "God has said this, and I so faithless that I have doubted his love? 'Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed.' Oh, how ungrateful I have been! My God has promised to feed me, and I doubt his word? No, indeed; he has given me bread for eighty-two years; and he will not leave me now." And then, placing her book on the table, she folded her hands, and, looking up to heaven, said,—

"Merciful God! thou hast promised to feed those that trust in thee: oh! leave me not; for I look to thee. Oh! send me bread, for thy dear Son's sake."

Then, rising, she went towards the cupboard to see if there was one bit of food left. But no; a dry plate, an empty cracked cup, a chipped tea-pot, an old bent spoon; that was all. Ill, hungry, and weak, the old woman sank down on her scanty bed exhausted.

Little children, do you ever remember, when you have plenty of good things to eat, warm clothes to wear, and kind friends to love you, that many people have not these necessaries of life? Do you remember the poor? One did that cold day, as we shall see.

"Let us walk through this pretty wood," said Flossy to her governess, as she ran along over the snow which crackled under her feet.

Little Flossy, on getting up that morning, after reading her Bible, knelt down to pray. It was not with her lips only, but with her whole heart, that she repeated her morning prayer. "Oh," thought she, "that I might be of some use in the world!" and she poured out her whole soul's desire to her heavenly Father. "Dear Savior," she said, "make me thy own child, and help me to please thee. Teach me what I can do for thee, how I can work for thee." And now was her prayer to be answered in that morning walk. They approached the wood and reached the cottage. Oh! I wonder who lives here," said Flossy; "do let me go and see."

"Well, you may, if you like; and I will stay outside," said her governess.

She gave a gentle tap at the door, and then opened it. There was the old woman lying on the bed as we left her. "Poor old woman," said Flossy, "are you ill?"

"That I am, dear," answered the woman.

"What can I do for you? Have you any thing to eat?" said the child.

"Ah, no!" gasped the poor creature.

"Oh! I'll go and ask mamma for something for you;" and off she ran out of the cottage. Her governess was waiting for her, and on hearing of the bad plight of the old woman, walked home very willingly to get some assistance. Flossy had no sooner told her mother the sad story than some good food was put in a basket, and sent down to the starving creature; and some fuel was also sent to make a fire. Flossy from that day became the friend of the old woman, often visiting her; and thus prayer was answered in both cases.

Was Flossy of any use in the world, young readers? What do you think? I am sure you say, "Yes." And can you not be of some use too? You may not have any old woman to relieve; but there are many other ways of doing good. Only ask God to make you of use in this world, and then look for opportunities; and you will soon find yourself thinking of other people instead of yourself. And remember this: nobody is too little to be God's servant.—Sunday Children's Friend.

TALKS WITH CHARLIE.

"Oh, Charlie, why don't you let Willie ride on your rocking-horse this afternoon? You know he has not got one, and he would enjoy it so much."

"But I want to ride now, mother."

"Another day would do just as well for you, when he is not here. I am sorry my little boy is so selfish."

I turned from him with a sorrowful look. He was silent a few moments, then ran to me, putting his arms around my neck, said with his own sweet, peculiar expression,

"Dear mother, am I very bad? What do you mean by selfishness?"

"I mean, my child, that you love to please yourself more than you do others. You are not willing to give up your toys to your little friends when they want them, yet wish them always to please you. Now when your friends come to make you a visit, you should do all in your power to make them happy. Try to forget yourself, think only how you can entertain them. If you were to visit your cousin Willie, you would like to have him let you play with his new toys, wouldn't you?"

"Yes, mother, he always does let me play with them. The last time I was there he let me use his new wagon, and used his old wheelbarrow. Oh, we had such fun drawing sand!"

"Now, suppose Willie had wanted the new wagon, would you have been as happy with the old wheelbarrow?"

"No, mother, I have played with it so many times, and then I have one just like it."

"Then you would have thought it selfish in Willie to have kept the nice wagon all to himself?"

He looked at me a moment, as if he were receiving a new idea; tears came into his eyes as he said,

"I was a bad boy; oh, mother, won't you forgive me? I see now what you mean by selfishness."

A kiss of forgiveness satisfied him, away he ran to play. Soon after I went into the play-room, and found the children very happy. Willie was riding the rocking-horse at the top of his speed—Charlie was making a whip for him; and though I watched them during the afternoon, I saw no return of selfishness; and though it cost him many a struggle, yet I trust he will be able to overcome this, his greatest fault.—Episcopal Recorder.

WHAT JESSIE LOST IN THE BROOK.

Jessie was a little girl going to school. She had her spelling-book, and slate and pencil, and sewing-work, and thimble, and a box of beads, and she had time, too. "Good-bye, mother," she said, kissing her, "Good-by, my dear," said mother, "don't lose anything."

A little brook crossed the road on Jessie's way to school. It was running to the river, and it ran very fast. Jessie stopped to look at it as it twinkled in the sun. She stooped down and put in her hand to stop it. It would not be stopped. It jumped over her hand and through her fingers, and ran off as fast as it could. While Jessie was playing in the water, she lost something; but she did not miss it then. I should not wonder if the water's not stopping put the little girl in mind that she ought not to stop, so she jumped up and hurried to school.

When she got to school the door was locked and a card with staring letters—Late! hung at the door. "O, dear, dear," cried Jessie, very much vexed; "Now I shall get a bad mark, for I have no excuse." When the door was opened she went in, and at noon she told Miss Marvin how it happened she was late.

"You met with a serious loss at the brook, did you not, Jessie?" said Miss Marvin, "something you can never find."

"Loss," said little Jessie, looking up, surprised. "I did not miss any thing. It was not my spelling-book surely."

"A greater loss than your spelling-book, because the book might be picked up," said the teacher.

"Not my silver thimble," said Jessie, feeling in her pocket.

"A silver thimble could be found, this cannot be," said Miss Marvin.

"Do you think I lost my box of beads?" asked Jessie.

"If you had, I suppose you could easily buy another box."

"So I could a slate-pencil if I had lost that."

"Yes," said Miss Marvin, "but that which you lost cannot be found or bought again, nor can it be made up in any way—it is lost forever."

"O," said Jessie, looking very sorry and puzzled. "But what is it, Miss Marvin?"

"It is lost time, Jessie," said the teacher.

"Yes, said the little girl, blushing, "that I did lose by the brook. I lost time."

"And you missed it very much when you got to the school-room door."

"O, I did, Miss Marvin," said Jessie. "I did. I would have given anything for a minute more time."

But a minute lost can never be got back; it is gone forever. Nor can one be borrowed or bought, or begged. A rich woman who had not long to live, cried out, "Thousands of pounds for a moment of time!" But thousands of pounds could not buy it.

God gives every child golden moments enough to use, but none to lose. Spend them, my little ones, in such a manner that you may give for every day "some good account at last."

TAKE CARE.

There is a boy just learning to smoke. His good father and mother have said,—

"Take care! That cigar is poison. Smoking will injure your health, waste your money, lead you into bad company, and, perhaps ruin you forever. Take care!"

Another boy is just beginning to stay out of doors at night.

"Take care," his father says, "the street corner is the devil's pulpit. It is the beginning of a bad end. Take care!"

But these boys do not take care. The one smokes, the other stays out. Foolish fellows! They think themselves wiser than their parents. They will surely hurt themselves. They will carry scars all the way through life, if, indeed, they do not utterly ruin themselves.

Take care, boys! Don't be wiser than Jesus. He teaches you that happiness is the fruit of goodness; you think it grows on the tree of sin. Take care!

LOOKING UNTO JESUS.

I am weary and sad, despairing and worn,
My pathway in life has been rugged and torn;
O, why, O my soul, must this pathway be mine?
And if 'tis for my good, why should I repine?

I know that my Savior is loving and kind,
And I, poor frail mortal, am sinful and blind;
My most poignant sorrows are caused by my sin,
Because I'm not humble and all pure within.

Temptations of earth keep drawing me down,
While over my head Christ is holding a crown;
I wish to look upward, I long for the power
To clasp the rich treasure and homeward to soar.

But when I would move, how Satan doth bind me;
When I strive to look upward, my sins how they blind me;
When my love I would show, how cold it is grown;
When I search for my heart, I find but a stone.

When I turn to the cross and my Savior there see,
With his dear arms outstretched, it seems not for me;
For it seems that my sins, so ungrateful and base,
Must even the love of a Savior efface.

But still as I gaze on that agonized brow,
Nought but pity and love are depicted there now;
Though torn by the nails, in agony dying,
See! he raises his eyes; to his Father he's crying.

Now list! O, ye heavens, to catch the dear sound;
Be silent! ye earth, for God's host stand around,
To hear the last message of the incarnate Son
To Jehovah the angered, omnipotent One.

The multitudes round him with malice are filled,
Yet for them he now prays who his life's blood have spilled;
And, "Father, forgive them!" are the words which he saith,
E'en while in fierce hatred they're seeking his breath.

Be astonished, ye earth! ye angels, adore!
Was such wondrous love e'er dreamed of before?
God hears him; his vengeful arm instantly falls,
And to poor, blind mortals so fallen he calls:

You have murdered my Son, yet on him believe,
And your base blood-stained souls I'll cleanse and receive;
Aye, I'll clothe you with garments whiter than snow,
And heirs with my Son shall ye be to me now.

Alas! that so madly they spurned love and power,
For darkness prevailed o'er the earth from that hour;
Till the agonized Son rent the heavens with the cry—
"Eloi, Eloi, lama, sabachthani!"

At that cry the veil of the temple was rent,
And saints from their graves to the city were sent;
The way to the Holy of Holies was shown,
And Jesus had perished for sins not his own.

He was laid in the tomb, but bursted the bond;
Death yielded his power to him who atoned
For our sins; who now prays to his Father above,
Ever pleading for sinners his dying love.

Can I gaze on that scene with a heart of distrust,
And doubt longer the love of the glorified Just?
Or feel that his mercy extends not to me,
Though like double-dyed scarlet my sins may be?

He is able to succor in sorrow and woe;
The depth of his love I never can know;
Why should I distrust, though the tempter assail,
This victor o'er death, this conqueror of hell?

DAVID AND HIS CHILD.

"But now he is dead, wherefore should I fast? Can I bring him back again? I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me."—2 Sam. 12: 23.

It appears that David fasted, and we are led to inquire for what he fasted? In the first verse of the chapter, we read that "the Lord sent Nathan unto David," to say to him that the child that was born to him should "surely die," as a judgment for the wrong that David had done. So "the Lord struck the child, ... and it was very sick;" and David "besought God for the child," and for seven days he fasted, wept, and prayed that the Lord might be gracious unto him, and let the child live. But the child died; therefore says David, why "should I fast? Can I bring him back?" No, but "I shall go to him." Now, if David meant what he said, "I shall go to him," wherever we shall find David, there we shall find the child; and if we find the child beyond the bounds of this material existence, perched upon a twig of the tree of life, surrounded by all the bright and holy throng that grace Jehovah's throne, there also shall we find David.

Now I propose to find out, if possible, where David is, where he went to, and what became of him when he died. I will go "to the law and to the testimony," and if I speak not in accordance with it, it will be because there is no light in me. Turn, if you please, to 1 Kings 1: 20, 21. There we find that Bathsheba, David's wife, knew he must shortly die, because he was old and well stricken in years. Therefore she says, "O king, the eyes of all Israel are upon thee, that thou shouldst tell them who shall sit on the throne of my Lord the king after him. Otherwise it shall come to pass when my Lord the king shall sleep with his fathers, that I and my son Solomon shall be counted offenders." Here we learn that his wife, at least, expected that when David died, he should "sleep with his fathers;" and in 1 Kings 2: 10, we learn that "David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David;" and in Acts 2: 29, we find Peter, after being filled with the Holy Ghost, standing up saying, "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day." It appears that there were some then, as there are to-day, that thought David was in heaven; but Peter declares concerning him, in the 34th verse, that "David is not ascended into the heavens;" and in Acts 13: 36, we hear Paul saying that "David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption." Now we have found that David is dead and buried; that he is sleeping with his fathers; that he was laid unto them and saw corruption. If I shall be able to find his fathers, then, of course, I shall find David; and if I find David, I shall also find the child; for David said, "I shall go to him."

Turn with me now to Gen. 23: 8–20. There we learn that Abraham, for "four hundred shekels of silver, current money," had "made sure" unto him "for a possession of a burying place," "the field of Ephron, which was in Machpelah . . . . and the cave which was therein," in which "Abraham buried Sarah his wife." Abraham is there; for in Gen. 25: 8–11, we find that Abraham died, and "was gathered to his people; and his sons . . . buried him in the cave of Machpelah, in the field," which he "purchased of the sons of Heth, there was Abraham buried." Isaac is there; for in Gen. 49: 30, 31, we learn that in "the cave that is in the field of Machpelah, ... there they buried Abraham and Sarah, his wife; there they buried Isaac and Rebekah his wife." Jacob is there also; for in Gen. 49: 33, we learn he "was gathered unto his people." Gen. 47: 29–31, we learn that Joseph, his son, swore unto him that he would lay him with his fathers, and bury him in their burying place; and in Gen. 50: 12, 13, we find that he did perform the oath;" for they "carried him into the land of Canaan, and buried him in the cave of the field of Machpelah," as he commanded them. Now we have found David's fathers in Israel,—Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. If so, we have found David; and if we have found David, we have also found the child, for David said, "I shall go to him."

Now I ask, did David himself believe that man died? or, that he should go beyond the bounds of this material existence, to love and be loved for more than while in this material existence, being associated with Jesus and all the holy angels? Nay, verily; for in 1 Kings 2: 1, 2, we hear him, when giving charge to his son Solomon, just before his death, saying, "I go the way of all the earth;" for he believed what God said to Adam in Gen. 3: 19,—"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return,"—for in Ps. 146: 3, 4, he says, "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man; . . . . his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."

In Ps. 104: 29, David says, "Thou takest away their breath, they die and return to their dust." Then David believed that man was dust, and should return unto it. Again, in Ps. 49: 12, 14, he says, "Man being in honor abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish. . . . . Like sheep they are laid in the grave." They are laid in the grave, a place where David had no desire to go; for in Ps. 6: 5, while in sickness, we hear him praying to be delivered; and why? because "in death there is no remembrance" of God; and none could give him thanks. In Ps. 115: 17, he says, "the dead praise not the Lord; neither any that go down into silence."

David did not expect to remain forever dead, but hoped to live again; for in Ps. 17: 15, he says, "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied, when I awake with thy likeness." So David expected a resurrection from the dead. He expected to awake in the likeness of his Lord, and behold his face in righteousness. David also expected an inheritance; for in Ps. 37: 9, 11, 22, 29, he says, "those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth," and "the meek shall inherit the earth;" and them that be blessed of him shall inherit the earth;" and "the righteous shall inherit the land," and those that "wait on the Lord, and keep his ways, . . . he shall exalt . . . to inherit the land." In the 18th verse he says, "the Lord knoweth the days of the upright, and their inheritance shall be forever."

We then have found where David is; and in finding David we have found the child; for David said, "I shall go to him." We have shown that David slept with his fathers; that he was laid unto them, and saw corruption. We have shown that his fathers were in the cave of Machpelah, and not in heaven, as we are often told. They are in their graves, where they must remain until Jesus comes to raise the dead and judge the world. They "all died in faith, not having received the promise . . . God having provided better things for us, that they without us should not be made perfect."

Then let us, my brethren, continue "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord," looking for and hastening unto the coming of our Lord and Master, who is to bring our fathers in Israel,—Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and David, too, the sweet singer of Israel, from their dusty beds, and change our vile bodies, fashioning them after his most glorious one. That time is nigh at hand, even at the door. Soon the trump of God will sound, the dead will be raised, and we shall be changed; and, together with all the redeemed of earth, be caught up to meet our Lord in the air, when "the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up." Then the earth will be redeemed from the curse, and become the everlasting kingdom and eternal possession of Christ and his waiting bride. God grant that when he comes in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory, to give unto us as our work shall be, that it may be said of us, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." The cry has gone forth, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." But while he tarries, let us not be slumbering; but be watching and praying, lest coming suddenly he shall find us sleeping. While those around us are crying peace, and saying, "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were," let us lift up our heads and rejoice, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh.

Yes, brethren, the time is at hand, when the kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdom of our Lord; when Abraham and his seed are to receive their promised inheritance; when David shall awake in the likeness of his Lord, and behold his face in righteousness; when Paul shall receive his crown, and Daniel shall stand in his lot; when the whole earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea; when the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and he will dwell with them, and be their God, and they will be his people; when all tears will be wiped away; when there will be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying; when the curse shall be removed from the earth, and it shall bloom again in its Eden beauty.

Sinner, would you like a home there? If so, turn unto the Lord, accept him as your Savior; be faithful in his service, rooted and grounded in hope; and by watching and prayer overcome; for he has promised that he that overcometh will he grant to sit with him on his throne, as he has overcome and set down with his Father on his throne. He is faithful, and will perform. God help you to be wise unto salvation, is my prayer.

DRAGON OF REV. 12: 20.

The power symbolized by the term dragon in the book of Revelations, particularly in the twelfth and twentieth chapters, has ever been to me, as also to others, a very camplex subject; and as every thought calculated to impart light is thankfully received, I take the liberty of suggesting some ideas, with the hope that some one competent to do justice to the subject may be induced to take it up and develop the truth more perfectly.

From the beginning of time, there has ever been in the world two great antagonistic powers, viz., God and the Devil, including their respective followers. When the world was created in its primeval beauty, its dominion was placed under Adam, our common federal head, by its Creator. Soon after, "that old serpent, which is the devil," by his subtle and opposing influence, succeeded in seducing our first parents into transgression, whereby they lost that dominion, which was usurped by the devil. From that time he became the ruler of this world,—the prince of the power of the air. Yea, the very air we breathe, and which is the life-giving and life-sustaining principle of all things that hath breath, was so brought under his control, and so poisoned by the virus of sin, that death has been the result to all sentient existences.

He having thus acquired the supremacy of earth, and become to a certain extent its ruler, of course man, thus deceived, became his obedient subject, at least that multitudinous seed of evil doers, including all the kingdoms of men, as he claimed to Christ in his forty days' temptation in the wilderness.—Luke 4: 6.

It being thus, it follows that from the time this power was thus surreptitiously obtained, through all coming time, to the end of his six thousand years lease, the devil, the prince of this world, is associated with the visible rulers of earth, as their governing head, are in the sight of the Almighty a unit with them, and they, unitedly, ever have been, and ever will be, an opposing and a persecuting power, to the one body of Christ, the church, including Christ, the head, and the church, his body.

All that ever have lived since the fall, or ever will live prior to the final ejectment of the squatter sovereignty of the devil and his seed, belong to one or the other of these antagonistic powers. This conclusion is sustained by Gen. 3: 14, 15,—"Because thou hast done this"—"I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." The oneness of the devil and his seed may aptly be compared to the fabled Upas, composed of body and branches both deriving their life and poison from the root, and they unitedly constitute the tree, with its deadly powers.

The unity of the devil and his subjects being thus established, as constituting the one antagonistic body to Christ, it is reasonable that God, who always represents things as they are, in giving to his bride a revelation of the number, character, duration and final destiny of the opposing powers of earth, should use terms and figures that most aptly and impressively convey to her mind all the constituent parts and parcels of this great Upas, which with its roots and body and branches, has filled the world with its deadly poison.

In looking over the vocabulary of the language of the world, I can find no terms, real or imaginary, that so fully and so perfectly conveys this knowledge to His people, as the terms used in these chapters, viz., great red dragon, with seven heads and ten horns; with interchangeable terms, as the devil, that old serpent, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world, etc. But, says the objector, the great red dragon, with seven heads and ten horns, is a symbol of old pagan Rome, nothing more, and nothing less.

I freely admit that the form of Roman government extant at the first advent of Christ, is described in that symbol, and I also admit that the religion of that form was paganism; but I have failed to see that those facts establish the point that paganism constituted one of the distinctive forms of the Roman kingdom, and for this reason paganism was the religion of all the preceding forms of government, from Romulus to its final conversion to christianity in the fourth century.

Again, when that conversion did take place, there was no change in the form of government. It was imperial, from the days of Augustus till centuries after the rise of the papacy. Hence the imperial power of Rome constituted the dragon of the twelfth chapter, and was only one of the visible outcrossings of the old serpent's power, through his visible seed, appropriately named by the God of heaven, the dragon, that old serpent, the devil.

In this chapter, the dragon is represented as persecuting the woman, who flees before him into the wilderness for a period of 1260 years. Hence it follows that during the whole of that time, the dragon must have had a distinctive existence (the language of the Revelator will admit of nothing less). But how can this be? All history records the fact, that the imperial power of the empire continued in the East, at Constantinople, till it was subjugated by the Ottomans, in the fifteenth century, and in the wars in the German empire, from A. D. 800 till the end of the 1260 years of papal supremacy; both of which powers were dragonic, and did by the instigation of the papacy, and its father the devil, persecute the true church of Christ that length of time.

Instead of the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil and Satan, being bound a thousand years (of the 1260), inspiration declares and history affirms it to have been the most open and unrestrained manifestation of Satanic malice and persecution to "the woman and her seed" (Gen. 3: 16), the world has ever witnessed.

Again. Papal Rome did not receive "its power, throne, and great authority" from pagan Rome; but, to the contrary, it did receive it from imperial Rome, some two hundred years after Rome was converted from paganism to christianity. This fact of itself should be a quietus to the theory that paganism (the so-called dragon) was bound by the papacy. Instead of paganism being thus bound, the reverse is the fact. Paganism was revived, and assimilated itself to christianity, and culminated in the setting up of the Virgin Mary as an object of worship, in the place of the heathen gods, and thus manfested itself forth as the abomination of desolation. Still further, during that 1260 years of papal rule, "the dwellers upon earth worshiped the dragon, that gave life to the beast."

ON OBTAINING SANCTIFICATION.

AN EXTRACT FROM A LETTER.

Dear Brother in Christ.—You are not the only one who is longing to obtain a sanctified life. It is an inbred desire of the converted soul; and every earnest follower of Christ desires that closer walk. I will not test your patience by referring to the various views (and many of them erroneous) held by modern writers respecting this very important scriptural doctrine.

You ask, "How can I obtain sanctification?" You desire it sincerely; but have you sought for it aright? Have you taken the first steps rightly? The sanctification of the Spirit is for you. That blessing is yours if you will only comply with the conditions for obtaining it. God has declared that he is no respecter of persons. But you are a free agent; it remains all with you whether you will be a sanctified child; not whether God will have you sanctified, but whether you will be; whether you will comply with his conditions, or not. Let me look briefly at the conditions.

1. Entire submission to the will of God. How can we even hope to be sanctified by the Spirit while we oppose God's will? We can know his will if we seek to. If we are ignorant of his will, we are wilfully so. First, it is his will that we study his word. There be reveals his will toward us. Second, it is his will that we know his commandments. And, third, that we do them; humbly submitting ourselves to their requirements. When he commands us to "love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind"; and if, instead, we love the world and worldly things, are we doing his will? Assuredly not. And so with all of his commandments. We must first know his commandments, and then do them, meekly, as an obedient child, submitting our wills to his in all things. This is the only road to obtain entire sanctification. But you must pass through it, or you seek in vain. Look well to this, for it is important to your eternal happiness. Having submitted your will to him entirely, and unreservedly, you must,

2. Present your body a living sacrifice unto God. Rom. 12: 1. You are not to present your body only, but also every member. You are to present yourself, as a whole, a submissive instrument to be used exclusively for his service. By thus sacrificing yourself to God, you come into the position to receive the spirit of sanctification. What is the result? You "receive the adoption of sons." And what next? "Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba Father."—Gal. 4: 6. You present yourself as a servant, but as soon as the offering is accepted, you are "no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ." We have only to comply with the conditions of God first to obtain the adoption of sons, i. e., "the (sanctification of the) Spirit of his Son" into our hearts. The work of the Spirit is instantaneous. The moment we comply with the conditions, our offering is accepted, and we receive the sanctifying Spirit of his Son.

If, after prayerfully and diligently seeking, you fail to receive this Spirit, be assured there is a lack of completeness in your offering. You must let loose of all the world. God says, "Come out from among them and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you." You need not try to think that God receives you while you are conscious, in some particular, of having your own way. You must come out fully from the world, for your citizenship is enrolled in heaven.

This, my beloved brother, is the only path in which you will find sanctification,—that holy walk with God. But there is one thing that you must prayerfully watch and guard against. Many who have received this blessing have speedily lost it. They gave themselves for a time to the Lord, and then took back the offering. You cannot keep yourself in this holy state, but, if you trust in God, he can and will guard you. But your offering must be a continuous one. Remain in the same position that you receive the sanctifying Spirit—all on the altar. Remember that one stain of sin blots out all your holiness. And remember that "the Lord is faithful, who shall stablish you, and keep you from evil."—2 Thess. 3: 3.

Now, in conclusion, let me say, do not rest night nor day till you have complied with the conditions, and received the desires of your heart. It is within your grasp. Only cast your burden believingly on the Lord. You must be holy to dwell with Jesus. He is soon coming. Be sanctified wholly to meet him. "And I pray your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Your brother on the altar,

Rochester, N. Y. Wm. H. Spenzer.

"DOES GOD LOVE ME?"

To those who are fully assured of this fact, the above question may seem strange. But there are those who are crushed and broken, disconsolate and forsaken, who really wish to be christians; but yet seem to be in darkness and doubt whether it can be that they are loved by him who made them.

I once had occasion to call at the house of a man of wealth, on business; and from the reports that had reached me, I believed the man to be very much like a tiger, or some other wild beast. So I approached his dwelling expecting to be treated roughly, and hardly hoped to escape personal abuse. The servant showed me directly into the room where this dreaded personage was sitting, and introduced me to him. I do not think there was anything in my appearance to impress the man in my favor, but he received me very politely, spoke very pleasantly, and kindly granted all I asked of him. As I left his presence, I reflected upon the incident in thoughts like these: "If this man, who has not a spark of love to God or his people, and who is possessed of most brutal passions; if this man receives me, and treats me so kindly, can I doubt but God would be equally kind? The word of truth assures me that he is kind even to the unthankful and the evil; and though I have no claim of my own, or have forfeited all claim to his favor, he will yet receive me and bless me for Jesus' sake. Yes, I do believe that the Lord is more kind than the best person I ever saw; for I am assured that he is gracious, slow to anger and of great mercy, ready to pardon iniquity and remove our sins from us as far as the east is from the west. Do you believe this? Lonely, forsaken, broken-hearted one, the Lord loves you. Believe it, and he will bind up your broken heart, and speak peace to your soul.

HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

Talk about it?—To be sure we must talk about holiness of heart and life, entire consecration and sanctification. We must talk about it, pray about it, preach about it, write about it; breathe it out, about it out! Every look, thought, word, action, every moving muscle must witness for this glorious, overpowering gospel salvation. Our time, talents, property, influence—all that we are in body, soul and mind, must be for this glorious object. It must be the first thing rising up, the first and last lying down, the first going out, the first coming in. "Holiness to the Lord" must be written on our foreheads, on our doorposts, on "the bells of the horses." "Yea, every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness to the Lord." Zech. 14: 21.

This united, uniform, harmonious, continued, persevering, unflinching, consecrated effort to substantiate and diffuse this superlative, heaven-born grace, is indispensable to its final triumph. Satan and his host of coadjutors are awake, on the alert, to counteract, cover up, and utterly bury up in the dust and rubbish of carnality and formality this glorious gospel truth. He knows, the archenemy, the liar of all liars knows full well if this blessed doctrine of assurance, purity, perfect love and entire devotedness to God, prevail, his cause is soon at an end, his kingdom overthrown, his wicked, diabolical proceedings fall to the ground. This he knows; and thus every stone is turned, every secret, satanic machination is resorted to, to banish holiness from the earth. Even professed servants of the Most High are enlisted on his side, transforming themselves into angels of light.

Friends of truth and love, ye who do pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven;" you that delight in this redeeming, purifying, sanctifying grace, whose souls are kindled to a flame at the very name of "holiness to the Lord," what say you? is it not time to bestir ourselves, prepare for battle? Battle there must be, will be; a battle of battles, a mighty battle! No battle, perhaps, in the whole history of theological discussion will compare to it. Sword's points must be met, bayonet on bayonet, spear on spear. All the embattled hosts of hell will rise in opposition to this saving, glorifying, sanctifying quintessence of the gospel. What now?—rise, put on strength, take the field, fight! Go forward in the power of the Lord's might; put on the whole armor of God, that we may resist the wiles of the devil. "We wrestle not against flesh and blood" merely, "but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand, . . . and having done all, to stand." "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty, through God, to the pulling down of strong-holds; casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." 2 Cor. 10: 5.

"Rise to a higher, holier life,
Ye who are called the sons of God,
And girded with the Spirit's sword,
Go nobly to the strife."

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

I come now to the second, which is the main thing—the lesson itself: In whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content.

Here was a rare piece of learning, indeed, and certainly more to be wondered at in St. Paul, that he knew how to turn himself to every condition, than all the learning in the world besides, which hath been so applauded in former ages by Julius Cæsar, Ptolemy, Xenophon, the great admirers of learning.

The text hath but few words in it,—in every state be content. But if that be true, which once Fulgentius said, that the most golden sentence is ever measured by brevity and suavity, then this is a most accomplished speech; here is a great deal in a little. The text is like a precious jewel, little in quantity, but great in worth and value.

The main proposition I shall insist upon is this, that a gracious spirit is a contented spirit. The doctrine of contentment is very superlative; and till we have learned this, we have not learned to be christians.

I. It is a hard lesson. The angels in heaven had not learned it; they were not contented; though their estate was very glorious, yet they were still soaring aloft, and aimed at something higher.—Jude 1: 6. The angels which kept not their first estate; they kept not their estate, because they were not contented with their estate. Our first parents, clothed with the white robe of innocency in paradise, had not learned to be content; they had aspiring hearts; and, thinking their human nature too low and homespun, would be crowned with the deity, and be as Gods. Though they had the (Gen. 3: 5) choice of all the trees in the garden, yet none would content them but the tree of knowledge, which they supposed would have been as eye-salve to have made them omniscient. Oh, then, if this lesson were so hard to learn in innocency, how hard shall we find it, who are clogged with corruption?

II. It is of universal extent—concerns all. It concerns rich men. One would think it needless to press those to contentment whom God hath blessed with great estates, but rather persuade them to be humble and thankful; nay, but I say, Be content. Rich men have their discontents as well as others, as appears,—1. When they have a great estate yet they are discontented that they have no more; they would make the hundred talents a thousand. A man in wine, the more he drinks, the more he thirsts. Covetousness is a dry dropsy: an earthly heart is like the grave that is never satisfied. Therefore I say to you, rich men,—Be content.

2. Rich men, if we may suppose them to be content with their estates, which is very seldom; yet, though they have estate enough, they have not honor enough (Prov. 30: 16); if their barns are full enough, yet their turrets are not high enough. They would be somebody in the world, as Theudas, who boasted himself to be somebody; they never go so cheerfully as when the wind of honor and applause fills their sails; if this wind be down, they are discontented. One would think Haman had as much as his proud heart could desire; he was set above all the princes, and advanced upon the pinnacle of honor to be the second man in the kingdom (Esther 3: 1); yet, in the midst of all his pomp, because Mordecai would not uncover and kneel, he is discontented (ver. 2), and full of wrath (ver. 5), and there is no way to assuage this pleurisy of revenge, but by letting all the Jews' blood, and offering them up in sacrifice. The itch of honor is seldom allayed without blood; therefore I say to you, rich men,—Be content.

3. Rich men, if we may suppose them to be content with their honor and magnificent titles, yet they have not always contentment in their privileges. She that lies in the bosom may sometimes blow the coals; as Job's wife, who in a pet would have him fall out with God himself,—Curse God, and die. Sometimes children cause discontent. How oft is it seen, that the mother's milk doth nourish a viper? And he that once sucked her breast, goes about to suck her blood. Parents do often of grapes gather thorns, and of figs thistles. Children are a sweet-briar: like the rose, which is a fragrant flower; but, as a Basil saith, it hath its prickles. Our relative comforts are not all pure wine, but mixed; they have in them more dregs than spirits, and are like that river Plutarch speaks of, where the waters in the morning run sweet, but in the evening run bitter. We have no charter of exemption granted us in this life; therefore rich men had need be called upon to be contented.

III. The doctrine of contentment concerns poor men. You that do suck so liberally from the breasts of Providence, be content; it is a hard lesson, therefore it had need be set upon the sooner. How hard it is, when the livelihood is even gone,—a great estate boiled away almost to nothing—then to be content. The means of subsistence is in Scripture called our life, because it is the very sinews of life. The woman in the gospel spent all her living upon the physicians (Luke 8: 43), which, in the Greek, implies that she spent her whole life upon the physicians, because she spent the means by which she should live. It is much, when poverty hath clipped our wings, then to be content; but, though hard, it is excellent; and the apostle here had learnt, in every state to be content.

God hath brought St. Paul into as great variety of conditions as ever we read of any man, and yet he was content; else, sure, he could never have gone through it with so much cheerfulness. See into what vicissitudes this blessed apostle was cast—We are troubled on every side! There was the sadness of his condition; but not distressed, there was his content in that condition. We are perplexed; there is his affliction: but not in despair; there is his contentment. And if we read a little further,—"In afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults," etc. (2 Cor. 6: 4), there . . . having nothing, yet possessing all things" (verse 10). When the apostle was driven out of all; yet, in regard of that sweet contentment of mind, which was like music in his soul, he possessed all things. We read a short map or history of his sufferings,—"In prisons more frequent, in death oft," etc. 2 Cor. 11: 23, 24, 25. Yet behold the blessed frame and temper of his spirit,—"I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content."

Which way soever Providence did blow, he had such heavenly skill and dexterity, that he knew how to steer his course. For his outward estate he was indifferent; he could be either on the top of Jacob's Ladder, or the bottom; he could sing either the dirge or the anthem; he could be any thing that God would have him. "I know how to want, and how to abound." There is a rare pattern for us to imitate. Paul, in regard to his faith and courage, was like a cedar; he could not be stirred: but, for his outward condition, he was like a reed, bending every way with the wind of Providence. When a prosperous gale did blow upon him, he could bend with that—I know how to be full; and when a boisterous gust of affliction did blow, he could bend in humility with that—I know how to be hungry.

St. Paul was, as Aristotle speaks, like a die that hath four squares; throw it which way you will, it falls upon a bottom: let God throw the Apostle which way he would, he fell upon this bottom of contentment. A contented spirit is like a watch; though you carry it up and down with you, yet the spring of it is not shaken, nor the wheels out of order, but the watch keeps its perfect motion; so it was with St. Paul; though God had carried him into various conditions, yet he was not lifted up with the one, nor cast down with the other. The spring of his heart was not broken, the wheels of his affection were not disordered, but kept their constant motion toward heaven—still content. The ship that lies at anchor may sometimes be a little shaken, but never sinks; flesh and blood may have its fears and disquiets, but grace doth check them. A christian, having cast anchor in heaven, his heart never sinks: a gracious spirit is a contented spirit.

This is a rare lesson. Paul did not learn it at the feet of Gamaliel—I am instructed.—Phil. 4: 12. "I am initiated into this holy mystery;" as if he had said, "I have gotten the divine art, I have the secret of it." God must make us right artists. If we should put some men to an art that they are not skilled it, how unfit would they be for it. Put an husbandman to limning or drawing pictures, what strange work would he make! This is out of his sphere. Take a limner, that is exact in laying of colors, and put him to plow, or set him to planting and grafting of trees; this is not his art, he is not skilled in it. Bid a natural man live by faith; and, when all things go cross, be contented: you bid him do that he has no skill in; you may as well bid a child guide the stern of a ship. To live contentedly upon God, in the deficiency of outward comforts, is an art which flesh and blood hath not revealed: nay, many of God's own children, who excel in some duties of religion, when they come to this of contentment, how do they stumble! They have scarcely commenced scholars in the school of Christ.

PRESS ON.

Now, when we are so near the complete and final victory, "let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." Such a harvest as the saints will reap, who can fully realize it? It is the glorious inheritance, the "treasure laid up in heaven," eternal life, and pleasures evermore. And the great Captain never forgets even one of the weakest who are striving to gain the victory over the world the flesh and the great adversary. He who died for us and rose again is ever watching over us and kindly caring for us. How comforting his words—"Lo, I am with you ALWAYS, even unto the end of the world."

O, if we could realize all his goodness, and all his thoughts of mercy and love toward us, how it would encourage us to persevere, and help us to "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."

Fellow traveler, there is also a joy set before you, that is more than enough to balance all your trials here. Then let us wait and watch till the Master comes.

LOOKING UNTO JESUS.

I am weary and sad, despairing and worn,
My pathway in life has been rugged and torn;
O, why, O my soul, must this pathway be mine?
And if 'tis for my good, why should I repine?

I know that my Savior is loving and kind,
And I, poor frail mortal, am sinful and blind;
My most poignant sorrows are caused by my sin,
Because I'm not humble and all pure within.

Temptations of earth keep drawing me down,
While over my head Christ is holding a crown;
I wish to look upward, I long for the power
To clasp the rich treasure and homeward to soar.

But when I would move, how Satan doth bind me,
When I strive to look upward, my sins how they blind me;
When my love I would show, how cold it is grown;
When I search for my heart, I find but a stone.

When I turn to the cross and my Savior there see,
With his dear arms outstretched, it seems not for me;
For it seems that my sins, so ungrateful and base,
Must even the love of a Savior efface.

But still as I gaze on that agonized brow,
Nought but pity and love are depicted there now;
Though torn by the nails, in agony dying,
See! he raises his eyes; to his Father he's crying.

Now list! O, ye heavens, to catch the dear sound,
Be silent! ye earth, for God's host stand around,
To hear the last message of the Incarnate Son
To Jehovah the angered, omnipotent One.

The multitudes round him with malice are filled,
Yet for them he now prays who his life's blood have spilled;
And, "Father, forgive them!" are the words which he saith,
E'en while in fierce hatred they're seeking his breath.

Be astonished, ye earth! ye angels, adore!
Was such wondrous love e'er dreamed of before?
God hears him; his vengeful arm instantly falls,
And to poor, blind mortals so fallen he calls.

You have murdered my Son, yet on him believe,
And your base blood-stained souls I'll cleanse and receive;
Aye, I'll clothe you with garments whiter than snow,
And heirs with my Son shall ye be to me now.

Alas! that so madly they spurned love and power,
For darkness prevailed o'er the earth from that hour;
Till the agonized Son rent the heavens with the cry—
"Eloi, Eloi, lama, sabachthani!"

At that cry the veil of the temple was rent,
And saints from their graves to the city were sent;
The way to the Holy of Holies was shown,
And Jesus had perished for sins not his own.

He was laid in the tomb, but bursted the bond;
Death yielded his power to him who atoned
For our sins; who now prays to his Father above,
Ever pleading for sinners his dying love.

Can I gaze on that scene with a heart of distrust,
And doubt longer the love of the glorified Just?
Or feel that his mercy extends not to me,
Though like double-dyed scarlet my sins may be?

He is able to succor in sorrow and woe;
The depth of his love I never can know;
Why should I distrust, though the tempter assail,
This victor o'er death, this conqueror of hell?

DAVID AND HIS CHILD.

"But now he is dead, wherefore should I fast? Can I bring him back again? I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me."—2 Sam. 12: 23.

It appears that David fasted, and we are led to inquire for what he fasted? In the first verse of the chapter, we read that "the Lord sent Nathan unto David," to say to him that the child that was born to him should "surely die," as a judgment for the wrong that David had done. So "the Lord struck the child, ... and it was very sick;" and David "besought God for the child," and for seven days he fasted, wept, and prayed that the Lord might be gracious unto him, and let the child live. But the child died; therefore says David, why "should I fast? Can I bring him back?" No, but "I shall go to him." Now, if David meant what he said, "I shall go to him," wherever we shall find David, there we shall find the child; and if we find the child beyond the bounds of this material existence, perched upon a twig of the tree of life, surrounded by all the bright and holy throng that grace Jehovah's throne, there also shall we find David.

Now I propose to find out, if possible, where David is, where he went to, and what became of him when he died. I will go "to the law and to the testimony," and if I speak not in accordance with it, it will be because there is no light in me. Turn, if you please, to 1 Kings 1: 20, 21. There we find that Bathsheba, David's wife, knew he must shortly die, because he was old and well stricken in years. Therefore she says, "O king, the eyes of all Israel are upon thee, that thou shouldst tell them who shall sit on the throne of my Lord the king after him. Otherwise it shall come to pass when my Lord the king shall sleep with his fathers, that I and my son Solomon shall be counted offenders." Here we learn that his wife, at least, expected that when David died, he should "sleep with his fathers;" and in 1 Kings 2: 10, we learn that "David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David;" and in Acts 2: 29, we find Peter, after being filled with the Holy Ghost, standing up saying, "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day." It appears that there were some then, as there are to-day, that thought David was in heaven; but Peter declares concerning him, in the 34th verse, that "David is not ascended into the heavens;" and in Acts 13: 36, we hear Paul saying that "David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption." Now we have found that David is dead and buried; that he is sleeping with his fathers; that he was laid unto them and saw corruption. If I shall be able to find his fathers, then, of course, I shall find David; and if I find David, I shall also find the child; for David said, "I shall go to him."

Turn with me now to Gen. 23: 8–20. There we learn that Abraham, for "four hundred shekels of silver, current money," had "made sure" unto him "for a possession of a burying place," "the field of Ephron, which was in Machpelah . . . . and the cave which was therein," in which "Abraham buried Sarah his wife." Abraham is there; for in Gen. 25: 8–11, we find that Abraham died, and "was gathered to his people; and his sons . . . buried him in the cave of Machpelah, in the field," which he "purchased of the sons of Heth, there was Abraham buried." Isaac is there; for in Gen. 49: 30, 31, we learn that in "the cave that is in the field of Machpelah, ... there they buried Abraham and Sarah, his wife; there they buried Isaac and Rebekah his wife." Jacob is there also; for in Gen. 49: 33, we learn he "was gathered unto his people." Gen. 47: 29–31, we learn that Joseph, his son, swore unto him that he would lay him with his fathers, and bury him in their burying place; and in Gen. 50: 12, 13, we find that he did perform the oath;" for they "carried him into the land of Canaan, and buried him in the cave of the field of Machpelah," as he commanded them. Now we have found David's fathers in Israel,—Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. If so, we have found David; and if we have found David, we have also found the child, for David said, "I shall go to him."

Now I ask, did David himself believe that man died? or, that he should go beyond the bounds of this material existence, to love and be loved for more than while in this material existence, being associated with Jesus and all the holy angels? Nay, verily; for in 1 Kings 2: 1, 2, we hear him, when giving charge to his son Solomon, just before his death, saying, "I go the way of all the earth;" for he believed what God said to Adam in Gen. 3: 19,—"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return,"—for in Ps. 146: 3, 4, he says, "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man; . . . . his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."

In Ps. 104: 29, David says, "Thou takest away their breath, they die and return to their dust." Then David believed that man was dust, and should return unto it. Again, in Ps. 49: 12, 14, he says, "Man being in honor abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish. . . . . Like sheep they are laid in the grave." They are laid in the grave, a place where David had no desire to go; for in Ps. 6: 5, while in sickness, we hear him praying to be delivered; and why? because "in death there is no remembrance" of God; and none could give him thanks. In Ps. 115: 17, he says, "the dead praise not the Lord; neither any that go down into silence."

David did not expect to remain forever dead, but hoped to live again; for in Ps. 17: 15, he says, "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied, when I awake with thy likeness." So David expected a resurrection from the dead. He expected to awake in the likeness of his Lord, and behold his face in righteousness. David also expected an inheritance; for in Ps. 37: 9, 11, 22, 29, he says, "those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth," and "the meek shall inherit the earth;" and them that be blessed of him shall inherit the earth;" and "the righteous shall inherit the land," and those that "wait on the Lord, and keep his ways, . . . he shall exalt . . . to inherit the land." In the 18th verse he says, "the Lord knoweth the days of the upright, and their inheritance shall be forever."

We then have found where David is; and in finding David we have found the child; for David said, "I shall go to him." We have shown that David slept with his fathers; that he was laid unto them, and saw corruption. We have shown that his fathers were in the cave of Machpelah, and not in heaven, as we are often told. They are in their graves, where they must remain until Jesus comes to raise the dead and judge the world. They "all died in faith, not having received the promise . . . God having provided better things for us, that they without us should not be made perfect."

Then let us, my brethren, continue "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord," looking for and hastening unto the coming of our Lord and Master, who is to bring our fathers in Israel,—Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and David, too, the sweet singer of Israel, from their dusty beds, and change our vile bodies, fashioning them after his most glorious one. That time is nigh at hand, even at the door. Soon the trump of God will sound, the dead will be raised, and we shall be changed; and, together with all the redeemed of earth, be caught up to meet our Lord in the air, when "the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up." Then the earth will be redeemed from the curse, and become the everlasting kingdom and eternal possession of Christ and his waiting bride. God grant that when he comes in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory, to give unto us as our work shall be, that it may be said of us, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." The cry has gone forth, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." But while he tarries, let us not be slumbering; but be watching and praying, lest coming suddenly he shall find us sleeping. While those around us are crying peace, and saying, "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were," let us lift up our heads and rejoice, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh.

Yes, brethren, the time is at hand, when the kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdom of our Lord; when Abraham and his seed are to receive their promised inheritance; when David shall awake in the likeness of his Lord, and behold his face in righteousness; when Paul shall receive his crown, and Daniel shall stand in his lot; when the whole earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea; when the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and he will dwell with them, and be their God, and they will be his people; when all tears will be wiped away; when there will be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying; when the curse shall be removed from the earth, and it shall bloom again in its Eden beauty.

Sinner, would you like a home there? If so, turn unto the Lord, accept him as your Savior; be faithful in his service, rooted and grounded in hope; and by watching and prayer overcome; for he has promised that he that overcometh will be grant to sit with him on his throne, as he has overcome and set down with his Father on his throne. He is faithful, and will perform. God help you to be wise unto salvation, is my prayer.

DRAGON OF REV. 12: 20.

The power symbolized by the term dragon in the book of Revelations, particularly in the twelfth and twentieth chapters, has ever been to me, as also to others, a very camplex subject; and as every thought calculated to impart light is thankfully received, I take the liberty of suggesting some ideas, with the hope that some one competent to do justice to the subject may be induced to take it up and develop the truth more perfectly.

From the beginning of time, there has ever been in the world two great antagonistic powers, viz, God and the Devil, including their respective followers. When the world was created in its primeval beauty, its dominion was placed under Adam, our common federal head, by its Creator. Soon after, "that old serpent, which is the devil," by his subtle and opposing influence, succeeded in seducing our first parents into transgression, whereby they lost that dominion, which was usurped by the devil. From that time he became the ruler of this world,—the prince of the power of the air. Yea, the very air we breathe, and which is the life-giving and life-sustaining principle of all things that hath breath, was so brought under his control, and so poisoned by the virus of sin, that death has been the result to all sentient existences.

He having thus acquired the supremacy of earth, and become to a certain extent its ruler, of course man, thus deceived, became his obedient subject, at least that multitudinous seed of evil doers, including all the kingdoms of men, as he claimed to Christ in his forty days' temptation in the wilderness.—Luke 4: 6.

It being thus, it follows that from the time this power was thus surreptitiously obtained, through all coming time, to the end of his six thousand years lease, the devil, the prince of this world, is associated with the visible rulers of earth, as their governing head, are in the sight of the Almighty a unit with them, and they, unitedly, ever have been, and ever will be, an opposing and a persecuting power, to the one body of Christ, the church, including Christ, the head, and the church, his body.

All that ever have lived since the fall, or ever will live prior to the final ejectment of the squatter sovereignty of the devil and his seed, belong to one or the other of these antagonistic powers. This conclusion is sustained by Gen. 3: 14, 15,—"Because thou hast done this"—"I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." The oneness of the devil and his seed may aptly be compared to the fabled Upas, composed of body and branches both deriving their life and poison from the root, and they unitedly constitute the tree, with its deadly powers.

The unity of the devil and his subjects being thus established, as constituting the one antagonistic body to Christ, it is reasonable that God, who always represents things as they are, in giving to his bride a revelation of the number, character, duration and final destiny of the opposing powers of earth, should use terms and figures that most aptly and impressively convey to her mind all the constituent parts and parcels of this great Upas, which with its roots and body and branches, has filled the world with its deadly poison.

In looking over the vocabulary of the language of the world, I can find no terms, real or imaginary, that so fully and so perfectly conveys this knowledge to His people, as the terms used in these chapters, viz., great red dragon, with seven heads and ten horns; with interchangeable terms, as the devil, that old serpent, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world, etc. But, says the objector, the great red dragon, with seven heads and ten horns, is a symbol of old pagan Rome, nothing more, and nothing less.

I freely admit that the form of Roman government extant at the first advent of Christ, is described in that symbol, and I also admit that the religion of that form was paganism; but I have failed to see that those facts establish the point that paganism constituted one of the distinctive forms of the Roman kingdom, and for this reason paganism was the religion of all the preceding forms of government, from Romulus to its final conversion to christianity in the fourth century.

Again, when that conversion did take place, there was no change in the form of government. It was imperial, from the days of Augustus till centuries after the rise of the papacy. Hence the imperial power of Rome constituted the dragon of the twelfth chapter, and was only one of the visible outcroppings of the old serpent's power, through his visible seed, appropriately named by the God of heaven, the dragon, that old serpent, the devil

In this chapter, the dragon is represented as persecuting the woman, who flees before him into the wilderness for a period of 1260 years. Hence it follows that during the whole of that time, the dragon must have had a distinctive existence (the language of the Revelator will admit of nothing less). But how can this be? All history records the fact, that the imperial power of the empire continued in the East, at Constantinople, till it was subjugated by the Ottomans, in the fifteenth century, and in the wars in the German empire, from A. D. 800 till the end of the 1260 years of papal supremacy: both of which powers were dragonic, and did by the instigation of the papacy, and its father the devil, persecute the true church of Christ that length of time.

Instead of the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil and Satan, being bound a thousand years (of the 1260), inspiration declares and history affirms it to have been the most open and unrestrained manifestation of Satanic malice and persecution to "the woman and her seed" (Gen. 3: 16), the world has ever witnessed.

Again. Papal Rome did not receive "its power, throne, and great authority" from pagan Rome; but, to the contrary, it did receive it from imperial Rome, some two hundred years after Rome was converted from paganism to christianity. This fact of itself should be a quietus to the theory that paganism (the so-called dragon) was bound by the papacy. Instead of paganism being thus bound, the reverse is the fact. Paganism was revived, and assimilated itself to christianity, and culminated in the setting up of the Virgin Mary as an object of worship, in the place of the heathen gods, and thus manifested itself forth as the abomination of desolation. Still further, during that 1260 years of papal rule, "the dwellers upon earth worshiped the dragon, that gave life to the beast."

ON OBTAINING SANCTIFICATION.

AN EXTRACT FROM A LETTER.

Dear Brother in Christ.—You are not the only one who is longing to obtain a sanctified life. It is an inbred desire of the converted soul; and every earnest follower of Christ desires that closer walk. I will not test your patience by referring to the various views (and many of them erroneous) held by modern writers respecting this very important scriptural doctrine.

You ask, "How can I obtain sanctification?" You desire it sincerely; but have you sought for it aright? Have you taken the first steps rightly? The sanctification of the Spirit is for you. That blessing is yours if you will only comply with the conditions for obtaining it. God has declared that he is no respecter of persons. But you are a free agent; it remains all with you whether you will be a sanctified child; not whether God will have you sanctified, but whether you will be; whether you will comply with his conditions, or not. Let me look briefly at the conditions.

1. Entire submission to the will of God. How can we even hope to be sanctified by the Spirit while we oppose God's will? We can know his will if we seek to. If we are ignorant of his will, we are wilfully so. First, it is his will that we study his word. There he reveals his will toward us. Second, it is his will that we know his commandments. And, third, that we do them; humbly submitting ourselves to their requirements. When he commands us to "love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind"; and if, instead, we love the world and worldly things, are we doing his will? Assuredly not. And so with all of his commandments. We must first know his commandments, and then do them, meekly, as an obedient child, submitting our wills to his in all things. This is the only road to obtain entire sanctification. But you must pass through it, or you seek in vain. Look well to this, for it is important to your eternal happiness. Having submitted your will to him entirely, and unreservedly, you must,

2. Present your body a living sacrifice unto God. Rom. 12: 1. You are not to present your body only, but also every member. You are to present yourself, as a whole, a submissive instrument to be used exclusively for his service. By thus sacrificing yourself to God, you come into the position to receive the spirit of sanctification. What is the result? You "receive the adoption of sons." And what next? "Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba Father."—Gal. 4: 6. You present yourself as a servant, but as soon as the offering is accepted, you are "no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ." We have only to comply with the conditions of God first to obtain the adoption of sons, i. e., "the (sanctification of the) Spirit of his Son" into our hearts. The work of the Spirit is instantaneous. The moment we comply with the conditions, our offering is accepted, and we receive the sanctifying Spirit of his Son.

If, after prayerfully and diligently seeking, you fail to receive this Spirit, be assured there is a lack of completeness in your offering. You must let loose of all the world. God says, "Come out from among them and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you." You need not try to think that God receives you while you are conscious, in some particular, of having your own way. You must come out fully from the world, for your citizenship is enrolled in heaven.

This, my beloved brother, is the only path in which you will find sanctification,—that holy walk with God. But there is one thing that you must prayerfully watch and guard against. Many who have received this blessing have speedily lost it. They gave themselves for a time to the Lord, and then took back the offering. You cannot keep yourself in this holy state, but, if you trust in God, he can and will guard you. But your offering must be a continuous one. Remain in the same position that you receive the sanctifying Spirit—all on the altar. Remember that one stain of sin blots out all your holiness. And remember that "the Lord is faithful, who shall stablish you, and keep you from evil."—2 Thess. 3: 3.

Now, in conclusion, let me say, do not rest night nor day till you have complied with the conditions, and received the desires of your heart. It is within your grasp. Only cast your burden believingly on the Lord. You must be holy to dwell with Jesus. He is soon coming. Be sanctified wholly to meet him. "And I pray your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Your brother on the altar,
Rochester, N. Y. Wm. H. Spenoer.

"DOES GOD LOVE ME?"

To those who are fully assured of this fact, the above question may seem strange. But there are those who are crushed and broken, disconsolate and forsaken, who really wish to be christians; but yet seem to be in darkness and doubt whether it can be that they are loved by him who made them.

I once had occasion to call at the house of a man of wealth, on business; and from the reports that had reached me, I believed the man to be very much like a tiger, or some other wild beast. So I approached his dwelling expecting to be treated roughly, and hardly hoped to escape personal abuse. The servant showed me directly into the room where this dreaded personage was sitting, and introduced me to him. I do not think there was anything in my appearance to impress the man in my favor, but he received me very politely, spoke very pleasantly, and kindly granted all I asked of him. As I left his presence, I reflected upon the incident in thoughts like these: "If this man, who has not a spark of love to God or his people, and who is possessed of most brutal passions; if this man receives me, and treats me so kindly, can I doubt but God would be equally kind? The word of truth assures me that he is kind even to the unthankful and the evil; and though I have no claim of my own, or have forfeited all claim to his favor, he will yet receive me and bless me for Jesus' sake. Yes, I do believe that the Lord is more kind than the best person I ever saw; for I am assured that he is gracious, slow to anger and of great mercy, ready to pardon iniquity and remove our sins from us as far as the east is from the west. Do you believe this? Lonely, forsaken, broken-hearted one, the Lord loves you. Believe it, and he will bind up your broken heart, and speak peace to your soul.

For the World's Crisis.

HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

Talk about it?—To be sure we must talk about holiness of heart and life, entire consecration and sanctification. We must talk about it, pray about it, preach about it, write about it; breathe it out, shout it out! Every look, thought, word, action, every moving muscle must witness for this glorious, overpowering gospel salvation. Our time, talents, property, influence—all that we are in body, soul and mind, must be for this glorious object. It must be the first thing rising up, the first and last lying down, the first going out, the first coming in. "Holiness to the Lord" must be written on our foreheads, on our door-posts, on "the bells of the horses." "Yea, every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness to the Lord." Zech. 14: 21.

This united, uniform, harmonious, continued, persevering, unflinching, consecrated effort to substantiate and diffuse this superlative, heaven-born grace, is indispensable to its final triumph. Satan and his host of coadjutors are awake, on the alert, to counteract, cover up, and utterly bury up in the dust and rubbish of carnality and formality this glorious gospel truth. He knows, the arch-enemy, the liar of all liars knows full well if this blessed doctrine of assurance, purity, perfect love and entire devotedness to God, prevail, his cause is soon at an end, his kingdom overthrown, his wicked, diabolical proceedings fall to the ground. This he knows; and thus every stone is turned, every secret, satanic machination is resorted to, to banish holiness from the earth. Even professed servants of the Most High are enlisted on his side, transforming themselves into angels of light.

Friends of truth and love, ye who do pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven;" you that delight in this redeeming, purifying, sanctifying grace, whose souls are kindled to a flame at the very name of "holiness to the Lord," what say you? is it not time to bestir ourselves, prepare for battle? Battle there must be, will be; a battle of battles, a mighty battle! No battle, perhaps, in the whole history of theological discussion will compare to it. Sword's points must be met, bayonet on bayonet, spear on spear. All the embattled hosts of hell will rise in opposition to this saving, glorifying, sanctifying quintessence of the gospel. What now?—rise, put on strength, take the field, fight! Go forward in the power of the Lord's might; put on the whole armor of God, that we may resist the wiles of the devil. "We wrestle not against flesh and blood" merely, "but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand, . . . and having done all, to stand." "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty, through God, to the pulling down of strong-holds; casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." 2 Cor. 10: 5.

"Rise to a higher, holier life,
Ye who are called the sons of God,
And girded with the Spirit's sword,
Go nobly to the strife."

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

I come now to the second, which is the main thing—the lesson itself: In whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content.

Here was a rare piece of learning, indeed, and certainly more to be wondered at in St. Paul, that he knew how to turn himself to every condition, than all the learning in the world besides, which hath been so applauded in former ages by Julius Cæsar, Ptolemy, Xenophon, the great admirers of learning.

The text hath but few words in it,—in every state be content. But if that be true, which once Fulgentius said, that the most golden sentence is ever measured by brevity and suavity, then this is a most accomplished speech; here is a great deal in a little. The text is like a precious jewel, little in quantity, but great in worth and value.

The main proposition I shall insist upon is this, that a gracious spirit is a contented spirit. The doctrine of contentment is very superlative; and till we have learned this, we have not learned to be christians.

I. It is a hard lesson. The angels in heaven had not learned it; they were not contented; though their estate was very glorious, yet they were still soaring aloft, and aimed at something higher.—Jude 1: 6. The angels which kept not their first estate; they kept not their estate, because they were not contented with their estate. Our first parents, clothed with the white robe of innocency in paradise, had not learned to be content; they had aspiring hearts; and, thinking their human nature too low and homespun, would be crowned with the deity, and be as Gods. Though they had the (Gen. 3: 5) choice of all the trees in the garden, yet none would content them but the tree of knowledge, which they supposed would have been as eye-salve to have made them omniscient. Oh, then, if this lesson were so hard to learn in innocency, how hard shall we find it, who are clogged with corruption?

II. It is of universal extent—concerns all. It concerns rich men. One would think it needless to press those to contentment whom God hath blessed with great estates, but rather persuade them to be humble and thankful; nay, but I say, Be content. Rich men have their discontents as well as others, as appears,—1. When they have a great estate yet they are discontented that they have no more; they would make the hundred talents a thousand. A man in wine, the more he drinks, the more he thirsts. Covetousness is a dry dropsy: an earthly heart is like the grave that is never satisfied. Therefore I say to you, rich men,—Be content.

2. Rich men, if we may suppose them to be content with their estates, which is very seldom; yet, though they have estate enough, they have not honor enough (Prov. 30: 16); if their barns are full enough, yet their turrets are not high enough. They would be somebody in the world, as Theudas, who boasted himself to be somebody; they never go so cheerfully as when the wind of honor and applause fills their sails; if this wind be down, they are discontented. One would think Haman had as much as his proud heart could desire; he was set above all the princes, and advanced upon the pinnacle of honor to be the second man in the kingdom (Esther 3: 1); yet, in the midst of all his pomp, because Mordecai would not uncover and kneel, he is discontented (ver. 2), and full of wrath (ver. 5), and there is no way to assuage this pleurisy of revenge, but by letting all the Jews' blood, and offering them up in sacrifice. The itch of honor is seldom allayed without blood; therefore I say to you, rich men,—Be content.

3. Rich men, if we may suppose them to be content with their honor and magnificent titles, yet they have not always contentment in their [illegible]. She that lies in the bosom may sometimes blow the coals; as Job's wife, who is a pet would have him fall out with God himself,—Curse God, and die. Sometimes children cause discontent. How oft is it seen, that the mother's milk doth nourish a viper? And he that once sucked her breast, goes about to suck her blood. Parents do often of grapes gather thorns, and of figs thistles. Children are a sweet-briar: like the rose, which is a fragrant flower; but, as a Basil saith, it hath its prickles. Our relative comforts are not all pure wine, but mixed; they have in them more dregs than spirits, and are like that river Plutarch speaks of, where the waters in the morning run sweet, but in the evening run bitter. We have no charter of exemption granted us in this life; therefore rich men had need be called upon to be contented.

III. The doctrine of contentment concerns poor men. You that do suck so liberally from the breasts of Providence, be content; it is a hard lesson, therefore it had need be set upon the sooner. How hard it is, when the livelihood is even gone,—a great estate boiled away almost to nothing—then to be content. The means of subsistence is in Scripture called our life, because it is the very sinews of life. The woman in the gospel spent all her living upon the physicians (Luke 8: 43), which, in the Greek, implies that she spent her whole life upon the physicians, because she spent the means by which she should live. It is much, when poverty hath clipped our wings, then to be content; but, though hard, it is excellent; and the apostle here had learnt, in every state to be content.

God hath brought St. Paul into as great variety of conditions as ever we read of any man, and yet he was content; else, sure, he could never have gone through it with so much cheerfulness. See into what vicissitudes this blessed apostle was cast—We are troubled on every side! There was the sadness of his condition; but not distressed, there was his content in that condition. We are perplexed; there is his affliction: but not in despair; there is his contentment. And if we read a little further,—"In afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults," etc. (2 Cor. 6: 4), there . . . having nothing, yet possessing all things" (verse 10). When the apostle was driven out of all; yet, in regard of that sweet contentment of mind, which was like music in his soul, he possessed all things. We read a short map or history of his sufferings,—"In prisons more frequent, in death oft," etc. 2 Cor. 11: 23, 24, 25. Yet behold the blessed frame and temper of his spirit,—"I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content."

Which way soever Providence did blow, he had such heavenly skill and dexterity, that he knew how to steer his course. For his outward estate he was indifferent; he could be either on the top of Jacob's Ladder, or the bottom; he could sing either the dirge or the anthem; he could be any thing that God would have him. "I know how to want, and how to abound." There is a rare pattern for us to imitate. Paul, in regard to his faith and courage, was like a cedar; he could not be stirred: but, for his outward condition, he was like a reed, bending every way with the wind of Providence. When a prosperous gale did blow upon him, he could bend with that—I know how to be full; and when a boisterous gust of affliction did blow, he could bend in humility with that—I know how to be hungry.

St. Paul was, as Aristotle speaks, like a die that hath four squares; throw it which way you will, it falls upon a bottom: let God throw the Apostle which way he would, he fell upon this bottom of contentment. A contented spirit is like a watch; though you carry it up and down with you, yet the spring of it is not shaken, nor the wheels out of order, but the watch keeps its perfect motion; so it was with St. Paul; though God had carried him into various conditions, yet he was not lifted up with the one, nor cast down with the other. The spring of his heart was not broken, the wheels of his affection were not disordered, but kept their constant motion toward heaven—still content. The ship that lies at anchor may sometimes be a little shaken, but never sinks; flesh and blood may have its fears and disquiets, but grace doth check them. A christian, having cast anchor in heaven, his heart never sinks: a gracious spirit is a contented spirit.

This is a rare lesson. Paul did not learn it at the feet of Gamaliel—I am instructed.—Phil. 4: 12. "I am initiated into this holy mystery;" as if he had said, "I have gotten the divine art, I have the secret of it." God must make us right artists. If we should put some men to an art that they are not skilled in, how unfit would they be for it. Put an husbandman to limning or drawing pictures, what strange work would he make! This is out of his sphere. Take a limner, that is exact in laying of colors, and put him to plow, or set him to planting and grafting of trees; this is not his art, he is not skilled in it. Bid a natural man live by faith; and, when all things go cross, be contented: you bid him do that he has no skill in; you may as well bid a child guide the stern of a ship. To live contentedly upon God, in the deficiency of outward comforts, is an art which flesh and blood hath not revealed: nay, many of God's own children, who excel in some duties of religion, when they come to this of contentment, how do they stumble! They have scarcely commenced scholars in the school of Christ.

For the World's Crisis.

PRESS ON.

Now, when we are so near the complete and final victory, "let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." Such a harvest as the saints will reap, who can fully realize it? It is the glorious inheritance, the "treasure laid up in heaven," eternal life, and pleasures evermore. And the great Captain never forgets even one of the weakest who are striving to gain the victory over the world the flesh and the great adversary. He who died for us and rose again is ever watching over us and kindly caring for us. How comforting his words—"Lo, I am with you ALWAYS, even unto the end of the world."

O, if we could realize all his goodness, and all his thoughts of mercy and love toward us, how it would encourage us to persevere, and help us to "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."

Fellow traveler, there is also a joy set before you, that is more than enough to balance all your trials here. Then let us wait and watch till the Master comes.

VISIT TO NEW BRUNSWICK.

We have just returned from a pleasant visit to Woodstock, Simonds, and Jacksontown, in N. B. We left Boston Oct. 11th, on the steamboat New England, and had a delightful trip to St. Andrews, N. B., calling on our way at Portland and Eastport, in Me. The burnt city of Portland presents a sad sight; but it is rapidly rising again from its ashes. If the noble trees, that added so much to the former beauty of the city, could only look green again, it would remove much of the gloom that hangs over the place; but they are dead, and stand to tell the tale of sorrow that knows no parallel.

We had a very pleasant time on the great deep, and arrived at St. Andrews, the end of the steamboat route, about half past one on Friday. We waited till 6 o'clock for the cars to Richmond station, the end of the R. R., where we arrived about 11½ o'clock P. M., and were met by Bro. G. L. Raymond, of Woodstock. We arrived in W. about half past one o'clock in the morning, and met a hearty welcome at Bro. Saml. J. Parsons, where we took much comfort during our stay in Woodstock.

Woodstock is a pleasant, incorporated town, in the parish of Woodstock, on the St. Johns river, and the largest one above Frederickton, the capital. The English population prevails, but there are many Americans. One from the States would feel quite at home here, so far as the customs of the people are concerned. We find more of the foreign element in many towns and cities of the States, than here. There is a good degree of enterprise, but not so much of the dash as we see in the States. The St. Johns river affords a convenient mode of transportation to Frederickton and St. Johns. The soil is good on the banks of the river, and for many miles back; and is easy to cultivate, affording good crops. The surface is undulating, and rather free from stones.

A R. R. thirteen miles in length is being constructed from Woodstock to Eel River Station, on the St. Andrews and Canada R. R. The principal business is in the lumber trade. The Carleton and York Mining Company in this place is doing a flourishing business. The iron made here is said to be the best that is sent to England. Woodstock has good opportunities from a rapid increase in business.

We commenced our meetings in the Mechanics' Institute, Lord's day, Oct. 14th, and had very large and attentive audiences all day and evening. We felt quite at home, and enjoyed our first interview with the people. We met a cordial reception, and though many who came were of the first class, they did not act as though they felt ashamed to be at our meeting, as we have seen some would-be great folks appear. We found an ear to hear, and many who love the truth. Some years since, Bro. Albion Ross preached here, and met with considerable opposition, but was quite successful in sowing the good seed. Since then, others have sown and watered, till a goodly number became well satisfied of the great truths of the Bible; but for some time there has been but little preaching here, consequently the interest has been rather low.

When we arrived in the place we expected to have commenced a discussion with a Baptist minister on Monday evening, Oct. 15th, but found him refusing, on the ground that he was not prepared. Some months since, he took occasion to speak quite pointedly against our views, and defied any one to prove them true; whereupon, some who heard him accepted the challenge in our behalf, and fixed on the time named for the discussion to begin. Accordingly, he stated to his people that he should not be able to attend the usual evening meetings the week preceding the one set for the discussion, as he wished the time to prepare for the debate. In keeping with all these things, the notice of the discussion was inserted in the Carleton Sentinel, published in Woodstock, and the same was copied into "The Christian Visitor," of Oct. 11th, a Baptist paper, published in St. Johns, with some comments, as follows:—

"A POLEMICAL DISCUSSION.—The following notice appeared in the Carleton Sentinel of last week:—

'We are requested to state that Elder Miles Grant, of Boston, Editor of the World's Crisis, and well known in the United States as a theological discussionist, will preach in the Mechanics' Institute, in this town, on Sunday, the 14th inst. And that on Monday evening following he will hold a discussion with Rev. Mr. Rowe, of Jacksontown, on 'the future state,' in the same place.'

Our Bro. Rowe, upon entering upon his new field of labor in Jacksontown, finding the minds of many were being sadly corrupted by the mischievous doctrines of the annihilationists, so called, opened his gospel battery upon these destructive errors. His missiles told with such deadly effect upon the ranks of the enemy, that they became fearfully alarmed, and sent on for this champion Grant to save, if possible, their cause from ruin. The pastor of Jacksontown has our hearty sympathy in this bold and fearless stand which he has taken in defense of the truth, and we doubt not, in the name of the Lord, he will gloriously triumph."

In the Woodstock Acadian, of Oct. 13th, appeared the following:—

MR. EDITOR:—In order to do justice to myself and the public, in relation to this anticipated discussion, you will oblige me by inserting the following article:—

1st. When I first come to Jacksontown I had occasion to preach some funeral sermons, during which I preached upon the intermediate state of the righteous. After the first sermon a person came to my house and challenged me to meet a man and discuss the intermediate state of the dead, to which I answered I would; for them to get their man and let me know, and give me time to become acquainted with their peculiar views, and I would let them know when and where I would meet him. Then soon after I preached a second funeral sermon, and entered more fully into the same subject; and before I got out of the meeting-house yard I was assailed in a very insulting manner by a brother of the former party, with a challenge to meet a man they would bring, to discuss the subject in public. I told him I would meet any man; and when they had secured a man to let me know in time to be prepared to meet him.

2nd. That shortly after, by request, I consented to deliver a lecture on the intermediate state of the dead. At the close of the lecture I stated that I gave no challenge but had received a number, and was not afraid to meet any man in the world.

3d. Soon after the lecture I received a note from Mr. G. Raymond, Esq., stating he had been informed I had offered a challenge to any man in the world, and that Mr. Grant accepted my offer. Not knowing who Mr. Raymond was, and being otherwise engaged, I did not notice his letter.

4th. Shortly after this note came to hand, Mr. Raymond and one of his party came to my house and said he had received a letter from Mr. Grant accepting my challenge to a discussion. I told Mr. Raymond I had given no man a challenge, but had received two; that I was the person challenged and not Mr. Grant; and if Mr. Grant would write me a personal challenge I would accept of it. Then Mr. Raymond said Mr. Grant would not do that.

5th. Then I received a second letter from Mr. Raymond, bearing upon the same subject, to which I paid no attention. I heard no more of the matter until it appeared in the Carleton Sentinel; and who had taken it upon themselves to make use of my name, I did not know; and if the Carleton Sentinel would not make use of my name again in connection with such subjects, without my permission, they will much oblige me.

6th. When Mr. Grant, or any other man of acknowledged ability, will send me a written challenge to meet them and discuss the intermediate state of the dead, I will accept it, and make preparations accordingly, and let them know when and where I would meet them. Or, if necessary, I would meet them privately and make arrangements on the propositions connected with the subject, the place, and the amount of time to be consumed in the discussion. If I had not informed Mr. Raymond then of my present urgent engagements, I would have thought less of the position in which he brought me before the public, he knowing that I distinctly informed him that if Mr. Grant wished to discuss the subject with me I would meet him about Christmas. There have been many flying reports that Mr. Rowe had backed down, but I am still convinced my back is up, and will remain so until I leave the world; and I am determined to face the foe and never retreat from the field whoever may be the conqueror.

October 9, 1866. REV. J. ROWE.

After learning the position that the Elder had taken, we addressed him the following note:—

"Woodstock, Oct. 13th, 1866.

MR. ROWE:—Dear Sir,—In consequence of letters received from Brn. G. L. Raymond, Moses Corliss, and Samuel J. Parsons, stating that you had publicly challenged any one and every one to meet your positions on the future state of man, I have accepted the challenge, and now appear to discuss the subject under consideration. But I am sorry to learn, on my arrival, that you now refuse to abide by the arrangements; but have published in the Acadian that if I will give a challenge, you will accept. This I now do, and propose the following resolution for discussion:—

'Resolved, That the wicked will be destroyed.'

The discussion to commence next Monday evening, Oct. 15th, in the Institute Hall, at Woodstock, as advertised in the Sentinel, and continue five consecutive evenings.

Your Bro. in Christ, MILES GRANT."

The following reply was handed to us on the 14th of Oct.:—

"Jacksontown, Oct. 13th, 1866.

MR. GRANT:—Dear Sir,—I accept your challenge to a discussion on the following subject:—Pro. 'That man has a spirit, and that spirit remains in a conscious state after the death of the body, until the resurrection.' Time on the 26th Dec., 1866.

Yours respectfully, J. ROWE."

As we had made a previous engagement for the time specified, we could not agree to meet him at the time he had named; consequently the whole affair of a discussion with the Elder had come to a period. As many had seen the notice in the papers stating that the discussion would begin on Monday evening, Oct. 15th, and would come to hear the debate, we concluded to speak that evening on the creation and death of man. We had a crowded house of very attentive hearers. At the close of the sermon an opportunity was given for asking questions, which was well improved for an hour by six gentlemen, among whom Elder Rowe was prominent. This awakened great interest in the minds of the people.

The next night we spoke on the resurrection of the dead, and were questioned an hour or more by a Congregational minister and others. The interest in the community was great. Every body seemed to be talking about the subjects we were presenting to the people.

On Wednesday evening, we spoke on the word SOUL, showing its different uses in the Bible; and that among all the fifty different renderings of the original words nephesh and psuche, in no passage did we find any thing about an "immortal soul." When we got through, Elder Rowe and a Congregational minister questioned us very closely, and with great earnestness, for over an hour. The excitement in the feelings of the audience was intense. It was one of the most interesting seasons we ever enjoyed. The Lord gave us "great peace," and special aid in the defense of his word. Some fourteen ministers were present.

Although we went to Woodstock to begin a discussion on Monday evening, Oct. 15th, as advertised, yet up to the evening of which we are speaking, Elder R. refused to meet us earlier than Oct. 29th, at which time we had stated we should be under the necessity of returning home. On this Wednesday evening (17th), he was so anxious to argue instead of abiding by the privilege given to ask questions, that we remarked to him in the presence of the audience, that he appeared to be well prepared to commence the discussion, and we would purpose that we meet the following Monday evening, Oct. 22nd. To this he made no reply. But after the close of the meeting, he consented to have the debate begin the 22nd. We had some difficulty in agreeing on a question, as he now refused to take the one he had sent us. At length the Methodist minister proposed the following, which was accepted:—

"RESOLVED, That eternal death, as applied to the wicked, is the eternal extinction of conscious being."

As the hall was engaged for other purposes the remainder of the week, we went up the river St. John, fifteen miles, to Simonds, and held meetings Thursday P. M. and evening. The scenery on the banks of the river is quite pleasant, especially at Simonds. The meetings at S. were interesting. The house was much crowded with very attentive listeners. Three rose for prayers in the afternoon, and several more in the evening. We found a good home with Bro. J. N. Moore.

During our meetings in N. B., we enjoyed the aid and society of Brn. Corliss, Hall, and Reed, faithful laborers in the vineyard of the Lord, who are doing what they can to persuade the people to be ready for the coming of the Son of man.

Friday evening and Saturday afternoon and evening, we had good and crowded meetings in Jacksontown, ten miles from Woodstock. Several requested prayers, and a goodly number were quickened in the service of the Lord. The field here seemed white for the harvest. We enjoyed our pilgrim home with Bro. Enoch Burpee.

Lord's day, Oct. 21st. we were again at Woodstock before a large, attentive, and intelligent audience. We found there was great interest in the minds of the people in relation to the subjects we had presented, and the approaching discussion. Some felt quite bitter, and even threatened a mob. Efforts were made to arrest us for selling tracts, but it was found we had violated no law of the Province. One minister consulted the Mayor to ascertain if there was not a law to prevent the discussion from taking place. He was informed there was none. He then wished to know if there was not a law against the preaching of heresy, so that Grant might be locked up. He received a negative answer. He replied that there had been such a law. The Mayor replied there had been some strange laws.

Monday evening came, and with it a great crowd of people. The discussion was to begin at seven o'clock, and before six the hall was filled to overflowing, and hundreds had to go away. We think we never saw a house so densely packed in all its parts as was the Mechanics' Institute that evening. Some found a ladder, and climbed up outside and listened at the open windows; others obtained a large lumber wagon, and drew that to a window. Thus every possible way was employed to get opportunity to hear. At last the solemn moment arrived to open the debate. The Mayor, Mr. Fisher, presided, and the very best order prevailed. For two hours the pro and con of the subject were presented according to the best ability of the disputants, when adjourned to meet again next evening.

It was said that the people were more excited about theological matters than they had ever been on political subjects. It was truly town-talk. Some were defending one side, and some the other; so that the discussion had become general. It was evident that many began to see in harmony with the affirmative; while others were growing more bitter, and really felt as did the minister who visited the Mayor to see if there was not a law to arrest Grant for preaching heresy.

Another crowd assembled on Tuesday evening to hear further on the subject. We again had the very best of order, under the direction of our excellent chairman. To the great surprise of all, at the close of that evening, our opponent refused to discuss any longer. He had brought out several new points in his last speech which he considered the strongest; and by refusing to discuss any more, we had no opportunity to reply to them. The best we could do was to quietly submit to the circumstances; as we had no power to make a man talk when he refused. Thus closed the debate.

It was then announced that we would preach in the same place the next evening, at which time we had an interesting meeting. A dozen or more came forward for prayers. It was evident the Spirit of the Lord was working upon many hearts. Our meetings continued to increase in interest to their close. It was hard to tear away from the dear friends whose society we enjoyed in W.

Sabbath, Oct. 28th, was a day of much interest. The Spirit of the Lord was with us all day, from the love-feast in the morning, to the close of a heavenly communion season in the evening, when about forty gathered around the table of the Lord. Eight came forward for prayers. A number of others are almost persuaded to be christians. We felt anxious to comply with the many earnest requests to have us stay longer, but duty, and other arrangements, called us away.

We shall remember with much pleasure our visit to Woodstock, and the hearty expressions of kindness from the many friends whose acquaintance we were favored to make. Several of them did not agree with us in all of our views, but they all manifested a noble spirit, and showed that they were free from bigotry, and willing to embrace the truth as soon as they should be satisfied we were right in our position. There is an open door in W.

SANCTIFICATION.—A very excellent and practical article on Sanctification will be found in another column, from the pen and experience of Bro. Wm. H. Spencer. Give it a careful reading, and then follow his advice.

☞ Please observe Bro. D. Cogswell's excellent suggestions. Let us all work with a will for the Lord, and we shall see rich fruits of our labors.

MACHIAS PORT.—Bro. Andrew Dow, of Machias Port, Me., wishes some of the preachers would come there and hold some meetings.

DISCUSSION AT WOODSTOCK, N. B.

We clipped the following from the Carleton Sentinel, published in Woodstock, N. B.:—

"The discussion between Eld. Miles Grant of Boston and Rev. Mr. Rowe of Jacksontown, on the proposition, 'Eternal death as applicable to the wicked is the eternal extinction of conscious being,' Mr. Grant taking the affirmative, was commenced on Monday evening. L. P. Fisher, Esq., in the chair. There was present the most dense crowd of persons, from all parts of the county, we have ever witnessed in a building in Woodstock. The number is variously estimated from seven hundred to one thousand persons, while nearly as many more left, being unable to get into the Institute. The services commenced by singing and prayer. The most perfect order prevailed, and the speakers, who occupied each fifteen minutes alternately for two hours, were listened to most attentively. The discussion was renewed on Tuesday evening; there were not so many persons present, but the hall was filled. At the expiration of the two hours, occupied by the speakers alternately, as on the previous evening, the chairman asked Mr. Grant if the discussion was to be resumed on Wednesday evening, to which he replied in the affirmative. In reply to a similar question, Mr. Rowe said that 'as the gentleman (Mr. Grant) has not answered any of my arguments, I now leave it.' The meeting was then adjourned, Mr. Grant expressing very much surprise at what he considered the summary disposal of the discussion, which, he said, he understood was to have been continued.

"A mere summary of the discussion would not satisfy our readers, and therefore we have determined, under certain conditions, to publish it in other than newspaper form, for which it is not adapted."

We expect a supply of the work when it is done. We think all of our readers will be much interested in reading the very correct report as taken by Mr. Samuel Watts, the intelligent and gentlemanly editor of the Sentinel. Price 25 cents, postage two cents.

MEETINGS IN WOODSTOCK.

The following is from the Woodstock Acadian of Oct. 22nd, 1866:—

"The sensation of the week has been of a polemical nature. Rev. Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, a religious journal published in Boston, and the organ of the denomination popularly known as 'Second Advents,' is on a visit to Woodstock; and on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings last lectured in the Mechanics' Institute, on some of the topics on which his church bold opinions which other sects consider peculiar. Mr. Grant's visit here having been announced some time since, and he being considered a very clever polemic, great interest has been excited, and the hall of the Institute on the three evenings in question, was crammed to repletion, all denominations and classes being represented. Mr. Grant having promised to answer any question which might be asked him, found many enquirers; and the questioning and answering gave rise to scenes more amusing than edifying."

THE JUBILEE HARP.

"The new hymn and tune book, talked about for years, is at last ready. Its external appearance is calculated to excite admiration. The binding combines strength, simplicity, and good taste. The print and paper are excellent. As we turn over the pages, the old familiar tunes and hymns of The Lyre seem like the faces of old friends. We miss only one that was dear to us—that beautiful chant,* 'Nearer, my God, to thee.' We trust it may find a place in future editions. Among the new tunes and hymns we find very many which insure the popularity of the book among our people. We had thought to name a few of the last tunes; but, as we turn over the leaves, we find so many that deserve to be classed among the best, that our space will not allow us to refer to them even by name.

We now have a hymn and tune book probably as nearly perfect as will ever be published. Let us as a people at once unite in accepting it for general use. The Lyre is an old, dear friend; with a feeling of sadness we bid it farewell, while we as cordially welcome to our fireside and church devotions THE JUBILEE HARP."—Voice of the West.

GEMS FROM RUTHERFORD.—No. 3.

Jesus, who upon earth ate and drank with publicans and sinners, and spoke and conferred with harlots, and put out his holy hand and touched the leper's filthy skin, and came evermore nigh sinners, even now in glory, is still that same Lord; his honor and his great court in heaven have not made him forget his poor friends on earth. In him honors change not manners, and he doth yet desire your company. Take him for the old Christ, and claim his kindness still. There are none so poor as that they can say in his face that he hath given them nothing.

Grace, grace forever upon you and your seed; and it shall be your portion in despite of all the powers of darkness: do not make more question of this. The Lord saw a nail in my heart loose, and he hath now fastened it—honor be to his majesty.

I wish all professors to fall in love with grace. All our songs should be of his free grace. It is a better way to heaven than the old way that was in Adam's days. It hath this fair advantage, that no man's emptiness and want layeth an inhibition upon Christ, or hindereth his salvation, but our Lord putteth the names of bankrupts, and Adam's forlorn heirs and beggars, and the halt and blind, in the free charters. Heaven and angels may wonder that we have got such a gate of sin and hell. Such a back entry out of hell, as Christ made and brought out the captives by, is more than my poor shallow thoughts can comprehend.

O, but Christ hath a saving eye! Salvation is in his eyelids. When he first looked on me I was saved; it cost him but a look to make hell quit of me. O, but merits, free merits by the dear blood of Jesus, were the best way that ever we could have gotten out of hell. O what a sweet, O what a safe and sure way it is to come out leaning on a Saviour. That Christ and a sinner should be one, and have heaven betwixt them, and be halvers of salvation, is a wonder indeed. What more humble could Love be!

Alas, how often play I fast and loose with Christ! He bindeth, I loose; he buildeth, I cast down; he trimmeth up a salvation for me, and I mar it; I fall out with Christ, and he agreeth with me again twenty times a day. I lose what I had, but Christ is at my back and following on, to stoop and take up what falleth from me. I was and am bewildered with temptations, and wanted a guide to heaven;—O what have I to say of that excellent, surpassing, and super-eminent thing they call the grace of God—the way of free redemption in Christ! And when poor, poor I, dead in law, was sold, fettered and imprisoned in justice' closest ward, which is hell and damnation; when I, a wretched one, lighted upon noble Jesus, eternally kind Jesus, tender-hearted Jesus; nay, when he lighted upon me first, and knew me, I found that he scorned to take a price, or any thing like hire of angels, or seraphim, or any of his creatures; and therefore I would praise him for this, that the whole army of the redeemed ones (will) sit rent-free in heaven.

It is a mercy's wonder and grace's wonder, that Christ will lend a piece of the lodging, and a back-chamber beside himself, to our lusts, and that he and such swine should keep house together in our soul. For suppose they couch and contract themselves into little room when Christ cometh in, and seem to lie under his feet, yet they often break out again; and that a foot of the old man, or a leg, or arm nailed to Christ's cross looseth the nail, or breaketh out again; and yet Christ, beside this unruly and unsubdued neighbor, can still be making heaven in the saints one way or other. May I not say, Lord Jesus, what dost thou here? Yet here he must be. But I will not lose my feet to go on into this depth and wonder; for free mercy and infinite merits took a lodging to Christ and us, beside such a loathsome guest as sin.

Ye commend his free love, and it is well done. O that I could help you, and if I could be master-convener to gather an earth full, an heaven full of tongues, dipped and steeped in my Lord's well of love, or his wine of love, to raise a song of praises to him betwixt the east and west end and furtherest point of the broad heavens! If I were in your case (as, alas! my dry and dead heart is not now in that garden), I would borrow leave to come and stand upon the banks and coasts of that sea of love, and be a feasted soul, to see love's fair tide, free love's high and lofty waves, each of them higher than ten earths, flowing in upon pieces of lost clay. O welcome, welcome, great sea! Come, come, dear friend, and be pained that the King's wine cellar of free love, and his banqueting house—oh, so wide, so stately! oh, so God-like, so glorious!—should be so abundant, so overflowing, and your shallow vessel so little, to take in some part of that love. But since it cannot come into you for want of room, enter yourself into this sea of love, and breathe under these waters, and die of love, and live as one dead and drowned of this love.

Sweet, sweet have his comforts been to my soul; my pen, tongue and heart have not words to express the kindness, love and mercy of my Wel'-Beloved to me, in this house of my pilgrimage.

Faith may dance because Christ singeth. Faith apprehendeth pardon, but never payeth a penny for it. I would be farther in upon Christ than at his joys—in where love and mercy lodgeth—beside his heart. He who sitteth on the throne is himself alone a sufficient heaven. Sure I am, he is far the best half of heaven. Grace, grace hath done all things well! D. T. T.

A. D. 606, AND 1866.

The unanimity of writers on prophecy in fixing on the dates at the head of this article, as determining the beginning and end of the 1260 years of Papal civil rule, is not a little remarkable. The following list, selected from my "Catalogue of American authors on Prophecy," exhibits the names, date, and place of the various authors and their works who have established the above dates, and who all expected, and so published in their works, that the downfall of the Papacy, the commencement of the millennium, or the personal coming of the Lord, would occur during this so-called "prophetic year," 1866. The list embraces forty-two authors, divines, and laymen; and could be considerably swelled if the names of those who have but incidentally alluded to these "times and seasons" in works not prophetical, and in commentaries, were added to it.

It is just to state that not all in the above list can be named as supporting the view of Christ's coming in 1866, or of the commencement of the millennium then;—some fixed upon later dates for the ushering in of the period of the thousand years of blessedness, while a majority supposed that our Lord would come pre-millennially, at some time during the year named; but each and all have quoted and remarked upon this year as constituting a notable epoch in the history both of the Papal and Mohammedan powers, resulting in their complete overthrow and final destruction.

The earliest writers of whom we know who have selected these dates for the rise and fall of the Papacy, and coming of the Lord, are David Chytræus, Prof. of Divinity at Rostock, also at Wittemberg, in Germany, in 1563–71; Aretius, of Berne, in Switzerland, mentioned by Foxe, the martyrologist, as dying in 1574; Matthias Flacius, Prof. of Greek and Latin at Wittemberg, who died in 1575; David Pareus, Prof. of Divinity at Heidelberg, in Germany, in 1605; Archbishop William Laud, of England, who died 1645; and Wm. Whiston, Prof. at Cambridge, England, in 1766. It will be thus seen that for over three hundred years past, or ever since the period of the great Reformation, the church of God has had her eye fixed upon the present year of our Lord 1866, as the probable termination of the term of years which divine prophecy allots to the civil power and dominion of the Papacy, and perhaps of the very consummation itself, and coming of that great divine kingdom which shall stand "forever, even forever and ever."

In this connection, it may also be said that Rev. M. Baxter, in his work on Louis Napoleon, has given the names of nearly a hundred authors, both living and dead, together with the titles of their works, who regard the circle of years between 1864 and 1869, as containing the true time of the end of this christian dispensation, or the End of the World. All the authors I have named date the 1260 years at the edict of the emperor Phocas, made to Boniface Third, then Bishop of Rome, constituting him "Universal Bishop," which they, following the usual ancient authorities, suppose to have been done in the year 606. But Bower, in his History of the Popes, affirms this date to be one year too early, and says that Pope Boniface only ruled from Feb. 19th 607, to Nov. 10th (or 20th) when he died, his Pontificate lasting but eight or nine months, and all falling within the limits of one year, viz, 607. Should Bower prove to have been correct in his date, the prophetic number would end in 1867. That he is very likely to have gotten the right date, is evident from the authority which he follows. Anastasius, the Bibliothecan, referred to in Bower's foot notes (vol. 3, p. 426), was fully competent to know. He was a very learned Greek Abbot, and ecclesiastical writer, of the Romish persuasion, who, during the Popedoms of Nicholas I., Adrian II., and John the VIII., from A. D. 858 to 882, was the Librarian of the Church of Rome. He understood both the Greek and Latin tongues, and wrote a "History of the Lives of the Popes" down to his own time, printed at Mentz, 1612, it being the first ever written. Dupin calls him "famous," and Clarke speaks of him as "renowned for his collections." He died in 886. Bower having once been Professor of History, in the University at Rome, had access to the very highest and most learned authors of the church, and must be regarded as correct in locating the great Phocas edict in 607, instead of 606, as has been previously shown in the columns of this paper by the senior editor.

We can see the beginning of the end. Amen; even so, come, Lord Jesus.

A GREAT IDEA.

BRO. GRANT:—I noticed in the Crisis of Oct. 3d, a few lines from Bro. D. T. Taylor's pen. I see that there has been a great idea revolving in his mind, and that idea has dropped off the end of his pen upon the paper. Now I do believe that Bro. Taylor will be mistaken in one thing—that six thousand of us will lay down the paper and think no more about it. My dear brethren and sisters,—now I mean every one that reads the Crisis,—let us disappoint Bro. Taylor this time, if we never did before. Just think of the idea for a minute. One subscriber only. Can we not do that? It seems to me that I hear you all say, "I can, and I will." Now if you say you will, and then set about it, the work is done. Just think, that little effort on our part, each of us, and our paper will have over fifteen thousand subscribers. The great day of accounts can only reveal how much good this great idea, carried out, will have accomplished.

Now, brethren, I have an idea revolving in my mind, in addition to Bro. Taylor's, and will let it drop off the end of my pen upon this paper. What do you think it is? I will tell you. While each one of us is getting our new subscriber for the Crisis, let us all get one new subscriber for the Voice of the West. We can all do this, if we set about it, so that it will all be accomplished within three months. I, for one, am determined to do this very thing, the Lord helping me, and as much more as I can. Brethren, let us work with a will. The Lord is at hand. Let us be found doing. I see there is a working spirit among our brethren and sisters, every where. God bless them. Amen. D. COGGSWELL.

HOBBIES.

BRO. GRANT:—This opprobrious epithet is now in constant use by writers in the Crisis, as well as elsewhere. Indeed it has become the mad-dog cry from every quarter. If any desire to cast stigma on any doctrine you sincerely believe, that he does not, he has only to call it your "hobby," and that ugly name is enough to keep certain ones horror-stricken as to what is taught by the good Bro., without investigating, or proving and holding fast the good. And what is to be deplored, truth, Bible truth, plain Bible deductions, are oftener stigmatized than any thing else.

Not a doctrine that we hold sacred, and bear reproach for believing, but what has been stigmatized, your "hobby," or "hobbies." And a multitude of minds have been poisoned and kept from investigating and receiving the word of God and truth by that ugly name.

I hope, as disciples of Jesus, as brethren, we shall use it no more. Throw away the stereotype plates, and let it go out of date. Its use shows a lack of christian liberality and fidelity in the searching of the Scriptures. Let us love one another well enough to call things by their right names; and if any err from the truth, let it be our business in the spirit of meekness to convert him for Christ's sake, and save a soul from death. In love with Jesus, L. BOUTELL.

AT SYRACUSE AGAIN.

Having found it very inconvenient to live so far from a public thoroughfare, and desiring to be in a more central locality on account of postal advantages, I have again taken up my residence in Syracuse, N. ST. LOUIS MISSION.

BRO. GRANT:—On my return from Memphis, on the 12th inst., I stopped in this city to look after the interest of the mission house. I found that during the absence of Bro. Flagg, in consequence of the prevalence of cholera here, and other causes, the mission had suffered much. Some of the best male members had died of cholera, one of them an officer in the society. Many had moved out of the city. And to add to this, Sisters Prescott and Curtis were both taken down with the cholera, which greatly discouraged the remnant for a time. Eld. D. Crouch stood by at this time, and cheered the hearts of what remained. And just in this hour, the hall was called for for another object, and so the meetings ceased for a time, while the Sabbath school was kept up at another place.

Last week, on the return of Sisters Prescott, Curtis and Boynton to the city, and about the same time, Eld. Flagg from the East, a consultation was had on what was to be done for the mission. The first thing was to procure a place for meeting. The Wesleyan Chapel, in Seventh street, which they lost by not paying the mortgage, within the last year, being now empty and to let by the present owner, a real estate broker, application was made, and it was leased to us on reasonable terms. And so the Lord has opened to us the most eligible place in the city for meetings or school among the freedmen. The house was opened Sunday, Oct. 14th, and meetings and Sunday school commenced—Bro. Flagg spoke in the morning and I in the afternoon and evening.

The Sabbath school, with a little effort, can be increased from its present number of forty to two hundred, from the ignorant and neglected ones in the neighborhood. And the congregation will soon fill the house to overflowing. And besides this, the freedmen are calling for a day and evening school. The city not having opened their free schools as yet, the freedmen press us for a school. And so Sister Curtis will soon open a school in the chapel, and the freedmen will sustain and meet all expenses in this department.

I would add that we have calls for more help in the towns around the city. And this opening calls for help. A judicious and earnest man could do good among both white and colored people. And such a man should be sent to this field as soon as the Board may see proper to do so.

And now, my brethren, while the mission board and missions are acting harmoniously and effectively, all we need is the means to carry forward our plans. And this we shall have. You will no doubt repeat your call for help, and I shall be pleased to back you up in that work. Let the destitute be fed, as the door opens, with the "word of the kingdom," before it is too late. Truly yours,

JOSHUA V. HIMES.

NEW TRACTS.

The following new tracts are just issued by the Western Advent Christian Association. They are good to enlighten the unenlightened, and awaken the careless; and they deserve a wide circulation.

"Time is Short!" and "Be Ready!" Two good little tracts of admonition and warning. 5c. for the two; 50c. per one hundred (50 of each.)

"The Penalty of Sin." A valuable tract of 24 pages, by Eld. O. R. Fassett, showing that "the wages of sin is (literal) DEATH." 5c. single; 8 copies, 25c.; 20 copies, 50c.; $2.00 per one hundred. W. E. H.

MOTHER IS DEAD.

How many can say with a sad heart, "Mother is dead." My dear mother was not taken from me while I was a child, like many others, but God spared her life until she was almost eighty-three years of age; but she has gone. The enemy, death, has taken her from us. She sleeps in Jesus, resting in hope. Soon Christ will come, and mother will rise singing. Thank the Lord, for the resurrection day is near. Beloved in the Lord, we shall soon meet our dear friends who have died in the Lord, never to part again. Father, mother, brother and sister, I have left in New Hampshire, sleeping in the cold ground. Sad the thought! Friend after friend departs, and we are left to mourn, and pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done"; bring back our friends again. In a little time from this, our Life-giver will come, and give us glory, honor, immortality, eternal life, if faithful to the end.

I have returned to Lowell, to toil on a little longer, until Christ who is my life appears, then I hope to appear with him in glory. Pray for me. Your sister, loving Christ's appearing, SARAH J. INGRAHAM.

VISIT TO NEW BRUNSWICK.

We have just returned from a pleasant visit to Woodstock, Simonds, and Jacksontown, in N. B. We left Boston Oct. 11th, on the steamboat New England, and had a delightful trip to St. Andrews, N. B., calling on our way at Portland and Eastport, in Me. The burnt city of Portland presents a sad sight; but it is rapidly rising again from its ashes. If the noble trees, that added so much to the former beauty of the city, could only look green again, it would remove much of the gloom that hangs over the place; but they are dead, and stand to tell the tale of sorrow that knows no parallel.

We had a very pleasant time on the great deep, and arrived at St. Andrews, the end of the steamboat route, about half past one on Friday. We waited till 6 o'clock for the cars to Richmond station, the end of the R. R., where we arrived about 11½ o'clock P. M., and were met by Bro. G. L. Raymond, of Woodstock. We arrived in W. about half past one o'clock in the morning, and met a hearty welcome at Bro. Saml. J. Parsons, where we took much comfort during our stay in Woodstock.

Woodstock is a pleasant, incorporated town, in the parish of Woodstock, on the St. Johns river, and the largest one above Frederickton, the capital. The English population prevails, but there are many Americans. One from the States would feel quite at home here, so far as the customs of the people are concerned. We find more of the foreign element in many towns and cities of the States, than here. There is a good degree of enterprise, but not so much of the dash as we see in the States. The St. Johns river affords a convenient mode of transportation to Frederickton and St. Johns. The soil is good on the banks of the river, and for many miles back; and is easy to cultivate, affording good crops. The surface is undulating, and rather free from stones.

A R. R. thirteen miles in length is being constructed from Woodstock to Eel River Station, on the St. Andrews and Canada R. R. The principal business is in the lumber trade. The Carleton and York Mining Company in this place is doing a flourishing business. The iron made here is said to be the best that is sent to England. Woodstock has good opportunities from a rapid increase in business.

We commenced our meetings in the Mechanics' Institute, Lord's day, Oct. 14th, and had very large and attentive audiences all day and evening. We felt quite at home, and enjoyed our first interview with the people. We met a cordial reception, and though many who came were of the first class, they did not act as though they felt ashamed to be at our meeting, as we have seen some would-be great folks appear. We found an ear to hear, and many who love the truth. Some years since, Bro. Albion Ross preached here, and met with considerable opposition, but was quite successful in sowing the good seed. Since then, others have sown and watered, till a goodly number became well satisfied of the great truths of the Bible; but for some time there has been but little preaching here, consequently the interest has been rather low.

When we arrived in the place we expected to have commenced a discussion with a Baptist minister on Monday evening, Oct. 15th, but found him refusing, on the ground that he was not prepared. Some months since, he took occasion to speak quite pointedly against our views, and defied any one to prove them true.; whereupon, some who heard him accepted the challenge in our behalf, and fixed on the time named for the discussion to begin. Accordingly, he stated to his people that he should not be able to attend the usual evening meetings the week preceding the one set for the discussion, as he wished the time to prepare for the debate. In keeping with all these things, the notice of the discussion was inserted in the Carleton Sentinel, published in Woodstock, and the same was copied into "The Christian Visitor," of Oct. 11th, a Baptist paper, published in St. Johns, with some comments, as follows:—

'We are requested to state that Elder Miles Grant, of Boston, Editor of the World's Crisis, and well known in the United States as a theological discussionist, will preach in the Mechanics' Institute, in this town, on Sunday, the 14th inst. And that on Monday evening following he will hold a discussion with Rev. Mr. Rowe, of Jacksontown, on 'the future state,' in the same place.'

Our Bro. Rowe, upon entering upon his new field of labor in Jacksontown, finding the minds of many were being sadly corrupted by the mischievous doctrines of the annihilationists, so called, opened his gospel battery upon these destructive errors. His missiles told with such deadly effect upon the ranks of the enemy, that they became fearfully alarmed, and sent on for this champion Grant to save, if possible, their cause from ruin. The pastor of Jacksontown has our hearty sympathy in this bold and fearless stand which he has taken in defense of the truth, and we doubt not, in the name of the Lord, he will gloriously triumph."

MR. EDITOR:—In order to do justice to myself and the public, in relation to this anticipated discussion, you will oblige me by inserting the following article:—

1st. When I first came to Jacksontown I had occasion to preach some funeral sermons, during which I preached upon the intermediate state of the righteous. After the first sermon a person came to my house and challenged me to meet a man and discuss the intermediate state of the dead, to which I answered I would; for them to get their man and let me know, and give me time to become acquainted with their peculiar views, and I would let them know when and where I would meet him. Then soon after I preached a second funeral sermon, and entered more fully into the same subject; and before I got out of the meeting-house yard I was assailed in a very insulting manner by a brother of the former party, with a challenge to meet a man they would bring, to discuss the subject in public. I told him I would meet any man; and when they had secured a man to let me know in time to be prepared to meet him.

2nd. That shortly after, by request, I consented to deliver a lecture on the intermediate state of the dead. At the close of the lecture I stated that I gave no challenge but had received a number, and was not afraid to meet any man in the world.

3d. Soon after the lecture I received a note from Mr. G. Raymond, Esq., stating he had been informed I had offered a challenge to any man in the world, and that Mr. Grant accepted my offer. Not knowing who Mr. Raymond was, and being otherwise engaged, I did not notice his letter.

4th. Shortly after this note came to hand, Mr. Raymond and one of his party came to my house and said he had received a letter from Mr. Grant accepting my challenge to a discussion. I told Mr. Raymond I had given no man a challenge, but had received two; that I was the person challenged and not Mr. Grant; and if Mr. Grant would write me a personal challenge I would accept of it. Then Mr. Raymond said Mr. Grant would not do that.

5th. Then I received a second letter from Mr. Raymond, bearing upon the same subject, to which I paid no attention. I heard no more of the matter until it appeared in the Carleton Sentinel; and who had taken it upon themselves to make use of my name, I did not know; and if the Carleton Sentinel would not make use of my name again in connection with such subjects, without my permission, they will much oblige me.

6th. When Mr. Grant, or any other man of acknowledged ability, will send me a written challenge to meet them and discuss the intermediate state of the dead, I will accept it, and make preparations accordingly, and let them know when and where I would meet them. Or, if necessary, I would meet them privately and make arrangements on the propositions connected with the subject, the place, and the amount of time to be consumed in the discussion. If I had not informed Mr. Raymond then of my present urgent engagements, I would have thought less of the position in which he brought me before the public, he knowing that I distinctly informed him that if Mr. Grant wished to discuss the subject with me I would meet him about Christmas. There have been many flying reports that Mr. Rowe had backed down, but I am still convinced my back is up, and will remain so until I leave the world; and I am determined to face the foe and never retreat from the field whoever may be the conqueror.

October 9, 1866. REV. J. ROWE.

After learning the position that the Elder had taken, we addressed him the following note:—

"Woodstock, Oct. 13*th*, 1866.

MR. ROWE:—Dear Sir,—In consequence of letters received from Brn. G. L. Raymond, Moses Corliss, and Samuel J. Parsons, stating that you had publicly challenged any one and every one to meet your positions on the future state of man, I have accepted the challenge, and now appear to discuss the subject under consideration. But I am sorry to learn, on my arrival, that you now refuse to abide by the arrangements; but have published in the Acadian that if I will give a challenge, you will accept. This I now do, and propose the following resolution for discussion:—

'Resolved, That the wicked will be destroyed.'

The discussion to commence next Monday evening, Oct. 15th, in the Institute Hall, at Woodstock, as advertised in the Sentinel, and continue five consecutive evenings.

Your Bro. in Christ, MILES GRANT."

The following reply was handed to us on the 14th of Oct.:—

"Jacksontown, Oct. 13*th*, 1866.

MR. GRANT:—Dear Sir,—I accept your challenge to a discussion on the following subject:—Pro. 'That man has a spirit, and that spirit remains in a conscious state after the death of the body, until the resurrection.' Time on the 26th Dec., 1866.

Yours respectfully, J. ROWE."

As we had made a previous engagement for the time specified, we could not agree to meet him at the time he had named; consequently the whole affair of a discussion with the Elder had come to a period. As many had seen the notice in the papers stating that the discussion would begin on Monday evening, Oct. 15th, and would come to hear the debate, we concluded to speak that evening on the creation and death of man. We had a crowded house of very attentive hearers. At the close of the sermon an opportunity was given for asking questions, which was well improved for an hour by six gentlemen, among whom Elder Rowe was prominent. This awakened great interest in the minds of the people.

The next night we spoke on the resurrection of the dead, and were questioned an hour or more by a Congregational minister and others. The interest in the community was great. Every body seemed to be talking about the subjects we were presenting to the people.

On Wednesday evening, we spoke on the word SOUL, showing its different uses in the Bible; and that among all the fifty different renderings of the original words nephesh and psuche, in no passage did we find any thing about an "immortal soul." When we got through, Elder Rowe and a Congregational minister questioned us very closely, and with great earnestness, for over an hour. The excitement in the feelings of the audience was intense. It was one of the most interesting seasons we ever enjoyed. The Lord gave us "great peace," and special aid in the defense of his word. Some fourteen ministers were present.

Although we went to Woodstock to begin a discussion on Monday evening, Oct. 15th, as advertised, yet up to the evening of which we are speaking, Elder R. refused to meet us earlier than Oct. 29th, at which time we had stated we should be under the necessity of returning home. On this Wednesday evening (17th), he was so anxious to argue instead of abiding by the privilege given to ask questions, that we remarked to him in the presence of the audience, that he appeared to be well prepared to commence the discussion, and we would purpose that we meet the following Monday evening, Oct. 22nd. To this he made no reply. But after the close of the meeting, he consented to have the debate begin the 22nd. We had some difficulty in agreeing on a question, as he now refused to take the one he had sent us. At length the Methodist minister proposed the following, which was accepted:—

"RESOLVED, That eternal death, as applied to the wicked, is the eternal extinction of conscious being."

As the hall was engaged for other purposes the remainder of the week, we went up the river St. John, fifteen miles, to Simonds, and held meetings Thursday P. M. and evening. The scenery on the banks of the river is quite pleasant, especially at Simonds. The meetings at S. were interesting. The house was much crowded with very attentive listeners. Three rose for prayers in the afternoon, and several more in the evening. We found a good home with Bro. J. N. Moore.

During our meetings in N. B., we enjoyed the aid and society of Brn. Corliss, Hall, and Reed, faithful laborers in the vineyard of the Lord, who are doing what they can to persuade the people to be ready for the coming of the Son of man.

Friday evening and Saturday afternoon and evening, we had good and crowded meetings in Jacksontown, ten miles from Woodstock. Several requested prayers, and a goodly number were quickened in the service of the Lord. The field here seemed white for the harvest. We enjoyed our pilgrim home with Bro. Enoch Burpee.

Lord's day, Oct. 21st. we were again at Woodstock before a large, attentive, and intelligent audience. We found there was great interest in the minds of the people in relation to the subjects we had presented, and the approaching discussion. Some felt quite bitter, and even threatened a mob. Efforts were made to arrest us for selling tracts, but it was found we had violated no law of the Province. One minister consulted the Mayor to ascertain if there was not a law to prevent the discussion from taking place. He was informed there was none. He then wished to know if there was not a law against the preaching of heresy, so that Grant might be locked up. He received a negative answer. He replied that there had been such a law. The Mayor replied there had been some strange laws.

Monday evening came, and with it a great crowd of people. The discussion was to begin at seven o'clock, and before six the hall was filled to overflowing, and hundreds had to go away. We think we never saw a house so densely packed in all its parts as was the Mechanics' Institute that evening. Some found a ladder, and climbed up outside and listened at the open windows; others obtained a large lumber wagon, and drew that to a window. Thus every possible way was employed to get opportunity to hear. At last the solemn moment arrived to open the debate. The Mayor, Mr. Fisher, presided, and the very best order prevailed. For two hours the pro and con of the subject were presented according to the best ability of the disputants, when adjourned to meet again next evening.

It was said that the people were more excited about theological matters than they had ever been on political subjects. It was truly town-talk. Some were defending one side, and some the other; so that the discussion had become general. It was evident that many began to see in harmony with the affirmative; while others were growing more bitter, and really felt as did the minister who visited the Mayor to see if there was not a law to arrest Grant for preaching heresy.

Another crowd assembled on Tuesday evening to hear further on the subject. We again had the very best of order, under the direction of our excellent chairman. To the great surprise of all, at the close of that evening, our opponent refused to discuss any longer. He had brought out several new points in his last speech which he considered the strongest; and by refusing to discuss any more, we had no opportunity to reply to them. The best we could do was to quietly submit to the circumstances; as we had no power to make a man talk when he refused. Thus closed the debate.

It was then announced that we would preach in the same place the next evening, at which time we had an interesting meeting. A dozen or more came forward for prayers. It was evident the Spirit of the Lord was working upon many hearts. Our meetings continued to increase in interest to their close. It was hard to tear away from the dear friends whose society we enjoyed in W.

Sabbath, Oct. 28th, was a day of much interest. The Spirit of the Lord was with us all day, from the love-feast in the morning, to the close of a heavenly communion season in the evening, when about forty gathered around the table of the Lord. Eight came forward for prayers. A number of others are almost persuaded to be christians. We felt anxious to comply with the many earnest requests to have us stay longer, but duty, and other arrangements, called us away.

We shall remember with much pleasure our visit to Woodstock, and the hearty expressions of kindness from the many friends whose acquaintance we were favored to make. Several of them did not agree with us in all of our views, but they all manifested a noble spirit, and showed that they were free from bigotry, and willing to embrace the truth as soon as they should be satisfied we were right in our position. There is an open door in W.

SANCTIFICATION.—A very excellent and practical article on Sanctification will be found in another column, from the pen and experience of Bro. Wm. H. Spencer. Give it a careful reading, and then follow his advice.

☞ Please observe Bro. D. Cogswell's excellent suggestions. Let us all work with a will for the Lord, and we shall see rich fruits of our labors.

MACHIAS PORT.—Bro. Andrew Dow, of Machias Port, Me., wishes some of the preachers would come there and hold some meetings.

DISCUSSION AT WOODSTOCK, N. B.

We clipped the following from the Carleton Sentinel, published in Woodstock, N. B.:—

"The discussion between Eld. Miles Grant of Boston and Rev. Mr. Rowe of Jacksontown, on the proposition, 'Eternal death as applicable to the wicked is the eternal extinction of conscious being,' Mr. Grant taking the affirmative, was commenced on Monday evening. L. P. Fisher, Esq., in the chair. There was present the most dense crowd of persons, from all parts of the county, we have ever witnessed in a building in Woodstock. The number is variously estimated from seven hundred to one thousand persons, while nearly as many more left, being unable to get into the Institute. The services commenced by singing and prayer. The most perfect order prevailed, and the speakers, who occupied each fifteen minutes alternately for two hours, were listened to most attentively. The discussion was renewed on Tuesday evening; there were not so many persons present, but the hall was filled. At the expiration of the two hours, occupied by the speakers alternately, as on the previous evening, the chairman asked Mr. Grant if the discussion was to be resumed on Wednesday evening, to which he replied in the affirmative. In reply to a similar question, Mr. Rowe said that 'as the gentleman (Mr. Grant) has not answered any of my arguments, I now leave it.' The meeting was then adjourned, Mr. Grant expressing very much surprise at what he considered the summary disposal of the discussion, which, he said, he understood was to have been continued.

"A mere summary of the discussion would not satisfy our readers, and therefore we have determined, under certain conditions, to publish it in other than newspaper form, for which it is not adapted."

We expect a supply of the work when it is done. We think all of our readers will be much interested in reading the very correct report as taken by Mr. Samuel Watts, the intelligent and gentlemanly editor of the Sentinel. Price 25 cents, postage two cents.

MEETINGS IN WOODSTOCK.

The following is from the Woodstock Acadian of Oct. 22nd, 1866:—

"The sensation of the week has been of a polemical nature. Rev. Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, a religious journal published in Boston, and the organ of the denomination popularly known as 'Second Advents,' is on a visit to Woodstock; and on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings last lectured in the Mechanics' Institute, on some of the topics on which his church hold opinions which other sects consider peculiar. Mr. Grant's visit here having been announced some time since, and he being considered a very clever polemic, great interest has been excited, and the hall of the Institute on the three evenings in question, was crammed to repletion, all denominations and classes being represented. Mr. Grant having promised to answer any question which might be asked him, found many enquirers; and the questioning and answering gave rise to scenes more amusing than edifying."

THE JUBILEE HARP.

"The new hymn and tune book, talked about for years, is at last ready. Its external appearance is calculated to excite admiration. The binding combines strength, simplicity, and good taste. The print and paper are excellent. As we turn over the pages, the old familiar tunes and hymns of The Lyre seem like the faces of old friends. We miss only one that was dear to us—that beautiful chant,* 'Nearer, my God, to thee.' We trust it may find a place in future editions. Among the new tunes and hymns we find very many which insure the popularity of the book among our people. We had thought to name a few of the last tunes; but, as we turn over the leaves, we find so many that deserve to be classed among the best, that our space will not allow us to refer to them even by name.

We now have a hymn and tune book probably as nearly perfect as will ever be published. Let us as a people at once unite in accepting it for general use. The Lyre is an old, dear friend; with a feeling of sadness we bid it farewell, while we as cordially welcome to our fireside and church devotions THE JUBILEE HARP."—Voice of the West.

GEMS FROM RUTHERFORD.—No. 3.

Jesus, who upon earth ate and drank with publicans and sinners, and spoke and conferred with harlots, and put out his holy hand and touched the leper's filthy skin, and came evermore nigh sinners, even now in glory, is still that same Lord; his honor and his great court in heaven have not made him forget his poor friends on earth. In him honors change not manners, and he doth yet desire your company. Take him for the old Christ, and claim his kindness still. There are none so poor as that they can say in his face that he hath given them nothing.

Grace, grace forever upon you and your seed; and it shall be your portion in despite of all the powers of darkness: do not make more question of this. The Lord saw a nail in my heart loose, and he hath now fastened it—honor be to his majesty.

I wish all professors to fall in love with grace. All our songs should be of his free grace. It is a better way to heaven than the old way that was in Adam's days. It hath this fair advantage, that no man's emptiness and want layeth an inhibition upon Christ, or hindereth his salvation, but our Lord putteth the names of bankrupts, and Adam's forlorn heirs and beggars, and the halt and blind, in the free charters. Heaven and angels may wonder that we have got such a gate of sin and hell. Such a back entry out of hell, as Christ made and brought out the captives by, is more than my poor shallow thoughts can comprehend.

O, but Christ hath a saving eye! Salvation is in his eyelids. When he first looked on me I was saved; it cost him but a look to make hell quit of me. O, but merits, free merits by the dear blood of Jesus, were the best way that ever we could have gotten out of hell. O what a sweet, O what a safe and sure way it is to come out leaning on a Savior. That Christ and a sinner should be one, and have heaven betwixt them, and be halvers of salvation, is a wonder indeed. What more humble could Love be!

Alas, how often play I fast and loose with Christ! He bindeth, I loose; he buildeth, I cast down; he trimmeth up a salvation for me, and I mar it; I fall out with Christ, and he agreeth with me again twenty times a day. I lose what I had, but Christ is at my back and following on, to stoop and take up what falleth from me. I was and am bewildered with temptations, and wanted a guide to heaven;—O what have I to say of that excellent, surpassing, and super-eminent thing they call the grace of God—the way of free redemption in Christ! And when poor, poor I, dead in law, was sold, fettered and imprisoned in justice' closest ward, which is hell and damnation; when I, a wretched one, lighted upon noble Jesus, eternally kind Jesus, tender-hearted Jesus; nay, when he lighted upon me first, and knew me, I found that he scorned to take a price, or any thing like hire of angels, or seraphim, or any of his creatures; and therefore I would praise him for this, that the whole army of the redeemed ones (will) sit rent-free in heaven.

It is a mercy's wonder and grace's wonder, that Christ will lend a piece of the lodging, and a back-chamber beside himself, to our lusts, and that he and such swine should keep house together in our soul. For suppose they couch and contract themselves into little room when Christ cometh in, and seem to lie under his feet, yet they often break out again; and that a foot of the old man, or a leg, or arm nailed to Christ's cross looseth the nail, or breaketh out again; and yet Christ, beside this unruly and unsubdued neighbor, can still be making heaven in the saints one way or other. May I not say, Lord Jesus, what dost thou here? Yet here he must be. But I will not lose my feet to go on into this depth and wonder; for free mercy and infinite merits took a lodging to Christ and us, beside such a loathsome guest as sin.

Ye commend his free love, and it is well done. O that I could help you, and if I could be master-convener to gather an earth full, an heaven full of tongues, dipped and steeped in my Lord's well of love, or his wine of love, to raise a song of praises to him betwixt the east and west end and furtherest point of the broad heavens! If I were in your case (as, alas! my dry and dead heart is not now in that garden), I would borrow leave to come and stand upon the banks and coasts of that sea of love, and be a feasted soul, to see love's fair tide, free love's high and lofty waves, each of them higher than ten earths, flowing in upon pieces of lost clay. O welcome, welcome, great sea! Come, come, dear friend, and be pained that the King's wine cellar of free love, and his banqueting house—oh, so wide, so stately! oh, so God-like, so glorious! —should be so abundant, so overflowing, and your shallow vessel so little, to take in some part of that love. But since it cannot come into you for want of room, enter yourself into this sea of love, and breathe under these waters, and die of love, and live as one dead and drowned of this love.

Sweet, sweet have his comforts been to my soul; my pen, tongue and heart have not words to express the kindness, love and mercy of my Well-Beloved to me, in this house of my pilgrimage.

Faith may dance because Christ singeth. Faith apprehendeth pardon, but never payeth a penny for it. I would be farther in upon Christ than at his joys—in where love and mercy lodgeth—beside his heart. He who sitteth on the throne is himself alone a sufficient heaven. Sure I am, he is far the best half of heaven. Grace, grace hath done all things well! D. T. T.

A. D. 606, AND 1866.

The unanimity of writers on prophecy in fixing on the dates at the head of this article, as determining the beginning and end of the 1260 years of Papal civil rule, is not a little remarkable. The following list, selected from my "Catalogue of American authors on Prophecy," exhibits the names, date, and place of the various authors and their works who have established the above dates, and who all expected, and so published in their works, that the downfall of the Papacy, the commencement of the millennium, or the personal coming of the Lord, would occur during this so-called "prophetic year," 1866. The list embraces forty-two authors, divines, and laymen; and could be considerably swelled if the names of those who have but incidentally alluded to these "times and seasons" in works not prophetical, and in commentaries, were added to it.

R. H. Thornton, Darlington, Canada, West, 1843.
Edward Winthrop, A. M., Cincinnati, O., 1843.

It is just to state that not all in the above list can be named as supporting the view of Christ's coming in 1866, or of the commencement of the millennium then;—some fixed upon later dates for the ushering in of the period of the thousand years of blessedness, while a majority supposed that our Lord would come pre-millennially, at some time during the year named; but each and all have quoted and remarked upon this year as constituting a notable epoch in the history both of the Papal and Mohammedan powers, resulting in their complete overthrow and final destruction.

The earliest writers of whom we know who have selected these dates for the rise and fall of the Papacy, and coming of the Lord, are David Chytræus, Prof. of Divinity at Rostock, also at Wittemberg, in Germany, in 1563-71; Aretius, of Berne, in Switzerland, mentioned by Foxe, the martyrologist, as dying in 1574; Matthias Flacius, Prof. of Greek and Latin at Wittemberg, who died in 1575; David Pareus, Prof. of Divinity at Heidelberg, in Germany, in 1605; Archbishop William Laud, of England, who died 1645; and Wm. Whiston, Prof. at Cambridge, England, in 1706. It will be thus seen that for over three hundred years past, or ever since the period of the great Reformation, the church of God has had her eye fixed upon the present year of our Lord, 1866, as the probable termination of the term of years which divine prophecy allots to the civil power and dominion of the Papacy, and perhaps of the very consummation itself, and coming of that great divine kingdom which shall stand "forever, even forever and ever."

In this connection, it may also be said that Rev. M. Baxter, in his work on Louis Napoleon, has given the names of nearly a hundred authors, both living and dead, together with the titles of their works, who regard the circle of years between 1864 and 1869, as containing the true time of the end of this christian dispensation, or the End of the World. All the authors I have named date the 1260 years at the edict of the emperor Phocas, made to Boniface Third, then Bishop of Rome, constituting him "Universal Bishop," which they, following the usual ancient authorities, suppose to have been done in the year 606. But Bower, in his History of the Popes, affirms this date to be one year too early, and says that Pope Boniface only ruled from Feb. 19th 607, to Nov. 10th (or 20th) when he died, his Pontificate lasting but eight or nine months, and all falling within the limits of one year, viz., 607. Should Bower prove to have been correct in his date, the prophetic number would end in 1867. That he is very likely to have gotten the right date, is evident from the authority which he follows. Anastasius, the Bibliothecan, referred to in Bower's foot notes (vol. 3, p. 420), was fully competent to know. He was a very learned Greek Abbot, and ecclesiastical writer, of the Romish persuasion, who, during the Popedoms of Nicholas I., Adrian II., and John the VIII., from A. D. 858 to 882, was the Librarian of the Church of Rome. He understood both the Greek and Latin tongues, and wrote a "History of the Lives of the Popes" down to his own time, printed at Mentz, 1612, it being the first ever written. Dupin calls him "famous," and Clarke speaks of him as "renowned for his collections." He died in 886. Bower having once been Professor of History, in the University at Rome, had access to the very highest and most learned authors of the church, and must be regarded as correct in locating the great Phocas edict in 607, instead of 606, as has been previously shown in the columns of this paper by the senior editor.

We can see the beginning of the end. Amen; even so, come, Lord Jesus.

A GREAT IDEA.

BRO. GRANT:—I noticed in the Crisis of Oct. 3d, a few lines from Bro. D. T. Taylor's pen. I see that there has been a great idea revolving in his mind, and that idea has dropped off the end of his pen upon the paper. Now I do believe that Bro. Taylor will be mistaken in one thing—that six thousand of us will lay down the paper and think no more about it. My dear brethren and sisters,—now I mean every one that reads the Crisis,—let us disappoint Bro. Taylor this time, if we never did before. Just think of the idea for a minute. One subscriber only. Can we not do that? It seems to me that I hear you all say, "I can, and I will." Now if you say you will, and then set about it, the work is done. Just think, that little effort on our part, each of us, and our paper will have over fifteen thousand subscribers. The great day of accounts can only reveal how much good this great idea, carried out, will have accomplished.

Now, brethren, I have an idea revolving in my mind, in addition to Bro. Taylor's, and will let it drop off the end of my pen upon this paper. What do you think it is? I will tell you. While each one of us is getting our new subscriber for the Crisis, let us all get one new subscriber for the Voice of the West. We can all do this, if we set about it, so that it will all be accomplished within three months. I, for one, am determined to do this very thing, the Lord helping me, and as much more as I can. Brethren, let us work with a will. The Lord is at hand. Let us be found doing. I see there is a working spirit among our brethren and sisters, every where. God bless them. Amen. D. COGGSWELL.

HOBBIES.

BRO. GRANT:—This opprobrious epithet is now in constant use by writers in the Crisis, as well as elsewhere. Indeed it has become the mad-dog cry from every quarter. If any desire to cast stigma on any doctrine you sincerely believe, that he does not, he has only to call it your "hobby," and that ugly name is enough to keep certain ones horror-stricken as to what is taught by the good Bro., without investigating, or proving and holding fast the good. And what is to be deplored, truth, Bible truth, plain Bible deductions, are oftener stigmatized than any thing else.

Not a doctrine that we hold sacred, and bear reproach for believing, but what has been stigmatized, your "hobby," or "hobbies." And a multitude of minds have been poisoned and kept from investigating and receiving the word of God and truth by that ugly name.

I hope, as disciples of Jesus, as brethren, we shall use it no more. Throw away the stereotype plates, and let it go out of date. Its use shows a lack of christian liberality and fidelity in the searching of the Scriptures. Let us love one another well enough to call things by their right names; and if any err from the truth, let it be our business in the spirit of meekness to convert him for Christ's sake, and save a soul from death. In love with Jesus, L. BOUTELL.

ST. LOUIS MISSION.

BRO. GRANT:—On my return from Memphis, on the 12th inst., I stopped in this city to look after the interest of the mission house. I found that during the absence of Bro. Flagg, in consequence of the prevalence of cholera here, and other causes, the mission had suffered much. Some of the best male members had died of cholera, one of them an officer in the society. Many had moved out of the city. And to add to this, Sisters Prescott and Curtis were both taken down with the cholera, which greatly discouraged the remnant for a time. Eld. D. Crouch stood by at this time, and cheered the hearts of what remained. And just in this hour, the hall was called for for another object, and so the meetings ceased for a time, while the Sabbath school was kept up at another place.

Last week, on the return of Sisters Prescott, Curtis and Boynton to the city, and about the same time, Eld. Flagg from the East, a consultation was had on what was to be done for the mission. The first thing was to procure a place for meeting. The Wesleyan Chapel, in Seventh street, which they lost by not paying the mortgage, within the last year, being now empty and to let by the present owner, a real estate broker, application was made, and it was leased to us on reasonable terms. And so the Lord has opened to us the most eligible place in the city for meetings or school among the freedmen. The house was opened Sunday, Oct. 14th, and meetings and Sunday school commenced.—Bro. Flagg spoke in the morning and I in the afternoon and evening.

The Sabbath school, with a little effort, can be increased from its present number of forty to two hundred, from the ignorant and neglected ones in the neighborhood. And the congregation will soon fill the house to overflowing. And besides this, the freedmen are calling for a day and evening school. The city not having opened their free schools as yet, the freedmen press us for a school. And so Sister Curtis will soon open a school in the chapel, and the freedmen will sustain and meet all expenses in this department.

I would add that we have calls for more help in the towns around the city. And this opening calls for help. A judicious and earnest man could do good among both white and colored people. And such a man should be sent to this field as soon as the Board may see proper to do so.

And now, my brethren, while the mission board and missions are acting harmoniously and effectively, all we need is the means to carry forward our plans. And this we shall have. You will no doubt repeat your call for help, and I shall be pleased to back you up in that work. Let the destitute be fed, as the door opens, with the "word of the kingdom," before it is too late. Truly yours,

JOSHUA V. HIMES.

NEW TRACTS.

The following new tracts are just issued by the Western Advent Christian Association. They are good to enlighten the unenlightened, and awaken the careless; and they deserve a wide circulation.

"Time is Short!" and "Be Ready!" Two good little tracts of admonition and warning. 5c. for the two; 50c. per one hundred (50 of each.)

"The Penalty of Sin." A valuable tract of 24 pages, by Eld. O. R. Fassett, showing that "the wages of sin is (literal) DEATH." 5c. single; 8 copies, 25c.; 20 copies, 50c.; $2.00 per one hundred. W. B. H.

MOTHER IS DEAD.

How many can say with a sad heart, "Mother is dead." My dear mother was not taken from me while I was a child, like many others, but God spared her life until she was almost eighty-three years of age; but she has gone. The enemy, death, has taken her from us. She sleeps in Jesus, resting in hope. Soon Christ will come, and mother will rise singing. Thank the Lord, for the resurrection day is near. Beloved in the Lord, we shall soon meet our dear friends who have died in the Lord, never to part again. Father, mother, brother and sister, I have left in New Hampshire, sleeping in the cold ground. Sad the thought! Friend after friend departs, and we are left to mourn, and pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done"; bring back our friends again. In a little time from this, our Life-giver will come, and give us glory, honor, immortality, eternal life, if faithful to the end.

I have returned to Lowell, to toil on a little longer, until Christ who is my life appears, then I hope to appear with him in glory. Pray for me. Your sister, loving Christ's appearing, SARAH J. INGRAHAM.

HIGHWAYS AND HEDGES.

We have just closed a four days' feast, and to sum up the matter in a few words, I will state that through a brother in Christ, by the grace of God, we have been enabled to furnish good new shoes to forty boys and girls connected with our Sunday school, and to distribute three barrels of flour, two hundred pounds of meal, twelve bushels of potatoes, seventy-five pounds of cod-fish (salted), twenty-five pounds of soap, twenty-five pounds of tallow candles, fifteen pounds of sugar, and six pounds of tea, among thirty families embracing one hundred persons. In addition to these things, cholera and diarrhea medicines were furnished to many families, and fifteen dollars in cash given away.

It would require several columns of the Crisis to give all the details of this feast. Suffice it to say, that Sr. Helginson, little Mary, Maria and myself performed the part of servants to the poor ones to whom we carried this two-edged christianity. Joy and rejoicing were manifested on every hand. Hungry children looked God bless yous at us, while widows and fatherless ones, sick and afflicted, showered our heads with benedictions. We spent four days in distributing bounties. We thank the Lord for raising up such friends for us, and desire that he would multiply their number, for there are more than a hundred other boys and girls in our school who need shoes, and there are more than a hundred other families who are suffering for the necessaries of life. Pray for us, that the Lord may continue to send us means to supply their wants.

Cholera has been raging severely during the past week. There have been four hundred cases and one hundred and twenty-three deaths within the past seven days. Though brought in contact with it daily, and treating some cases, my health is preserved, for which I feel deeply grateful to the Lord.

We have received $1.00 from E., of South Hingham, Me., and $1.00 from "a friend to the poor" in Orange, Ct., for which the donors have our thanks and prayers.

We have also received as a gift from Bro. H. L. Hastings 50,000 pages of tracts, and 300 copies of "The Christian," No. 10, and some other articles. I pray that the Lord may raise up some one who will give him a God bless you, for his kindness to us who labor among the lowly, for we are not able to purchase tracts, but always need them.

Wickedness is fearfully on the increase in this city. Men's feet "are swift to shed blood." Murders and riots are of almost daily occurrence. These are indications of the speedy approach of the Judge of the living and the dead. May we be enabled to "keep the wedding garment pure" against that day.

Have just received a copy of the Voice of the West, which is greatly enlarged. It is beautiful in its appearance, and will no doubt have a constantly increasing circulation. May the Lord bless all efforts that are being put forth to scatter light and truth among the people. Yours, etc., waiting for salvation,

Phila., Oct. 8th. F. H. BURBANK.

"THE YOUNG PILGRIM."

This little messenger of mercy fills a place of great importance among thousands of the children of this generation. It not only interests our children and youth, it does them good. It tells them very valuable truths in a form which instructs them. The tendency of such reading is to impress on the young mind the true character of God, the benevolence of Christ, the nature of his love and mission, the love we owe to him and to each other, the nature and effects of sin, the true gospel hope, and home of the good, with many other good things.

Brethren, have you ever seriously considered that the children thirst for reading in a style suited to their young minds? Yes, many of you have, and some of you buy papers, books and primers, full of idle, silly, empty talk, with foolish, corrupt caricatures of nature in vulgar pictures, which pervert and dissipate the young mind. Have you ever carefully contrasted these things with the simple facts of nature and Scripture? Yes, many of you have done this, and sought to direct your children to the simple truth.

Did you ever reflect that children think much more of things they can call their own, than of others? "My paper!" How it makes the little boys and girls feel to say it; their eyes sparkle with joy often as they ask, "Has my paper come?" or, as they remark to their mates, "My paper has a nice story in it"; or, "My paper has such good things in it." You have your papers, and you take great delight in them, and believe you are much benefited by them. Will it not be a great blessing to your children, also, to have a paper adapted to their wants?

"THE YOUNG PILGRIM" is just such a paper, and it will be not only to those who thirst for reading, but will create it in others. Only fifty cents a year. Come, you who do not take it, make up your mind now to subscribe for it, at once. It will benefit your family ten times the cost.

And you who have no child to bless, and are able to benefit others in this way, is there not a family within your knowledge, or a child, who would be greatly benefited by such a present? Make it a missionary among those around you; it will open the way for other important truths. Think of this matter, my brethren and sisters, and let us give "The Young Pilgrim" a wide circulation, while in a pilgrim land, and do all the good we can.

Yarmouth, Me. I. C. WELLCOME.

For the World's Crisis.

WOODHULL.

Our tent meeting in this place closed Thursday evening, Nov. 1st, having continued about four weeks. During the whole time, the weather was excellent, and the attendance large. Last spring, I held a series of meetings in this place, and for the first time the citizens had the privilege of hearing the "reasons of our hope." Many embraced the views presented, as the doctrines of the Bible, and twenty-two were baptized. I did not deem it expedient to advise the brethren to organize themselves into a body distinct from the body to which they already belonged, as we had met with no opposition, but been treated kindly and invited to preach in both their houses of worship.

I left the dear friends with a promise to return in the fall, and hold a tent meeting. Well, bless God, we have had the meeting, although I never had so many difficulties to overcome in such rapid succession. In the first place, I had invited Bro. Hastings, and expected he would be with me there; but in the Wilbraham meeting he informed me he could not attend. I saw Bro. H. Pratt, and invited him to be there, and he gave me encouragement. I then advertised a meeting to be held at Wolcott, and then at Woodhull. By the time we were to be at Woodhull, the meetings had become so interesting at Wolcott that the brethren would not consent to have the meetings close; so I left, with the promise that the tent should be at Woodhull the next week. On my way to Woodhull, I called on Bro. Pratt, at Rochester, and as his daughter was well enough to be removed to her home, he disappointed me. I wrote to Bro. Stevens to have Bro. Fenn come with him. At length Bro. Stevens came with the tent. We raised it in the name of the Lord. Bro. J. W. Taylor and Bro. Kendall assisted in preaching the word for a few days. Bro. Fenn came after a few days and remained one week. Bro. Stevens had to return home on account of sickness in his family; and when Bro. Fenn left, I was left alone for a few days, when Bro. Stevens returned again, and remained with me till the close.

During the meeting, thirty-seven were baptized, and seventy-three covenanted together to take the word of God for their rule of faith and practice; deacons were chosen and elders appointed. May God help the dear children who so nobly have stood up for his truth, in these days of fables; and may those dear souls, who have not given in their names, yet admit we have the truth, see their danger of being found with those who oppose the truth, when Jesus comes.

> "Jesus soon is coming,
> This is my song;
> Cheers the heart, when joys depart,
> And foes are pressing strong."

DORCAS MISSION.

The Sunday School connected with our mission has an enrolled membership of about two hundred and twenty-five scholars. We have been receiving one hundred copies of the "Young Pilgrim" semi-monthly, but they do not come up to our wants. We expect to receive two hundred copies in future, for a brother in Christ told me that he would send to the office the $40.00 necessary for the extra one hundred copies.

We have received $3.00 from the church in New Britain, Ct.; $3.35, and a beautiful new quilt, two coats, yarn, scissors, etc., from friends in So. Ashburnham, Mass., for which favors all have our heartfelt thanks and prayers.

The cholera is disappearing. There were but fifty or sixty deaths from the disease last week. There were several cases in our district. Sr. Helginson has just recovered from a severe attack of cholera morbus. We thank the Lord for his mercy toward us, in preserving our lives during the past few weeks that we have been exposed to the cholera.

Those who are about to send us clothing, etc., for our mission, had better pack the things in strong barrels. They will weigh less, and come safer. There is a steamship line from Boston to Philadelphia, and also from New York to this place, which will be the cheapest way to send barrels from places within railroad distance of those places. Pray for us. Yours in Christ,

Philadelphia. F. H. BURBANK.

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. E. Smith.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—I take up my pen to answer some of the questions that you have asked me by letter. One sister asks, When are you going to write for the Crisis? One from Providence says, Where is Sister Smith? Another from Ohio says, Are you not going to write to us any more through the Crisis? Now I will try to tell you all about it, if I can. First, I have been very busy since Wilbraham campmeeting in those other camps over at Nyack, and one at Peekskill. Besides these, we were enlarging our mission room at New York, and also attending to our Hackensack mission; all of which have taken time and labor, without any rest. But as soon as I did get time, I wrote to the Crisis; but my letter was very long, and I expect that was the reason that it did not appear. I am opposed to long letters myself, and don't often write long; but under the circumstances, that one could not be avoided.

I also wrote one about Hackensack mission, which, if you have patience, you may yet see if time continues. Please remember, children, that the Crisis is a missionary paper, and there are many who write for it, and, of course there is not room for all; and those that are in are very interesting. I love to sit down and read them. It does me good to see how fast God is doing up his work in these last hours of time. Work on, brethren and sisters; it is only a little while, and we shall have our reward.

Since Wilbraham campmeeting, I have received through Bro. Herron $5.00, from Sister Dull, Washington, D. C., and $1.50 from Emily Dollard, for mission work. The other will be found in the Report when it appears.

Yours in highways and hedges,

ANNA E. SMITH.

BRO. GRANT:—Our meetings in Savoy were of the deepest interest. Sunday, Oct. 21st, the whole congregation, save three, manifested by rising their determination and desire to have a home in the kingdom. Children, grandchildren, grandmothers, husbands, and wives, with strong crying were seeking Christ. One husband said, I have been a backslider, but "I want to come back to the fold, and I want my wife to come and go with me." His wife rose and said, "Husband, I am going with you." I think there must have been much joy in heaven that day.

"Sweet is thy work, my God, my King."

Obituaries.

MCCULLOCH. Died in Lamoille, Bureau Co., Ill., Sept. 11th, Celia Frances; and on the 17th, Delia Frances, twin daughters of Nathaniel and Sally McCulloch, aged four months.

Our dear brother and sister had become very much attached to these little ones; but the cold hand of death has done its work, and the innocent, like the guilty, must be laid away in the cold grave. But one need not sorrow without hope, for Jesus has broken the strong bands of death, and, by virtue of his resurrection, the children shall come again from the land of the enemy, blooming with immortality, to die no more.

> Blest hope that cheers the sorrowing heart,
> Is anchored within the vail;
> And though with loved ones called to part,
> God's promise will not fail.

H. G. MCCULLOCH.

BRO. WHITEHEAD IS DEAD.

We learn with much sadness that Bro. Rufus J. Whitehead, of Wallingford, Ct., is dead. For many years we have been intimately acquainted with him, and have known him as an ardent lover of Jesus, and his coming. Those who attended the Wilbraham and Alton Bay campmeetings this year will remember with pleasure his faithful labors in the service of the Lord. He was a man of strong faith and earnest prayer. Christian pilgrims always found a welcome at his home. He sleeps in Jesus.

DAMON. Died in Goshen, Mass., Aug. 28th, 1866, Betsey Damon, wife of Bro. Jared Damon, aged seventy years and eight months.

In her death the church have lost a mother in Israel. No woman that ever I saw so much resembled my own dear mother. As soon as I could, I hastened to Goshen to find her still alive, but death has done its work, and I consoled myself with the words of inspiration, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit." May her mantle fall upon the church in Goshen, is my prayer. H. PRATT.

DAILEY. Died in Norwalk, Aug. 1st, 1866, Eddie, aged one year and ten months; and Aug. 8th, Ada Louise, aged four years, four months and nineteen days, children of Bro. Norman and Sr. Caroline E. Dailey.

These little ones are sleeping quietly now, but thank the Lord, the time will soon come to awaken them.

The General Apprehension.

Cardinal Cullen of Dublin, Ireland, has issued a pastoral bewailing the condition and prospects of the Pope, as apparently about to be driven from the Holy City, and ordering a day of fasting and prayer that these evils may be averted. The cardinal says that when the French troops leave Rome "then will the agents of the excommunicated king of Sardinia and of the secret societies reestablish their reign of terror in Rome, and drive the weak and corrupt Romans to vote the deposition of the Pope and the annexation of the Papal states to the kingdom of Italy; then will be completed the spoilation of the vicar of Christ, not less by the cowardice and treachery of his friends than by the injustice and impiety of his foes; then will all the powers of hell be exerted anew to crush his spiritual supremacy. He will not be left whereon to lay his head. Like his Divine master, he will be loaded with insults and charged with crimes; he will be deprived of liberty—it may be of life. Such are the events which, in the ordinary course of human affairs, we may expect very soon to witness."—Springfield Republican.

A curious and not very satisfactory reason is given for the contentment of the English churchmen with existing evils. "A general expectation prevails among the clergy of the established church that the personal advent of the Lord Jesus is near at hand, and that all things must grow worse and worse till He comes; and, therefore, they acquiesce in 'things as they are,' almost without a murmur."—Ibid.

Lady preachers are becoming popular. Two young ladies preached last Sunday at Washbourne Hall, Bayswater, on the coming of Christ. The dates fixed for the second advent are between 1870 and 1875.—London Correspondent of the N. Y. "Round Table."

A society has been formed in Switzerland for the removal of the Jews to Palestine, and the restoration of Jerusalem and the Jewish nation. The Rothschilds and other prominent Jews give their influence to it, and it bids fair to become a universal movement.—Springfield Republican.

France just now offers a promising field to the Second Adventists. The end of the world is a very popular topic. Even the skeptics are beginning to talk in a religious strain of "signs and tokens;" but their newly-found religion takes a very gloomy color. The continual rain, the extraordinary character of the late events in Germany, the disturbed condition of the continent, apparently pointing to further convulsions, the cholera, and the precarious state of the Emperor's health, all contribute to the general depression, and induce some people to suppose that the end of things is approaching.—Ibid.

Rev. Dr. C. B. Smyth of New York, preached a sermon on Fenianism, last Sunday, in which he said the Fenians were not organized to deliver Ireland, but for the great battle of Armageddon and the last struggle of Popery.—Ibid.

The Round Table advertises the following new book:—"The Coming Theocracy. Just published. The state of the Church and the World at the final outbreak of evil, and revelation of Antichrist, his destruction at the second coming of Christ, and the ushering in of the Millennium. By the Rev. J. G. Gregory, M. A., with an Appendix by Mrs. A. P. Joliffe. Price 1.25. Contents: Watch and pray, for the coming of the Lord draweth near. The World and the Church. Israel and Antichrist. The Advent. The Judgment of the Nations. The reign of Peace. The final outbreak of Evil. The Resurrection and Judgment. The New Jerusalem. Conclusion and Appendix." D. T. T.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable Dispatches.

Prague, Oct. 27. An attempt was made to shoot the Emperor Francis Joseph as he was leaving the theatre this evening. The culprit aimed a pistol at the Kaiser, but before the ball was fired he was seized by an Englishman and placed under an arrest.

London, Oct. 29. The latest advices from Candia show that fighting between the Christians and the Turkish army continued, but the accounts of the progress of hostilities are unreliable.

In consequence of the condition of the telegraph lines in Newfoundland, it is proposed by the Anglo American Telegraph Company to lay cables from Trinity Bay, or rather Placentia Bay, to Halifax and Boston. The tolls upon dispatches by the cable will be reduced one-half on and after November 1st.

London, Oct. 31. The Turks claim great victories over the Christians in Candia. In a hard fought battle near Oressa the Cretans lost 700 men, while the Turkish loss was very heavy. Three thousand Cretans had been lost in a cave where they had sought a hiding place and refuge, the tide rising and submerging them. Large submissions were being made by the Christians to the Turkish authority.

Paris, Oct. 31. The Emperor Napoleon has informed the Empress Carlotta that she had better tell Maximilian to cede two of the provinces to the United States in order to consolidate his rule in Mexico.

Berlin, Oct. 31. The government has issued a decree ordering the fortresses of Saar, Louis, Mentz and Coblentz to be disarmed, and the artillery force to be reduced to a peace footing.

Rome, Oct. 31. The Pope has delivered an allocution condemning the conduct of Italy, declaring that he is ready to die in defense of the right, and that in case of need he will seek the free exercise of his ministry in another land.

Paris, Nov. 2. The Presse says an alliance between Prussia and Russia is a fixed fact.

Rome, Nov. 2. The Italian press denounce the allocution of the Pope against the conduct of Italy.

It is reported that Count Ricasoli will soon resign his position in the Italian Ministry.

Queenstown, Nov. 5. The steamship Malta, from New York, Oct. 24, arrived to-day.

Madrid, Nov. 3. The Queen of Spain has made an offer to the Pope of a residence at Granada, and Spanish vessels of war are placed at his disposal in case of an emergency.

Constantinople, Nov. 5. The United States squadron is expected in Turkish waters.

St. Petersburg, Nov. 5. War is renewed in Bokhara, and the Russian forces have besieged and taken the city of Utarbe.

☞ The Emperor of Austria is just thirty-five years old and is about used up.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Nov. 1. An Ottawa dispatch says a Cabinet council will be held to-day on the existing question in reference to the execution of the condemned Fenians. Prominent parties denounce leniency. The Attorney General will not go to England on the 7th inst. with the delegation, owing to the serious aspect of affairs.

A Troy (N. Y.) dispatch says an order issued by President Roberts, looking to an early invasion of Canada by the Fenians, will soon be promulgated. The Fenian circles are holding day and night sessions. A regiment is in rapid formation. A liberal subscription was made in Troy yesterday in aid of Capt. O'Brien, in Mount Joy prison, Ireland.

Nashville, Tenn., Oct. 31. The freedmen's schoolhouse at Brentwood was burned to-day. This is the second burning of the freedmen's school-house at the same place. It is pretty certain that both these fires were the work of an incendiary.

New York, Nov. 5. A Washington dispatch says the Mexican question has not been reopened with France. The government is waiting to see how the French act up to the first of the coming year. If at that time it is seen there is any bad faith exhibited, or a tendency to duplicity, then such action will be taken as will insure our feelings and interests to be respected. President Juarez has written a letter in which he again asserts his unwillingness to consider any project, looking to the cession of the northern States of Mexico to the United States.

Washington, Nov. 5. Minister Romero to-day received the following letter by way of New Orleans. It is dated Vera Cruz, Oct. 26:

"Maximilian left the city of Mexico on the 23d inst., resigning verbally in favor of Gen. Bazaine. Gen. Bazaine endeavored to persuade him to delay his departure until Gen. Castlenau's arrival, two days later, but he declined, and escorted by eight hundred Austrians, proceeded to Orizaba by cross roads to avoid meeting with Gen. Castlenau. He reached Orizaba yesterday, and is expected here to-morrow. The Captain of the Austrian frigate Dandote states that as soon as Maximilian arrives he will at once leave for Europe. It is said that Maximilian will publish to-day a manifesto at Orizaba.

Gen. Castlenau reached the city of Mexico soon after Maximilian left, and took possession of the palace and assumed the reins of Government. The French soldiers who had entered under Maximilian's colors will be returned to France under Gen. Castelnau's influence.

Gen. Porfirio Diaz has captured the city of Oaxaca, taking all the artillery, ammunition, men and supplies."

TROUBLE BREWING IN SPAIN.—Appearances look as if there would be a revolution in Spain before long, resulting in the dethronement of the Queen, and possibly, unless the other powers interfere, in a republic. This revolutionary scheme, it seems, is favored by the Infanta Henri de Bourbon, brother to the King of Spain who professes democracy, and aims at the leadership. It is intimated that he would be disposed to treat for the transfer of Cuba to the United States in return for American sympathy during and subsequent to the struggle. Other plans are spoken of—one being the junction of the kingdoms of Spain and Portugal under the government of the king of the latter country. Napoleon is spoken of as being willing that this should take place, but nothing can be depended on as genuine but the facts that the Spanish people are heartily sick of their present system of misgovernment, and that some overturning will soon take place.—Boston Journal.

THE FENIANS.—Fears of a Raid at Fort Erie.—Norwich, Conn. Nov. 4. An enthusiastic meeting of the Wolf Tone circle of this city was held to-day. Stirring resolutions were adopted denouncing the illegality of the conviction of Lynch and Father McMahan, and pledging themselves to raise 100 men to avenge their lives.

Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 5. Considerable excitement prevailed at Fort Erie last night in expectation of a Fenian raid.

Indianapolis, Nov. 4. At a Fenian mass meeting last night, resolutions were adopted declaring that the Fenians of America defiantly assert that the conviction of Col. Lynch and Father McMahan will be made the bugle note, which will lead on the army of Irishmen that will drive the last vestige of British power from the American continent.

☞ A severe drouth has prevailed for nearly a year at Pekin and the surrounding country, and the Chinese Emperor has ordered fasts, general prayer and expiatory ceremonies. All persons confined in prison without cause are to be discharged, and the condition of prisoners generally to be ameliorated in order to propitiate Divine favor.

☞ A severe drouth has prevailed for several months in Livingston and adjacent counties in New York, and immense fires are raging in the woods around the town of Dansville. Thousands of acres have been burnt over, and houses and barns d.stroyed.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness, if less than 26 weeks, charge five cents; if more than 26 weeks, six cents. POPULAR THEOLOGY.

BRO. GRANT:—The following poetry was handed me to read. PATIENCE D. MARANVILLE.
Stone Prairie, Ill.

"In vain for mercy now they cry,
In lakes of liquid fire they lie;
There on the flaming billows tossed,
Forever, oh! forever lost.

The breath of God—his angry breath,
Supplies and fans the fire;
There sinners taste the second death,
And would, but can't expire.

On impious wretches he shall rain
Sulphurious flames of wasting death,
Such as he kindled on the flames
Of Sodom with his angry breath.

His wrath, like flaming fire,
In hell forever burns;
And from that hopeless world of woe
No fugitive returns.

Tempests of angry fire shall roll,
To blast the rebel worm,
And beat upon his naked head
In one eternal storm.

Eternal plagues and heavy chains,
Tormenting racks and fiery coals,
And darts to inflict eternal pains,
Dyed in the blood of damned souls."

STRAIGHTFORWARDNESS ESSENTIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN.

If we were to comprise in one word the moral disease of fallen humanity, we might use the term selfishness. It cannot but happen in a world like this, that every man must frequently be placed in the situation of either having to forego his worldly interest, by speaking and acting uprightly; or of hazarding his spiritual welfare, by deviating, in some degree, from the straight line of rectitude which is required by the law of the Lord. Such, for the most part, being the condition of the human race, the enemy of souls ceases not to plant his nets and snares in every form that can stimulate the restlessness and ardor of self-love. Is he seeking to entrap one whom the power of conscience yet controls, and causes to hesitate upon the adoption of measures of doubtful rectitude?—this arch-deceiver is quickly at hand "to make the worse appear the better reason." Has man some latent hope of obtaining an end, or of accomplishing a purpose in some secret, unsuspected way?—Satan presently suggests schemes and points out by-paths, which he represents as perfectly lawful, or, at all events, expedient, under the particular circumstances then existing; for nothing can be more indulgent than he is to the will of the flesh. To the half willing, half unwilling victim, who may draw back from venturing on direct falsehood, he suggests language in which there is at least a grain of truth, and fails not to fix their attention upon that modicum, as sanctifying all that accompanies it. The poor bewildered creature is thus led through the meandering labyrinth of evasion, till all things are lost in confusion; evil is called good, and darkness light, and the counsel of the devil is mistaken for the dictates of prudence and wisdom.

There is a striking instance of this sort of attack from the enemy of souls recorded in the Life of Boston, author of the celebrated "Fourfold State of Man." He was occasionally employed in the office of a public notary in the town; and his services, though frequently rendered, were never requited. Under the influence of a strong temptation, he thought he might take his employer's property. "But here," says he, "I was led into a snare, by Satan and my own corruption. I saw 'Dickson on Matthew' lying neglected in the chamber; I presumed, therefore, to take it in payment of the debt. I kept it for a time; but conscience being better informed, I saw my sin in that matter, and could no more peaceably enjoy it, though he never paid me: so I restored it secretly, none knowing how it was taken away, nor how restored. This, I think, contributed to impress me with a special care of exact justice, and the necessity of restitution in the case of things unjustly taken away; being like a burnt child dreading the fire."

Perhaps there are few cases in which Satan has less difficulty in prevailing upon the mind to leave the path of straightforwardness, than in such as that above mentioned, where some sort of excuse may be offered to the upbraidings of conscience; yet we see that the sincere christian, however deluded at the moment, cannot long enjoy anything which has been obtained by deviating into those crooked mazes which lie thickly set on either side, to entrap the traveler who is journeying to heaven. The consciousness of guilt persisted in clogs his spirit, and builds, as it were, a wall of brass between him and his God, hunting him "like a partridge upon the mountains"; till, with the prodigal, he comes to himself, arises and goes to his Father, and weeps his confession in the merciful arms that are extended to receive him.

There is an affecting instance of a mind thus disquieted, and thus restored, told by Samuel Kilpin of himself, when a child, and which is well fitted to convey instruction to christians of any age. It is as follows:—"When seven years old, I was left in charge of the shop; a man passed, crying, 'Little lambs, all white and clean, at one penny each.' In my eagerness to get one, I lost all self-command, and, taking a penny out of the drawer, I made the purchase. My keen-eyed, wise mother inquired how I came by the money. I evaded the question with something like a lie. In God's sight it was a lie, as I kept back the truth. The lamb was placed on the chimney-shelf, and much admired. To me it was a source of inexpressible anguish. Continually there sounded in my ears and heart, 'Thou shalt not steal; thou shalt not lie.' Guilt and darkness overcame my mind, and in sore agony of soul I went to a hay-loft,—the place is now perfectly in my recollection,—and there prayed and pleaded, 'with groanings that could not be uttered,' for mercy and pardon. I entreated mercy for Jesus' sake. With joy and transport I left the loft, from a believing application of the text, 'Thy sins, which are many, are forgiven thee.' I went to my mother, told her what I had done, and sought her forgiveness, and burnt the lamb, while she wept over her young penitent."

This is the sort of repentance which gives joy to the angels of God; and oh! how beautiful, how blessed is its sweet humility, compared with the iron hardness of that pride which, though it will not save a man from stooping to the meanest artifices to accomplish his ends, will, nevertheless, constrain him to resist to the uttermost the salutary confession which alone can effectually heal the hurt which sin has made upon his peace. His groveling eye is fixed only upon himself; and how many deceits must be practised when the mind is only influenced by earthly considerations, and when the claims of selfishness are allowed a hearing! What a deafener of the ears, what a turner of things upside down, is this self-love! No wonder, then, that he who is the father of lies, and the source of all confusion, should make it the mighty engine of every evil work. No wonder, then, at its first sigh for the fulfilling of this or the other desire, he steps forth to its aid; which he usually does by involving the mind in a train of confused and intricate reasoning, upon points which a simple adherence to the straightforward dictates of an enlightened conscience disposes of at once, without making any argument necessary. There is nothing more to be avoided, than entering into an argument with Satan. He is always the questioner that comes with liberty to disobey. His approach upon his destined prey is the same as it was at the first. "Hath God said ye shall not do this or that? Is there any harm in such or such things?" are questions which, commonly, pave the way now, as they did then, into disobedience and suffering.

With what consummate wisdom, then, has our divine Redeemer laid the axe to the root of the tree, by making it the condition of his receiving a man as a disciple, that he should deny himself! "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." He who "was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil," attacks that first wherein and whereby the devil most successfully accomplishes his works. We are told in the Scriptures of truth that "the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked." Who is there that faithfully examines himself, and does not find enough to confirm this statement? It was pity for our helplessness, and compassion at seeing us not only wretched in ourselves, but made still more wretched as the tools of the prince of evil, that caused the Savior of mankind to embody himself in our nature, and go about in our sorrowful world, doing good. Yet, be it remembered, that though he came to bestow love and mercy upon us, it was the love that saves from sin; the yearnings of infinite purity, as well as infinite compassion; the tenderness of One who knew that holiness was happiness; and whose divine and spiritual precepts, addressing only the lost, polluted soul, had nothing for the selfishness of the flesh and fleshly mind but resistance and denial even unto death. "He that forsaketh not all that he hath" (that is, all of his own stock of fallen Adam), and "he that hateth not his own life also (that is, the life of self), he cannot be my disciple."

This is the religion of Jesus! the holy, humble, self-denying Jesus! This is the religion of the cross! The inward, spiritual cross upon which the true disciple of a crucified Lord dies daily; thus entering into fellowship with his Master's sufferings, and seeking, with holy Paul, to be "made conformable unto his Master's death!"

How much, then, does it behoove the professor of Christ's religion to inquire how far he goes in this species of self-denial and self-sacrifice, which his Lord and Master pronounces to be indispensable! In vain can we hope to keep the path of straightforwardness, if we do not enter it by the strait gate and narrow way of self-denial; and assuredly, in vain shall we cover ourselves with the name of christians, if honest straightforwardness be not a distinguishing characteristic by which we are known. "Thou hast given a banner," says the Psalmist, "to them that feared thee, that it may be displayed because of the truth." Therefore should uprightness of heart and life be lifted up, as the banner of the Lord, in the conduct of the christian. "Ye are a city set upon a hill," says the blessed Savior; and again, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." These are solemn commands, and not to be lowered to the estimate which each one, for himself, may think high enough. When each one acts for himself only, it is but too probable that he will act wrong, and fall into temptation, through "many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition."

It is necessary, in these times, to remind the sincere inquirer after truth, that christianity is still the same as it ever was in the demands it makes upon its followers. When bonds and imprisonments, and every varied form of tribulation, accompanied the profession of it, there was an ordeal to pass through which tended effectually to sift out the chaff from the wheat. This is not the case now. Religion has become fashionable; and it may not be unwise for those who desire to "separate between the precious and the vile," to direct their attention to the nature of christianity; and having considered the purity and strictness of its requirements, let them ask themselves if these are likely to attract many to enlist under its banners. "He that loveth father, or mother, or son, or daughter, more than me, is not worthy of me." "We must, through much tribulation, enter into the kingdom of God." "We glory in tribulations also." "My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations." "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me and I unto the world." Does human nature willingly embrace the discipline and subjection, which alone can produce such principles as these? Ah, no, no!

Whenever we find religion an easy thing, we may be well assured that it is not the religion of Jesus Christ. That has always been a hard thing; a hateful thing, to the nature which it dooms to daily denial and crucifixion. "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, in which it leads, and few there be that walk therein." But now it would seem as though the precept were reversed; and that it was the broad way, and the wide gate, frequented by the many, that led to heaven.

No deeply reflective mind, no honest servant of God, but must with grief, again and again had occasion to remark the fearful and rapid advance which the enemy of souls is, at this time, making under the disguise of religion. Go where you will, you meet this destroyer, this wolf in sheep's clothing, palming himself upon credulous mankind, in the garb of devotion. To use a commercial phrase, religion is, now, a marketable article. There is a demand for it. What can be the result of this but the unavoidable one of the springing up of a religion of notions, a religion of self-indulgence, a religion of error, in the place of a religion of truth? O friends, ye who profess the christian name, never believe that you can glide into the kingdom of heaven with ease and pleasure! "Through much tribulation we must enter into the kingdom of God." And there is no need to put the often-made inquiry, "Must I make to myself crosses and discomforts, if God thinks fit to spare them?" The true disciple of Jesus can never want [a] daily cross, whilst there is unmortified sin remaining in his heart. If there be nothing else to exercise him with an unceasing conflict (and there can be no conflict without suffering), the subjugation of self, with all its imperious desires, will find him sufficient cause for prayer and patience. And, being faithful in the duties of self-control, let him only act the part of christian faithfulness towards others; not soothing them in any evil way, through fear of what may be the consequence to himself, of speaking the truth; but, remembering that solemn injunction, "Thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbor, and not suffer sin upon him"; let him only deal closely and sincerely with his fellow-creatures, and he will find enough to exercise both his christian courage and faith. In short, let him only, with the holy apostle, seek sincerely "to have a conscience void of offence towards God, and towards man"; let him only, with a noble disdain of every crooked by-road, and low contrivance for advancing his worldly interest, keep on the even tenor of his way, with clean hands and pure heart, and he will not want a cross to bear, and that daily.

Let all those, therefore, who would embrace and hold fast the religion of Jesus Christ, look well that they "enter by the door" which is "strait and narrow"; remembering that the author of that religion says, "He that entereth not by the door into the sheep-fold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." Let them also for ever bear in mind, that the path which leads to heaven is a straightforward path, and that it is only to be kept by adhering to the precious counsel which says, "Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee: ponder the path of thy feet, and let all thy ways be established. Turn not to the right hand, nor to the left: remove thy foot from evil." This is the way in which to pass through "the waste howling wilderness" of this world, with safety and honor. This is the way in which to be prepared for inhabiting that "city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." For what is it that fits us for that blessedness? The words of the Psalmist tell us, "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart."

How concise, yet how comprehensive is the delineation of the man who shall attain to the happiness of dwelling with God! And what other happiness has the christian to seek? What other enjoyment have saints and prophets waited for? "How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts!" says the enraptured Psalmist. "My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the Lord; my heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God." "One thing have I desired of the Lord," again he says; "that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple."

Seeing, then, that to "be for ever with the Lord, is to be for ever blessed," it behooves us to examine ourselves, if we possess the character which is essential to the attainment of such perfect happiness. It is a simple character:—"He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart." It is by "speaking the truth in his heart," or, in other words, by making it as much a matter of conscience to think no deceit, as he does to utter none, that the christian is chiefly distinguished. A regard to public esteem, and the furtherance of the views of self-interest, will often induce persons to walk uprightly, and work righteousness, "to be seen of men"; but it is only a deep, abiding consciousness that "all things are naked and open in the sight of Him with whom we have to do," that can purify the heart of man from the disorderly and deceitful workings of its fallen and corrupt nature. It is only by an habitual attention to the straight, unerring line of christian rectitude, which implies a higher, a diviner standard than bare justice, that these evil workings can be suppressed.

For the World's Crisis.

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

There has been much said about the kingdom of heaven, both in the sacred Scriptures and by professors. Now a kingdom is a tract of land under the supervision and direction of a personage styled a king; and in order that a man be a king, he must have at his command subjects; so, then, a kingdom must have territory, a king, and subjects.

It is generally understood that heaven and the kingdom of heaven are the same; but I am of the opinion that they differ somewhat. Heaven, we understand, is that pure and holy place where God and the angels reside, from whence Jesus came to earth to preach his gospel, and to which, after finishing his mission, he returned, and sat down at the right hand of the Father, to be a mediator between poor sin-sick man and an offended God, waiting to come to judge the world, and to set up his kingdom, which I believe to be the kingdom of heaven, for it will be set up by the powers of heaven, and all sin will be removed therefrom; consequently it will be a heavenly kingdom, or the kingdom of heaven. This is the kingdom the saints have the promise to possess; for the "saints shall take the kingdom and possess it," . . . "under the whole heaven," for ever and ever.

I know of no promise in the Bible to man, if he obeys every command even, that he will go to heaven. I know of no way for man to go to heaven, except by being translated, as Enoch was, or raised from the grave and taken up bodily, as Jesus was; but the Holy Bible is full of promises to such as obey the gospel; they shall have an abundant entrance into the kingdom of heaven, which is to be set up on the earth when the curse is removed, Prince Immanuel the king, Paradise restored the kingdom, and the saints of God the subjects. What a happy kingdom. No oppression then by the ruler, no rebellion by the subjects, no pain from disease; and the holy city, the New Jerusalem, standing in the midst to adorn and beautify, and to make the whole one indescribably, holy and happy home for those who love the soon appearing of the Lord.

Jesus, by John the Revelator, says, he that overcometh shall sit down with him in his throne, as he overcame and has sat down in his Father's throne. So it appears that Jesus is to have a throne separate from that of the Father; and there is no promise to mortal man that he can sit down in the Father's throne, but in Jesus' throne. Now where will Christ's throne be set up? A king's throne is set up within his kingdom. Then we suppose that his throne will be set up in his kingdom. Where is his kingdom to be? He shall sit upon the throne of his father David. Where was that? At Jerusalem. Then the throne upon which Christ is to sit is to be upon the earth; the throne to be in the kingdom; consequently, the kingdom which he is to set up is to be on the earth when redeemed from the curse, where Jesus and his saints are to dwell; not up in heaven, where God resides, but in his new kingdom, set up in the earth, when he will have separated the wheat from the chaff, and have gathered the wheat into his garner, and have burnt up the chaff with unquenchable fire.

This we understand to be the kingdom of heaven, the paradise restored, for the re-union of Christ, the Savior, and his saints, the saved; that they may dwell together forever, according to his promises when on earth.

For the World's Crisis.

A STAR IN FLAMES.

A wonderful phenomenon has recently dazzled the eyes of astronomers on both sides of the Atlantic—nothing less than a star in flames! In May last, a little twinkler in the constellation Corona Borealis, or "Northern Crown," suddenly blazed forth a star of the second magnitude, and on analyzing its rays with a spectroscope, the light was pronounced identical with that emitted by certain gases in a state of combustion. The universal opinion of the scientific men who observed the spectacle was that the star was on fire—an opinion which was strengthened, as time wore on, by the gradual dying out of its newly-acquired lustre. By the 22d of June the star had dwindled from the second to the ninth magnitude. It has since become still more insignificant, and when burnt out—assuming the theory regarding it to be correct—it will of course be invisible.

Although we have spoken of the burning as in progress, the probability is that the casuality occurred in a former and far remote age. The distance of the star from the earth is so enormous, that the light of the conflagration may have been many centuries, perhaps thousands of years, on its journey hither! It must be borne in mind, too, that the fixed stars are supposed to be solar systems like our own; not single worlds, but congeries of worlds, with suns for their centres. The theory of the astronomers is, that a planetary system has been consumed! Imagine our own sun, now the genial source of life and warmth, suddenly wrapt in flames by the liberation and ignition of its internal gases! What would be the effect? Every planet and satellite, from red Mercury to the pale orb that runs its course on the uttermost confines of the sphere of solar attraction, would be destroyed in the twinkling of an eye. The earth would be calcined, and of all its millions not a vestige would remain.* We may well shudder at the idea of a system of worlds having been obliterated in a moment, and without warning. And yet, to the systems remaining, the one extinguished was but as a grain of sand to the myriads on the sea-shore. A due consideration of this latter fact may possibly calm the fears of those who look for a grand catastrophe in this part of the universe at an early day. If the incomputable milliards of systems suspended in space are to be destroyed one by one—and this would seem to be a natural inference from the late phenomenon, if it has been correctly interpreted by the astronomers—our turn may be much further off than the Millerites anticipate.—N. Y. Paper.

* 2 Peter 3. 7.—"But the heavens and earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store reserved unto fire."
10th verse.—"But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; . . . the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up."
See 2 Peter 3: 3, and onward.

How perfectly the Bible harmonizes with science. It prophesied of certain events which have transpired. It says the world shall be destroyed by fire. Science says other worlds in the universe have been burned up; and suggests the possibility, yea, probability of this very world which we inhabit being consumed by fire; but still puts it afar off. Yet the time will come! And people like us will live upon it as we do; and granting that time ever to arrive, why may it not be as possible to come in our day, as in the future ages far hence?

That which will best "calm the fears of those who look for a grand catastrophe in this part of the universe at an early day," is that long since foretold by "prophet bards and patriot seers" in words with the harmonious notes of heaven lingering upon each accent, and now re-echoing down through the last moments of time with the same sweet music as of old yet lingering upon them, viz.: "We, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth."—2 Pet. 3: 13. And looking for this event, we believe it soon to be accomplished.

Numerous events in nature proclaim it. The angry voices of the nations proclaim it. The distant rumbling earthquakes, the pent up volcanos, the flashing lightnings and rolling thunders proclaim it near, when the waters of the oceans shall burst into a flame, and the air we breathe mingle its elements, and both blaze forth into the fires of destruction. And then may we all have a refuge till the fiery storm be past, and the time comes when He who said "Behold I make all things new," shall accomplish his work, and earth once more smiles in gladness as when "the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy" over Eden's lovely bowers; and those who have waited for the morning of gladness, shall see its golden beams come piercing through the flying shadows of night.

Then the mighty army of the great King shall come from distant lands beyond the sea, and join their swelling numbers with the numerous legions from the islands of the ocean, and all together unite in one overwhelming countless host, with banners of triumph and palms of victory waving in the heavenly air, and crowns of glory glittering with dazzling brightness in the sunshine of heavenly splendor; while the harps of glory ring in sweet harmonious strains to the anthems of everlasting triumph; and all the "glad voices" of the redeemed of earth unite with the glorious angels of Jehovah in singing the song of Moses and the Lamb; and the pure air of heaven catches each tone, and echoes it to the distant hills, o'er which it re-echoes and reverberates, taking on its joyous flight each lingering, trembling note that floats o'er the earth, all clad in new undying beauty, while the "ransomed of the Lord" lift up their heads in wonder, and again and again shout, "Hallelujah! for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

"AND THE PRAYER OF FAITH SHALL SAVE THE SICK."

DEAR BROTHERS AND SISTERS:—My heart goes out to you with fond, yearning love, that is almost a pain in its deep intensity, while lying prostrate as I am upon a bed of pain. My thoughts are ever with you. Oh, may God bless the dear brothers and sisters for the sweet, love-inspired missives they have so kindly penned me, freighted with words of hope and cheer for my lonely heart. I have no words to express the grateful thanks of my heart.

Just six weeks ago, I was taken suddenly and violently ill; and for long, weary days, and pain-tossed nights, I seemed to lie beneath the shadow of death's dark wing; yet, could my soul say, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me;" and I truly feel to say, "The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want." O, how exceedingly precious the blessed promises of God to my soul. I bless God that I have been enabled through grace given to view the loving hand of mercy in this seeming affliction. "All things shall work together for good to them that love the Lord." "And whatsoever ye shall ask, believing, ye shall receive." "And the prayer of faith shall save the sick . . . and the Lord shall raise him up."

The lamp of faith as brightly burns, illuming my soul with its flood of glory light, as when in years gone by I poured out all my soul to God in the humble prayer of faith, asking him to raise me up to health and strength, from my couch of pain, to which I had been bound for fourteen long years, racked with keenest pain. And, glory be to his name, he heard and answered that prayer of faith.

Dear brothers and sisters, I feel that my work is not quite finished. I have a little more to do yet for my Master, and by faith I feel to say, "I shall not die, but live, and declare the works of the Lord." Will you all unite with me in the prayer of faith to God, for my restoration to health and strength, if it be his will? My limbs are badly palsied, but He that said, "All power is given me, in heaven and on earth," is able to restore them, and raise me up to health and strength. Blessed be his holy name! Pray for me. Pray in faith, believing. Plead with the Father the precious promises his Son has given us. My faith is strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. I believe, yea, I know, he will hear and answer the prayer of faith. Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Give us Jesus, and we can say with the apostle, "Poor, yet possessing all things." Though possessing nothing in this world, our soul is filled with peace, while obeying the commandments, trusting in the blessed promise of our Savior,—"Take no thought for your life, saying, what shall we eat? or, what shall we drink? or, wherewithal shall we be clothed? For your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

O, the blessed promises of Christ, bright, shining links in the golden chain of faith, that binds my soul to its glorious Head. How precious, how doubly precious to my heart at this time. It is sweet to trust in him who hath said, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." ANNA E. MCELLISTER.

"OCCUPY TILL I COME."

This important passage of Scripture is a part of a parable from one who never spake amiss. As the parable was intended to convey some very important instruction to those to whom it was spoken, I think it will apply to us, in these last days, with greater force, if possible, than to those who first heard the parable.

What is the lesson here brought to view? We answer, it is the great and important lesson that Jesus was going away from this wicked and sin-cursed planet, to prepare mansions for all his faithful servants, who have received their goods or talents from him, and improved upon them in such a manner as to redound to the honor and benefit of this nobleman.

Kind reader, I would ask if there is not plenty of evidence that our dear Savior is about to come to this earth a second time, when he will call us all to an account for our use of the Lord's money?—for all we have in property or money belongs to God. We must also give account how we have used our tongues, in declaring God's truth to our dying fellow beings. Have we been diligent in studying God's word, in order to improve our minds, so that we could thereby be able to instruct others, and open to their minds the great and noble truths of the gospel, and of the soon coming of the great King of Zion?

Allow me to say, kind reader, if God has blessed you with an abundance of the good things of this life, and with a pocket full of money, remember the Lord's poor; in a special manner the freed men, women and children of the South, and also the poor that are around you; and especially the poor saints that are sick and in distress. Our beloved brother Paul says, "Be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."—1 Cor. 15: 58.

In 2 Pet. 1: 5–7, the apostle tells us that by "giving all diligence," we must "add to" our faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity." These christian graces, if in our possession, will enable us to be fruitful and abound in the works of the Lord.

We should be very careful not to offend any one with unkind words, looks or actions; but manifest a kind and pleasant disposition in our conversation with each other; and always show the spirit of Christ in all our dealings with each other; for if we have "not the spirit of Christ we are none of his." May the good Lord enable us all to do just right, and please our dear Savior and each other; and finally, when the Nobleman returns, may he be pleased with the improvement of our talents, and bid us enter into the joy of our Lord. Amen.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

A NATURAL LIFE.

It is very doubtful if there are many persons who have any just conception of what it is to live a natural life. It is said that all civilized people live an artificial and unnatural one, and to the wilderness of America or to the wilds of Africa we are referred for the only specimens of the natural man. This view of the case is both short-sighted and false. Men, whether savage or civilized, live a natural life when they live in accordance with the laws of their bodies and minds, and an unnatural life when they forget the organic laws which they ought to respect, substituting others instead. A natural man is as much at home in the parlor as in the forest. We speak of the Indian as a natural man; but it is doubtful if he is half so natural in his habits as thoroughly cultivated, civilized men. Is it very natural to sleep in a wigwam, scalp one's enemy, make woman a slave, never think of to-morrow or provide for the future, and know nothing of beautiful homes, social culture, books, art and science? We must not confound the natural man with rude ferocity, barbarism, unculture; it is the reverse. Man was made for culture, for refinement, for growth, and it is as natural for him, under favorable circumstances, to take on these conditions as for the bee to store up honey. We believe all that has been said and written about the more natural life of the Indian than the white man is erroneous. Indians are not more perfect, physically, than the whites; they have a coarser organization, can not endure work so long, can not bear themselves so manfully and naturally as their more cultivated brothers. Mr. Barnum recently had a troupe of red men dancing and performing in his Museum, but they had not one-fourth the agility or grace and majesty of physique seen in his white performers. It is quite doubtful if the Indian's mode of life is natural when we take this higher stand-point from which to draw our deductions.

Now let us consider what a natural life demands for its complete fulfillments.

It firsts demands a healthy birth and a childhood devoted mainly to healthful bodily development; children, more than grown-up people, instinctively turn to the natural instead of the artificial. They seek their mother's breast and protection rather than artificial food and the stranger's care. They are then more sportive, happier and natural than ever thereafter. They lose much of their naturalness during their education, when mental and physical restraint takes the place of healthful, natural growth.

A natural life demands a natural education. All education should be founded on the "natural laws of man." Half the secret of so many artificial lives among civilized races comes from not adapting education to the natural law. It is unnatural to demand that a boy or girl shall sit six hours a day in a close school-room with the brain constantly on the strain and the body quiet. . . .

But more than all, to secure a natural life requires good habits. It is unnatural to chew tobacco, to smoke, to drink intoxicating liquor, to swear, lie, steal or live vulgar, sensual lives. It is on the other hand natural to be kind, loving, tender, thoughtful of others; just to the world and to ourselves; full of the spirit of growth and progress, and a hater of cant, hypocrisy and every thing mean. It is natural to love fresh air; unnatural to shut ourselves up in closed rooms. It is natural to covet the kisses of the sun; unnatural to live in parlors, with drawn curtains and shutters. It is natural to eat fruit and drink water; unnatural to swallow those drenches, tea and coffee. It is natural to sleep soundly; unnatural to be nervous and wakeful after we retire to our couch for rest. It is natural to clothe ourselves beautifully and healthfully, so every muscle is free to act gracefully and vigorously; unnatural to torture our waists or obstruct the full and free movement of any muscle or limb by restraint. It is natural to be industrious, sportive, lively, mirthful; unnatural to be lazy, sad, hypocondriac. It is natural to love society; unnatural to become a hermit. It is natural to seek the family relation; unnatural to pass through life alone, without family ties. It is natural to be strong, healthy, upright; unnatural to be sick, scrawny, feeble, round shouldered, small chested, rickety. It is natural to seek pure air, a wise hygiene, and to remedy our departures from nature; unnatural to dose with drugs, pills, powders, and deadly poisons. It is natural to study the arts and sciences, to become familiar with the literature of this and past ages, to learn to "know thyself;" unnatural to excite the mind and debase the heart by constantly poring over yellow-covered fiction.

A natural life is the most desirable life. It includes all the christian graces of love to God and man. An infidel is always an unnatural man. He has no faith in God, and we might almost say in himself. There are too many infidels in the world. Every man is infidel, so far as he is unnatural, or so far as his life is not in harmony with natural and therefore divine law; for all natural law is divine in origin and in essence.

A great want of the age is to induce the people to more natural lives. It is the great mystery of creation that we are allowed to live any other; but perhaps it is only because our departure from nature has blinded us so we can not see. It will be wise for us when we return to nature, to seek to learn our relations to her and follow them. It is doubtful if we can accomplish this in any way so successfully for all, as by educating our children to good habits. Now we educate them to such habits as are fashionable, or current, or as suit our own perverted tastes. Shall not all earnest men and women seek this—it is in their power—and add their pens, voices and influence to secure for the young a more natural education, one that shall lead them to simpler habits, cultivated tastes, and a higher degree of health and perfection of body and mind?—Herald of Health.

HEALTH OF GIRLS.

The compression of the chest is still another cause of disease and debility. The chest contains the heart and lungs, two organs demanding special space for exercise. Indeed, by nature there is just room enough for all of the internal organs and none to spare. If any are crowded, their usefulness, so to speak, is impaired, and none more than the lungs and heart. These, in the form given to the chest, are amply protected, bounded by firm bones, the ribs, breast-bone, spinal column, etc.—at least firm when fully matured. This chest, at birth, is large, ample to accommodate and protect its contents, the shape being adapted to its design. But that shape is wonderfully and sadly changed from its original conical form, with the larger portion down, inverting nature's plan. Those who doubt this will please observe the chest of the infant at birth, notice the ample expanse of the ribs, particularly at the base, relatively larger in the female than in the male, for reasons that need not be specified. But, between the ages of ten and fifteen years, though some have supposed that the days of corsets, etc., have passed away, mark the wasp-like forms, so beautiful, and notice that this change occurs very soon after the miss begins to have some idea of "taste," diminishing in size, particularly at the base, at a very rapid rate just when the dawn of womanhood appears, when the chest naturally enlarges. Facts justify the assertion that the chest is relatively the smallest where it should be the largest, diminishing from birth. Now, this is not without a cause. A part of this is referable, it may be, to the tight bandages of infancy, worn sufficiently tight to cause discomfort, if not pain, and at a time when the bones—if such they may be called—are very yielding. At this time a slight pressure is sufficient to materially diminish the size of the chest; still, all of the mischief is not done at this time. A system of "tight lacing" is commenced in girlhood and continued systematically, though the pressure may be slight, so slight as to be regarded as of no importance. Yet such pressure, commenced when the bones are yielding and continued for a few years, is sufficient to produce the result—a sad result.

But the causes are of less importance than the results. Observation teaches us that the chests and waists of females are relatively smaller than those of males, while at birth they are larger, and ought to be, for sufficient reasons. If the chest is thus contracted, adequate room for the lungs, etc., is utterly impossible. If the lungs are in any respect compressed, the minute air-cells and passages—estimated by millions,—become closed and adhere for ever, rendering a full inflation of the lungs, and a consequent full supply of air, utterly impossible. To understand the extent of the evils of such compression, it should be remembered that one object of breathing is to purify the blood by a contact with the air—or its oxygen—in the lungs, one of the most important means of purifying the blood. Indeed, this method is much more efficacious than the use of all the sarsaparilla "blood-purifiers" that ignorant quacks have ever cursed society with, since this is nature's own purifier, leaving no "dregs of impurity" introduced in the very process of purification. Young lady, if you would purify your blood, use less salt, less grease, less pork—the most abominable of all grease; less diseased animal food, etc.; it is difficult to use too little of such articles—and breathe as much as possible of pure, cool air, day and night, exercising sufficiently to throw off the waste of the body, and you will not only find an economical but also an effectual method.

Again, this compression of the lungs is among the many causes of pulmonary consumption, so alarmingly prevalent at the present day, particularly among females—a disease that is consigning thousands of the fair buds of mortality, frail young ladies, to a premature grave annually, even in our own favored country. It is not necessary to state the physiological reasons for this result; yet, it is a fact that such pressure, closing the air-cells, etc., resulting in facilitating unhealthful deposits or preventing the ordinary supply of air, etc., etc., is making sad inroads into the health of the future mothers, those now in the bloom of life. . . .

It has not escaped the notice of observers that there is a close connection between a large and well-developed chest and lungs and physical power and endurance. If about to exert our strength to the best advantage we instinctively inhale a generous supply of air as one of the necessary means of preparation. The fleet animals, the most hardy, those enduring the most fatigue, etc., are those well developed in the chest, possessing ample lung-power. Human beings having such lungs are seldom the victims of diseases of this character, unless the result of accidental causes, such as breathing poisonous air and the fumes generated in some chemical works, or causes of a similar nature.

To be safe in this matter, to be sure that the lungs are in no danger of being too much compressed, it is absolutely necessary that clothing should be so loose that no inconvenience shall be felt by taking a free inspiration, full and deep. But very few, if any, fashionable young ladies can be found who are thus free to breathe the air of heaven without restraint. Most are so deformed, have chests so compressed, that the lungs contain only about one-half of the air necessary to meet the wants of the system. Many, far too many, seek, by a daily compression of the chest and waist, to imitate the forms of the "fashion plates," which generally are mere caricatures of the human form as it came from the Great Architect.

Still another evil resulting from this insufficient supply of air—the food of the lungs—is connected with the heat of the body, or what is generally termed animal heat. A process is constantly going on in the system, an action connected with the relations of the air and waste parts of the body, by which warmth is evolved. Now, if there is an insufficient supply of air—and only large lungs can receive the necessary supply—if the blood is only partially purified, it is utterly impossible to develop a sufficient amount of heat to meet the wants of the system. Hence the "chills" of so many delicate young ladies, the purple cheeks, the bloodless lips, the shrivelled appearance, etc., all are indicative of an insufficient supply of natural heat. Hence the necessity of artificial warmth, the extra clothing, the hot soap-stones, etc., while the extremities are cold and pale, like lifeless remains, the blood having retired to the internal organs—almost congesting them—and the head, but from the same cause.

The remedy for such difficulties consists principally in removing the cause, enlarging the lungs by systematic full-breathing, throwing the shoulders back, standing erect, allowing full motion to the muscles of the chest, with such gymnastic exercises as are calculated to bring these muscles into action, enlarging the chest; or, still better, by useful labors, such as one of ordinary capacity may suggest, constantly bearing in mind that the object is to expand the heart and lungs, strengthening the muscles connected with them by appropriate exercise, breathing as much pure air as possible. Such a course would diminish doctor's bills and those of a similar character, benefiting young ladies more than those whose success depends upon the misfortunes and sickness of society.—Herald of Health.

TRUST IN THE LORD.

Bro. Grant.—The following beautiful and deeply devotional lines are the effusion of one of the Lord's hidden ones, who, we are told, has long been in the furnace of affliction. O that we all might "recognize Christ" more fully in all our afflictions—to lose sight of our sufferings "in the absorbing contemplation of Jesus." Hattie H——.

"Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways, acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy path."—Prov. 3: 5-6.

Yes, I will own thee, blessed Lord,
Oh! choose my path for me,
Whether of pleasure or of pain,
So that it leads to thee.

Should sickness be my daily lot,
I know thy tender care
Will soothe with gentle love my bed,
And give me strength to bear.

My cup of sorrow I will take,
Whate'er that cup may be,
And drink it, Lord, for thy dear sake,
As thou hast done for me.

I could not ask unbroken rest,
While still upon thy side
Marks of the cruel spear are seen,
Jesus, thou crucified.

Thou wilt not open me a door
Thy own feet have not trod;
Oh, there's so much blessedness
In trusting thee, my God.

And there is majesty in pain,
All mystic though it be;
A sweetness pleasure cannot bring,
Bright halo-crowned by thee.

If in my life-path thorns appear,
My feet shall tread them down;
I would not shun one cross of thine—
Behind it lies the crown.

And in its bitterness I prove
Sore though it seem to me,
The preciousness of that dear love
Which leads me, Lord, to thee.

For the World's Crisis.

GOLDEN MOMENTS.

Dear reader, if yet out of Christ, you are heedlessly permitting golden moments to pass, never to be recalled. The present moment is a golden moment. Yes, to you it is a golden moment; will you lose it forever? Shall this ere long be your lament?

"All his wooing I have slighted,
While he daily sought my soul;
If my vows to him I plighted,
Yet for sin I broke them all.
Golden moments!
How neglected did they roll."

Listen to that wretched, dying, young man, who exclaimed, "O time! time! how art thou fled forever!" When told of the abode of the blest, said he, "So much the worse—'tis lost! tis lost! A month—O, for a single week! I ask not for years, though an age were too little for the much I have to do."

Hear, also, the exclamation of that dying queen, who had been a gay votary of the world,—"Millions of money for an inch of time!" And, also, a dying man, who uttered these emphatic words,—"Ah! the day in which I ought to have worked is over, and now I see a horrible night approaching, bringing with it the blackness of darkness for ever. Woe is me! When God called, I refused. Now I am in sore anguish, and yet this is the beginning of sorrows. I shall be destroyed with an everlasting destruction."

Golden moments—for ever lost! Careless sinner, lose no more. Repent, obey God now, and improve all present moments as they pass, and then you, also, shall have an eternal crown.

Careless, worldly-minded, fruitless professor, who have only "a name to live," beware! lest you be cut off like a withered branch. "Repent, and do the first works," lest swift approaching judgment scenes shall find you numbered with the "many," whom Christ will not own.

Professing Christian, have you thus far fulfilled life's mission? Can you not recall to mind some friend you neglected to comfort, warn, or admonish; some wanderer to reclaim, or some poor unfortunate heir of sorrow, whom you "passed by on the other side?" Can you not recall times, and precious seasons, when you neglected the "still, small voice," that whispered to you to deny yourself, and take up your cross; to follow Christ through "evil report and good report;" in clouds, as well as sunshine; to banish shame, pride, and the fear of man, and "be ready to every good work?"

Careless professor, the trying day is near. Will you now examine the foundation of your hopes, lest found built upon the sand? Backslider, repent, and return to the only true refuge. "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."

Dear impenitent friend, repent, and turn now from the forbidden paths of sin, of folly, of death. "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found." Seek the path of purity, of holiness, of life eternal. Your way is beset with snares and pit-falls, yet you see them not. Thousands have fallen on your right hand, and on your left, yet you think you are safe. Satan and your deceitful heart are leading you blindly to the whirlpool of destruction, suggesting a thousand allurements to divert your ears and eyes from the point of danger. "Stop, poor sinner, stop and think, before you farther go,"—think for the judgment; for eternity, and begin now to act for the same. "Turn ye, for why will ye die?" Let this golden moment be your time and day of deliverance. Let it not be numbered with the lost. Come now, in all your blindness and unbelief, come just as you are, and now retire to your closet and pray to God for Christ's sake to open your eyes; to grant you the aid of the Holy Spirit, and to have mercy upon you, and blot out all your past transgressions; to cleanse you from all sin, and lead you in the way of truth and righteousness.

Sinner, defer no longer the great work of life. Improve the present golden moment; retire immediately and pray, but never faint; and pray while life remains. Pray, but faint not, though Satan and all the powers of darkness combine against you. Retire and pray, but faint not, though hardness of heart, darkness and blindness, clouds and tempest, are round about you. Retire now and pray, but faint not, "though the blessing tarry long." Wait for it by prayer, and faith, and fasting, if need be. Wait upon God while you have a being, and the blessing will be yours. Improve this golden moment, but faint not; retire immediately, and pray to learn the will of God, and for grace and strength to do it.

Dear impenitent friend, will you now improve this golden moment? Will you now take up your cross? Will you, for the sake of Christ, of immortality, the kingdom of God, and well-being of others around you, the society of saints and angels; for the glory of God, and unfading eternal joys? Will you now take up the cross, and win an immortal crown? Will you now begin by prayer? Will you now retire and begin to pray?

O, sinner, can you withstand Omnipotence? Can thy heart endure, or thy hand be strong, in the day when God shall deal with thee? Shall this be said of you, also?—"They would none of my counsel; they despised all my reproof." Dear impenitent friend, will you improve now this present, passing, golden moment, and faint not, but retire and pray?—and ever thus continue, until prayer shall end in songs of everlasting praise? If you will not, your golden moments, ere you are aware, will soon be numbered, and lost for ever. Sinner, backslider, fruitless professor, whose hopes are built upon the sand, the day of wrath is near; the storm is gathering, and how can you escape if you "neglect so great salvation?"

Remember these few fleeting moments are fraught with life, or death! With eternal joy, or "the blackness of darkness for ever;" with the unfading glories of the redeemed, or to be consigned to the "lake of fire!" Now make your choice, delay no more. The Judge stands waiting at the door. S. L. Manley.

STRAIGHTFORWARDNESS ESSENTIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN.

The true standard of christian rectitude is set before us in the sacred command, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye also unto them." How many temptations, not merely to deceit, but to encroachment upon the comfort of others, are here cut up by the root! And how constantly does the inordinate love of self-gratification require to be checked, by remembering this injunction! O, how greatly would the sorrows of this vale of tears be ameliorated, if this were the rule by which christian professors regulated their actions! For it is not merely by actual deceit, and dishonesty, that the catalogue of human suffering is augmented; there are many ways of oppressing, and discomforting, which are practised without remorse by those who, perhaps, would shrink from being guilty of actual fraud. Yet, this species of assault upon the claims of our fellow-creatures, is as much forbidden in the Scriptures as dishonesty; as we learn from the apostle's injunction, "that no man go beyond, or defraud his brother in any matter; because, that the Lord is the avenger of all such." Unless the heart be under the softening influence of divine grace, there must be frequent temptation to go beyond our fellow-creatures, in matters where the laws of the land permit us the right. And, accordingly, we see in the conduct of selfish and covetous persons, how closely they will exact to the uttermost the stipulated labors of those whose services they hire! How unfeelingly will they press for their right, whether of money or work, when, sometimes, through sickness and poverty, neither money nor work can be tendered them, without pain or distress?

What check can be put upon the movements of self-love, in such cases, if the mind be not under the guidance of some principle, more tender and delicate than rigid justice? Blessed be God! He has not only directed us in the Holy Scriptures to do as we would be done by, but he has given us a witness within, which confirms and applies the outward command; and which, when faithfully attended to and obeyed, never fails to lead the mind out of all unkindness, as well as unfairness, in its dealings with others. "My sheep hear my voice," says the blessed Jesus, "and follow me." It is this precious saving voice which always speaks to deliver from evil, which the true sheep are to mind. It is the directing voice which is promised, Isa. 30: 21: "And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left." It is the living law of the Lord specified, Jer. 31: 33: "And I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and will be their God, and they shall be my people." It is the strength-giving spirit spoken of by Ezekiel, 36: 27:—"And I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my statutes and do them." It is that principle, more divine, more lovely, than bare justice, which, when followed, guides out of every obscure, entangling, crooked practice, and which makes the path of the just to be indeed as "the shining light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

And, not only out of all unkindness, as well as out of all unfairness in our transactions with our fellow-creatures, does this divine principle deliver us; but it causes us to "make straight paths for our feet," under any circumstances of common occurrence, wherein self-love is very apt to incline us to leave the straightforward road.

How often, in the journey of life, does the desire of compassing a particular end, furnish a temptation to acts of duplicity! An open letter falling in the way, an opportunity of overhearing private conversation, are of this description; and on occasions commonly so sudden and unexpected as these, where is our help, but in a habit of prompt obedience to that internal guide, whose righteous dictates point, with living light, far, far away from the dark labyrinths into which, in such cases, self-love is prone to enter?

Again, in the instance of meeting with opportunities of taking advantage of others, how precious are the tender checks of the good Shepherd's voice! How frequently do such opportunities occur, wherein, by withholding or misstating the truth, we may induce our fellow-creatures to comply with our wishes! Temptations to take advantage of the ignorance, the imprudence, the necessities, the dependence, the timidity, or the generosity of others, must frequently meet the person whom God has been pleased to endue with the power which riches, talents, and influence of any kind confer. What need, then, that the heart be under the dominion of a sacred and unbending principle of rectitude, to furnish it with a rule of conduct which is fitted for all circumstances, and which shall deliver it from all those mean and unworthy shifts, to which the groveling nature of self-love is never ashamed to stoop. Truly, indeed, the way of the Lord is strength to the upright. Truly, indeed, does he fulfill to those who seek him with their whole heart, that precious promise, "I will cause them to walk by the rivers of water, in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble," and make them know, by blessed experience, that it is "the way of holiness"; and that "wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein."

How often do we stand in need of being refreshed by these considerations, when harassed on the right hand and on the left with the goadings of selfishness, aggravated by the subtlety of Satan, tempting us to the commission of actions which, without being, directly dishonest, we perceive to be unworthy of our christian profession! Who is there that has not experienced these harassings? Who is there that has not, under the impulse of the moment, made some promise, or raised some expectations, which cooler reflection causes him to repent of, as imprudent? And who is there (especially if the matter repented of should come under the denomination of what is called a trifle) but has been tempted to use, if he actually has not used, some false excuse to cover his failure towards his fellow-creature, without much regard to the displeasure of his Creator? How common, for instance, are the most palpable untruths, when it is not easy to be extricated from some invitation, given or accepted! How usual is it for persons, without a blush, to invent motives for their actions, or substitute the ostensible for the real, whenever it suits their worldly purposes; and what serpentine movements will they make use of, to twine themselves out of unpleasant situations, in which their own measures may have been the means of placing them.

But, let there be an habitual consciousness of God's law in the heart, and a custom of bowing to its requirements, and how clean and clear a deliverance it works out of all such difficulties, by simply commanding us to speak and act uprightly; and, when we have made promises or engagements which we can not, or do not wish to fulfil, to bear the humiliation of acknowledging our error, and the shame, or contempt (if such be our portion), which it deserves. And, surely, to the heart which knows any thing of the grace of repentance, and the precious, though sorrowful, fruits which grow in that lowly soil, such humiliation is valuable indeed, compared with the skulking sort of hide-and-seek, the flimsy excuses, and poor pleas, which very proud people sometimes stoop to adopt, to cover their faults.

How sure a guide, also, is a straightforward principle of action in the innumerable cases of embarrassment to pride and covetousness, that will arise from the common circumstance of possessing near relatives and connexions in an inferior rank of life! The man that walks uprightly, has no shuffling contrivances to keep them aloof. If they be poor, he relieves their necessities; if they be worthy, he seeks their society; nor could be find comfort in neglecting their claims, because the accidents of life may have placed him above them in point of outward appearance. The rule he walks by is given forth by him that changeth not. It does not, therefore, vary, and take its direction from the ups and downs of world-views. It has but one end; which is, to cause him to do that which is acceptable in the sight of God; knowing, that such as he is in the sight of God, he only is, be his pretensions what they may. Hence, how decidedly it speaks, when allowed a hearing, upon every point of honesty connected with the discharge of debts; a matter in which so much shuffling and dishonesty is common, that a tradesman will almost be surprised to meet with a customer who will, voluntarily, rectify any error whereby, in selling his goods, he has unconsciously made himself a loser. "I wish every one that deals with me had your principle," was the remark of a tradesman, not long since, to a friend of the author's, upon an occasion of this kind; and then he made the lamentable statement, that it was not only of irreligious characters that he had to complain for want of uprightness in their dealings with him, but even of many that made a more than common profession of godliness.

How distinct and simple are its dictates, in opposition to the mystifications of self-love, when there is a desire to borrow, without any probability of repaying; or, when having borrowed articles, there arises a desire to keep them, in the hope that the lender has forgotten! What an armor of defense, on the right hand and on the left, is it, from the common temptation of seeming to be something, when we are nothing, by pointing us to the straight and simple path of truth; and how does it spare its possessor the ridicule and contempt which await the lofty pretender to talent, to riches, to connections, or any personal advantage, when his pretensions are found to be "things of nought," and be himself a vain boaster! What "a breast-plate of salvation" is a righteous principle of straightforwardness, when envy, hatred and malice would shoot their arrows against the christian professor; and how secure a defense is provided for that man, in almost every species of trial, who is known to "walk uprightly, and work righteousness, and speak the truth in his heart;" the man whom his bitterest enemy cannot accuse of a low, false, dishonest action; but whose word is his bond, and whose deeds confirm what his words promise! There may be, perhaps, great faults, many backslidings, grievous infirmities, in the character of such an one; but still, "the law of his God is in his heart, none of his steps shall slide." And though the wicked watch, and seek to slay him, yet the Lord will not leave him in his hand, nor condemn him when he is judged. "Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down, for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand."

How entirely does it guard the mind from every temptation to take the advantage, which selfish persons are so apt to use, of flattering the vanity, and practising on the weakness of proud, conceited people, in the hope of turning their folly to some account! How securely does it shield those who are placed in the situation of rulers and instructors, from the shame and humiliation of having to pass by an offence against truth or honesty, lest they should hurt their own wound, and be reminded by the culprit of some similar failures on their own part.

But where should we stop, if we were to attempt to particularize the manifold advantages which an abiding adherence to this principle of rectitude confers? In a word, it is that precious thing, which, like a vein of gold running through the earth of the fallen nature, more especially distinguishes the sincere from the mere nominal christian. It is not difficult to appear religious, but it is difficult to be really so; since it involves a change of heart, which He who searches the heart alone can accomplish: and he effects it only by "turning us from darkness into light, and from the power of Satan unto the power of God."

For the World's Crisis.

NEAR THE END.

To those that remain and are alive, suffer a few words of admonition. If ever there was evidence more at one time than another, since we believed, it is now. For years we have had our eyes on Rome as being the last of the old Roman kingdom, "the fourth beast" (Dan. 7: 23). "The fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron."—Dan. 2: 40. This terrible and dreadful beast, that has broken down and stamped upon such numbers of the holy people, and for so long a time, is now about to make its exit. At the time of the breaking up and taking away of the dominion of that power in the summer of 1792, in France, the clergy became refractory. They had held the people by constraint. The revolution had found them as the enemies of freedom of speech. A vast amount of treasure had been amassed by them; they were drawing great salaries from the public chest; taxes were heavy upon the people.

The purposes of God must be accomplished. He just permitted a scarcity of bread, causing the people to complain about heavy taxes. They were then prepared to discharge those functionaries, who now stood in the way of reform, and with violence they did it. Says the historian, "France was but a slaughter house. A vast number were put to death, and driven into banishment. The immense treasure was confiscated to the nation; and from that day to the present there has been decay on whatever of power there was left." "They shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end."

As I said, our eyes have been upon Rome, to witness its decay. The last reports from there say, "The monetary affairs in Rome are in a very bad state." The clergy are very refractory. They advise Pius IX. to stick by and not leave Rome. The people are borne down with heavy taxes. Seven thousand lazy monks are supported at the public expense. Are not the people situated about as they were in France in the Revolution? "Free Italy!" is the cry all over that land,—freedom from the clerical yoke. Let us now read the following, which to me speaks ominously for the balance of Roman power in Italy:—

GARIBALDI AND HIS VOLUNTEERS.

A correspondent gives the following sketch of Garibaldi's bidding farewell to his volunteers:

"When the principal group of volunteers arrived on the plot of ground before the villa of M. Crispi, the General descended the steps of the principal entrance, and, silence having been obtained, spoke as follows:

'My children—I thank you for the testimony of affection you give me; be certain that my feelings respond to your own. A small number of evil-doers have troubled our satisfaction in at last seeing Italy one and independent. They are inspired by the priests, enemies of the happiness of our country. As long as the priests shall not have been put down, Italy will have neither true liberty nor prosperity. Let us combat these reactionary ecclesiastics, who are at this moment our only enemies.'

Some individuals having then cried out—'Death to the priests!'

'No,' said Garibaldi, with energy, 'death to no one. Free Italy has horror of bloodshed!'

Then, casting an expressive look at the flag of the Roman Volunteers, veiled with black, he continued:

'Romans, you who have gloriously fought by my side during the last campaign, and who cannot yet return to your beloved country, I say to you, have patience! for I hope the year will not pass over without your being able to return to Rome delivered from the odious clerical yoke. Adieu, my children; whether near each other or at a distance, we are still united.'"

Also read what Dr. Manning says of the impending crisis. The Dr. says, "its circumference traverses all nations; its centre is Italy"; "the decomposition of christian (Catholic) Europe is to be accomplished"; "christian (Catholic) unity must give way before national isolation."

The Temporal Power of the Pope.—Dr. Manning, the leading Catholic of England, has issued what might be called a wail over the treaty between France and Italy, which provides for the withdrawal of the French troops from Rome in December next. He says:

"This interval of time, therefore, is full of expectation. There is not a christian power in the world to stay its execution, or to come between the contracting parties in this abandonment of the Vicar of Jesus Christ. The principle of human non-intervention has its full development. Treaties, contracts, engagements, rights of justice, all international laws and obligations have been long ago broken and buried. The powers of Christian Europe looked on in silence. The principle of modern nationalism, after rending asunder the fair political order of the christian world, has reached at length to the order of the christian church. It has for three centuries assailed its unity. It now assails its authority. It rends nations from its body; it now aims at its head. Christendom must be silent because its centre is in Italy. But its circumference traverses all nations, and all are equally near to their common centre. Italian nationalism is more sacred to the statesmen of to-day than the unity and authority of Christendom, or the purity and freedom of the church. The inspirations of the revolution have poisoned their counsels and paralyzed their action. The sacred diplomacy of Christendom is effaced from the laws of nations. Christian unity must give way before national isolation, and the decomposition of christian Europe is to be accomplished. The work of the revolution, that is of society without Christ and without God, is to be supreme."

Read also from an extract of a letter from John Mitchel, a Catholic and a leading reformer, a man of extensive observation of the condition of affairs:

LETTER FROM JOHN MITCHELL.
(From the N. Y. Daily News.)

Paris, Oct. 9th, 1866.

Treaty of peace between Austria and Italy, definitely signed, and "ratified," and solemnized at Florence with a hundred guns and one; cities also, fluttering with flags by day, blazing with illuminations by night. All very fine. But I affirm once more that a general war is brewing in Europe; war more horrible and bloody than Europe has yet seen, which is saying much.

For the present all looks beautiful and balmy. Austrian authorities are this very day delivering up the cities of Venetia into the hands of General Leboeuf, French Commissioner for that purpose, who is appointing the 14th of the month for the plebiscite, or trial by universal suffrage. After the result of that is known, which is not considered doubtful, King Victor Emanuel is to enter Venice in triumph, when the poor Venetians will probably have a high time. Think of it!—as if the last British redcoat had left Dublin, the green flag were flying over Dublin Castle!

All is balmy; a marriage, even, is said to be under negotiation between Prince Humbert, Victor Emanuel's son, heir applicant to the crown of Italy, and an Austrian archduchess. And Palermo is tranquil, illuminating itself loyally, like the rest of the towns; and Garibaldi gone home to Caprera, and his red-shirted volunteers getting disbanded. It is Astræa Redux, and a new age of gold for Italy. Alas! all that is very fine; yet there is not a human being in all Europe who does not see and feel that a tremendous struggle is approaching, and that every one is getting ready for it, out of which mighty agony of 150,000,000 people no "united Italy" will emerge.

It is impossible to believe in this united Italy and her Astræa Redux. She will be mangled and tattered into fragments again, and thrown to the dogs by the hands of her own children, if by nobody else.

And why should there be war in Europe? Where is the necessity that these poor nations should so soon fly at one another's throats again? Where, indeed, and why? When you expound to me the sound reasons for which nations always have gone to war hitherto, then you will be entitled to ask such questions, and pause for a reply. All I can do for you now is to point out the symptoms which demonstrate to every rational being, not that war ought to come, but only that it will come, and that everybody knows it. Reason, indeed! Since when, I pray you, has reason presided over human affairs?

Also the following letter from Father Lavelle, a Catholic priest:—

"The Coming War.—All through I bid you be on the look-out for the war-storm of Europe. The cloud is gathering, thickening, and darkening space. The hostile elements may not meet before 1867, but that year, even in spite of exhibitions, and in defiance of all pacific assurances, will not expire without seeing Europe, from the Baltic to the Mediterranean, from the Danube to the Atlantic, enveloped in one sheet of flame. No state or potentate in Europe is content; several are not safe. Prussia will have more, even beyond the rubicon of the Maine. France will rectify herself in any event. Austria must wipe away her disgrace, and be half German still. Russia pants for the heart of the sick man—and, France and England notwithstanding, she will have it. Italy will, as of yore, fall to fragments. The red and the white—Mazzini and Bourbon—will devour her entrails between them. England counts for nothing. She has now neither men nor money, neither an army nor a navy; and there is that Irish thorn in her side, which, in her hour of need, will penetrate to her vitals. Thus a European war, the fiercest ever waged, is an event as certain as the rising sun, and out of that war is the Irish Phœnix to arise, young and beautiful as ever."

Say now, ye tried ones, is all this testimony of no weight? Does it not preponderate heavily to the conclusion that redemption is now immediately to come? Lift up your heads; the heavens are about to reveal the Son of God. W. C. Stone.

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

THE RESOLVING OF SOME QUESTIONS.

For the illustrating of this doctrine, I shall propound these questions—

Ques. 1. Whether a christian may not be sensible of his condition, and yet be contented?

Ans. Yes; for else he is not a saint, but a stoic. Rachel did well to weep for her children—there was nature; but her fault was, she refused to be comforted—there was discontent. Christ himself was sensible, when he sweat great drops of blood, and said, "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me" (Matt. 26: 39); yet he was contented, and sweetly submitted his will. "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." The apostle bids us "humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God" (1 Pet. 5: 6), which we cannot do unless we are sensible of it.

Ques. 2. Whether a christian may not lay open his grievances to God, and yet be contented?

Ans. Yes; "Unto thee have I opened my cause."—Jer. 20: 12. "And David poured out his complaint before the Lord."—Ps. 143: 2. We may cry to God, and desire him to write down all our injuries: shall not the child complain to his Father? When any burden is upon the spirit, prayer gives vent; it easeth the heart. Hannah's spirit was burdened. "I am," says she, "a woman of a troubled spirit."—1 Sam. 1: 15. Now, having prayed and wept, she went away, and was no more sad: only here is the difference between a holy complaint; in the one, we complain to God; in the other, we complain of God.

Ques. 3. What is it, properly, that contentment doth exclude?

Ans. There are three things which contentment doth banish out of its diocese, and can by no means agree with them.

1. It excludes a vexatious repining. This is properly the daughter of discontent. "I mourn in my complaint."—Ps. 55: 2. He doth not say, "I murmur in my complaint." Murmuring is no better than mutiny in the heart; it is a rising up against God. When the sea is rough and unquiet, it casts forth nothing but foam: when the heart is discontented, it casts forth the foam of anger, impatience, and sometimes little better than blasphemy. Murmuring is nothing else but the scum which boils off from a discontented heart.

2. It excludes an uneven discomposure. When a man saith, "I am in such straits that I know not how to revolve or get out: I shall be undone!" head and heart are so taken up that a man is not fit to pray, or meditate, etc.; he is not himself. Just as when an army is routed, one man runs this way, and another that, the army is put into disorder: so a man's thoughts run up and down distracted. Discontent doth dislocate and unjoint the soul; it pulls off the wheels of devotion.

3. It excludes a childish despondency; and this is usually consequent upon the other. A man being in a hurry of mind, not knowing which way to extricate or wind himself out of the present trouble, begins to faint and sink under it. For care is to the mind as a burden to the back,—it loads the spirits, and with overloading sinks them. A despondent spirit is a discontented spirit.

BOOK OF REVELATION.

One reason why this book is not understood, I think, is this: one class are making it too literal; the opposite, too symbolical. The facts are seen only by literally interpreting the work, effect, or character, of the symbol or thing symbolized.

Examples. 1. The four beasts in Rev. 4th are symbols: their song in the fifth chapter is literal.

2. The lamb in Rev. fifth is a symbol: the redemption by his blood is literal.

3. The white horse in Rev. sixth is a symbol: his going forth conquering and to conquer is literal.

4. The red horse is a symbol; but his work in taking peace from the earth is literal.

5. The black horse is a symbol; but the weighing of wheat and barley was literal.

6. The pale horse with his rider is a symbol; but the work of killing was literal.

7. The dragon is a symbol; but his effort to destroy the man-child was literal, as was also his war with Michael, as was also his persecuting the woman.

8. The woman was a symbol; but the man-child brought forth and caught up to God, as was the flying into the wilderness, was literal.

9. The leopard beast was a symbol; but its work in warring on the saints was literal.

10. The two-horned beast is a symbol; but the world wondering is literal.

11. The trumpets are symbols: the effects are literal.

12. The vials are symbols; but the plagues are literal.

13. The dragon of Rev. twentieth is a symbol; but the binding of the devil symbolized is literal; and so on to the end of the chapter. H. Pratt.

BY M. D. W.

In my various readings, I gather up "fragments" that are to me interesting, and I have concluded to transcribe some of them for other eyes beside my own. For this, my first, I will sketch a few facts respecting hymns.—They were originally derived from Dr. Belcher's work on hymns, which he lived long enough to complete, dying a few hours afterward.

He relates one incident in the life of Dr. Moody, of Maine, a very eccentric minister, respecting whom we have heretofore gathered up some "fragments." On one occasion the Dr. called upon his servant John to conduct the singing; but after they were done he said,—

"John, you shall never set the psalm again, for you are ready to burst with pride."

Perhaps poor John is not the only one who has been in like peril.

A gentleman once wrote to a publisher in Boston for a copy of that popular book, "The Ancient Lyre." The order ran thus:

"Please send me the Ancient Liar, well bound."

The publisher replied, "My dear sir, I do not doubt that the devil has been, and still is, in Boston; but it will be difficult to comply with your request, for the reason that Boston influence is so strong in his favor, it will be impossible to bind him."

In 1853, a Boston publishing house got up a Quaker hymn-book, having heard that that large and respectable body of Christians had no hymn-book. One unfortunate circumstance, however, spoiled the sale of the book —that was, Quakers never sing!

The choir belonging to a certain church in the old Granite State, became offended with their minister, and for several Sabbaths absented themselves from worship. At length they returned, and the minister gave out the striking hymn,—

"And are ye rebels still alive?
And do ye yet rebel?"

The hymn beginning,—

"God moves in a mysterious way,"

was composed by Cowper under the following circumstances: He, as it is quite well known, was subject to fits of mental derangement, and on one of these occasions he thought it was the will of the Lord that he should drown himself in the river Ouse, in a particular spot about three miles from his residence at Olney. He employed a coachman who was well acquainted with the spot to drive him thither, but from some cause he lost the way, and was compelled to return. The spell was broken, and the result was the hymn alluded to.

"Jerusalem, my happy home,"

was written by Rev. David Dickson, in the seventeenth century. A few years since, a Presbyterian minister in New Orleans was called to see a dying man, who refused to converse with him on the subject of religion. At last the minister gave up in despair, and walked toward the window singing half unconsciously, "Jerusalem, my happy home." As soon as the dying man heard this, he burst into tears, and remarked that his mother used to sing that hymn, and he immediately began to seek a preparation for that happy home.

The author of

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in christian love,"

was Dr. Fawcett. When quite young, with a rapidly increasing family, he received a call from a large church in London, and accepted the call. His people plead and begged of him to remain, but the wagons were packed, while he and his people wept with the people around. At length his wife exclaimed,—

"O, John, John, I cannot bear this! I know not how to go!"

"Nor I either," said John, "nor will we go. Unload the wagons, and put every thing in its place as before."

On a salary of less than two hundred dollars, he remained among this people till his death. The hymn referred to was written on that occasion.

"Come, thou Fount of every blessing," was composed by the Rev. Robert Robinson. In late years he became somewhat backslidden. One day, as he was riding in a stage-coach with a strange lady, she spoke about this hymn, stating that she had been greatly profited thereby. He burst into tears, and said,—

"Madam, I am the poor unhappy man who composed that hymn many years ago, and I would give a thousand worlds if I had them, to enjoy the feelings I then had."

Some time since, a minister in a large, intelligent congregation, on a bright Sabbath morning, announced this hymn,—

"Savior, breathe an evening blessing,
Ere repose our spirits seal."

He evidently thought it was bed-time.

A certain ex-presiding elder in an Indiana Conference, was about to leave his first circuit, and as his people loved him very much, there was a large crowd out to hear him. He concluded his discourse amid the tears of his congregation, and sat down weeping with them. A good local preacher present arose and gave out the concluding hymn, which he very gravely read thus,—

"Jesus, we lift our souls to thee,
Thy Holy Spirit breathe,
And let this little infant be
Baptized into thy death."

It was not a very apt selection, to say the least.

Not long since, the choir of a very large congregation in our country sang with great gusto, at the funeral of a distinguished man,

"Believing we rejoice
To see the curse removed!"

This was the result of carelessness.

☞ The sweetest music is not in the oratorio, but in the human voice when it speaks in tones of tenderness, truth, or courage.

TRUST IN THE LORD.

Bro. Grant.—The following beautiful and deeply devotional lines are the effusion of one of the Lord's hidden ones, who, we are told, has long been in the furnace of affliction. O that we all might "recognize Christ" more fully in all our afflictions—to lose sight of our sufferings "in the absorbing contemplation of Jesus." HATTIE H——.

"Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways, acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy path."—Prov. 3:5-6.

Yes, I will own thee, blessed Lord,
Oh! choose my path for me,
Whether of pleasure or of pain,
So that it leads to thee.

Should sickness be my daily lot,
I know thy tender care
Will soothe with gentle love my bed,
And give me strength to bear.

My cup of sorrow I will take,
Whate'er that cup may be,
And drink it, Lord, for thy dear sake,
As thou hast done for me.

I could not ask unbroken rest,
While still upon thy side
Marks of the cruel spear are seen,
Jesus, thou crucified.

Thou wilt not open me a door
Thy own feet have not trod;
Oh, there's so much blessedness
In trusting thee, my God.

And there is majesty in pain,
All mystic though it be;
A sweetness pleasure cannot bring,
Bright halo-crowned by thee.

If in my life-path thorns appear,
My feet shall tread them down;
I would not shun one cross of thine—
Behind it lies the crown.

And in its bitterness I prove
Sore though it seem to me,
The preciousness of that dear love
Which leads me, Lord, to thee.

GOLDEN MOMENTS.

Dear reader, if yet out of Christ, you are heedlessly permitting golden moments to pass, never to be recalled. The present moment is a golden moment. Yes, to you it is a golden moment; will you lose it forever? Shall this ere long be your lament?

"All his wooing I have slighted,
While he daily sought my soul;
If my vows to him I plighted,
Yet for sin I broke them all.
Golden moments!
How neglected did they roll."

Listen to that wretched, dying, young man, who exclaimed, "O time! time! how art thou fled forever!" When told of the abode of the blest, said he, "So much the worse—'tis lost! tis lost! A month—O, for a single week! I ask not for years, though an age were too little for the much I have to do."

Hear, also, the exclamation of that dying queen, who had been a gay votary of the world,—"Millions of money for an inch of time!" And, also, a dying man, who uttered these emphatic words,—"Ah! the day in which I ought to have worked is over, and now I see a horrible night approaching, bringing with it the blackness of darkness for ever. Woe is me! When God called, I refused. Now I am in sore anguish, and yet this is the beginning of sorrows. I shall be destroyed with an everlasting destruction."

Golden moments—for ever lost! Careless sinner, lose no more. Repent, obey God now, and improve all present moments as they pass, and then you, also, shall have an eternal crown.

Careless, worldly-minded, fruitless professor, who have only "a name to live," beware! lest you be cut off like a withered branch. "Repent, and do the first works," lest swift approaching judgment scenes shall find you numbered with the "many," whom Christ will not own.

Professing Christian, have you thus far fulfilled life's mission? Can you not recall to mind some friend you neglected to comfort, warn, or admonish; some wanderer to reclaim, or some poor unfortunate heir of sorrow, whom you "passed by on the other side?" Can you not recall times, and precious seasons, when you neglected the "still, small voice," that whispered to you to deny yourself, and take up your cross; to follow Christ through "evil report and good report;" in clouds, as well as sunshine; to banish shame, pride, and the fear of man, and "be ready to every good work?"

Careless professor, the trying day is near. Will you now examine the foundation of your hopes, lest found built upon the sand? Backslider, repent, and return to the only true refuge. "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."

Dear impenitent friend, repent, and turn now from the forbidden paths of sin, of folly, of death. "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found." Seek the path of purity, of holiness, of life eternal. Your way is beset with snares and pit-falls, yet you see them not. Thousands have fallen on your right hand, and on your left, yet you think you are safe. Satan and your deceitful heart are leading you blindly to the whirlpool of destruction, suggesting a thousand allurements to divert your ears and eyes from the point of danger. "Stop, poor sinner, stop and think, before you farther go,"—think for the judgment; for eternity, and begin now to act for the same. "Turn ye, for why will ye die?" Let this golden moment be your time and day of deliverance. Let it not be numbered with the lost. Come now, in all your blindness and unbelief, come just as you are, and now retire to your closet and pray to God for Christ's sake to open your eyes; to grant you the aid of the Holy Spirit, and to have mercy upon you, and blot out all your past transgressions; to cleanse you from all sin, and lead you in the way of truth and righteousness.

Sinner, defer no longer the great work of life. Improve the present golden moment; retire immediately and pray, but never faint; and pray while life remains. Pray, but faint not, though Satan and all the powers of darkness combine against you. Retire and pray, but faint not, though hardness of heart, darkness and blindness, clouds and tempest, are round about you. Retire now and pray, but faint not, "though the blessing tarry long." Wait for it by prayer, and faith, and fasting, if need be. Wait upon God while you have a being, and the blessing will be yours. Improve this golden moment, but faint not; retire immediately, and pray to learn the will of God, and for grace and strength to do it.

Dear impenitent friend, will you now improve this golden moment? Will you now take up your cross? Will you, for the sake of Christ, of immortality, the kingdom of God, and well-being of others around you, the society of saints and angels; for the glory of God, and unfading eternal joys? Will you now take up the cross, and win an immortal crown? Will you now begin by prayer? Will you now retire and begin to pray?

O, sinner, can you withstand Omnipotence? Can thy heart endure, or thy hand be strong, in the day when God shall deal with thee? Shall this be said of you, also?—"They would none of my counsel; they despised all my reproof." Dear impenitent friend, will you improve now this present, passing, golden moment, and faint not, but retire and pray?—and ever thus continue, until prayer shall end in songs of everlasting praise? If you will not, your golden moments, ere you are aware, will soon be numbered, and lost for ever. Sinner, backslider, fruitless professor, whose hopes are built upon the sand, the day of wrath is near; the storm is gathering, and how can you escape if you "neglect so great salvation?"

Remember these few fleeting moments are fraught with life, or death! With eternal joy, or "the blackness of darkness for ever;" with the unfading glories of the redeemed, or to be consigned to the "lake of fire!" Now make your choice, delay no more. The Judge stands waiting at the door. S. L. MANLEY.

STRAIGHTFORWARDNESS ESSENTIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN.

The true standard of christian rectitude is set before us in the sacred command, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye also unto them." How many temptations, not merely to deceit, but to encroachment upon the comfort of others, are here cut up by the root! And how constantly does the inordinate love of self-gratification require to be checked, by remembering this injunction! O, how greatly would the sorrows of this vale of tears be ameliorated, if this were the rule by which christian professors regulated their actions! For it is not merely by actual deceit, and dishonesty, that the catalogue of human suffering is augmented; there are many ways of oppressing, and discomforting, which are practised without remorse by those who, perhaps, would shrink from being guilty of actual fraud. Yet, this species of assault upon the claims of our fellow-creatures, is as much forbidden in the Scriptures as dishonesty; as we learn from the apostle's injunction, "that no man go beyond, or defraud his brother in any matter; because, that the Lord is the avenger of all such." Unless the heart be under the softening influence of divine grace, there must be frequent temptation to go beyond our fellow-creatures, in matters where the laws of the land permit us the right. And, accordingly, we see in the conduct of selfish and covetous persons, how closely they will exact to the uttermost the stipulated labors of those whose services they hire! How unfeelingly will they press for their right, whether of money or work, when, sometimes, through sickness and poverty, neither money nor work can be tendered them, without pain or distress?

What check can be put upon the movements of self-love, in such cases, if the mind be not under the guidance of some principle, more tender and delicate than rigid justice? Blessed be God! He has not only directed us in the Holy Scriptures to do as we would be done by, but he has given us a witness within, which confirms and applies the outward command; and which, when faithfully attended to and obeyed, never fails to lead the mind out of all unkindness, as well as unfairness, in its dealings with others. "My sheep hear my voice," says the blessed Jesus, "and follow me." It is this precious saving voice which always speaks to deliver from evil, which the true sheep are to mind. It is the directing voice which is promised, Isa. 30: 21: "And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left." It is the living law of the Lord specified, Jer. 31: 33: "And I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and will be their God, and they shall be my people." It is the strength-giving spirit spoken of by Ezekiel, 36: 27:—"And I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my statutes and do them." It is that principle, more divine, more lovely, than bare justice, which, when followed, guides out of every obscure, entangling, crooked practice, and which makes the path of the just to be indeed as "the shining light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

And, not only out of all unkindness, as well as out of all unfairness in our transactions with our fellow-creatures, does this divine principle deliver us; but it causes us to "make straight paths for our feet," under any circumstances of common occurrence, wherein self-love is very apt to incline us to leave the straightforward road.

How often, in the journey of life, does the desire of compassing a particular end, furnish a temptation to acts of duplicity? An open letter falling in the way, an opportunity of overhearing private conversation, are of this description; and on occasions commonly so sudden and unexpected as these, where is our help, but in a habit of prompt obedience to that internal guide, whose righteous dictates point, with living light, far, far away from the dark labyrinths into which, in such cases, self-love is prone to enter?

Again, in the instance of meeting with opportunities of taking advantage of others, how precious are the tender checks of the good Shepherd's voice! How frequently do such opportunities occur, wherein, by withholding or misstating the truth, we may induce our fellow-creatures to comply with our wishes! Temptations to take advantage of the ignorance, the imprudence, the necessities, the dependence, the timidity, or the generosity of others, must frequently meet the person whom God has been pleased to endue with the power which riches, talents, and influence of any kind confer. What need, then, that the heart be under the dominion of a sacred and unbending principle of rectitude, to furnish it with a rule of conduct which is fitted for all circumstances, and which shall deliver it from all those mean and unworthy shifts, to which the groveling nature of self-love is never ashamed to stoop. Truly, indeed, the way of the Lord is strength to the upright. Truly, indeed, does he fulfill to those who seek him with their whole heart, that precious promise, "I will cause them to walk by the rivers of water, in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble," and make them know, by blessed experience, that it is "the way of holiness"; and that "wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein."

How often do we stand in need of being refreshed by these considerations, when harassed on the right hand and on the left with the goadings of selfishness, aggravated by the subtlety of Satan, tempting us to the commission of actions which, without being, directly dishonest, we perceive to be unworthy of our christian profession! Who is there that has not experienced these harassings? Who is there that has not, under the impulse of the moment, made some promise, or raised some expectations, which cooler reflection causes him to repent of, as imprudent? And who is there (especially if the matter repented of should come under the denomination of what is called a trifle) but has been tempted to use, if he actually has not used, some false excuse to cover his failure towards his fellow-creature, without much regard to the displeasure of his Creator? How common, for instance, are the most palpable untruths, when it is not easy to be extricated from some invitation, given or accepted! How usual is it for persons, without a blush, to invent motives for their actions, or substitute the ostensible for the real, whenever it suits their worldly purposes; and what serpentine movements will they make use of, to twine themselves out of unpleasant situations, in which their own measures may have been the means of placing them.

But, let there be an habitual consciousness of God's law in the heart, and a custom of bowing to its requirements, and how clean and clear a deliverance it works out of all such difficulties, by simply commanding us to speak and act uprightly; and, when we have made promises or engagements which we can not, or do not wish to fulfil, to bear the humiliation of acknowledging our error, and the shame, or contempt (if such be our portion), which it deserves. And, surely, to the heart which knows any thing of the grace of repentance, and the precious, though sorrowful, fruits which grow in that lowly soil, such humiliation is valuable indeed, compared with the skulking sort of hide-and-seek, the flimsy excuses, and poor pleas, which very proud people sometimes stoop to adopt, to cover their faults.

How sure a guide, also, is a straightforward principle of action in the innumerable cases of embarrassment to pride and covetousness, that will arise from the common circumstance of possessing near relatives and connexions in an inferior rank of life! The man that walks uprightly, has no shuffling contrivances to keep them aloof. If they be poor, he relieves their necessities; if they be worthy, he seeks their society; nor could he find comfort in neglecting their claims, because the accidents of life may have placed him above them in point of outward appearance. The rule he walks by is given forth by him that changeth not. It does not, therefore, vary, and take its direction from the ups and downs of world-views. It has but one end; which is, to cause him to do that which is acceptable in the sight of God; knowing, that such as he is in the sight of God, he only is, be his pretensions what they may. Hence, how decidedly it speaks, when allowed a hearing, upon every point of honesty connected with the discharge of debts; a matter in which so much shuffling and dishonesty is common, that a tradesman will almost be surprised to meet with a customer who will, voluntarily, rectify any error whereby, in selling his goods, he has unconsciously made himself a loser. "I wish every one that deals with me had your principle," was the remark of a tradesman, not long since, to a friend of the author's, upon an occasion of this kind; and then he made the lamentable statement, that it was not only of irreligious characters that he had to complain for want of uprightness in their dealings with him, but even of many that made a more than common profession of godliness.

How distinct and simple are its dictates, in opposition to the mystifications of self-love, when there is a desire to borrow, without any probability of repaying; or, when having borrowed articles, there arises a desire to keep them, in the hope that the lender has forgotten! What an armor of defense, on the right hand and on the left, is it, from the common temptation of seeming to be something, when we are nothing, by pointing us to the straight and simple path of truth; and how does it spare its possessor the ridicule and contempt, which await the lofty pretender to talent, to riches, to connections, or any personal advantage, when his pretensions are found to be "things of nought," and he himself a vain boaster! What "a breast-plate of salvation" is a righteous principle of straightforwardness, when envy, hatred and malice would shoot their arrows against the christian professor; and how secure a defense is provided for that man, in almost every species of trial, who is known to "walk uprightly, and work righteousness, and speak the truth in his heart;" the man whom his bitterest enemy cannot accuse of a low, false, dishonest action; but whose word is his bond, and whose deeds confirm what his words promise! There may be, perhaps, great faults, many backslidings, grievous infirmities, in the character of such an one; but still, "the law of his God is in his heart, none of his steps shall slide." And though the wicked watch, and seek to slay him, yet the Lord will not leave him in his hand, nor condemn him when he is judged. "Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down, for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand."

How entirely does it guard the mind from every temptation to take the advantage, which selfish persons are so apt to use, of flattering the vanity, and practising on the weakness of proud, conceited people, in the hope of turning their folly to some account! How securely does it shield those who are placed in the situation of rulers and instructors, from the shame and humiliation of having to pass by an offence against truth or honesty, lest they should hurt their own wound, and be reminded by the culprit of some similar failures on their own part.

But where should we stop, if we were to attempt to particularize the manifold advantages which an abiding adherence to this principle of rectitude confers? In a word, it is that precious thing, which, like a vein of gold running through the earth of the fallen nature, more especially distinguishes the sincere from the mere nominal christian. It is not difficult to appear religious, but it is difficult to be really so; since it involves a change of heart, which He who searches the heart alone can accomplish: and he effects it only by "turning us from darkness into light, and from the power of Satan unto the power of God."

For the World's Crisis.

NEAR THE END.

To those that remain and are alive, suffer a few words of admonition. If ever there was evidence more at one time than another, since we believed, it is now. For years we have had our eyes on Rome as being the last of the old Roman kingdom, "the fourth beast" (Dan. 7: 23). "The fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron."—Dan. 2: 40. This terrible and dreadful beast, that has broken down and stamped upon such numbers of the holy people, and for so long a time, is now about to make its exit. At the time of the breaking up and taking away of the dominion of that power in the summer of 1792, in France, the clergy became refractory. They had held the people by constraint. The revolution had found them as the enemies of freedom of speech. A vast amount of treasure had been amassed by them; they were drawing great salaries from the public chest; taxes were heavy upon the people.

The purposes of God must be accomplished. He just permitted a scarcity of bread, causing the people to complain about heavy taxes. They were then prepared to discharge those functionaries, who now stood in the way of reform, and with violence they did it. Says the historian, "France was but a slaughter house. A vast number were put to death, and driven into banishment. The immense treasure was confiscated to the nation; and from that day to the present there has been decay on whatever of power there was left." "They shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end."

As I said, our eyes have been upon Rome, to witness its decay. The last reports from there say, "The monetary affairs in Rome are in a very bad state." The clergy are very refractory. They advise Pius IX. to stick by and not leave Rome. The people are borne down with heavy taxes. Seven thousand lazy monks are supported at the public expense. Are not the people situated about as they were in France in the Revolution? "Free Italy!" is the cry all over that land,—freedom from the clerical yoke. Let us now read the following, which to me speaks ominously for the balance of Roman power in Italy:—

GARIBALDI AND HIS VOLUNTEERS.

A correspondent gives the following sketch of Garibaldi's bidding farewell to his volunteers:

"When the principal group of volunteers arrived on the plot of ground before the villa of M. Crispi, the General descended the steps of the principal entrance, and, silence having been obtained, spoke as follows:

'My children—I thank you for the testimony of affection you give me; be certain that my feelings respond to your own. A small number of evil-doers have troubled our satisfaction in at last seeing Italy one and independent. They are inspired by the priests, enemies of the happiness of our country. As long as the priests shall not have been put down, Italy will have neither true liberty nor prosperity. Let us combat these reactionary ecclesiastics, who are at this moment our only enemies.'

Some individuals having then cried out—'Death to the priests!'

'No,' said Garibaldi, with energy, 'death to no one. Free Italy has horror of bloodshed!'

Then, casting an expressive look at the flag of the Roman Volunteers, veiled with black, he continued:

'Romans, you who have gloriously fought by my side during the last campaign, and who cannot yet return to your beloved country, I say to you, have patience! for I hope the year will not pass over without your being able to return to Rome delivered from the odious clerical yoke. Adieu, my children; whether near each other or at a distance, we are still united.'"

Also read what Dr. Manning says of the impending crisis. The Dr. says, "its circumference traverses all nations; its centre is Italy"; "the decomposition of christian (Catholic) Europe is to be accomplished"; "christian (Catholic) unity must give way before national isolation."

The Temporal Power of the Pope.—Dr. Manning, the leading Catholic of England, has issued what might be called a wail over the treaty between France and Italy, which provides for the withdrawal of the French troops from Rome in December next. He says:

"This interval of time, therefore, is full of expectation. There is not a christian power in the world to stay its execution, or to come between the contracting parties in this abandonment of the Vicar of Jesus Christ. The principle of human non-intervention has its full development. Treaties, contracts, engagements, rights of justice, all international laws and obligations have been long ago broken and buried. The powers of Christian Europe looked on in silence. The principle of modern nationalism, after rending asunder the fair political order of the christian world, has reached at length to the order of the christian church. It has for three centuries assailed its unity. It now assails its authority. It rends nations from its body; it now aims at its head. Christendom must be silent because its centre is in Italy. But its circumference traverses all nations, and all are equally near to their common centre. Italian nationalism is more sacred to the statesmen of to-day than the unity and authority of Christendom, or the purity and freedom of the church. The inspirations of the revolution have poisoned their counsels and paralyzed their action. The sacred diplomacy of Christendom is effaced from the laws of nations. Christian unity must give way before national isolation, and the decomposition of christian Europe is to be accomplished. The work of the revolution, that is of society without Christ and without God, is to be supreme."

Read also from an extract of a letter from John Mitchel, a Catholic and a leading reformer, a man of extensive observation of the condition of affairs:

LETTER FROM JOHN MITCHELL.

Paris, Oct. 9th, 1866.

Treaty of peace between Austria and Italy, definitely signed, and "ratified," and solemnized at Florence with a hundred guns and one; cities also, fluttering with flags by day, blazing with illuminations by night. All very fine. But I affirm once more that a general war is brewing in Europe; war more horrible and bloody than Europe has yet seen, which is saying much.

For the present all looks beautiful and balmy. Austrian authorities are this very day delivering up the cities of Venetia into the hands of General Lebœuf, French Commissioner for that purpose, who is appointing the 14th of the month for the plebiscite, or trial by universal suffrage. After the result of that is known, which is not considered doubtful, King Victor Emanuel is to enter Venice in triumph, when the poor Venetians will probably have a high time. Think of it!—as if the last British redcoat had left Dublin, the green flag were flying over Dublin Castle!

All is balmy; a marriage, even, is said to be under negotiation between Prince Humbert, Victor Emanuel's son, heir applicant to the crown of Italy, and an Austrian archduchess. And Palermo is tranquil, illuminating itself loyally, like the rest of the towns; and Garibaldi gone home to Caprera, and his red-shirted volunteers getting disbanded. It is Astræa Redux, and a new age of gold for Italy. Alas! all that is very fine; yet there is not a human being in all Europe who does not see and feel that a tremendous struggle is approaching, and that every one is getting ready for it, out of which mighty agony of 150,000,000 people no "united Italy" will emerge.

It is impossible to believe in this united Italy and her Astræa Redux. She will be mangled and tattered into fragments again, and thrown to the dogs by the hands of her own children, if by nobody else.

And why should there be war in Europe? Where is the necessity that these poor nations should so soon fly at one another's throats again? Where, indeed, and why? When you expound to me the sound reasons for which nations always have gone to war hitherto, then you will be entitled to ask such questions, and pause for a reply. All I can do for you now is to point out the symptoms which demonstrate to every rational being, not that war ought to come, but only that it will come, and that everybody knows it. Reason, indeed! Since when, I pray you, has reason presided over human affairs?

Also the following letter from Father Lavelle, a Catholic priest:—

"The Coming War.—All through I bid you be on the look-out for the war-storm of Europe. The cloud is gathering, thickening, and darkening space. The hostile elements may not meet before 1867, but that year, even in spite of exhibitions, and in defiance of all pacific assurances, will not expire without seeing Europe, from the Baltic to the Mediterranean, from the Danube to the Atlantic, enveloped in one sheet of flame. No state or potentate in Europe is content; several are not safe. Prussia will have more, even beyond the rubicon of the Maine. France will rectify herself in any event. Austria must wipe away her disgrace, and be half German still. Russia pants for the heart of the sick man—and, France and England notwithstanding, she will have it. Italy will, as of yore, fall to fragments. The red and the white—Mazzini and Bourbon—will devour her entrails between them. England counts for nothing. She has now neither men nor money, neither an army nor a navy; and there is that Irish thorn in her side, which, in her hour of need, will penetrate to her vitals. Thus a European war, the fiercest ever waged, is an event as certain as the rising sun, and out of that war is the Irish Phœnix to arise, young and beautiful as ever."

Say now, ye tried ones, is all this testimony of no weight? Does it not preponderate heavily to the conclusion that redemption is now immediately to come? Lift up your heads; the heavens are about to reveal the Son of God. W. C. STONE.

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

THE RESOLVING OF SOME QUESTIONS.

For the illustrating of this doctrine, I shall propound these questions—

Ques. 1. Whether a christian may not be sensible of his condition, and yet be contented?

Ans. Yes; for else he is not a saint, but a stoic. Rachel did well to weep for her children—there was nature; but her fault was, she refused to be comforted—there was discontent. Christ himself was sensible, when he sweat great drops of blood, and said, "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me" (Matt. 26: 39); yet he was contented, and sweetly submitted his will. "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." The apostle bids us "humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God" (1 Pet. 5: 6), which we cannot do unless we are sensible of it.

Ques. 2. Whether a christian may not lay open his grievances to God, and yet be contented?

Ans. Yes; "Unto thee have I opened my cause."—Jer. 20: 12. "And David poured out his complaint before the Lord."—Ps. 143: 2. We may cry to God, and desire him to write down all our injuries: shall not the child complain to his Father? When any burden is upon the spirit, prayer gives vent; it easeth the heart. Hannah's spirit was burdened. "I am," says she, "a woman of a troubled spirit."—1 Sam. 1: 15. Now, having prayed and wept, she went away, and was no more sad: only here is the difference between a holy complaint; in the one, we complain to God; in the other, we complain of God.

Ques. 3. What is it, properly, that contentment doth exclude?

Ans. There are three things which contentment doth banish out of its diocese, and can by no means agree with them.

1. It excludes a vexatious repining. This is properly the daughter of discontent. "I mourn in my complaint."—Ps. 55: 2. He doth not say, "I murmur in my complaint." Murmuring is no better than mutiny in the heart; it is a rising up against God. When the sea is rough and unquiet, it casts forth nothing but foam: when the heart is discontented, it casts forth the foam of anger, impatience, and sometimes little better than blasphemy. Murmuring is nothing else but the scum which boils off from a discontented heart.

2. It excludes an uneven discomposure. When a man saith, "I am in such straits that I know not how to revolve or get out: I shall be undone!" head and heart are so taken up that a man is not fit to pray, or meditate, etc.; he is not himself. Just as when an army is routed, one man runs this way, and another that, the army is put into disorder: so a man's thoughts run up and down distracted. Discontent doth dislocate and unjoint the soul; it pulls off the wheels of devotion.

3. It excludes a childish despondency; and this is usually consequent upon the other. A man being in a hurry of mind, not knowing which way to extricate or wind himself out of the present trouble, begins to faint and sink under it. For care is to the mind as a burden to the back,—it loads the spirits, and with overloading sinks them. A despondent spirit is a discontented spirit.

For the World's Crisis.

BOOK OF REVELATION.

One reason why this book is not understood, I think, is this: one class are making it too literal; the opposite, too symbolical. The facts are seen only by literally interpreting the work, effect, or character, of the symbol or thing symbolized.

Examples. 1. The four beasts in Rev. 4th are symbols: their song in the fifth chapter is literal.

2. The lamb in Rev. fifth is a symbol: the redemption by his blood is literal.

3. The white horse in Rev. sixth is a symbol: his going forth conquering and to conquer is literal.

4. The red horse is a symbol; but his work in taking peace from the earth is literal.

5. The black horse is a symbol; but the weighing of wheat and barley was literal.

6. The pale horse with his rider is a symbol; but the work of killing was literal.

7. The dragon is a symbol; but his effort to destroy the man-child was literal, as was also his war with Michael, as was also his persecuting the woman.

8. The woman was a symbol; but the man-child brought forth and caught up to God, as was the flying into the wilderness, was literal.

9. The leopard beast was a symbol; but its work in warring on the saints was literal.

10. The two-horned beast is a symbol; but the world wondering is literal.

11. The trumpets are symbols: the effects are literal.

12. The vials are symbols; but the plagues are literal.

13. The dragon of Rev. twentieth is a symbol; but the binding of the devil symbolized is literal; and so on to the end of the chapter. H. PRATT.

BY M. D. W.

In my various readings, I gather up "fragments" that are to me interesting, and I have concluded to transcribe some of them for other eyes beside my own. For this, my first, I will sketch a few facts respecting hymns.—They were originally derived from Dr. Belcher's work on hymns, which he lived long enough to complete, dying a few hours afterward.

He relates one incident in the life of Dr. Moody, of Maine, a very eccentric minister, respecting whom we have heretofore gathered up some "fragments." On one occasion the Dr. called upon his servant John to conduct the singing; but after they were done he said,—

"John, you shall never set the psalm again, for you are ready to burst with pride."

Perhaps poor John is not the only one who has been in like peril.

A gentleman once wrote to a publisher in Boston for a copy of that popular book, "The Ancient Lyre." The order ran thus:

"Please send me the Ancient Liar, well bound."

The publisher replied, "My dear sir, I do not doubt that the devil has been, and still is, in Boston; but it will be difficult to comply with your request, for the reason that Boston influence is so strong in his favor, it will be impossible to bind him."

In 1853, a Boston publishing house got up a Quaker hymn-book, having heard that that large and respectable body of Christians had no hymn-book. One unfortunate circumstance, however, spoiled the sale of the book—that was, Quakers never sing!

The choir belonging to a certain church in the old Granite State, became offended with their minister, and for several Sabbaths absented themselves from worship. At length they returned, and the minister gave out the striking hymn,—

"And are ye rebels still alive?
And do ye yet rebel?"

The hymn beginning,—

"God moves in a mysterious way,"

was composed by Cowper under the following circumstances: He, as it is quite well known, was subject to fits of mental derangement, and on one of these occasions he thought it was the will of the Lord that he should drown himself in the river Ouse, in a particular spot about three miles from his residence at Olney. He employed a coachman who was well acquainted with the spot to drive him thither, but from some cause he lost the way, and was compelled to return. The spell was broken, and the result was the hymn alluded to.

"Jerusalem, my happy home,"

was written by Rev. David Dickson, in the seventeenth century. A few years since, a Presbyterian minister in New Orleans was called to see a dying man, who refused to converse with him on the subject of religion. At last the minister gave up in despair, and walked toward the window singing half unconsciously, "Jerusalem, my happy home." As soon as the dying man heard this, he burst into tears, and remarked that his mother used to sing that hymn, and he immediately began to seek a preparation for that happy home.

The author of

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in christian love,"

was Dr. Fawcett. When quite young, with a rapidly increasing family, he received a call from a large church in London, and accepted the call. His people plead and begged of him to remain, but the wagons were packed, while he and his people wept with the people around. At length his wife exclaimed,—

"O, John, John, I cannot bear this! I know not how to go!"

"Nor I either," said John, "nor will we go. Unload the wagons, and put every thing in its place as before."

On a salary of less than two hundred dollars, he remained among this people till his death. The hymn referred to was written on that occasion.

"Come, thou Fount of every blessing,"

was composed by the Rev. Robert Robinson. In late years he became somewhat backslidden. One day, as he was riding in a stage-coach with a strange lady, she spoke about this hymn, stating that she had been greatly profited thereby. He burst into tears, and said,—

"Madam, I am the poor unhappy man who composed that hymn many years ago, and I would give a thousand worlds if I had them, to enjoy the feelings I then had."

Some time since, a minister in a large, intelligent congregation, on a bright Sabbath morning, announced this hymn,—

"Savior, breathe an evening blessing,
Ere repose our spirits seal."

He evidently thought it was bed-time.

A certain ex-presiding elder in an Indiana Conference, was about to leave his first circuit, and as his people loved him very much, there was a large crowd out to hear him. He concluded his discourse amid the tears of his congregation, and sat down weeping with them. A good local preacher present arose and gave out the concluding hymn, which he very gravely read thus,—

"Jesus, we lift our souls to thee,
Thy Holy Spirit breathe,
*And let this little infant be
Baptized into thy death.*"

It was not a very apt selection, to say the least.

Not long since, the choir of a very large congregation in our country sang with great gusto, at the funeral of a distinguished man,

"Believing we rejoice
To see the curse removed."

This was the result of carelessness.

☞ The sweetest music is not in the oratorio, but in the human voice when it speaks in tones of tenderness, truth, or courage.

The Young Pilgrim for Nov. 15th.

"The contents (of the November numbers) of the 'Young Pilgrim' are good. Some of the articles, I think, would be very instructive to 'old pilgrims,' as well as 'young,' especially the one on the Resurrection,—'How can dead men live again?' I wish thousands could have the privilege of reading that one article, who probably will not. I most certainly think such articles worth putting into tract or book form, to be read again and again, by old as well as young.

"If the 'Young Pilgrim,' laden with such precious treasure, could make its visits oftener, even once a week, I think it would find a hearty welcome in every family.

WM. H. MITCHELL."

"Stories for Young Pilgrims."

The following notice of these little tracts for the young, is from the Herald of Life:—

"This is a neat serial, issued by the Adv. Chr. Pub. Soc'y. It comes in numbers of 16 pages, with cover, and has wood-cut illustrations. The numbers we have received are filled with better reading than that usually issued as moral and religious instruction for children. The stories are unexceptionable in character, and must interest and instruct every child in the truths of Scripture.

"Very few writers have ability to present the important matters of religion to young minds in an attractive and simple form without introducing a great deal that is pernicious. 'Uncle Pilgrim' is one of the few exceptions, and is happily endowed with all the qualifications to fascinate and benefit the young mind with his charming stories.

"Parents who have proper regard for their children will seek such reading for them as these little books afford. They may be sure that they will implant in the minds of their dear little ones none but ideas which, while they delight, will also instruct them in the truths of the kingdom and the necessary character to get there.

"If any one feels anxious to do good, and does not know how, let him distribute these little tracts among the children of his neighborhood, and he will find neither parent nor child to refuse them."

"STANDING, LET US PRAY."

From whence comes the practice of standing in prayer? Clearly, I can not answer this question. To claim Bible authority for that posture, may not be in strict propriety with our claims to Bible knowledge. To practice it without the sanction of the Bible, does not harmonize well with our declaiming against humanism in the worship of God. It surely can not be pride that causes some of our able and efficient preachers of the gospel to say, after the congregation has sung the spiritual song, "Standing, let us pray"; for these are good men and humble before God. Now there can be but one way left for us to account for the practice, and that is, to suppose these men have seen something in the word of God that authorizes, or that seems to authorize, a standing posture in public prayer. They may have seen it, yet I have not; and on this account, I will feel indebted to the brother that will bring it forward.

But I am told that the writer has occasionally stood while praying in public, especially in crowded audiences, or where a kneeling posture was not convenient. True enough, but that will not justify it. Though we have practiced as others did around us, without sufficient thought upon the subject, we now stand in doubt of the practice; and on this account we are writing.

I am told that, in the dedication of the temple, Solomon in his prayer "stood before the altar of the Lord in the presence of all the congregation of Israel."—1 Kings 8:22; but in the 54th verse it is said, "he arose from before the altar of the Lord, from kneeling on his knees with his hands spread up to heaven." From which we learn that Solomon stood on his knees before the altar of the Lord. When the decree had gone forth after the order of the Medes and Persians that no man should ask anything of any man or any king but Darius, "Daniel went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed."—Dan. 6:10. The night before the crucifixion of the Master, his disciples having followed him to the Mount of Olives, he withdrew himself from them about a stone's cast, "and kneeled down and prayed."—Luke 22:41. When Peter would heal Dorcas, he "put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed."—Acts 9:40. At Miletus, Paul, having taught and exhorted the brethren, and being ready to depart, "kneeled down, and prayed with them all."—Acts 20:36; and when he had been with the disciples at Tyre seven days, Luke says, "when we had accomplished those days, we departed, and went our way; and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children, till we were out of the city, and we kneeled down and prayed."—Acts 21:5. So much for the practice of inspired men, whose example is good authority.

David says, "O come, let us worship and bow down; let us kneel before the Lord our maker."—Ps. 95:6. And Paul says, "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."—Eph. 3:14. Is it not better to practice as inspired men have taught us and set us an example?—Christian Standard.

Solomon Hale.—Those who wish to write on matters pertaining to the Freedmen's Mission, and the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom in the Southern States, can address Bro. SOLOMON HALE, Boston, Mass., "Crisis Box." He is the Secretary of the Missionary Board, and an earnest christian brother, whose heart beats warmly for Jesus. He is employed as clerk in our office, in the place formerly occupied by Wm. B. Herron.

WHO WILL GO?

Again we ask who will go and carry the glad tidings of the coming kingdom to the freedmen of the South, who are thirsting for a knowledge of the things that have caused us to rejoice greatly in the Lord, and have been like an anchor to hold us in this hour of peril that characterizes these last days? Are there not some who will listen to the Macedonian cry? The Missionary Society will be responsible for their necessary expenses. If any wish to be missionaries, here is a field all white for the harvest. There has been no other such one opened in modern times.

Not only the colored people are anxious to hear, but also the white population. We learn that there is great anxiety to hear on the evidences of Christ's coming. In many places the interest is much as it was at the north in 1842–3. They have never heard the arguments which show very clearly that we are in the last days of the present dispensation. They thirst for knowledge on this subject like men famishing for bread. Their worldly hopes have been blasted by the war, and now they are ready to look at heavenly things. Again we say, who will go with the glad tidings?

Those in the South, who wish for preachers to come among them, will please drop us a line, and we will do the best we can for them.

LOWELL.

We spent the Lord's day, Nov. 4th, with the church in Lowell. We found a healthy state of things. Many new ones are becoming interested in the great truths of the Bible that have been long buried up by the traditions of men. Our hall was very full, and many could not get in. We found an ear to hear. The church is anxious to spread the light, and propose to do so soon, by an extra effort. We think the time has come when all who see the signs of the times as indicating the speedy coming of our Savior, should be doing all they can to awaken the people to this all-important subject. What are all things here when compared with the worth of the coming kingdom, and its "eternal weight of glory?" Let us work in proportion to the value of that which is to be gained.

WAY-SIDE SCENES.

After parting with the dear friends at Woodstock, N. B., at 9½ P. M., we rode some seven miles with a kind christian brother and sister, and had a pleasant nap of an hour and a half, on the floor of a log house. We were urged to take a bed, but chose the floor. We lay down at 12½ and rose again at 2 A. M. It was a bright, frosty morning. In company with the kind Bro. whose hospitality we had shared so briefly, we started for the depot with our baggage, and took the cars at 3 A. M., en route for St. Andrews, a distance of eighty-eight miles.

A FIRE. After we had traveled some miles, we heard the cry of fire! which caused a lively stir among the passengers. We looked out and saw a brilliant light. We soon learned that one of the cars connected with our train was loaded with hay, and had taken fire. The fire car was soon detached from the train, and the engine dashed away with it to the next station, in order to switch it from the main track. It was a rare night scene to see a blazing car rushing along like a blazing comet. We waited between one and two hours, when the engine returned and took us on our journey again.

While waiting, we found Henry C. Wright on board, with whom we had an interesting conversation relative to coming events. He was formerly a Congregationalist preacher, and is a man of strong intellectual powers. He has traveled quite extensively in Europe; has been a noted Abolitionist,—is still, and a bold, out-spoken infidel and Spiritualist. He looks upon Spiritualism as the great reformatory system of religion, that is to introduce the "good time coming."

A STORM AT SEA. At about 10 o'clock, A. M., we went on board the Steamer Queen, at St. Andrews, bound for Eastport, where we took passage on the fine Steamer New England, that runs between Boston and St. Johns, stopping on its way at Portland. We sailed very pleasantly till evening, when the wind began to blow, and we were soon in the midst of the terrible storm of Oct. 29th and 30th. We never had such a tossing on the waters before. The waves dashed over the deck and sported with our noble steamer as with a mere toy. Passengers were groaning and vomiting. It was a night of terror to many. Some sat with their life-preservers all ready for a struggle with the foaming billows. We felt a calm trust in the great Life-giver and preserver, and by his mercy arrived safely in Portland at the dawn of day. We were all glad to be again anchored in a safe harbor. We soon learned that the Captain would not venture to go any farther till the storm abated. Other boats that arrived in Portland the night before, had not dared to face the storm, but remained at the wharf.

We took the cars at Portland for Boston, and arrived in safety, thankful to the Lord for his preserving care in dangers seen and unseen.

"PERISH WITHOUT LAW."

BRO. GRANT:—Will you please give through the Crisis the meaning of Romans 2:12:—"For as many as have sinned without law, shall also perish without law." C. W.

We do not know as we can make the subject any plainer than it is expressed in the language of the Scripture. The passage certainly teaches that some who were not under the law given by Moses, will "perish," because they did not obey "the law written in their hearts." They did not do as well as they could. They did not live up to what light they had received; and had more been given them, they would have treated it in the same way; hence it would have been of no use to have sent them the law of Moses. Those who are disposed to reject a little light, would also turn away from a greater one. Such will "perish without law."

So at the present time. It is not the amount of light and knowledge that makes a man acceptable in the sight of the Lord; but a willingness to follow all the light he may see, and receive all the truth that comes within his reach. If a man is disposed to reject one truth because it is unpopular, he would treat all unpopular truth in the same manner; and if "the present truth" should not be popular, then he would find him arrayed against it. Such an one would be justly condemned, although he was without light and knowledge. The more light and truth man has, the better, if he will only improve it, and use it to the glory of God; but if a man has had a chance to obtain but little, and has improved upon that "one talent," he has done just as well in the sight of the Lord as the one who has "five talents," and improved them; "for if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to what a man hath, and not according to that he hath not."—2 Cor. 8:12.

PREPARATION FOR WAR.

All the great nations of the world are still preparing for war. While they may "say peace," their actions contradict their words. Napoleon often causes notice to be given to the world that he is about to reduce his "army to a peace footing;" which usually means that he is about to increase his military and naval forces; but does not wish his neighbors to know it, lest they become alarmed and make corresponding preparations. If he can succeed in making the world believe that he means what he says, then they will not suspect his designs. But he has deceived so often, many have lost all confidence in his promises; and now expect to see him adopt no measures only such as are calculated to give him more power in the world.

The following item will show his present operations:—

"The great question of the day in France is the reorganization of the French army. The idea of adopting the Prussian system has been abandoned, and the army will continue to be recruited by conscription, but the term of service will be extended to ten years instead of seven as at present. The French soldier will have to give five years of actual service to his country, after which time he will be sent home, but will be liable, nevertheless, to be called upon for five years longer. This system will enable the government to have a reserve of 300,000 men at least at its disposal, with a standing army of 900,000 men. Of sixty generals of division called upon to give their advice on the new project, forty decided in favor of it. The French are very anxious that the Prussians shall not surpass them in military matters, and they hope by the adoption of this new system to be able to maintain their military reputation and to be prepared to cope with any adversaries that may arise."

All hopes of continued peace are vanishing from the minds of observing statesmen. War, war, is the order of the day. As the prophet Joel expresses it "Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near." Joel 1:9. We may expect to see warriors more and more aroused, as we approach the great day of the Lord. Peacemakers are scarce; but the war spirit is pervading all communities, both political and ecclesiastical. Each seems to be struggling for the mastery. Instead of being "subject one to another," each wishes to rule over his brother. This is all unlike the Spirit of Christ. Meekness, gentleness, and long-suffering are seldom seen at the present time. Pride and arrogance are prevailing in all directions to an alarming extent. This results in confusion, strife and war.

AFFAIRS IN ITALY.

Events in Italy are continually progressing towards a terrible conclusion. All eyes are turned to that interesting field that fills a very important part of the prophetic history of the world, especially at the close of the present dispensation. It is very evident that the Roman power is about to fall to rise no more for ever. We are truly living at a sublime period in this world's history.

"Carleton," the special correspondent of the Boston Journal, when writing from Milan, Italy, Oct. 10th, 1866, and speaking of the Candian insurrection, which has been carried forward so earnestly, says:—

"The all-important question is in regard to the funds. Who supplies the money? Not the Candian insurgents most assuredly. They are in the mountains of their island and have no organized government. Besides, they are poor, without any financial chest of their own, much less without francs for disbanded Garibaldians. The Emperor of the French evidently is not engaged in this sort of work; it would be too small game for him; besides, he has no ambition or desire for war. It is not Italy, for she has no quarrel with her neighbor of the Dardanelles. It is not the United States, notwithstanding all Europe is under the hallucination that the great power over the water is very anxious to get a foothold in the Adriatic, and is in close alliance with Russia. What insanity disburses these funds so mysteriously? Here the people jump at a conclusion that Russia is at the bottom of this Candian movement, and that it is but the beginning of untold troubles.

The Roman question is also deepening in interest. The French troops are leaving from day to day. The force which has kept Rome in quiet during these years of the French protectorate number 12,000. The Legion in the service of the Pope, recruited in France, numbers 1800. They have met with a cold reception from the people of Rome, and it is said that they are already discontented. The correspondent of the Milan Gazette, in a letter published yesterday, says that the soldiers have asked that the Archangel Michael, whose figure they bear on the staffs of their standards, may be removed to give place to the eagle of France, and that the request has been denied by the French authorities, who cannot allow the eagles of France to be borne except on French standards. The French soldiers now leaving have good natured conversations with those who are to take their place serving the Pope.... Many are the speculations as to what the Pope will do. The general impression seems to be that he will quit Rome, take refuge in some out of the way place, and stay there till weeping christendom begs him to return."

DEGREES OF PUNISHMENT.

BRO. GRANT:—As there are those at the present time who entertain the idea that there are degrees in the punishment of the wicked, I would like to inquire if you do not understand the Scriptures to teach that what will punish persons for one sin, will also do the same for all sin which they may commit? Yours for truth as it is in Jesus.

A. S. WHITNEY.

There is but one specified punishment for sin, which is expressed as follows:—"The wages of sin is DEATH." All persons will receive either eternal life or eternal death. As death is the capital or highest punishment, it can have no degrees. Jude says Sodom was "set forth for an example" of the manner in which the wicked are finally to be punished. As Peter also says, "Sodom and Gomorrha" were "an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly." In Sodom, the less guilty were not burnt a short time, and the most wicked for a long period; but they were all destroyed alike in one day."

PAUL'S THORN IN THE FLESH.

It has been my opinion for many years, that Paul's buffeting affliction, or Satanic messenger,—the thorn in his flesh, was amaurosis, or a weakness, decay, or loss of sight, caused by paralysis of the optic nerve. I submit the following reasons for this opinion, which in the aggregate are perfectly satisfactory to my mind.

First. This (skolops) thorn was not a mere temptation, but also a bodily disease. He denominates it a "weakness," an "affliction," an "infirmity." The same word (asthenia) which he uses to describe it, is in Acts 29:9 rendered "diseases," and in John 11:4 it is rendered "sickness." It is also used to describe the bodily disease of the woman mentioned in Luke 13:11–16, "Had a spirit of (asthenia) infirmity." And just as in the case of Paul her infirmity, which bowed her down, is said to have been the agency of Satan, verse 16, "the (angelos) messenger, or angel of Satan," "whom Satan hath bound, lo, these eighteen years."

Second. The apostle alludes to his disease in other epistles: 1 Cor. 2:3, "And I was with you in (asthenia) weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling; and in 2 Cor. 11:30, he writes of "the things which concern my infirmities," i. e., asthenia. Also, in Gal. 4:13, he says, "Ye know how through (asthenia) infirmity of the flesh I preached the gospel unto you at the first." We add to this the fact that the Greek astheneo, and asthenees, is generally translated weak, diseased, or sick, e g, Jno. 11:3, "He whom thou lovest is sick."

Third. The acknowledged pertinency and point in the apostle's alluding to his need of healthier eyes, or more perfect sight, in his letter to the church at Galatia, chap. 4:15, "For I bear you record, that, if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me." Why did he measure the perfectness of their love by this reference to the gift of a new pair of eyes, if this were not the very thing he most needed? It is worth while also to observe that Paul makes this reference to his own imperfect vision in immediate connection with a double reference to his "infirmity of the flesh" which (v. 13, 14) as in the Diaglott, was a "trial to him." It appears to me the whole passage points but one way.

Fourth. This apostle at his conversion was struck blind by the dazzling appearance of a bright light from heaven (Acts 9th) and continued three days totally without sight, so that he was unable to see any one, and was led about by the hand by others. This sudden, overpowering, divine light, may have paralyzed the optic nerve of the eyes, and so occasioned, for the time, complete amaurosis. And, though afterwards restored to sight by Cornelius, he may have had common weakness of eyesight given him subsequently, sometimes resulting in that total blindness, or perhaps only partial blindness, as a thorn to goad his natural pride, and keep him humble, lest he become exalted through his abundant revelations. Sometimes amaurosis of this kind is only periodical, coming on suddenly, continuing for hours, or days, and then disappearing. And this brings me to the final argument.

Fifth. Paul originated fourteen of the twenty-one epistles in the New Testament. Of these fourteen, only seven appear to have been written by Paul himself. The other seven, although undoubtedly originating from and dictated by Paul, were taken down (as was Luther's Table Talk) by amanuenses. These seem to have been seven or eight in number, and were the brothers in the church associated with the chief apostle in his travels and labors. In two letters, while others evidently did the principal part of the writing, yet the final salutation was made in the hand writing of Paul, who alludes to the fact exultingly, as if he had performed a pleasing act. Col. 4:18, "The salutation by the hand of me Paul." 1 Cor. 16:21, "The salutation of me Paul with mine own hand." But in Romans 16:22, Tertius expressly and emphatically declares himself to have done the writing evidently for Paul, while in each and all the epistles the great apostle's name is the first word. We can only account for the apostle's writing a part of the epistles and failing to write the others, by supposing that he was afflicted with periodical attacks of blindness, rendering him incapacitated at certain times from holding the pen, which lack was supplied by employing his associates to write for him. In this way God's grace proved sufficient for his needs, God's strength was made perfect in all times of human weakness, and the sainted minister of Christ was led to glory in his infirmities, which, while they humbled his spirit, did not prevent him from accomplishing his mission.

I have never seen a more plausible view of this whole matter, and here rest the evidence, remarking that although others may not be satisfied with this explanation, I have no doubts on the subject as to what constituted Paul's famous "thorn in the flesh."

GEMS FROM RUTHERFORD.—No. 4.

AFFLICTIONS.

As I trust that ye love Christ better than a sinful woman, pass by your daughter and kiss the Lord's rod. Men do lop off the branches of their trees round about, to the end they may grow up high and tall; the Lord hath in this way lopped your branch, in taking from you many children, to the end ye should grow upward like one of the Lord's cedars, setting your heart above, where Christ is at the right hand of God. What is next, but that your Lord cut down the stock after he hath cut the branches? Prepare yourself.

It is your part now to believe, and suffer, and hope, and wait on; for I protest in the presence of that All-discerning Eye, who knoweth what I write, and what I think, that I would not want the sweet experiences of the consolations of God, for all the bitterness of affliction; nay, whether God came to his children with a rod or with a crown, if he come himself with it, it is well. Welcome, welcome, Jesus, what way soever thou comest, if we can but get a sight of thee. And sure I am that it is better to be sick, providing Christ come to the bedside, and draw by the curtains, and say, "Courage! I am thy salvation," than to enjoy health, being lusty and strong, and never be visited of God.

Think, therefore, of the Lord, as of one who cometh to woo you in marriage, when ye are in the furnace; he seeketh his answer of you in affliction, to see if ye will say, "Evens I take him." Give him this answer presently, and in your mind do not secretly grudge nor murmur. When he is striking you in love, beware to strike again; that is dangerous, for those who strike again shall get the last blow.

Be exceedingly charitable of your dear Lord. As there be some worldly friends of whom you will not entertain an ill thought, far more ought ye to believe good always of your dear Friend, that lovely, fair person, Jesus Christ. The thorn is one of the most cursed, and angry, and crabbed weeds that the earth yields, and yet out of it springs the rose, one of the sweetest flowers, and most delightful to the eye. Your Lord will make joy and gladness out of your afflictions; for all his roses have a fragrant smell. Be much in prayer, for at that time your faith kisseth Christ, and he kisseth the soul.

I am persuaded that your Physician will not slay you, but purge you; and seeing he calleth himself the Chirurgeon, who maketh the wound and bindeth it up again (for to lance a wound is not to kill, but to cure the patient), I believe that faith will teach you to kiss a striking Lord, and so to acknowledge the sovereignty of God in the death of a child, to above the power of us mortals men, who may pluck up a flower in the bud, and not be blamed for it. If our dear Lord pluck up one of his roses, and pull down sour and green fruit before the harvest, who can challenge him?

Thank God that Christ came to your house in your absence, and took with him some of your children. He presumed that much on your love, that ye would not be offended; and howbeit he should take the rest, he cannot come upon your wrong side. I question not if they were children of gold, but ye would think them well bestowed upon him. Strokes of a father evidence kindness and care—take them so.

It is true that Antichrist stirreth his tail; but I love a rumbling, or raging devil in the church rather than a subtile, or sleeping devil. Christ never yet got a bride without stroke of the sword. Forward, then, dear brother, and lose not your grips.

It speaketh somewhat, when our Lord bloweth the blossom off our insane hopes in this life, and loppeth the branches off our worldly joys, well nigh the root, on purpose that they should not thrive. Lord, ruin my fool's heaven in this life, that I may be saved forever. A forfeiture of the saint's part of the yolk and marrow of short, laughing, worldly happiness, is not such a real evil as our blinded eyes conceive.

I find it to be most true, that the greatest temptation out of hell is, to live without temptations. If my waters should stand they would rot. Faith is the better for the free air, and for the sharp, winter wind in its face. Grace withereth without adversity. The devil is but God's master-fencer, to teach us how to handle our weapons.

For myself, I am as well as Christ's prisoner can be; for by him I am master and king of all my crosses; I am above the prison, and the lash of men's tongues; Christ triumpheth in me. I have been cast down, and heavy with fears, and hunted with challenges. I was swimming in the depths, but Christ had his hand under my chin all the time, and took good heed that I should not lose breath; and now I have gotten my feet again, and there are love-feasts of joy, and spring-tides of consolation, betwixt Christ and me. We agree well; I have court with him; I am still welcome to his house. O, my short arms cannot fathom his love! I beseech you, I charge you to help me to praise! I defy hell's iron gates!

THE BROKEN-HEARTED.

To be broken-hearted, is to have the spirit depressed or crushed by grief or despair. The causes are many and various. But no matter what earthly ill has produced this sad and wretched state of mind, which so often leads the person who suffers under it to put on smiles externally, for the purpose of hiding the worm that gnaws at the core,—still the love of God furnishes a remedy; and this remedy is the grace of the precious Savior, who, being touched with the feeling of our infirmities, kindly announces himself as a friend ever at hand "to heal the broken-hearted."—Luke 4:18.

The happy results of a close and sacred union with the dear Jesus, amply demonstrate that "earth has no sorrow that heaven cannot cure." Christ gives us power to forget our bitterest griefs, and to rejoice in him, and in the hope of the endless and unalloyed bliss of paradise. All of us are at times subject to seasons of despair of any good, and to seeming brokenness of heart. Even the great apostle, who exhorts us to rejoice evermore, could experience such a pang of grief in parting, as to be ready to exclaim that his heart was ready to burst.—Acts 20:13.

O, how many, like Paul, have thus been sorrow-stricken amid the pangs of the parting hour! But do we, like him, seek for consolation in Jesus, whose mission is to "heal" all such? Come what will, it will be safe to serve and love God to the best of our ability, to the end; and whatsoever we call heart-griefs here, when "this fitful fever we call life" shall have spent itself, and we come to dwell with the Lamb through the endless ages, should the angels then ask us, "Is it well?" we shall be ready to answer joyfully, and without tears, "It is well."

For the World's Crisis.

WHEN YOU KNOW IT, DO IT.

As the time is coming soon to put up your stoves in your meeting-houses, don't put them back by the door, if the desk is opposite. It takes double the fuel and pipe to get the house comfortable; and double the time to heat it. If the stove is back by the door, the congregation will be there in cold weather, and the preacher three or four rods away from the fire; and every time the doors are open, the hot air around the stove will rush out, it being lighter, and the cold air is all back by the desk; but if the stove was near the desk, it would warm that part of the house comfortably for those that the house was built to accommodate; i. e., the church, which always ought to sit near the desk, and will if the stove is there.

Again, when your doors open opposite the stove, the hot air rushes for the door, and before it gets out the door is closed, and you create a circulation of warm air every time you open the doors, and the cold air rushes for the stove and creates a good circulation around the desk. This is philosophical. I have caused this plan to be adopted in six meeting-houses. The churches in Rutland and in Poland moved their stoves, and saved one half of the wood, and made the house more comfortable, and sold some seventy-five feet of pipe, and stopped all the leaking of the pipe, which long pipes will do. In this arrangement, the people back by the door will be much more comfortable than the preacher would with the other. I speak what I do know, and testify that I have seen and tried. I have taken the worst colds I ever had by this foolish arrangement, having the fire in the opposite end of the house; and then been imposed upon and slandered for speaking about it. Now, for the good of all, make this alteration, or get a sexton that will make his fires two hours before meeting time. It takes no more fuel for the day, and is better for all.

Another thing necessary for the benefit of the hearer and speaker. Don't have a light under the speaker's eyes. Some places of worship have nearly all the light on the desk. No man can look over a light and see the people to whom he is preaching; especially if a sharp kerosene lamp is under his eyes. God made our eyes to be below the light; and this generation are spoiling their eyes by using strong, sharp light below them. I put our light on a shelf, above our heads, in the evening.

It is a bad thing to put a sharp light on a table to eat supper by. I have put up shelves in a number of places of worship, especially in school-houses, before I would preach, and the people were all pleased with it. Some people never will learn until pounded, and then find fault. I think of what Bro. Cole said: that a man was not fit for a sexton, until he had been a traveling preacher, and suffered as he had from the negligence or ignorance of sextons in lighting and warming meeting-houses. We are in the days of improvements, and I hope some will improve by these remarks founded on reason and experience.

PEACE IN BELIEVING.

When we obey Christ, and delight in his service, we experience joy and peace beyond the power of language to express. Our path grows brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. To those who are out of the ark of safety, I would say, Are you unwilling to give up the fleeting pleasures of sin, and exchange them for eternal life and joys that will endure for ever? You can never know true peace and joy until you yield and give your heart to Jesus, and learn to love and obey him. There is nothing to be found in this world that can be compared to the pearl of great price; nothing that can be compared to the joy of the christian. While we follow Christ, we see new beauties constantly unfolding, and have such a consolation that brightens our pathway and dispels all our sorrows.

O, I will praise him with my whole heart forevermore, that he has led me into the way of truth and righteousness. I can testify that the ways of this world are bitter and dark and dreary. And the end of these things is death. In following Christ we find life and peace; such peace as the world can neither give nor take away. Pray for me, that I may continue faithful, and endure to the end, and meet you in the kingdom.

THANKS.

While I despise lengthy journals from every little A B and C that may get a hundred miles from home on a preaching tour, I do really feel that many heartfelt thanks, publicly given, are due to God for the happy and blessed seasons which he permitted me to enjoy with the scattered friends of Christ during my recent tour of about five hundred miles. Their attentive ears, hospitable hands and generous hearts, and their joy in the Lord, made me often glad. May the Lord bless them with grace unto eternal life.

REPORT OF THE CONN. ADVENT CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

In compliance to call or notice in the Crisis, the Advent Chapel in Yalesville was dedicated on Wednesday, Oct. 24th. Services commenced at two P. M.; preaching from John 4:19, by Eld. H. L. Hastings. A full house and good time. Met again at seven; preaching by Bro. Hastings, from Titus 2:11. It was good to be there, to learn what the grace of God which bringeth salvation teaches us.

Thursday, nine A. M., met to transact business, closing with a good social meeting. At two P. M., preaching by Bro. S. Curry. This was another blessed time. The Lord blessed and comforted us with his Holy Spirit. At seven, Bro. St. John preached the word.

Friday, eight A. M., met to organize a general conference, to be held in different localities. Appointed a committee of three; viz., Brn. Hitchcock, St. John, and Fisher, to decide where and when to meet next. Bro. St. John was chosen Cor. Sec'y. At ten, Bro. Perkins preached the word. Rich blessings followed. Two P. M., Bro. Rockwell preached from 1 Pet. 1:3. The Lord blessed Bro. R. and the hearers. Evening, preaching by Bro. Hastings, from 2 Thess. 3:5.

Saturday, ten A. M., met for conference and prayer. Two P. M., Bro. Morgan preached. Evening, Bro. B. Hitchcock preached the word as the Lord gave it to him. Full house, and free time.

Sunday, love feast at nine A. M. It was blessed to be there. At eleven A. M., Bro. A. Decker preached. Text, Dan. 7:19, showing very plainly that our Lord will come in 1867. Lord, increase our faith, and prepare us for thy coming and kingdom. At two P. M., Bro. St. John preached from 1 Pet. 3:15, after which we came around the table of the Lord, to commemorate his death and sufferings. At seven, Bro. Fisher preached his farewell sermon. He has labored with us for some time, and been faithful to his Master's work. It was hard to part, but God bless you, Bro.; we hope to meet in the kingdom.

Preaching brethren present:—Elds. H. L. Hastings, S. Curry, B. Hitchcock, H. Rockwell, St. John, H. Perkins, A. Decker, Ira Morgan, C. W. Sargent, W. H. Fisher, O. D. Woodruff. No conflicting elements were present, and it was blessed to be where the comforting Spirit of the Lord was freely given. We are almost home, Brn. and Srs. Let us pray more for each other, that we may have it said of us, "Well done."

Correspondence.

From Bro. Wm. Stuart.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me, through the Crisis, to let my brethren and sisters in the Lord know that I am still in the land of the dying, and have been made painfully sensible of the fact by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism; and I can truly say with David (Ps. 27:13), "I had fainted, unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living." This hope sustains us while we are walking "through the valley of the shadow of death." And although our heavenly Father finds it necessary to use the rod, we know that he does not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men; and while we receive the chastening from his fatherly hand, as a token of his love, we shall find that his love and mercy is a staff to support us in all our afflictions; so that we can say with Job (13:15), "though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." Then our light affliction, which is but for a moment," shall work out "for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while we look at the things which are" as yet unseen; but which we believe will very soon be revealed in all their glory. Then the last wail of the groaning creation shall go up; the last sad evidence of sin and the curse shall be blotted out for ever; and then the people of God shall receive "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning," and the "garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." This is the "blessed hope." Then look up, ye suffering ones. Soon the veil of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man, will be rent in twain, revealing the glory of

The Young Pilgrim for Nov. 15th.

"The contents (of the November numbers) of the 'Young Pilgrim' are good. Some of the articles, I think, would be very instructive to 'old pilgrims,' as well as 'young,' especially the one on the Resurrection,—'How can dead men live again?' I wish thousands could have the privilege of reading that one article, who probably will not. I most certainly think such articles worth putting into tract or book form, to be read again and again, by old as well as young.

"If the 'Young Pilgrim,' laden with such precious treasure, could make its visits oftener, even once a week, I think it would find a hearty welcome in every family.

"Stories for Young Pilgrims."

The following notice of these little tracts for the young, is from the Herald of Life:—

"This is a neat serial, issued by the Adv. Chr. Pub. Soc'y. It comes in numbers of 16 pages, with cover, and has wood-cut illustrations. The numbers we have received are filled with better reading than that usually issued as moral and religious instruction for children. The stories are unexceptionable in character, and must interest and instruct every child in the truths of Scripture.

"Very few writers have ability to present the important matters of religion to young minds in an attractive and simple form without introducing a great deal that is pernicious. 'Uncle Pilgrim' is one of the few exceptions, and is happily endowed with all the qualifications to fascinate and benefit the young mind with his charming stories.

"Parents who have proper regard for their children will seek such reading for them as these little books afford. They may be sure that they will implant in the minds of their dear little ones none but ideas which, while they delight, will also instruct them in the truths of the kingdom and the necessary character to get there.

"If any one feels anxious to do good, and does not know how, let him distribute these little tracts among the children of his neighborhood, and he will find neither parent nor child to refuse them."

"STANDING, LET US PRAY."

From whence comes the practice of standing in prayer? Clearly, I can not answer this question. To claim Bible authority for that posture, may not be in strict propriety with our claims to Bible knowledge. To practice it without the sanction of the Bible, does not harmonize well with our declaiming against humanism in the worship of God. It surely can not be pride that causes some of our able and efficient preachers of the gospel to say, after the congregation has sung the spiritual song, "Standing, let us pray"; for these are good men and humble before God. Now there can be but one way left for us to account for the practice, and that is, to suppose these men have seen something in the word of God that authorizes, or that seems to authorize, a standing posture in public prayer. They may have seen it, yet I have not; and on this account, I will feel indebted to the brother that will bring it forward.

But I am told that the writer has occasionally stood while praying in public, especially in crowded audiences, or where a kneeling posture was not convenient. True enough, but that will not justify it. Though we have practiced as others did around us, without sufficient thought upon the subject, we now stand in doubt of the practice; and on this account we are writing.

I am told that, in the dedication of the temple, Solomon in his prayer "stood before the altar of the Lord in the presence of all the congregation of Israel."—1 Kings 8: 22; but in the 54th verse it is said, "he arose from before the altar of the Lord, from kneeling on his knees with his hands spread up to heaven." From which we learn that Solomon stood on his knees before the altar of the Lord. When the decree had gone forth after the order of the Medes and Persians that no man should ask anything of any man or any king but Darius, "Daniel went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed."—Dan. 6: 10. The night before the crucifixion of the Master, his disciples having followed him to the Mount of Olives, he withdrew himself from them about a stone's cast, "and kneeled down and prayed."—Luke 22: 41. When Peter would heal Dorcas, he "put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed."—Acts 9: 40. At Miletus, Paul, having taught and exhorted the brethren, and being ready to depart, "kneeled down, and prayed with them all."—Acts 20: 36; and when he had been with the disciples at Tyre seven days, Luke says, "when we had accomplished those days, we departed, and went our way; and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children, till we were out of the city, and we kneeled down and prayed."—Acts 21: 5. So much for the practice of inspired men, whose example is good authority.

David says, "O come, let us worship and bow down; let us kneel before the Lord our maker."—Ps. 95: 6. And Paul says, "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."—Eph. 3: 14. Is it not better to practice as inspired men have taught us and set us an example?—Christian Standard.

Solomon Hale.—Those who wish to write on matters pertaining to the Freedmen's Mission, and the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom in the Southern States, can address Bro. SOLOMON HALE, Boston, Mass., "Crisis Box." He is the Secretary of the Missionary Board, and an earnest christian brother, whose heart beats warmly for Jesus. He is employed as clerk in our office, in the place formerly occupied by Wm. B. Herron.

WHO WILL GO?

Again we ask who will go and carry the glad tidings of the coming kingdom to the freedmen of the South, who are thirsting for a knowledge of the things that have caused us to rejoice greatly in the Lord, and have been like an anchor to hold us in this hour of peril that characterizes these last days? Are there not some who will listen to the Macedonian cry? The Missionary Society will be responsible for their necessary expenses. If any wish to be missionaries, here is a field all white for the harvest. There has been no other such one opened in modern times.

Not only the colored people are anxious to hear, but also the white population. We learn that there is great anxiety to hear on the evidences of Christ's coming. In many places the interest is much as it was at the north in 1842–3. They have never heard the arguments which show very clearly that we are in the last days of the present dispensation. They thirst for knowledge on this subject like men famishing for bread. Their worldly hopes have been blasted by the war, and now they are ready to look at heavenly things. Again we say, who will go with the glad tidings?

Those in the South, who wish for preachers to come among them, will please drop us a line, and we will do the best we can for them.

LOWELL.

We spent the Lord's day, Nov. 4th, with the church in Lowell. We found a healthy state of things. Many new ones are becoming interested in the great truths of the Bible that have been long buried up by the traditions of men. Our hall was very full, and many could not get in. We found an ear to hear. The church is anxious to spread the light, and propose to do so soon, by an extra effort. We think the time has come when all who see the signs of the times as indicating the speedy coming of our Savior, should be doing all they can to awaken the people to this all-important subject. What are all things here when compared with the worth of the coming kingdom, and its "eternal weight of glory?" Let us work in proportion to the value of that which is to be gained.

WAY-SIDE SCENES.

After parting with the dear friends at Woodstock, N. B., at 9½ P. M., we rode some seven miles with a kind christian brother and sister, and had a pleasant nap of an hour and a half, on the floor of a log house. We were urged to take a bed, but chose the floor. We lay down at 12½ and rose again at 2 A. M. It was a bright, frosty morning. In company with the kind Bro. whose hospitality we had shared so briefly, we started for the depot with our baggage, and took the cars at 3 A. M., en route for St. Andrews, a distance of eighty-eight miles.

A FIRE. After we had traveled some miles, we heard the cry of fire! which caused a lively stir among the passengers. We looked out and saw a brilliant light. We soon learned that one of the cars connected with our train was loaded with hay, and had taken fire. The fire car was soon detached from the train, and the engine dashed away with it to the next station, in order to switch it from the main track. It was a rare night scene to see a blazing car rushing along like a blazing comet. We waited between one and two hours, when the engine returned and took us on our journey again.

While waiting, we found Henry C. Wright on board, with whom we had an interesting conversation relative to coming events. He was formerly a Congregationalist preacher, and is a man of strong intellectual powers. He has traveled quite extensively in Europe; has been a noted Abolitionist,— is still, and a bold, out-spoken infidel and Spiritualist. He looks upon Spiritualism as the great reformatory system of religion, that is to introduce the "good time coming."

A STORM AT SEA. At about 10 o'clock, A. M., we went on board the Steamer Queen, at St. Andrews, bound for Eastport, where we took passage on the fine Steamer New England, that runs between Boston and St. Johns, stopping on its way at Portland. We sailed very pleasantly till evening, when the wind began to blow, and we were soon in the midst of the terrible storm of Oct. 29th and 30th. We never had such a tossing on the waters before. The waves dashed over the deck and sported with our noble steamer as with a mere toy. Passengers were groaning and vomiting. It was a night of terror to many. Some sat with their life-preservers all ready for a struggle with the foaming billows. We felt a calm trust in the great Life-giver and preserver, and by his mercy arrived safely in Portland at the dawn of day. We were all glad to be again anchored in a safe harbor. We soon learned that the Captain would not venture to go any further till the storm abated. Other boats that arrived in Portland the night before, had not dared to face the storm, but remained at the wharf.

We took the cars at Portland for Boston, and arrived in safety, thankful to the Lord for his preserving care in dangers seen and unseen.

"PERISH WITHOUT LAW."

BRO. GRANT:—Will you please give through the Crisis the meaning of Romans 2: 12:—"For as many as have sinned without law, shall also perish without law." C. W.

We do not know as we can make the subject any plainer than it is expressed in the language of the Scripture. The passage certainly teaches that some who were not under the law given by Moses, will "perish," because they did not obey "the law written in their hearts." They did not do as well as they could. They did not live up to what light they had received; and had more been given them, they would have treated it in the same way; hence it would have been of no use to have sent them the law of Moses. Those who are disposed to reject a little light, would also turn away from a greater one. Such will "perish without law."

So at the present time. It is not the amount of light and knowledge that makes a man acceptable in the sight of the Lord; but a willingness to follow all the light he may see, and receive all the truth that comes within his reach. If a man is disposed to reject one truth because it is unpopular, he would treat all unpopular truth in the same manner; and if "the present truth" should not be popular, then he would find him arrayed against it. Such an one would be justly condemned, although he was without light and knowledge. The more light and truth man has, the better, if he will only improve it, and use it to the glory of God; but if a man has had a chance to obtain but little, and has improved upon that "one talent," he has done just as well in the sight of the Lord as the one who has "five talents," and improved them; "for if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to what a man hath, and not according to that he hath not."—2 Cor. 8: 12.

PREPARATION FOR WAR.

All the great nations of the world are still preparing for war. While they may "say peace," their actions contradict their words. Napoleon often causes notice to be given to the world that he is about to reduce his "army to a peace footing;" which usually means that he is about to increase his military and naval forces; but does not wish his neighbors to know it, lest they become alarmed and make corresponding preparations. If he can succeed in making the world believe that he means what he says, then they will not suspect his designs. But he has deceived so often, many have lost all confidence in his promises; and now expect to see him adopt no measures only such as are calculated to give him more power in the world.

The following item will show his present operations:—

"The great question of the day in France is the reorganization of the French army. The idea of adopting the Prussian system has been abandoned, and the army will continue to be recruited by conscription, but the term of service will be extended to ten years instead of seven as at present. The French soldier will have to give five years of actual service to his country, after which time he will be sent home, but will be liable, nevertheless, to be called upon for five years longer. This system will enable the government to have a reserve of 300,000 men at least at its disposal, with a standing army of 900,000 men. Of sixty generals of division called upon to give their advice on the new project, forty decided in favor of it. The French are very anxious that the Prussians shall not surpass them in military matters, and they hope by the adoption of this new system to be able to maintain their military reputation and to be prepared to cope with any adversaries that may arise."

All hopes of continued peace are vanishing from the minds of observing statesmen. War, war, is the order of the day. As the prophet Joel expresses it "Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near." Joel 1: 9. We may expect to see warriors more and more aroused, as we approach the great day of the Lord. Peacemakers are scarce; but the war spirit is pervading all communities, both political and ecclesiastical. Each seems to be struggling for the mastery. Instead of being "subject one to another," each wishes to rule over his brother. This is all unlike the Spirit of Christ. Meekness, gentleness, and long-suffering are seldom seen at the present time. Pride and arrogance are prevailing in all directions to an alarming extent. This results in confusion, strife and war.

AFFAIRS IN ITALY.

Events in Italy are continually progressing towards a terrible conclusion. All eyes are turned to that interesting field that fills a very important part of the prophetic history of the world, especially at the close of the present dispensation. It is very evident that the Roman power is about to fall to rise no more for ever. We are truly living at a sublime period in this world's history.

"Carleton," the special correspondent of the Boston Journal, when writing from Milan, Italy, Oct. 10th, 1866, and speaking of the Candian insurrection, which has been carried forward so earnestly, says:—

"The all-important question is in regard to the funds. Who supplies the money? Not the Candian insurgents most assuredly. They are in the mountains of their island and have no organized government. Besides, they are poor, without any financial chest of their own, much less without francs for disbanded Garibaldians. The Emperor of the French evidently is not engaged in this sort of work; it would be too small game for him; besides, he has no ambition or desire for war. It is not Italy, for she has no quarrel with her neighbor of the Dardanelles. It is not the United States, notwithstanding all Europe is under the hallucination that the great power over the water is very anxious to get a foothold in the Adriatic, and is in close alliance with Russia. What treasury disburses these funds so mysteriously? Here the people jump at a conclusion that Russia is at the bottom of this Candian movement, and that it is but the beginning of untold troubles.

The Roman question is also deepening in interest. The French troops are leaving from day to day. The force which has kept Rome in quiet during these years of the French protectorate number 12,000. The Legion in the service of the Pope, recruited in France, numbers 1000. They have met with a cold reception from the people of Rome, and it is said that they are already discontented. The correspondent of the Milan Gazette, in a letter published yesterday, says that the soldiers have asked that the Archangel Michael, whose figure they bear on the staffs of their standards, may be removed to give place to the eagle of France, and that the request has been denied by the French authorities, who cannot allow the eagles of France to be borne except on French standards. The French soldiers now leaving have good natured conversations with those who are to take their place serving the Pope.... Many are the speculations as to what the Pope will do. The general impression seems to be that he will quit Rome, take refuge in some out of the way place, and stay there till weeping christendom begs him to return."

DEGREES OF PUNISHMENT.

BRO. GRANT:—As there are those at the present time who entertain the idea that there are degrees in the punishment of the wicked, I would like to inquire if you do not understand the Scriptures to teach that what will punish persons for one sin, will also do the same for all sin which they may commit? Yours for truth as it is in Jesus.

A. S. WHITNEY.

There is but one specified punishment for sin, which is expressed as follows:—"The wages of sin is DEATH." All persons will receive either eternal life or eternal death. As death is the capital or highest punishment, it can have no degrees. Jude says Sodom was "set forth for an example" of the manner in which the wicked are finally to be punished. As Peter also says, "Sodom and Gomorrha" were "an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly." In Sodom, the less guilty were not burnt a short time, and the most wicked for a long period; but they were all destroyed alike in one day."

CORRECTIONS.—In W. H. Ball's communication in Crisis of Oct. 24th, in extract from D'Aubigne, for "1898" read 1498. · Also, in his communication of Oct. 31st, second column, fourth paragraph, last line, for "morning" read evening.

PAUL'S THORN IN THE FLESH.

It has been my opinion for many years, that Paul's buffeting affliction, or Satanic messenger,—the thorn in his flesh, was amaurosis, or a weakness, decay, or loss of sight, caused by paralysis of the optic nerve. I submit the following reasons for this opinion, which in the aggregate are perfectly satisfactory to my mind.

First. This (skolops) thorn was not a mere temptation, but also a bodily disease. He denominates it a "weakness," an "affliction," an "infirmity." The same word (asthenia) which he uses to describe it, is in Acts 29: 9 rendered "diseases," and in John 11: 4 it is rendered "sickness." It is also used to describe the bodily disease of the woman mentioned in Luke 13: 11–16, "Had a spirit of (asthenia) infirmity." And just as in the case of Paul her infirmity, which bowed her down, is said to have been the agency of Satan, verse 16, "the (angelos) messenger, or angel of Satan," "whom Satan hath bound, lo, these eighteen years."

Second. The apostle alludes to his disease in other epistles: 1 Cor. 2: 3, "And I was with you in (asthenia) weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling; and in 2 Cor. 11: 30, he writes of "the things which concern my infirmities," i. e., asthenia. Also, in Gal. 4: 13, he says, "Ye know how through (asthenia) infirmity of the flesh I preached the gospel unto you at the first." We add to this the fact that the Greek astheneo, and asthenees, is generally translated weak, diseased, or sick, e g, Jno. 11: 3, "He whom thou lovest is sick."

Third. The acknowledged pertinency and point in the apostle's alluding to his need of healthier eyes, or more perfect sight, in his letter to the church at Galatia, chap. 4: 15, "For I bear you record, that, if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me." Why did he measure the perfectness of their love by this reference to the gift of a new pair of eyes, if this were not the very thing he most needed? It is worth while also to observe that Paul makes this reference to his own imperfect vision in immediate connection with a double reference to his "infirmity of the flesh" which (v. 13, 14) as in the Diaglott, was a "trial to him." It appears to me the whole passage points but one way.

Fourth. This apostle at his conversion was struck blind by the dazzling appearance of a bright light from heaven (Acts 9th) and continued three days totally without sight, so that he was unable to see any one, and was led about by the hand by others. This sudden, overpowering, divine light, may have paralyzed the optic nerve of the eyes, and so occasioned, for the time, complete amaurosis. And, though afterwards restored to sight by Cornelius, he may have had common weakness of eyesight given him subsequently, sometimes resulting in that total blindness, or perhaps only partial blindness, as a thorn to goad his natural pride, and keep him humble, lest he become exalted through his abundant revelations. Sometimes amaurosis of this kind is only periodical, coming on suddenly, continuing for hours, or days, and then disappearing. And this brings me to the final argument.

Fifth. Paul originated fourteen of the twenty-one epistles in the New Testament. Of these fourteen, only seven appear to have been written by Paul himself. The other seven, although undoubtedly originating from and dictated by Paul, were taken down (as was Luther's Table Talk) by amanuenses. These seem to have been seven or eight in number, and were the brothers in the church associated with the chief apostle in his travels and labors. In two letters, while others evidently did the principal part of the writing, yet the final salutation was made in the hand writing of Paul, who alludes to the fact exultingly, as if he had performed a pleasing act. Col. 4: 18, "The salutation by the hand of me Paul." 1 Cor. 16: 21, "The salutation of me Paul with mine own hand." But in Romans 16: 22, Tertius expressly and emphatically declares himself to have done the writing evidently for Paul, while in each and all the epistles the great apostle's name is the first word. We can only account for the apostle's writing a part of the epistles and failing to write the others, by supposing that he was afflicted with periodical attacks of blindness, rendering him incapacitated at certain times from holding the pen, which lack was supplied by employing his associates to write for him. In this way God's grace proved sufficient for his needs, God's strength was made perfect in all times of human weakness, and the sainted minister of Christ was led to glory in his infirmities, which, while they humbled his spirit, did not prevent him from accomplishing his mission.

I have never seen a more plausible view of this whole matter, and here rest the evidence, remarking that although others may not be satisfied with this explanation, I have no doubts on the subject as to what constituted Paul's famous "thorn in the flesh."

GEMS FROM RUTHERFORD.—No. 4.

AFFLICTIONS.

As I trust that ye love Christ better than a sinful woman, pass by your daughter and kiss the Lord's rod. Men do lop off the branches of their trees round about, to the end they may grow up high and tall; the Lord hath in this way lopped your branch, in taking from you many children, to the end ye should grow upward like one of the Lord's cedars, setting your heart above, where Christ is at the right hand of God. What is next, but that your Lord cut down the stock after he hath cut the branches? Prepare yourself.

It is your part now to believe, and suffer, and hope, and wait on; for I protest in the presence of that All-discerning Eye, who knoweth what I write, and what I think, that I would not want the sweet experiences of the consolations of God, for all the bitterness of affliction; nay, whether God came to his children with a rod or with a crown, if he come himself with it, it is well. Welcome, welcome, Jesus, what way soever thou comest, if we can but get a sight of thee. And sure I am that it is better to be sick, providing Christ come to the bedside, and draw by the curtains, and say, "Courage! I am thy salvation," than to enjoy health, being lusty and strong, and never be visited of God.

Think, therefore, of the Lord, as of one who cometh to woo you in marriage, when ye are in the furnace; he seeketh his answer of you in affliction, to see if ye will say, "Evens I take him." Give him this answer presently, and in your mind do not secretly grudge nor murmur. When he is striking you in love, beware to strike again; that is dangerous, for those who strike again shall get the last blow.

Be exceedingly charitable of your dear Lord. As there be some worldly friends of whom you will not entertain an ill thought, far more ought ye to believe good always of your dear Friend, that lovely, fair person, Jesus Christ. The thorn is one of the most cursed, and angry, and crabbed weeds that the earth yields, and yet out of it springs the rose, one of the sweetest flowers, and most delightful to the eye. Your Lord will make joy and gladness out of your afflictions; for all his roses have a fragrant smell. Be much in prayer, for at that time your faith kisseth Christ, and he kisseth the soul.

I am persuaded that your Physician will not slay you, but purge you; and seeing he calleth himself the Chirurgeon, who maketh the wound and bindeth it up again (for to lance a wound is not to kill, but to cure the patient), I believe that faith will teach you to kiss a striking Lord, and so to acknowledge the sovereignty of God in the death of a child, to above the power of us mortals men, who may pluck up a flower in the bud, and not be blamed for it. If our dear Lord pluck up one of his roses, and pull down sour and green fruit before the harvest, who can challenge him?

Thank God that Christ came to your house in your absence, and took with him some of your children. He presumed that much on your love, that ye would not be offended; and howbeit he should take the rest, he cannot come upon your wrong side. I question not if they were children of gold, but ye would think them well bestowed upon him. Strokes of a father evidence kindness and care—take them so.

It is true that Antichrist stirreth his tail; but I love a rumbling, or raging devil in the church rather than a subtile, or sleeping devil. Christ never yet got a bride without stroke of the sword. Forward, then, dear brother, and lose not your grips.

It speaketh somewhat, when our Lord bloweth the blossom off our insane hopes in this life, and loppeth the branches off our worldly joys, well nigh the root, on purpose that they should not thrive. Lord, ruin my fool's heaven in this life, that I may be saved for ever. A forfeiture of the saint's part of the yolk and marrow of short, laughing, worldly happiness, is not such a real evil as our blinded eyes conceive.

I find it to be most true, that the greatest temptation out of hell is, to live without temptations. If my waters should stand they would rot. Faith is the better for the free air, and for the sharp, winter wind in its face. Grace withereth without adversity. The devil is but God's master-fencer, to teach us how to handle our weapons.

For myself, I am as well as Christ's prisoner can be; for by him I am master and king of all my crosses; I am above the prison, and the lash of men's tongues; Christ triumpheth in me. I have been cast down, and heavy with fears, and hunted with challenges. I was swimming in the depths, but Christ had his hand under my chin all the time, and took good heed that I should not lose breath; and now I have gotten my feet again, and there are love-feasts of joy, and spring-tides of consolation, betwixt Christ and me. We agree well; I have court with him; I am still welcome to his house. O, my short arms cannot fathom his love! I beseech you, I charge you to help me to praise! I defy hell's iron gates!

THE BROKEN-HEARTED.

To be broken-hearted, is to have the spirit depressed or crushed by grief or despair. The causes are many and various. But no matter what earthly ill has produced this sad and wretched state of mind, which so often leads the person who suffers under it to put on smiles externally, for the purpose of hiding the worm that gnaws at the core,—still the love of God furnishes a remedy; and this remedy is the grace of the precious Savior, who, being touched with the feeling of our infirmities, kindly announces himself as a friend ever at hand "to heal the broken-hearted."—Luke 4: 18.

The happy results of a close and sacred union with the dear Jesus, amply demonstrate that "earth has no sorrow that heaven cannot cure." Christ gives us power to forget our bitterest griefs, and to rejoice in him, and in the hope of the endless and unalloyed bliss of paradise. All of us are at times subject to seasons of despair of any good, and to seeming brokenness of heart. Even the great apostle, who exhorts us to rejoice evermore, could experience such a pang of grief in parting, as to be ready to exclaim that his heart was ready to burst.—Acts 20: 13.

O, how many, like Paul, have thus been sorrow-stricken amid the pangs of the parting hour! But do we, like him, seek for consolation in Jesus, whose mission is to "heal" all such? Come what will, it will be safe to serve and love God to the best of our ability, to the end; and whatsoever we call heart-griefs here, when "this fitful fever we call life" shall have spent itself, and we come to dwell with the Lamb through the endless ages, should the angels then ask us, "Is it well?" we shall be ready to answer joyfully, and without tears, "It is well."

For the World's Crisis.

WHEN YOU KNOW IT, DO IT.

As the time is coming soon to put up your stoves in your meeting-houses, don't put them back by the door, if the desk is opposite. It takes double the fuel and pipe to get the house comfortable; and double the time to heat it. If the stove is back by the door, the congregation will be there in cold weather, and the preacher three or four rods away from the fire; and every time the doors are open, the hot air around the stove will rush out, it being lighter, and the cold air is all back by the desk; but if the stove was near the desk, it would warm that part of the house comfortably for those that the house was built to accommodate; i. e., the church, which always ought to sit near the desk, and will if the stove is there.

Again, when your doors open opposite the stove, the hot air rushes for the door, and before it gets out the door is closed, and you create a circulation of warm air every time you open the doors, and the cold air rushes for the stove and creates a good circulation around the desk. This is philosophical. I have caused this plan to be adopted in six meeting-houses. The churches in Rutland and in Poland moved their stoves, and saved one half of the wood, and made the house more comfortable, and sold some seventy-five feet of pipe, and stopped all the leaking of the pipe, which long pipes will do. In this arrangement, the people back by the door will be much more comfortable than the preacher would with the other. I speak what I do know, and testify that I have seen and tried. I have taken the worst colds I ever had by this foolish arrangement, having the fire in the opposite end of the house; and then been imposed upon and slandered for speaking about it. Now, for the good of all, make this alteration, or get a sexton that will make his fires two hours before meeting time. It takes no more fuel for the day, and is better for all.

Another thing necessary for the benefit of the hearer and speaker. Don't have a light under the speaker's eyes. Some places of worship have nearly all the light on the desk. No man can look over a light and see the people to whom he is preaching; especially if a sharp kerosene lamp is under his eyes. God made our eyes to be below the light; and this generation are spoiling their eyes by using strong, sharp light below them. I put our light on a shelf, above our heads, in the evening.

It is a bad thing to put a sharp light on a table to eat supper by. I have put up shelves in a number of places of worship, especially in school-houses, before I would preach, and the people were all pleased with it. Some people never will learn until pounded, and then find fault. I think of what Bro. Cole said: that a man was not fit for a sexton, until he had been a traveling preacher, and suffered as he had from the negligence or ignorance of sextons in lighting and warming meeting-houses. We are in the days of improvements, and I hope some will improve by these remarks founded on reason and experience.

PEACE IN BELIEVING.

When we obey Christ, and delight in his service, we experience joy and peace beyond the power of language to express. Our path grows brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. To those who are out of the ark of safety, I would say, Are you unwilling to give up the fleeting pleasures of sin, and exchange them for eternal life and joys that will endure for ever? You can never know true peace and joy until you yield and give your heart to Jesus, and learn to love and obey him. There is nothing to be found in this world that can be compared to the pearl of great price; nothing that can be compared to the joy of the christian. While we follow Christ, we see new beauties constantly unfolding, and have such a consolation that brightens our pathway and dispels all our sorrows.

O, I will praise him with my whole heart forevermore, that he has led me into the way of truth and righteousness. I can testify that the ways of this world are bitter and dark and dreary. And the end of these things is death. In following Christ we find life and peace; such peace as the world can neither give nor take away. Pray for me, that I may continue faithful, and endure to the end, and meet you in the kingdom.

THANKS.

While I despise lengthy journals from every little A B and C that may get a hundred miles from home on a preaching tour, I do really feel that many heartfelt thanks, publicly given, are due to God for the happy and blessed seasons which he permitted me to enjoy with the scattered friends of Christ during my recent tour of about five hundred miles. Their attentive ears, hospitable hands and generous hearts, and their joy in the Lord, made me often glad. May the Lord bless them with grace unto eternal life.

REPORT OF THE CONN. ADVENT CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

In compliance to call or notice in the Crisis, the Advent Chapel in Yalesville was dedicated on Wednesday, Oct. 24th. Services commenced at two P. M.; preaching from John 4: 19, by Eld. H. L. Hastings. A full house and good time. Met again at seven; preaching by Bro. Hastings, from Titus 2: 11. It was good to be there, to learn what the grace of God which bringeth salvation teaches us.

Thursday, nine A. M., met to transact business, closing with a good social meeting. At two P. M., preaching by Bro. S. Curry. This was another blessed time. The Lord blessed and comforted us with his Holy Spirit. At seven, Bro. St. John preached the word.

Friday, eight A. M., met to organize a general conference, to be held in different localities. Appointed a committee of three; viz., Brn. Hitchcock, St. John, and Fisher, to decide where and when to meet next. Bro. St. John was chosen Cor. Sec'y. At ten, Bro. Perkins preached the word. Rich blessings followed. Two P. M., Bro. Rockwell preached from 1 Pet. 1: 3. The Lord blessed Bro. R. and the hearers. Evening, preaching by Bro. Hastings, from 2 Thess. 3: 5.

Saturday, ten A. M., met for conference and prayer. Two P. M., Bro. Morgan preached. Evening, Bro. B. Hitchcock preached the word as the Lord gave it to him. Full house, and free time.

Sunday, love feast at nine A. M. It was blessed to be there. At eleven A. M., Bro. A. Decker preached. Text, Dan. 7: 19, showing very plainly that our Lord will come in 1867. Lord, increase our faith, and prepare us for thy coming and kingdom. At two P. M., Bro. St. John preached from 1 Pet. 3: 15, after which we came around the table of the Lord, to commemorate his death and sufferings. At seven, Bro. Fisher preached his farewell sermon. He has labored with us for some time, and been faithful to his Master's work. It was hard to part, but God bless you, Bro.; we hope to meet in the kingdom.

Preaching brethren present:—Elds. H. L. Hastings, S. Curry, B. Hitchcock, H. Rockwell, St. John, H. Perkins, A. Decker, Ira Morgan, C. W. Sargent, W. H. Fisher, O. D. Woodruff. No conflicting elements were present, and is was blessed to be where the comforting Spirit of the Lord was freely given. We are almost home, Brn. and Srs. Let us pray more for each other, that we may have it said of us, "Well done."

Correspondence.

From Bro. Wm. Stuart.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me, through the Crisis, to let my brethren and sisters in the Lord know that I am still in the land of the dying, and have been made painfully sensible of the fact by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism; and I can truly say with David (Ps. 27: 13), "I had fainted, unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living." This hope sustains us while we are walking "through the valley of the shadow of death." And although our heavenly Father finds it necessary to use the rod, we know that he does not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men; and while we receive the chastening from his fatherly hand, as a token of his love, we shall find that his love and mercy is a staff to support us in all our afflictions; so that we can say with Job (13: 15), "though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." Then our light affliction, which is but for a moment," shall work out "for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while we look at the things which are" as yet unseen; but which we believe will very soon be revealed in all their glory. Then the last wail of the groaning creation shall go up; the last sad evidence of sin and the curse shall be blotted out for ever; and then the people of God shall receive "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning," and the "garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." This is the "blessed hope." Then look up, ye suffering ones. Soon the veil of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man, will be rent in twain, revealing the glory of our coming King, to give eternal life to his people.

But as we are yet united by the strong ties of natural affection to our children and friends, many of whom are careless and unconcerned, the sad thought comes up, that it will be a day of eternal separation. Then, how many dear ones, who have lent a deaf ear to the prayers, tears and entreaties of parents and friends, will have to take up the sad lamentation, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved." And while they gaze for the last time on those faces, radiant with the light of life, the overwhelming conviction will break upon every impenitent heart, We are lost, lost, lost for ever! O! our Father in heaven, help us to be consistent in all things, that we may not be stumbling blocks in the way.

And now in conclusion, dear brethren and sisters, through the mercy of our God, I am recovering rapidly; and I expect in a few weeks to be able to rejoin my brethren in proclaiming the last message of mercy, the last warning to a careless world. My first appointment will be in 24th St. Chapel, New York; then I will fill those appointments which I was compelled to withdraw on account of sickness, if it be in the order of divine providence. May the Lord by his Spirit guide us into the path of duty, and give us dispositions to obey him, whether it be in doing or in suffering his holy will. Yours in the hope of speedy redemption,

WILLIAM STUART.

From Bro. I. Damman.

BRO. GRANT:—It has become my delightful duty to say, in behalf of the cause of God, that the truth of Jesus was never more precious than at the present. Our conference, held at Levant, in September, has resulted in much good. Quite a number made a start for eternal life at that meeting. The week following, we held a meeting in Hermon, which commenced on Saturday morning, and continued over the Lord's day. In that short series of meetings quite a number of backsliders came out into gospel liberty. There and then the work took a new impulse, and has been going on ever since. On one Lord's day we baptized two. One week ago we baptized five more. Next Lord's day it is expected that a number more will go forward in the same ordinance.

The signs are yet good for the spreading glory of God in the conversion of souls. The interest is still good in Levant. Now and then one is tearing away from the snare of Satan. The brethren there are much encouraged to do all they can to save souls. Praise God, my dear brethren, that the Lord Jesus counts me worthy, through much grace, to have a part in this blessed work of saving souls. Glory to God for ever and ever.—Amen.

On the eleventh day of October, we commenced a meeting in Corinna. It continued four days. We were favored with the labors of Brn. C. Goodrich, F. A. Baker, C. Leverton, J. Wheeler, J. Morrill, and G. Churchill. It was thought to be one of the best meetings for the church of God that has been held in Maine for fifteen or twenty years. Perfect freedom in Christ, and a preparation to meet the Lord at his coming, was the motto. It is the faith of the church generally in Maine, that we shall see Jesus before 1868 shall have passed. Some are looking next year. Our motto is, watch all the time now. The prayer of my heart is that the church may arise and shake herself from this sleepy state, and feel they have something to do in the cause of God, while they can work. There is no time to delay. May the good Lord help our preaching brethren to speak out plainly and faithfully. Leave no truth untold. Love to all the flock of God. Grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied.

I. DAMMAN.

From Bro. Sam'l Curry.

BRO. GRANT:—Are we not doing our last work? It really seems so to me. At Wilbraham, I thought the Lord, by his Spirit, was preparing his children for the kingdom, and I found that many others had the same idea. It looks like the last call to the unconverted, and I thank the Lord some of them seem to realize it. At Worcester, Philadelphia, and Pawling, N. Y., during the month of September, I have seen sincere seekers of salvation. At Pawling we are looking for greater things. Will the brethren, who have labored there in former years, unite with us in praying for that place?

While at Philadelphia, I went with Bro. Burbank to his mission field. Two hours spent in the lanes and alleys and hovels of that horrible place, made me heart-sick. Surely, nothing but a strong sense of duty, and the approval of his God, could enable our dear brother to labor day by day in such a place. His idea of a "Home" is certainly a good one; for while he hopes for the salvation of men and women there, yet what is most important is the removal of the children that are old enough to be contaminated by the awful scenes that surround them. Let none say the time is too short to do good; for those little ones, already rescued by the efforts of Bro. B. and those excellent women in connection with him, prove that much may yet be done. Let all who can lend a helping hand.

SAMUEL CURRY.

New York, Oct. 3d, 1866.

From Bro. A. J. Boies.

BRO. GRANT:—We are having good meetings at Bro. Kingsbury's, No. 6 Clark Avenue, and I verily believe the Lord is about to do a good work in Chelsea. A good interest is manifested among the brethren and sisters; and since the commencement of our meetings there has been a good spirit shown. There seems to be a unity, a spirit of love, which runs from heart to heart. The Lord be praised for that. O that the saints of God would come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. I verily believe that good will be accomplished, God's cause will be prospered, and many will be added (such as he wills) to his church.

We had a Holy Ghost time last evening. A goodly number were present. God was there by his Holy Spirit, and blessed his people. Among the number were three Spiritualists, one, whose experience went back twenty-seven years, was converted under the preaching of Elder Cole, at Lowell, Mass., was baptized, followed the doctrine of the Bible through 1843, also walked with the Methodists, but to-day believes that Jesus Christ comes spiritually every day; and she goes so far as to say that she has seen Jesus appear to her, that she saw him eye to eye. The word of God tells us, that no man hath seen God at any time. Which shall we believe? the word of God, or Spiritualists? Brothers and sisters, let us believe what Jesus says: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God." "He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son." "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed; for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds."—2d John 1: 9-11. Let us be faithful a little while, and he that is to come will come and will not tarry. Yours looking for Jesus, BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—It is written, "Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed." I wish to confess to you that, during the long time since I first heard the "midnight cry," I have not been identified with you and the Advent cause as I ought. I have clung to the theory, but have lacked the spirit and power, which we all need. I first heard this "blessed hope" from Brn. Hazleton and T. M. Preble, in Milford, N. H., in the spring of 1842; since which time I have heard many others, some of whom have "fallen asleep." I have tried to work in with the sects, but I cannot endure the fables of these days, and the sects will not endure sound doctrine; so I go with my own company.

In the summer of 1857, I went to Aurora, Ill., but, I regret to say, I was little known as a true Advent christian. I have several times been deeply impressed with the idea of laboring in the vineyard of the Lord, but have held back on account of my inability and poverty; yet I know God often chooses the weak things of the world to confound the wise. In Sept., 1860, I returned to Mass., with my family, but have been west several times since. I have had some good seasons with christians there. I want now to gird up the loins of my mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought at the revelation of Jesus Christ. I want to be sanctified wholly. I hope to see some of you yet, if the Lord will, on earth, and all in the new earth. Will you pray for me, brethren and sisters, that I may do the will of God, and be kept by his power through faith unto salvation?

There seems to be only one thing to hinder me now from going wherever my labor is most needed, whether it be east, or west. My wife is an invalid, and unable to travel much. Is there a Hospital, or Infirmary, conducted by Advent brethren? Yours in the "blessed hope."

O. SHERWIN.

Shelburne Falls, Mass., Oct. 14th.

"MEAN ME?"

Yes, sir, we do mean you, if you are the guilty one. If you trample on holy time in any form, traffic in liquid death, distilled damnation, or the vile "Indian weed." We mean you in good earnest. If you are an oppressor, man-stealer, a chattelizer in the bodies and souls of men, an apologizer for this iniquity of iniquities, we mean you, and we mean, moreover, to bring God's thunderbolts to bear heavily on your guilty head.

"He that stealeth a man and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death." Every slave-holder, at home or abroad, in America, is a man-thief, subject to the penalty of death; and the partaker or apologizer of this man-stealing is as bad or worse than the thief. Again, reader, if you publish, buy, sell, or read novels, the light, foolish, trashy, nonsensical literature of the day, the "Leslies," "Harpers," "Godey's," "Ledgers" and the like, we mean you, and we intend to bring the sledge-hammer of God's truth to bear heavily on your guilty conscience. Once more, if you are a time-server, a prophesier of smooth things, "healing slightly," shunning to declare all the counsel of God; crying, peace, peace, when there is no peace, we mean you emphatically. And we intend, the Lord helping, to say of you what God himself says of you; and what is that? Hark! "Woe unto Scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men; for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in.

It is our business, and the business of every faithful servant of God, to rise up against evil doers; stand up boldly against the workers of iniquity—to reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine. "Thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbor, and not suffer sin upon him."

Are you the guilty one, friendly reader? incorrigibly? We mean you. "Thou art the man." We bring down with a sledge-hammer's might the thunder-claps of God's just, righteous, fiery indignation. We mean you, friend, in the church or out of it, whatever your name, station or office, king, queen, judge, priest, deacon, layman, corporal or bootblack. Sin is sin, and wherever sin is, little sins or great sins, sins in high places or in low places—there fire, fire! Load—take good aim, FIRE!

"Art thou faithful? then oppose
Sin and wrong with all thy might;
Care not how the tempest blows,
Only care to do the right."

"Home Thrusts."

☞ Letters have been received from Dr. Mayo G. Smith, who is one of the colony that sailed from Maine in August for a settlement at Jaffa—ancient Joppa—in the Holy Land. They had a good passage of forty-two days, and landed October 4th, the Turkish government favoring the project and allowing them to land their merchandise free of duty. The colony consists of 156 men, women and children. They have carried their church, school-house, saw mill, store, etc., and have a charming site for their settlement.

Obituaries.

HACKETT. Died in Dover, N. H., Oct. 23d, 1866, Charles F. Hackett, son of J. M. and Mrs. A. Y. Hackett.

Charlie was about nineteen years of age, and a young man of great promise. In whatever business he engaged, confidence could be placed in him, as one not only qualified for his station, but in a high degree true to his trust. His father and mother being practical believers in the speedy coming of Christ, their son was quite well informed in regard to this glorious event, and theoretically believed in the resurrection of the dead, and the saints' inheritance to be the new earth.

But he did not confess his faith in Christ until a few days before his death, when he came out remarkably clear and happy in mind, exhorting his friends and associates to prepare to meet him in the better world—bidding them all an affectionate farewell, as one by one they planted their last kiss upon his pale and almost cold cheek. While in his last conflict with death, he would break out and sing,—

"I'm going home, I'm going home,
I'm going home to die no more."

I was beside his dying bed, and must say I never witnessed such an affecting and interesting death-bed scene. When he failed to speak, the anxious look he gave his friends showed plainly how much he desired their preparation to follow him. His mind remained perfectly clear to the last. He has left a large circle of relatives and friends to lament his early death. But he rests in hope.

A discourse was delivered at his funeral by the writer, founded on 1 Cor. 15: 22, 23.

Why should we wish our friends to stay
Here in a world so vain as this?
Where dangers thick stand in the way
To keep them from a land of bliss!

Why not in Jesus Christ confide,
Believe his word, and trust his power
To raise from death his ransomed bride,
In the grand resurrection hour?

T. M. PREBLE.

SALLS. Died in Broome, C. E., Sept. 16th, 1866, after a short illness of typhoid fever, Jane Salls, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Abram Salls, aged twenty-three years.

Jane sleeps safely in her lowly grave. Her funeral was attended by a large concourse of people, when many eyes, unaccustomed to weeping, shed the sympathetic tear.

She gave her heart to God, and was buried in the likeness of her Master, some twelve months ago. Since that time her daily walk has shown that she had been with God. Of her it may well be said that Christ was magnified in her body, both by life and by death. So strong was her faith, so confident her hope, that, amid the agonies of her disease her soul was filled with unutterable joy. I tried to comfort the mourning friends from Rev. 21: 4.

JOHN CHAPMAN.

JAMESON. Died at Bradford, N. H., Sept. 26th, Lizzie A., daughter of Bro. John W. and Sr. Marinda Jameson, aged fourteen years.

Lizzie was a good girl, and, although she made no public profession, she loved to pray, and the society of christians. We trust she sleeps in Jesus, and will come forth in the morning of the resurrection, to bloom immortal in the paradise of God.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool Oct. 27th, Queenstown 28th.

Austria. The London Times alludes to a further disintegration of the Austrian Empire as possible. Russia is said to be intriguing with the Greek religionists, who amount to three and a half millions, scattered in Hungary and other provinces. Even the German provinces of the Empire are not safe from the attraction which is carrying Bavaria and Wurtemburg into the Prussian Confederation, and if at the same time an Orthodox propaganda be set to work the progress of disintegration may be rapid.

Denmark. The London Globe says Denmark is menaced with extinction. Unless wiser counsels and a juster spirit prevails Denmark will soon undergo further dismemberment, and finally disappear as an independent state from the map of Europe. The Globe believes the design is entertained by Prussia and Sweden to absorb Denmark, Prussia taking the main-land while the islands are annexed to Sweden.

Constantinople, Nov. 7. The insurrection has ceased in Candia, and it is officially stated that three fights had occurred at Geliadea in which the insurgents lost 112 killed. All the Sphakiot chiefs—thirty in number—have submitted to Akiff. Pacha will be Governor of the island. A further concession for the Christians from the Sultan is expected.

The trouble between Turkey and the United States Consul at Cypress is settled.

Paris, Nov. 7. Maximilian, the Moniteur says, will remain in Mexico.

Berlin, Nov. 7. Prussia sees in the appointment of Baron Von Beust to the Prime Ministership of Austria an attempt on the part of that country to interfere with settled questions, which would impel Prussia to complete more quickly and securely the national work of Germany.

Venice, Nov. 7. The King of Italy entered this city at 11 A. M. The Patriarch of Venice received him at the church of St. Mark, where a Te Deum was sung. His reception in the city was magnificent. There was great joy and the crowd was so immense that the troops were unable to defile before the King. The National Guard is mobilized.

Rio Janeiro, Oct. 10, via London, Nov. 5.—There was a great battle at Curmguaby, Paraguay, on the 22d ult. The gunboats engaged the fort there and the allied storming columns amid showers of musketry and grape nobly took the first line, but failed at the second, and retired with a loss of nearly 5000 men. Several gunboats were disabled in the fight. Flores had gone back to Montevideo with the rest of the army. There was great excitement. Operations are suspended for the present.

Paris, Nov. 12. The report that an insurrection has taken place in Barcelona is untrue.

Madrid, Nov. 12. A plot has been discovered in the city of Saragossa, in consequence of which several arrests have been made.

London, Nov. 12. Telegraphic despatches have been received which state that the war in Japan is ended. The report of the death of the Tycoon is confirmed.

DOMESTIC.

GOOD ADVICE.—Rev. Dr. Hiscox, an eminent Baptist divine, who has recently been traveling through the South, writes to the Christian Examiner:—

"A world of mischief has been done by the religious press, North and South, in absurd falsehoods and extravagant perversions of truth, originated or made current by them. I have been everywhere treated with courtesy and respect. So I think a kind and prudent man would be through the South, unless he fell in with a set of rowdies, who anywhere might abuse him. Abuse and slander will never make friends nor correct the errors of the misguided. I would give this exhortation to every northern man—especially to every northern christian: treat every man with a generous kindness; forbear to exasperate. The southern people have been trained in peculiar schools, and taught peculiar theories. They have been wrong, and suffered for it. Slavery and secession both are dead. Win them if you can, by love and magnanimity, to truer ideas and a better brotherhood than we have ever yet known."

ITEMS.

☞ At a convention of clergymen in New York on Thursday, it was mentioned by one of the speakers that out of the three hundred thousand inhabitants who composed the population of Brooklyn, not more than one hundred thousand were brought within the influence of the gospel in the whole one hundred and seventy-nine churches of that city on each Sunday.

☞ In a recently published statistical work, there are said to be in London one million four hundred thousand persons who never attend public worship; one hundred and fifty thousand habitual drunkards; one hundred and fifty thousand living in open profligacy; twenty thousand professed beggars; ten thousand gamblers; thirty thousand destitute children, and five thousand receivers of stolen goods.

☞ The old Roman capital in the south of Britain has been unearthed. The main street and a street running from it have been laid open, together with two large Roman houses with tesselated pavements. The walls which surrounded the capital were three miles in length.

☞ The Paris Journals announce the death of M. Lager, the tailor, who, it is said, designed and cut the famous gray coat which Napoleon always wore, and in which the common people always picture the hero in their mind's eye. From his hands, too, went forth the uniform in which Napoleon was buried at St. Helena.

☞ The island recently thrown up on the Florida coast, by volcanic action, has been explored, and consists mainly of quicksand, dangerous to travel on except in one small portion, which is of a rocky nature. Some signs of vegetation are already apparent, some rank grasses and plants having started.

☞ In the last half century the British and Foreign Bible Society has appropriated $2,375,000 for circulating the Scriptures among the unevangelized nations, and the American Bible Society has expended for the same object $800,000. The two societies have issued 8,000,000 copies of the sacred volumes, and 5,000,000 of these have been given outside of Christendom.

☞ The apple crop on the Western Reserve, Ohio, is probably larger than that of any previous season for many years. The inland towns are shipping thousands of barrels to New York, Chicago and other places. The price is about three dollars per barrel. Dealers are paying two dollars without barrels.

☞ Prof. A. Wood, with a party of gentlemen, lately ascended Mount Hood, in Oregon. His report establishes the fact that Mount Hood is really a volcano, and that it is the highest mountain in the United States, being 17,000 feet.

☞ Baron James de Rothschild is in a very critical state of health. He is the only surviving son of the founder of the house, is chief of the Paris branch of the Rothschilds, and the most eminent financier of the whole family.

The Jewish Consistory of Paris has convoked a grand meeting of Rabbis to be held in the city during the Universal Exhibition of next year, to make some new regulations respecting the food of Israelites.

☞ The English farmers are afflicted with a new scourge, in addition to the cattle plague; their fowls are affected with spasms, a yellowish fluid runs from their beaks, their combs turn black, and they die.

☞ The work of restoring the cathedral church of Notre Dame, Paris, to its original beauty is almost finished. It has occupied no less than twenty years.

☞ Mr. Keith Johnston and other gentlemen engaged in the exploration of Palestine have discovered at Tell Hum, the ancient temple of Capernaum, nearly entire.

☞ The Great Eastern, after the close of her charter to carry passengers from New York to Brest to the Exposition, it is said, will be taken to lay the telegraph cable between France and America.

☞ The population of London is over 3,000,000.

The quarterly meeting of the Western New York Christian Conference, will be held in Danville, Livingston Co., commencing Friday evening, Nov. 23d, and held over Sunday. Let there be a grand rally of brethren and sisters from all quarters to this meeting. Events transpiring before our eyes tell us plainly that very few such meetings will be held this side the kingdom. Come, then, brethren, in the name of the Lord, armed and equipped to work for God.

There will be teams at Wayland, on the Buffalo and N. Y. and E. R. R., on the arrival of the one o'clock train from the West. If those coming from the East can get the morning train from Elmira, they will arrive in time for the stage at ten o'clock. If not, if you will write to us, we will see that teams are at Wayland on the arrival of the 4 P. M. train.

LIFE'S LOT.

I know not if the dark or bright
Shall be my lot;
If that wherein my hopes delight
Be best or not.
It may be mine to drag for years
Toil's heavy chain;
Or day and night my meat be tears,
On bed of pain.
Dear faces may surround my hearth
With smiles and glee;
Or I may dwell alone, and mirth
Be strange to me.
My bark is wafted to the strand
By breath divine;
And on the helm there rests a hand
Other than mine.
One who has known in storms to sail
I have on board;
Above the raging of the gale
I hear my Lord.
He holds me while the billows smite,
I shall not fall;
If sharp, 'tis short: if long, 'tis light:
He tempers all.
Safe to the land—safe to the land,
The end is this;
And then with Him go hand in hand,
Far into bliss.

NUMBER THIRTY-TWO.

NAAMAN CURED OF LEPROSY.

In his princely palace, at Damascus, sat the great Syrian general, Naaman, darkly brooding over his affliction. Next to the king, he exercised the most power in the realm; but this alone could not render him happy, for he was a leper. Vainly did the orient beauty of Damascus pour out its wealth of delights at his feet. Once, in happier days, the fountains had a soothing music for his ear, and the delightful scenes of the Syrian capital a magic balm for his mind. He once loved to wander among the embowered groves that thickly lined the banks of Abana's winding stream, or he would steal away to the hills where the gleaming rills gathered to form the waves of Pharpar. But those days were past, and he sat gloomy in the halls of his palace, striving to woo back the light of other days by the sweet spell of memory.

One day a captive Hebrew maiden, whom Naaman's soldiers had taken from some frontier town of Israel, touched with the affliction of her master, exclaimed to her mistress,

"Would God, my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria, for he would recover him of his leprosy."

When this speech of the captive maid came to the ears of the king, he was so interested in the welfare of his general that he determined at once to send him to the prophet Elisha to be cured. For this purpose he sent Naaman with a letter and presents to the king of Israel. It must have been with strange emotions that Naaman set out from his native city to visit the land of an old enemy to be cured of a disease that had ever baffled the skill of man.

Brightly the morning sun shone upon the Damascene valleys, as Naaman and his retinue wound out of the streets of the Syrian city. The journey was a pleasant one; the route lay through a country of wild and romantic scenery, hills and lofty mountains, beautiful valleys and dancing streams; a land of the vine and the olive, where abundance smiled on every hand.

At last the Syrian band came in sight of Samaria, the capital of the kingdom of Israel. Resting on the crown of a hill, Samaria with its towers and domes looked down upon them and seemed to invite them to its hospitalities. Naaman presented his letter and presents to the king. But the king was filled with astonishment when he read the letter, and he rent his clothes and said,

"Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy? Wherefore consider, I pray you, and see how he seeketh a quarrel against me."

The king could not conceive any other cause for the strange circumstance and unusual proceeding.

The rumor of the arrival of the Syrian general, and the troubled state of the king's mind, soon reached the ear of Elisha, and he sent word to the king for Naaman to be sent to him, that he might know there was a prophet in Israel who could intercede in his behalf. Then Naaman, surrounded with all the pomp of oriental fashion, came and stood before the humble abode of Elisha. The prophet did not deign to see him, but sent his servant with the simple message,

"Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean."

Naaman was disappointed, chagrined, even angry. He had expected some great display by the prophet; that he would offer up a sacrifice, or that he would call aloud upon his God to cleanse the leper; but when he simply directed him to wash in Jordan, he turned away angry to seek his own land, a leper still. He thought of the dancing streams of his own land, how their pure waters made sweet music in the meadows of Damascus, and cried out in his disquiet,

"Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? may I not wash in them and be clean?"

But his servants, unwilling that their master should return uncured, at length prevailed upon Naaman to try the experiment. So he went down to Jordan and dipped himself seven times in its waters, and he was cured. The terrible disease, that had baffled all the skill of man, had left him, and he rejoiced once more with health. A new joy flashed over the sky of his late troubled dreams. His heart was filled with gratitude, and he returned to the prophet to offer a rich reward for his intercession in his behalf; but Elisha would receive no reward. Then Naaman acknowledged that there was no God like the God of Israel, and that when he attended his master to the shrine of Rimmon, and bowed himself there, he should address his thoughts to the God of Israel, and desired the Lord to pardon his presence in the house of the Syrian god.

But Gehazi, the selfish and covetous servant of Elisha, could not see such an opportunity pass without receiving the reward that had been offered his master; so he followed after the rich Syrian and feigned some excuse to get the present that his master had refused. Naaman gladly bestowed what was asked, and more. But Gehazi could not hide his baseness from Elisha, who punished him with the announcement that the leprosy of Naaman should cleave to him and his posterity forever—a terrible retribution for the sin of covetousness; and he left the presence of the prophet "a leper as white as snow."

But the homeward journey of Naaman was a joyous one; a new life had dawned; his youth had been renewed; he felt the vigor of other days coursing through his veins; and more, he could look from nature up to nature's God—from effect to the first Great Cause. As he stood once more on the hills that overlooked the valley of the metropolis, it seemed bathed in a new beauty. "The pearl of the east" gleamed with a new-found light; his affliction had left him, and he could look out upon the delicious scene and enjoy all its beauty. But when the music of the swiftly-flowing Abana fell upon his ear, he could not forget the healing waters of the once despicable Jordan, now forever linked with his dreams of the past.

There was joy in Damascus when Naaman returned healed of his loathsome disease; but when the king went into the house of Rimmon and leaned on his servant, Naaman directed his thoughts not to the Syrian god but to the God of Israel, in whose land he had been miraculously healed. He had lost confidence in the Syrian deity, and his thoughts went up to the all powerful God of Elisha.

From this olden narrative, we learn the important lesson that the Lord does not desire pomp and ostentation in his service; no gorgeous formality, but simple, heartfelt praise, and sincere devotion. His favors are not to be obtained by splendid offerings and glittering sacrifices, but by obeying his will in an humble manner.

Naaman would gladly have purchased a cure with a pile of glittering gold, but such a simple thing as bathing seven times in Jordan was contrary to his proud spirit. So it ever has been with the natural heart. Naaman has not been alone in his experience. Every one has to humble himself, as he did, before receiving the blessed boon of Christ's favor; but, alas! how many a proud heart, unlike him, has refused to bathe in Jordan, and gone away a leper still. For the World's Crisis.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

After leaving Casco, I went to Biddeford, and found an appointment for Eld. Tripp. I expected to see a new Bro. in the field, and as our appointments came the same day, I was glad of help; but on learning Eld. Tripp was our old, tried friend Abigail Mussey Tripp, it opened an era in the ministerial department, and one man and one woman together drew out a full house, all day, of attentive listeners, that heard the truth with interest. Biddeford bids fair to become an important place for doing good. Since they have got into their new house, their congregation has doubled. They need help to finish their house for winter. They are all poor, and have done all they could, being factory help; they work hard for all they get, and donations to them would be helping the cause of God indeed. Direct to J. C. Libby, Biddeford, Me.

Next to Dover, where the church have suffered much from the epidemic of fanaticism that visited Maine years since; and the relics of it are scarcely wiped out yet, but it appears most have come to themselves, and want to come into order, and have meetings that will not disgrace so good a cause. The Lord help them.

Next to Lee, N. H. This is a place where a great deal of labor has been bestowed, with little effect. Most of the people are dozy, and hardly get out to meeting in fair weather; and if cloudy and misty, no disposition or principle to get out. Satan binds some, and a worldly spirit others.

Next to Manchester. Found them gradually recovering from the various kinds of diseases with which that church has suffered for years, brought on by those whose work has been to rule or ruin; but there are a few left that are willing to work and live like folks, and have a good place to do good. Outsiders begin to come in to hear the truth, and as there are only two or three left that never have but one tune to play, and one string to play it upon, there is but little to fear from them.

Next to Concord. There is one of the best working churches in the country. There is a remarkable overturn for good in Concord. As Bro. Merriam and other good old stand-bys said, We never were doing as well as now. The soldiers' guns are all pointed one way. The meetings are well attended week evenings; and a love-feast every Sabbath morning since last March, before preaching. There is no cross-firing in any of their meetings. How much better all churches would get along to adopt this same plan.

Next to South Casco. This was a peculiar place. I did not go by revelation, but by an invitation and impression, after learning that the man that came eight miles to give the invitation was not a professor nor a hypocrite; for he said, "We are an ungodly set of us, and have a good meeting-house, that has stood empty for eight or ten years, except two or three meetings," and he wanted me to come and preach what I believed, for there was not life enough left in four or five remnants of sectarians to fight what I preached, but would come out to hear. This looked favorable, and I agreed to go. I found three or four that were believing the present truth; and they were the butt of ridicule. The scoffers and ignorant professors, and two or three half backslidden preachers, made it their business to try to destroy them, and they needed help, although they held their own in argument on the Bible. A certain Elder said to a young convert, after being floored on the Bible, that he had the word in him, and cared nothing about the Bible, and they did not use the Bible in preaching, etc. Such talk, together with the care of getting supper for her guest, seemed to get her out of patience, and she took the Bible and read in 2nd John 10th verse, which reads, "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed." This set so tight that the Elder refused to ask a blessing, cut quick, and was off. (Good on that Sister's head.) There seemed to be a lot of lean, gaunt wolves trying to kill what few sheep and lambs there were, and they needed help.

The first evening there was a school-house full to hear on conversion, new birth, etc. Some scolding. Second evening, the subject was God's school teacher, Titus 2: 11–15, showing that most of the professors were yet in their A B C's, or abs, and had not learned in the school of Christ far enough to know what the "blessed hope" of the church was, and that in their ignorance they believed that death gave them life, etc. This was like running a stick into a hornet's nest; but a battle was necessary.

Third evening, I showed from Paul, that those who are asleep will not be with the Lord until he comes again; and if this did not comfort them, they must not Christ's believers. At the close of the meeting, some said I was crazy; others took their tallow candles from the desk with a look at me as if I should not have their light to preach in that manner. A few ventured to take tracts. It seemed to me as if some of them wanted a pair of tongs to hold their tract in; for they would change them first in one hand, then the other, then into their hat, then out of that into their pocket.

We went home through the woods, and heard all kinds of remarks about the preaching; but felt clear, thank God. We heard that an Elder took a lame girl into his wagon, and when he found out she believed our truth, he stopped his horse, took her out, and left her by the side of the road, and drove on. Such are the elements that we had to preach to. Sunday, the meeting was down in the Centre, at the meeting-house. The Lord sent down a company of artillery from the north part of the town (Mayberry Hill), and a few scattering soldiers from other places, and we had a victory, and the truth triumphed, and many received the doctrine of the Lord's soon coming, and melted down, and some asked prayers publicly and voluntarily. Sunday evening we had another victory. The perils of the last days were preached to them, and they confessed it was so. Backsliders trembled, and some old ones confessed and started anew. Some had the burden of God's Spirit on them, and did not know what ailed them. Some took pain-killer, and others peppermint lozenges to ease their distress, but nothing helped them, till they took up their cross and confessed, and the distress all left, and they said they slept well. Others swore about the preaching; some contradicted my statement, when I read in Luke about Christ's birth in a stable or barn.

The professors are very ignorant, and so are some of the preachers. One quoted the text, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest"; and said he believed it was in Isaiah. Another told him it was in Jeremiah. These are the ones that have the word of God in them, and don't need the Bible to preach from. Another said the soul went to hell at death, as a punishment for actual sins, and at the judgment came back to the body, and both of them were cast into hell for the influence they had had upon others. This, he said, was the light he had dug out himself; so the people said that hired him. This is heathenism educated. Such are ignorant concerning those that are asleep. See 1 Thess. 4: 13–18.

I made up my mind I was among heathen of a worse class than the freedmen out South, and preached on Ignorance to some of this ignorant class, and left the place feeling assured that the few there that loved the truth had been strengthened, and some had been added to their number, that would hold up the light.

Next to Mayberry Hill, North Casco. I found them all in good working order. I went down to the village, where the Congregationalists meet half of the time, and preached the present truth about the wickedness of this age, and the antichristian doctrines held by professors, etc., and unexpectedly stirred a worse fuss than the one in the south part of the town. Some left while I was preaching, others looked mad; the brethren rejoiced, and every one was stirred up. After meeting, some said I ought to be rode on a rail; others, that I deserved rotten eggs. One man said such preaching would mad the devil. Said a by-stander, "It seems it has." I went with a brother and slept in his shop all alone for choice. O what a stir the truth made in Casco. God blessed me with a quiet mind, and a good night's rest in the shop. This battle opened the eyes of some of the brethren to see it is no use to try to go hand in hand with those that hate the truth, and they have concluded to hold separate meetings after this. We are a separate people, and must be till the Lord comes. HIRAM MUNGER.

LETTER FROM SR. A. E. SMITH.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—As this is the first opportunity I have had to write since my return from Wilbraham, I therefore embrace it. No doubt you are anxious to hear about our mission work, and about our campmeetings. But if I was to write all the particulars, the Crisis would not hold it all in several weeks; therefore, as usual, I shall condense it as much as possible.

First, then, a few words about Wilbraham camp. Sister Boide and I arrived on the ground on Monday, about two o'clock. We met with Bro. and Sr. Hudson. They took us to their tent, and gave us a good dinner, which refreshed us much after traveling so far, and being hungry and tired. God bless them. We spent an hour in christian conversation with them and Sisters Smith and Whiting, two of the Lord's little ones. Truly we felt it was blessed to have the privilege of talking with those of the same precious faith. We felt rested, and took a walk to look around the ground, and see how many had arrived that we knew. We met several with whom we had most blessed seasons the year before. We heard singing in the Boston tent, and drew near. We knew by the voices it was a children's meeting. We were all right then, for we both love to labor among little children. A lady was addressing the children. I wondered who she was. I listened, and such language,—O, thought I, this is one of God's women; and as I listened to her, while she talked to these dear little ones, I thought I was a child too; and my heart yearned towards her, and I loved her as an old friend. After the children sang one of the sweet songs of Zion, this dear sister prayed, and I thought who can this sister be. I could refrain no longer. I asked one next to me who it was. She said it was Sister Hastings. O, thought I, is it possible, after so many years desiring to become acquainted with Sister H., shall I now have the desire of my heart? I listened to hear her pray. How she talked to Jesus about these little lambs. My heart became knit to hers, like Jonathan's with David's. If ever in all my life I saw any one that I loved at first sight, that was the time, and right there in the tent. I was melted to tenderness and thankfulness for christian fellowship. We then went to supper, and found the dear brethren and sisters were just as willing to make us comfortable as they were last year. We sat down to a good supper, and clean dishes, and every thing all right, and had to say, Thank God for campmeeting, and people that have really got religion.

We want to hear preaching, and from there to stay in Bro. Gage's tent, as Bro. Hastings had not his pilgrim tent ready. We had a good sleep, and in the morning felt like taking hold and working for Jesus. The brethren and sisters came pouring in all day, and the meetings increased in numbers and in power. Truly, I never heard such experiences, from the little child to the aged christian, before. All were baptized with the same Spirit. O what a treat it was to me, laboring as I do among those that know nothing about the Lord's coming, and some that are just receiving the truth, and others that oppose it. But here I could sit and drink, and weep, and rejoice in the blessed hope of Jesus' soon coming; and I felt I would love to stay there till he did come.

Sister Benson, one of my colored children, arrived on Tuesday, she being too late for the cars the morning we left. I was glad to have her hear those blessed experiences. I knew it would build her up and make her strong in the faith, which it did, and she has come home like a giant, to fight manfully for the faith once delivered to the saints. Praise the Lord for the truth.

On Thursday, at one o'clock, we held our Association meeting, in Bro. Hastings' large tent. There was not as large a representation of sisters as we should have liked, but we had a good time, and the Lord was with us. There seemed to be neither male nor female; but all were interested in the great work of saving souls. There were several reports read, but we only had an hour, and of course we had to hurry things most too fast; but still the Lord was with us. After we heard some of the sisters report from their different fields of labor, Bro. H. Campbell, from Green Point, who has labored with us more or less for a year, spoke and cheered our hearts. Bro. Himes then addressed the meeting in reference to mission work, especially among the colored people. He related some of his experience while he was among the freedmen, which encouraged our hearts to press on.

The friends of mission work took up a collection for us, and we adjourned till next day, at the same hour. Many of the brethren and sisters took us by the hand after the meeting, and bid us God speed. I never wanted to get away from the multitude and weep before the Lord in thankfulness in all my life, as I did that day. It was as much as I could do to keep back my tears, when I thought for a moment how I am used all the year round by opposers to the truth and haters of the colored race, and what sorrow and suffering I have to endure, and then have these friends speak so kindly to me was something I was not used to. But I thanked God that once a year I could hear a kind word and a "God bless you." Praise the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me praise his holy name. I thought what hath God wrought, when I saw the spirit of the brethren towards the women of the gospel,—they spoke so kindly. One brother took hold of my hand and wept like a child. O, said he, if I could only do like the rest are doing, but I have not the talent; but one thing I can do, I have the means to help, and I shall give more freely than I ever did before. There did not seem to be that bitter, jealous feeling among our brethren that we had to contend with in past times. Again I say, praise the Lord.

On Friday, at one o'clock, we met again. We heard the reports of other sisters, after which, Bro. Himes spoke again. Bro. Rogers, of Poultry, Vt., and Bro. McKinstry, and other friends, then took up a collection for our mission work. The two collections amounted to $110.15. We then closed the meeting. Many of the friends wished us to have another meeting, but I felt weary and tired, and I wanted to get into and enjoy the other meetings.

On Saturday morning, at 9 o'clock, we held a private business meeting in Bro. Hudson's tent, and elected our officers, which you will have seen from the secretary's report. By request, we had a meeting on Sunday, at one o'clock, when I related a part of the experience of Sr. Howard, the slave woman, and her present circumstances. The friends took up a collection for her, to bring her and the other preaching sisters to our Nyack campmeeting. They took up $57.00, which I have given as requested.

We came home on Monday. Sister Boide was taken very low with the poison that she had on the camp-ground. For three days she was blind, and suffered much for seventeen days: but the Lord heard prayer, and she is restored to health again. Thus, between nursing and attending to our mission work, and getting ready for the Nyack camp, I was almost worn out before the meeting commenced. But on Monday I repaired to the camp-ground. But few had arrived, and none of the preaching sisters which I expected on Saturday. I was about half sick, and very nervous, and the Devil says, Now you have got yourself in a nice fix. You will have to take charge of the camp, and do all the preaching. Now what will you do? Sister Boide is sick, and how are you going to get along? You might have had plenty of preachers, but you wanted all women. Now you see you haven't got any; it's good enough for you. The people will come from far and near, and you will have no preachers. The Devil wiped me all the way home. I went home tired and weary and sick, trusting in the Lord for help. My daughter got supper ready, and went down to the boat to see if the preachers were coming. Sure enough, the Lord had heard my prayers, and saw my tears of disappointment. When the boat landed, there were three preachers, and three other friends from Philadelphia. As sick as I was, I had to praise God, and thank him that he had not forgotten me in my troubles. Next morning, we opened the camp at ten o'clock, and had a good beginning. Bro. Campbell, from Green Point, and Bro. Flavell, from Newark, N. J., came to take part in the meeting, so we were all right.

It seems to me that the Lord sent these two brethren to this meeting. I wish all the readers of the Crisis could have been at this meeting, and seen with what breathless attention these people listened to the blessed hope, as given by these dear brethren. After the meeting closed, the pastor of the church here said to me, "How I do miss those brethren. I feel I have lost something, I feel so lonesome now they are gone. They have stolen my heart. I have fallen in love with them and their doctrine. They are so kind. They must really believe what they preach. O, if I only understood the Bible as they do, I would give the world, and about and preach till Jesus comes. I believe they are right, and we are near the judgment. O may we be ready to hear the trumpet sound."

It seems strange. Every sermon on that ground was on the judgment, but two. If it had been previously arranged, it could not have suited better, and yet one did not know what the other was going to preach about, which shows that the Lord was in it. Truly we had a blessed meeting.

On Sunday, the crowd was immense, but we had no trouble to keep order, and our meeting closed with the best of consequences. As far as the truth was concerned, among those that had never heard it before, much prejudice was broken down, and many wondered if these things were so.

I then went to the city and attended to our mission work, and prepared for the Peekskill camp, which commenced on Friday, Sept. 14th. On Saturday, there was a new recruit of preaching women from Philadelphia arrived, and took their seats in the stand. At one time I counted ten which sat side by side, each one ready to preach when her turn came. The first convert was a Roman Catholic, a young man about eighteen years of age, and it raised quite a stir in the village among that class. His mother and sisters were very indignant. His companions that worked in the foundry with him threatened to break up the meeting, but the Lord is stronger than man, and we had no trouble from them. A man and his wife were converted, and others. Among the rest was Bro. Burbank's little Maria, which Sister Halginson brought with her to spend a few weeks with me at Nyack. Though it rained four days in the week, yet we had a good meeting. We kept it over two Sundays, and the people all seemed profited by the meeting, and wished us to keep it longer. A brother of the Methodist church said that meetings had been full in all the churches. We had invitations from several churches, both white and colored, to speak to them in reference to our hope, which we shall do as soon as we can get time, the Lord helping us.

We closed our meeting on Monday morning, and took the boat for New York. Our expense of bringing the preachers was eighty dollars, and we raised in contributions toward paying it, $42.50. We had singing, exultation and experience all the way down the river to New York. The singing sounded splendidly on the water.

The next morning the Philadelphians left for home. May the Lord go with them, and bless all their labors. Amen.

Since my return home, I have hired a whole floor next to our mission room, and knocked it all into one, which makes a large room for the poor and halt and blind to come and find Jesus to the saving of their souls.

I received at Wilbraham, in two collections, $110.15. For Sister Howard and others, $7.00. From private individuals $63.78.

Yours in highways and hedges,

CONFESSION.

"I acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. I said I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin."—Ps. 32: 5.

We can hardly conceive how any one can believe in the existence of God, and yet think they can hide their evil deeds from him. Yet we read of those that seek to "hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, and they say, Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?"—Isa. 29: 15. But let all such remember that "the darkness and the light are both alike to Him," and all their works of darkness shall be brought to light.

All have sinned; but the difference between the saved and the lost sinners is just this: one class confess and forsake their sin, while the other class continue in sin. Confession of sin is enforced by both the Old and New Testaments. As without shedding of blood there is no remission, so without confession there is do forgiveness.

Let us not try to excuse ourselves before the Lord. If there is any palliating circumstance, it is known to him. We will confess freely, fully, and to the utmost, and plead the blood of Christ only, for that alone can avail to obtain our pardon.

MORE ABOUT THE "JEWELS."

A good sister thinks I made a mistake about the "borrowed gold." She says it was taken to make a calf. We know there was a calf made; but supposing it was made of the borrowed gold,—that was not what God intended they should do with it. He had a better use for it. The gold, however, was not all put into the calf—only what was in their ears; for after the calf was destroyed, the people were commanded to strip themselves of their ornaments before they appeared in the presence of God. And when material was being collected for the Tabernacle, "they came both men and women, as many as were willing hearted, and brought bracelets, and earrings, and tablets, all jewels of gold." This shows that the jewels were wanted for this very purpose. They took a portion of the gold which was designed to adorn God's tabernacle and made a calf and worshiped it. The gold was good, but they made an unholy use of it. 'Twas not the gold they were to worship, nor the adornings of the tabernacle, but God who visited the tabernacle.

Let us see if there are not some calf-worshipers at the present day. There are those who get a portion of truth, some particular point of doctrine. It is good, pure gold, well calculated to help adorn the church of God. But they get that one jewel and hold it up and present it everywhere, at all times, and seem to think that one bit of gold worth more than all the rest of the jewels that were ever dug from the mine, and our salvation depends on believing that one point. I think they have made a calf of a portion of the gold. If we have a little gold, give it place in the building among the rest of the adornings, and do not try to hammer and stretch out that one piece large enough to cover all God's tabernacle.

There are others who get the truth in theory. They are ready to advocate it, yea, and fight for it; but their hearts are destitute of the grace of God and of Jesus. Ah! they have taken the ornaments of the tabernacle, and made a calf of the pure gold and are worshiping it. It was the gold in the ears of the people which was made into a calf. We want the truth further down than our heads or ears; that is not a safe place to carry the gold; we must have it in our hearts.

We must not worship doctrines, but God, who has revealed to us his mighty, glorious plan. Those who worshiped the calf were stripped of all their ornaments when they appeared before the Lord. If we make a god of this gold, or leave the weightier matters to contend about trifles, we shall be stripped of all our outward adornings, and be left naked when Jesus comes, and we appear before the Lord.

The first idol which Israel worshiped was made of pure gold, but they seemed to get a taste for idolatry; and after they settled in the land of Canaan, and broke God's commands by mingling with a people who sought unto familiar spirits (or spirit mediums), they became so corrupt and degenerate, they could worship gods made of brass, wood, or stone. O, let us be careful and not worship doctrines, nor be too eager for some new thing. Much that is worn for gold at the present day is nothing but brass, and if we begin to worship gold we may be enticed to worship brass.

There are many doctrines at this time—doctrines of men and devils. There are gods many, and Satan transforms himself into an angel of light. A multitude of spirits are abroad; we must try them by the word. If they speak not according to that, there is no light in them.

God help us to worship him as the giver of every good gift, and not make idols of the blessings which he gives us. May we make a good use of our gold, that we may appear before the Lord, clothed and ornamented for the marriage supper of the Lamb.

FROM KITTIE.

Bro. Grant:—I have been a reader of your paper for two years. I like it very much. I love the Holy Bible, for I learn to do to others as I would that they should do to me. I often think of the blessed Savior, who came down from heaven and suffered and died that we might live. How thankful we should be to him, the giver of every good and precious gift. Although I am young, I know that I am not too young to die, and should be prepared when called upon to meet my Judge.

Kittie, press on in the service of the Lord. Jesus loves you. May the Savior help you to be very good.—ED.

SONG OF THE Decanter.

There was an old decanter, and its mouth was gaping wide; the rosy wine had ebbed away, and left its crystal side; and the wind went humming, humming, up and down the wind it blew, and through the reed-like, hollow neck, the wildest notes it blew. I placed it in the window, where the blast was blowing free, and fancied that its pale mouth sang the queerest strains to me. "They tell me—puny conquerors! the Plague has slain his ten, and War his hundred thousand of the very best of men; but I"—'twas thus the bottle spake—"but I have conquered more than all your famous conquerors, so feared and famed of yore. Then come, ye youths and maidens all, come drink from out my cup, the beverage that dulls the brain, and burns the spirits up; that puts to shame our conquerors, that slay their scores below; for this has deluged millions with the lava tide of wo. Though in the path of battle, darkest streams of blood may roll; yet while I killed the body, I have damned the very soul. The cholera, the plague, the sword, such ruin never wrought as I, in mirth or malice, on the innocent have brought. And still I breathe upon them, and they shrink before my breath, and year by year my thousands tread the dusty way of death."

"I MEAN TO BE A MAN."

A gentleman once met a little fellow seven years of age, on his way to school, with his book under his arms. Stopping the little fellow for a moment, he said to him:

"Well, my little boy, what do you intend to be when you grow up?"

He had asked the question a great many times before, and some boys had told him they meant to be farmers, some merchants, some ministers; but this little boy's answer was better than them all.

"I mean to be a man," he said.

It matters but little whether he be a farmer, or merchant, or minister, if he be a man, he will be successful, and be loved and respected. We remember the old adage, that "boys will be boys," and we think it strange some times that men will not be men. Read your Bibles; ask your parents and teachers, children, what makes a man, and, like this little boy, resolve to be a man in all things.

Nancy ——.

OPEN EYES.

The school, consisting of many little boys and girls, was assembled, and all were engaged in their studies, when a stranger gentleman entered, and at the invitation of the teacher, took his seat. After they had read round, and spelled their lessons, the gentleman was asked to "make some remarks." Instead of doing this, he simply said "I don't want to talk to them, but with them. I want to know who have eyes, and who have none. And now, I want you all to think a minute, and tell me what you saw in coming to school this morning. Who will tell me what he saw?" No answer. Turning to a fine looking little fellow, he said, "My boy, what did you see?"

"I didn't see nothing."

What! come all the way with your eyes shut? Didn't you see the road you came on?"

"Yes, sir."

"And the great bridge you came over?"

"Yes, sir."

"Very well, you did see something, then."

"O, I didn't know you meant such things. I thought you meant new things."

"Well, you get my meaning now. Who else can tell me what he saw?"

"I saw a spotted calf," cried one.

"And I saw a big flock of little ducks swimming," said another.

And so one said one thing, and one another thing, and some of the sights seemed so common, that all the children laughed. It was a great while before he could get them to talk, and even the teacher seemed surprised to hear her scholars talking about common things.

"Now," said the gentleman, "I believe I saw everything that has been mentioned, and some things besides. When I was a boy," (here the children looked on him as is they wanted to say, "is it possible, sir, that you were ever a boy?") "my teacher used to tell us always to 'keep our eyes open,' and thus see and note whatever we met with. Did none of you see that flock of wild geese that flew over you about this time you were coming to school this morning?"

"O, yes, sir, we saw them."

"And yet none of you mentioned them?"

"We forgot them, sir."

"And that huge, poisonous adder which somebody killed on the road?"

"Yes," sir, we all saw that, and looked at it."

"Very well, but you did not so see these things as to remember them. Now, as I was coming along I saw a prisoner shut up, and one who was free came and stole the prisoner's food, snatching it out his mouth. Before I could interfere he had carried it off and was hidden among the trees. The poor prisoner uttered some notes of complaint, and I am afraid the thief will come again and rob him; and though I felt sorry for the prisoner, and know the name of the thief, yet I could do nothing. But if I had had a gun, I do believe I should have shot the thief dead on the spot."

The children began to look wild, and to wonder what kind of man the visitor was.

"I will explain a little more. The prisoner was a beautiful canary-bird shut up in his wire cage, and hanging in the piazza of the white house on the hill; and the thief was Mr. Catbird, who darted out of the bushes, seized the food, and was back again in a moment." The children, here laughed, and one little fellow cried out "capital!"

"Now, then, my children, you see what I mean by having your eyes open, as you come and go to school, and as you pass along in life. One man, you will notice, is very interesting in conversation, and he can tell of a thousand things he has seen and heard,—because his eyes have always been open; while another man equally old, has nothing to say, has noted nothing and remembered nothing. It is just so about your lessons. I have known scholars to read over the lessons again and again, and yet attach no meaning whatever to them. So it is in hearing a sermon,—have the eyes of the mind open, and make the ears to be eyes, and mark and remember what you hear. And especially I want you to read the Bible with your eyes open, and as long as you live notice and remember all you read in that holy book. And now I want you all to look at me, notice just how I am dressed, and go home and tell your parents just how the stranger looked, and all—mind now—all that he has said to you."

The stranger arose and bowed, and the school arose and bowed, and all said "I wish he would come again; I guess he would find my eyes open after this!"—Sunday School Times.

THE RIGHT KIND OF A BOY.

"Take a drink, bub."

"No, I thank you."

"Yes, yes, take some beer. It will do you good."

"O no, I can't," said George; "I belong to the Band of Hope."

The men looked at each other, but no one tried any more to get him to drink.

His mother had sent him to the store to look for his papa, and that was the way he came to be there. While he waited for his papa, one of the men spoke up, "Well, I say, boy, if you won't drink, there is a cent to buy some nuts." "Thank you, sir, for the cent, but I do not spend my cents for nuts, I put them in the bank." When he was gone the men looked at each other, and one said, "I say, Jack, I think it would be as well for all of us to leave off beer and put our cents into the bank," and so they all thought, and agreed to do it.

As for his papa, when he went home that night and saw his wife and babe and thought of all that they had to suffer, he felt very bad. At last he made up his mind to sign the pledge and drink no more, and then they were all happy.—Picture Papers.

A WAY TO GET ALONG.

"How do you like arithmetic?" said Mr. Phelps to John Perkins, as he came home from school with his slate under his arm.

"Not very well."

"How do you get along with it?"

"Well enough. Samuel Price does my sums for me.

"Why don't you get him to eat your dinner for you?"

"I couldn't live without eating. I should'nt grow any if I didn't eat.'

"Your mind won't grow any if you don't use it. It would be just as reasonable for you to get Samuel to eat your dinner for you, as to ask him to do your studying."

THE EVILS OF TOBACCO.

A boy who smokes or chews, early and frequently, or in any way uses large quantities of tobacco, is never known to make a man of much energy, and generally lacks muscular and physical, as well as mental power.

Boys, do you want to be anything in the world? Shun tobacco. It injures the teeth. It produces an unhealthy state of the throat and lungs, hurts the stomach, blasts the brain and nerves, stops and dwarfs the growth, leads to idleness, and often to dishonesty and habits of strong drink. Shun tobacco, boys, as you would the most baneful poison.

I WON'T GAMBLE.

Two boys had each ten cents. "Come, Charlie," said Tom, "let us have a game of marbles, and stake our ten cents."

"Charlie, Charlie, show your colors," cried a third boy. Charlie jumped up.

"I won't gamble, Tom," said Charlie, "for it is a sin; if you win my ten cents I shall feel very bad, and if I win yours you will feel bad, and I shall be sorry; so let us keep our money until we can spend it for something we want, or at any rate, for something to show for it."

LIFE'S LOT.

I know not if the dark or bright
Shall be my lot;
If that wherein my hope delight
Be best or not.

It may be mine to drag for years
Toil's heavy chain;
Or day and night my meat be tears,
On bed of pain.

Dear faces may surround my hearth
With smiles and glee;
Or I may dwell alone, and mirth
Be strange to me.

My bark is wafted to the strand
By breath divine;
And on the helm there rests a hand
Other than mine.

One who has known in storms to sail
I have on board;
Above the raging of the gale
I hear my Lord.

He holds me while the billows smite,
I shall not fall;
If sharp, 'tis short; if long, 'tis light:
He tempers all.

Safe to the land—safe to the land,
The end is this;
And then with Him go hand in hand,
Far into bliss.

NUMBER THIRTY-TWO.

NAAMAN CURED OF LEPROSY.

In his princely palace, at Damascus, sat the great Syrian general, Naaman, darkly brooding over his affliction. Next to the king, he exercised the most power in the realm; but this alone could not render him happy, for he was a leper. Vainly did the orient beauty of Damascus pour out its wealth of delights at his feet. Once, in happier days, the fountains had a soothing music for his ear, and the delightful scenes of the Syrian capital a magic balm for his mind. He once loved to wander among the embowered groves that thickly lined the banks of Abana's winding stream, or he would steal away to the hills where the gleaming rills gathered to form the waves of Pharpar. But those days were past, and he sat gloomy in the halls of his palace, striving to woo back the light of other days by the sweet spell of memory.

One day a captive Hebrew maiden, whom Naaman's soldiers had taken from some frontier town of Israel, touched with the affliction of her master, exclaimed to her mistress,

"Would God, my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria, for he would recover him of his leprosy."

When this speech of the captive maid came to the ears of the king, he was so interested in the welfare of his general that he determined at once to send him to the prophet Elisha to be cured. For this purpose he sent Naaman with a letter and presents to the king of Israel. It must have been with strange emotions that Naaman set out from his native city to visit the land of an old enemy to be cured of a disease that had ever baffled the skill of man.

Brightly the morning sun shone upon the Damascene valleys, as Naaman and his retinue wound out of the streets of the Syrian city. The journey was a pleasant one; the route lay through a country of wild and romantic scenery, hills and lofty mountains, beautiful valleys and dancing streams; a land of the vine and the olive, where abundance smiled on every hand.

At last the Syrian band came in sight of Samaria, the capital of the kingdom of Israel. Resting on the crown of a hill, Samaria with its towers and domes looked down upon them and seemed to invite them to its hospitalities. Naaman presented his letter and presents to the king. But the king was filled with astonishment when he read the letter, and he rent his clothes and said,

"Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy? Wherefore consider, I pray you, and see how he seeketh a quarrel against me."

The king could not conceive any other cause for the strange circumstance and unusual proceeding.

The rumor of the arrival of the Syrian general, and the troubled state of the king's mind, soon reached the ear of Elisha, and he sent word to the king for Naaman to be sent to him, that he might know there was a prophet in Israel who could intercede in his behalf. Then Naaman, surrounded with all the pomp of oriental fashion, came and stood before the humble abode of Elisha. The prophet did not deign to see him, but sent his servant with the simple message,

"Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean."

Naaman was disappointed, chagrined, even angry. He had expected some great display by the prophet; that he would offer up a sacrifice, or that he would call aloud upon his God to cleanse the leper; but when he simply directed him to wash in Jordan, he turned away angry to seek his own land, a leper still. He thought of the dancing streams of his own land, how their pure waters made sweet music in the meadows of Damascus, and cried out in his disquiet,

"Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? may I not wash in them and be clean?"

But his servants, unwilling that their master should return uncured, at length prevailed upon Naaman to try the experiment. So he went down to Jordan and dipped himself seven times in its waters, and he was cured. The terrible disease, that had baffled all the skill of man, had left him, and he rejoiced once more with health. A new joy flashed over the sky of his late troubled dreams. His heart was filled with gratitude, and he returned to the prophet to offer a rich reward for his intercession in his behalf; but Elisha would receive no reward. Then Naaman acknowledged that there was no God like the God of Israel, and that when he attended his master to the shrine of Rimmon, and bowed himself there, he should address his thoughts to the God of Israel, and desired the Lord to pardon his presence in the house of the Syrian god.

But Gehazi, the selfish and covetous servant of Elisha, could not see such an opportunity pass without receiving the reward that had been offered his master; so he followed after the rich Syrian and feigned some excuse to get the present that his master had refused. Naaman gladly bestowed what was asked, and more. But Gehazi could not hide his baseness from Elisha, who punished him with the announcement that the leprosy of Naaman should cleave to him and his posterity forever—a terrible retribution for the sin of covetousness; and he left the presence of the prophet "a leper as white as snow."

But the homeward journey of Naaman was a joyous one; a new life had dawned; his youth had been renewed; he felt the vigor of other days coursing through his veins; and more, he could look from nature up to nature's God—from effect to the first Great Cause. As he stood once more on the hills that overlooked the valley of the metropolis, it seemed bathed in a new beauty. "The pearl of the east" gleamed with a new-found light; his affliction had left him, and he could look out upon the delicious scene and enjoy all its beauty. But when the music of the swiftly-flowing Abana fell upon his ear, he could not forget the healing waters of the once despicable Jordan, now forever linked with his dreams of the past.

There was joy in Damascus when Naaman returned healed of his loathsome disease; but when the king went into the house of Rimmon and leaned on his servant, Naaman directed his thoughts not to the Syrian god but to the God of Israel, in whose land he had been miraculously healed. He had lost confidence in the Syrian deity, and his thoughts went up to the all powerful God of Elisha.

From this olden narrative, we learn the important lesson that the Lord does not desire pomp and ostentation in his service; no gorgeous formality, but simple, heartfelt praise, and sincere devotion. His favors are not to be obtained by splendid offerings and glittering sacrifices, but by obeying his will in an humble manner.

Naaman would gladly have purchased a cure with a pile of glittering gold, but such a simple thing as bathing seven times in Jordan was contrary to his proud spirit. So it ever has been with the natural heart. Naaman has not been alone in his experience. Every one has to humble himself, as he did, before receiving the blessed boon of Christ's favor; but, alas! how many a proud heart, unlike him, has refused to bathe in Jordan, and gone away a leper still. NOTES BY THE WAY.

After leaving Casco, I went to Biddeford, and found an appointment for Eld. Tripp. I expected to see a new Bro. in the field, and as our appointments came the same day, I was glad of help; but on learning Eld. Tripp was our old, tried friend Abigail Mussey Tripp, it opened an era in the ministerial department, and one man and one woman together drew out a full house, all day, of attentive listeners, that heard the truth with interest. Biddeford bids fair to become an important place for doing good. Since they have got into their new house, their congregation has doubled. They need help to finish their house for winter. They are all poor, and have done all they could, being factory help; they work hard for all they get, and donations to them would be helping the cause of God indeed. Direct to J. C. Libby, Biddeford, Me.

Next to Dover, where the church have suffered much from the epidemic of fanaticism that visited Maine years since; and the relics of it are scarcely wiped out yet, but it appears most have come to themselves, and want to come into order, and have meetings that will not disgrace so good a cause. The Lord help them.

Next to Lee, N. H. This is a place where a great deal of labor has been bestowed, with little effect. Most of the people are dozy, and hardly get out to meeting in fair weather; and if cloudy and misty, no disposition or principle to get out. Satan binds some, and a worldly spirit others.

Next to Manchester. Found them gradually recovering from the various kinds of diseases with which that church has suffered for years, brought on by those whose work has been to rule or ruin; but there are a few left that are willing to work and live like folks, and have a good place to do good. Outsiders begin to come in to hear the truth, and as there are only two or three left that never have but one tune to play, and one string to play it upon, there is but little to fear from them.

Next to Concord. There is one of the best working churches in the country. There is a remarkable overturn for good in Concord. As Bro. Merriam and other good old stand-bys said, We never were doing as well as now. The soldiers' guns are all pointed one way. The meetings are well attended week evenings; and a love-feast every Sabbath morning since last March, before preaching. There is no cross-firing in any of their meetings. How much better all churches would get along to adopt this same plan.

Next to South Casco. This was a peculiar place. I did not go by revelation, but by an invitation and impression, after learning that the man that came eight miles to give the invitation was not a professor nor a hypocrite; for he said, "We are an ungodly set of us, and have a good meeting-house, that has stood empty for eight or ten years, except two or three meetings," and he wanted me to come and preach what I believed, for there was not life enough left in four or five remnants of sectarians to fight what I preached, but would come out to hear. This looked favorable, and I agreed to go. I found three or four that were believing the present truth; and they were the butt of ridicule. The scoffers and ignorant professors, and two or three half backslidden preachers, made it their business to try to destroy them, and they needed help, although they held their own in argument on the Bible. A certain Elder said to a young convert, after being floored on the Bible, that he had the word in him, and cared nothing about the Bible, and they did not use the Bible in preaching, etc. Such talk, together with the care of getting supper for her guest, seemed to get her out of patience, and she took the Bible and read in 2nd John 10th verse, which reads, "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed." This set so tight that the Elder refused to ask a blessing, cut quick, and was off. (Good on that Sister's head.) There seemed to be a lot of lean, gaunt wolves trying to kill what few sheep and lambs there were, and they needed help.

The first evening there was a school-house full to hear on conversion, new birth, etc. Some scolding. Second evening, the subject was God's school teacher, Titus 2: 11–15, showing that most of the professors were yet in their A B C's, or abs, and had not learned in the school of Christ far enough to know what the "blessed hope" of the church was, and that in their ignorance they believed that death gave them life, etc. This was like running a stick into a hornet's nest; but a battle was necessary.

Third evening, I showed from Paul, that those who are asleep will not be with the Lord until he comes again; and if this did not comfort them, they were not Christ's believers. At the close of the meeting, some said I was saucy; others took their tallow candles from the desk with a look at me as if I should not have their light to preach in that manner. A few ventured to take tracts. It seemed to me as if some of them wanted a pair of tongs to hold their tract in; for they would change them first in one hand, then the other, then into their hat, then out of that into their pocket.

We went home through the woods, and heard all kinds of remarks about the preaching; but felt clear, thank God. We heard that an Elder took a lame girl into his wagon, and when he found out she believed our truth, he stopped his horse, took her out, and left her by the side of the road, and drove on. Such are the elements that we had to preach to. Sunday, the meeting was down in the Centre, at the meeting-house. The Lord sent down a company of artillery from the north part of the town (Mayberry Hill), and a few scattering soldiers from other places, and we had a victory, and the truth triumphed, and many received the doctrine of the Lord's soon coming, and melted down, and some asked prayers publicly and voluntarily. Sunday evening we had another victory. The perils of the last days were preached to them, and they confessed it was so. Backsliders trembled, and some old ones confessed and started anew. Some had the burden of God's Spirit on them, and did not know what ailed them. Some took pain-killer, and others peppermint lozenges to ease their distress, but nothing helped them, till they took up their cross and confessed, and the distress all left, and they said they slept well. Others swore about the preaching; some contradicted my statement, when I read in Luke about Christ's birth in a stable or barn.

The professors are very ignorant, and so are some of the preachers. One quoted the text, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest"; and said he believed it was in Isaiah. Another told him it was in Jeremiah. These are the ones that have the word of God in them, and don't need the Bible to preach from. Another said the soul went to hell at death, as a punishment for actual sins, and at the judgment came back to the body, and both of them were cast into hell for the influence they had had upon others. This, he said, was the light he had dug out himself; so the people said that hired him. This is heathenism educated. Such are ignorant concerning those that are asleep. See 1 Thess. 4: 13–18.

I made up my mind I was among heathen of a worse class than the freedmen out South, and preached on Ignorance to some of this ignorant class, and left the place feeling assured that the few there that loved the truth had been strengthened, and some had been added to their number, that would hold up the light.

Next to Mayberry Hill, North Casco. I found them all in good working order. I went down to the village, where the Congregationalists meet half of the time, and preached the present truth about the wickedness of this age, and the antichristian doctrines held by professors, etc., and unexpectedly stirred a worse fuss than the one in the south part of the town. Some left while I was preaching, others looked mad; the brethren rejoiced, and every one was stirred up. After meeting, some said I ought to be rode on a rail; others, that I deserved rotten eggs. One man said such preaching would mad the devil. Said a by-stander, "It seems it has." I went with a brother and slept in his shop all alone for choice. O what a stir the truth made in Casco. God blessed me with a quiet mind, and a good night's rest in the shop. This battle opened the eyes of some of the brethren to see it is no use to try to go hand in hand with those that hate the truth, and they have concluded to hold separate meetings after this. We are a separate people, and must be till the Lord comes. HIRAM MUNGER.

LETTER FROM SR. A. E. SMITH.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—As this is the first opportunity I have had to write since my return from Wilbraham, I therefore embrace it. No doubt you are anxious to hear about our mission work, and about our campmeetings. But if I was to write all the particulars, the Crisis would not hold it all in several weeks; therefore, as usual, I shall condense it as much as possible.

First, then, a few words about Wilbraham camp. Sister Boide and I arrived on the ground on Monday, about two o'clock. We met with Bro. and Sr. Hudson. They took us to their tent, and gave us a good dinner, which refreshed us much after traveling so far, and being hungry and tired. God bless them. We spent an hour in christian conversation with them and Sisters Smith and Whiting, two of the Lord's little ones. Truly we felt it was blessed to have the privilege of talking with those of the same precious faith. We felt rested, and took a walk to look around the ground, and see how many had arrived that we knew. We met several with whom we had most blessed seasons the year before. We heard singing in the Boston tent, and drew near. We knew by the voices it was a children's meeting. We were all right then, for we both love to labor among little children. A lady was addressing the children. I wondered who she was. I listened, and such language,—O, thought I, this is one of God's women; and as I listened to her, while she talked to these dear little ones, I thought I was a child too; and my heart yearned towards her, and I loved her as an old friend. After the children sang one of the sweet songs of Zion, this dear sister prayed, and I thought who can this sister be. I could refrain no longer. I asked one next to me who it was. She said it was Sister Hastings. O, thought I, is it possible, after so many years desiring to become acquainted with Sister H., shall I now have the desire of my heart? I listened to hear her pray. How she talked to Jesus about these little lambs. My heart became knit to hers, like Jonathan's with David's. If ever in all my life I saw any one that I loved at first sight, that was the time, and right there in the tent. I was melted to tenderness and thankfulness for christian fellowship. We then went to supper, and found the dear brethren and sisters were just as willing to make us comfortable as they were last year. We sat down to a good supper, and clean dishes, and every thing all right, and had to say, Thank God for campmeeting, and people that have really got religion.

We want to hear preaching, and from them to stay in Bro. Gage's tent, as Bro. Hastings had not his pilgrim tent ready. We had a good sleep, and in the morning felt like taking field and working for Jesus. The brethren and sisters came pouring in all day, and the meetings increased in numbers and in power. Truly, I never heard such experiences, from the little child to the aged christian, before. All were baptized with the same Spirit. O what a treat it was to me, laboring as I do among those that know nothing about the Lord's coming, and some that are just receiving the truth, and others that oppose it. But here I could sit and drink, and weep, and rejoice in the blessed hope of Jesus' soon coming; and I felt I would love to stay there till he did come.

Sister Benson, one of my colored children, arrived on Tuesday, she being too late for the cars the morning we left. I was glad to have her hear those blessed experiences. I knew it would build her up and make her strong in the faith, which it did, and she has come home like a giant, to fight manfully for the faith once delivered to the saints. Praise the Lord for the truth.

On Thursday, at one o'clock, we held our Association meeting, in Bro. Hastings' large tent. There was not as large a representation of sisters as we should have liked, but we had a good time, and the Lord was with us. There seemed to be neither male nor female; but all were interested in the great work of saving souls. There were several reports read, but we only had an hour, and of course we had to hurry things most too fast; but still the Lord was with us. After we heard some of the sisters report from their different fields of labor, Bro. H. Campbell, from Green Point, who has labored with us more or less for a year, spoke and cheered our hearts. Bro. Himes then addressed the meeting in reference to mission work, especially among the colored people. He related some of his experience while he was among the freedmen, which encouraged our hearts to press on.

The friends of mission work took up a collection for us, and we adjourned till next day, at the same hour. Many of the brethren and sisters took us by the hand after the meeting, and bid us God speed. I never wanted to get away from the multitude and weep before the Lord in thankfulness in all my life, as I did that day. It was as much as I could do to keep back my tears, when I thought for a moment how I am used all the year round by opposers to the truth and haters of the colored race, and what sorrow and suffering I have to endure, and then have these friends speak so kindly to me was something I was not used to. But I thanked God that once a year I could hear a kind word and a "God bless you." Praise the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me praise his holy name. I thought what hath God wrought, when I saw the spirit of the brethren towards the women of the gospel,—they spoke so kindly. One brother took hold of my hand and wept like a child. O, said he, if I could only do like the rest are doing, but I have not the talent; but one thing I can do, I have the means to help, and I shall give more freely than I ever did before. There did not seem to be that bitter, jealous feeling among our brethren that we had to contend with in past times. Again I say, praise the Lord.

On Friday, at one o'clock, we met again. We heard the reports of other sisters, after which, Bro. Himes spoke again. Bro. Rogers, of Poultry, Vt., and Bro. McKinstry, and other friends, then took up a collection for our mission work. The two collections amounted to $110.15. We then closed the meeting. Many of the friends wished us to have another meeting, but I felt weary and tired, and I wanted to get into and enjoy the other meetings.

On Saturday morning, at 9 o'clock, we held a private business meeting in Bro. Hudson's tent, and elected our officers, which you will have seen from the secretary's report. By request, we had a meeting on Sunday, at one o'clock, when I related a part of the experience of Sr. Howard, the slave woman, and her present circumstances. The friends took up a collection for her, to bring her and the other preaching sisters to our Nyack campmeeting. They took up $57.00, which I have given as requested.

We came home on Monday. Sister Boide was taken very low with the poison that she had on the camp-ground. For three days she was blind, and suffered much for seventeen days: but the Lord heard prayer, and she is restored to health again. Thus, between nursing and attending to our mission work, and getting ready for the Nyack camp, I was almost worn out before the meeting commenced. But on Monday I repaired to the camp-ground. But few had arrived, and none of the preaching sisters which I expected on Saturday. I was about half sick, and very nervous, and the Devil says, Now you have got yourself in a nice fix. You will have to take charge of the camp, and do all the preaching. Now what will you do? Sister Boide is sick, and how are you going to get along? You might have had plenty of preachers, but you wanted all women. Now you see you haven't got any; it's good enough for you. The people will come from far and near, and you will have no preachers. The Devil wiped me all the way home. I went home tired and weary and sick, trusting in the Lord for help. My daughter got supper ready, and went down to the boat to see if the preachers were coming. Sure enough, the Lord had heard my prayers, and saw my tears of disappointment. When the boat landed, there were three preachers, and three other friends from Philadelphia. As sick as I was, I had to praise God, and thank him that he had not forgotten me in my troubles. Next morning, we opened the camp at ten o'clock, and had a good beginning. Bro. Campbell, from Green Point, and Bro. Flavell, from Newark, N. J., came to take part in the meeting, so we were all right.

It seems to me that the Lord sent these two brethren to this meeting. I wish all the readers of the Crisis could have been at this meeting, and seen with what breathless attention these people listened to the blessed hope, as given by these dear brethren. After the meeting closed, the pastor of the church here said to me, "How I do miss those brethren. I feel I have lost something, I feel so lonesome now they are gone. They have stolen my heart. I have fallen in love with them and their doctrine. They are so kind. They must really believe what they preach. O, if I only understood the Bible as they do, I would give the world, and shout and preach till Jesus comes. I believe they are right, and we are near the judgment. O may we be ready to hear the trumpet sound."

It seems strange. Every sermon on that ground was on the judgment, but two. If it had been previously arranged, it could not have suited better, and yet one did not know what the other was going to preach about, which shows that the Lord was in it. Truly we had a blessed meeting.

On Sunday, the crowd was immense, but we had no trouble to keep order, and our meeting closed with the best of consequences. As far as the truth was concerned, among those that had never heard it before, much prejudice was broken down, and many wondered if these things were so.

I then went to the city and attended to our mission work, and prepared for the Peekskill camp, which commenced on Friday, Sept. 14th. On Saturday, there was a new recruit of preaching women from Philadelphia arrived, and took their seats in the stand. At one time I counted ten which sat side by side, each one ready to preach when her turn came. The first convert was a Roman Catholic, a young man about eighteen years of age, and it raised quite a stir in the village among that class. His mother and sisters were very indignant. His companions that worked in the foundry with him threatened to break up the meeting, but the Lord is stronger than man, and we had no trouble from them. A man and his wife were converted, and others. Among the rest was Bro. Burbank's little Maria, which Sister Helginson brought with her to spend a few weeks with me at Nyack. Though it rained four days in the week, yet we had a good meeting. We kept it over two Sundays, and the people all seemed profited by the meeting, and wished us to keep it longer. A brother of the Methodist church said that meetings had been full in all the churches. We had invitations from several churches, both white and colored, to speak to them in reference to our hope, which we shall do as soon as we can get time, the Lord helping us.

We closed our meeting on Monday morning, and took the boat for New York. Our expense of bringing the preachers was eighty dollars, and we raised in contributions toward paying it, $42.50. We had singing, exultation and experience all the way down the river to New York. The singing sounded splendidly on the water.

The next morning the Philadelphians left for home. May the Lord go with them, and bless all their labors. Amen.

Since my return home, I have hired a whole floor next to our mission room, and knocked it all into one, which makes a large room for the poor and halt and blind to come and find Jesus to the saving of their souls.

I received at Wilbraham, in two collections, $110.15. For Sister Howard and others, $7.00. From private individuals $63.78.

Yours in highways and hedges,

CONFESSION.

"I acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. I said I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin."—Ps. 32: 5.

We can hardly conceive how any one can believe in the existence of God, and yet think they can hide their evil deeds from him. Yet we read of those that seek to "hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, and they say, Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?"—Isa. 29: 15. But let all such remember that "the darkness and the light are both alike to Him," and all their works of darkness shall be brought to light.

All have sinned; but the difference between the saved and the lost sinners is just this: one class confess and forsake their sin, while the other class continue in sin. Confession of sin is enforced by both the Old and New Testaments. As without shedding of blood there is no remission, so without confession there is do forgiveness.

Let us not try to excuse ourselves before the Lord. If there is any palliating circumstance, it is known to him. We will confess freely, fully, and to the utmost, and plead the blood of Christ only, for that alone can avail to obtain our pardon.

MORE ABOUT THE "JEWELS."

A good sister thinks I made a mistake about the "borrowed gold." She says it was taken to make a calf. We know there was a calf made; but supposing it was made of the borrowed gold,—that was not what God intended they should do with it. He had a better use for it. The gold, however, was not all put into the calf—only what was in their ears; for after the calf was destroyed, the people were commanded to strip themselves of their ornaments before they appeared in the presence of God. And when material was being collected for the Tabernacle, "they came both men and women, as many as were willing hearted, and brought bracelets, and earrings, and tablets, all jewels of gold." This shows that the jewels were wanted for this very purpose. They took a portion of the gold which was designed to adorn God's tabernacle and made a calf and worshiped it. The gold was good, but they made an unholy use of it. 'Twas not the gold they were to worship, nor the adornings of the tabernacle, but God who visited the tabernacle.

Let us see if there are not some calf-worshipers at the present day. There are those who get a portion of truth, some particular point of doctrine. It is good, pure gold, well calculated to help adorn the church of God. But they get that one jewel and hold it up and present it everywhere, at all times, and seem to think that one bit of gold worth more than all the rest of the jewels that were ever dug from the mine, and our salvation depends on believing that one point. I think they have made a calf of a portion of the gold. If we have a little gold, give it place in the building among the rest of the adornings, and do not try to hammer and stretch out that one piece large enough to cover all God's tabernacle.

There are others who get the truth in theory. They are ready to advocate it, yea, and fight for it; but their hearts are destitute of the grace of God and of Jesus. Ah! they have taken the ornaments of the tabernacle, and made a calf of the pure gold and are worshiping it. It was the gold in the ears of the people which was made into a calf. We want the truth further down than our heads or ears; that is not a safe place to carry the gold; we must have it in our hearts.

We must not worship doctrines, but God, who has revealed to us his mighty, glorious plan. Those who worshiped the calf were stripped of all their ornaments when they appeared before the Lord. If we make a god of the gold, or leave the weightier matters to contend about trifles, we shall be stripped of all our outward adornings, and be left naked when Jesus comes, and we appear before the Lord.

The first idol which Israel worshiped was made of pure gold, but they seemed to get a taste for idolatry; and after they settled in the land of Canaan, and broke God's commands by mingling with a people who sought unto familiar spirits (or spirit mediums), they became so corrupt and degenerate, they would worship gods made of brass, wood, or stone. O, let us be careful and not worship doctrines, nor be too eager for some new thing. Much that is worn for gold at the present day is nothing but brass, and if we begin to worship gold we may be enticed to worship brass.

There are many doctrines at this time—doctrines of men and devils. There are gods many, and Satan transforms himself into an angel of light. A multitude of spirits are abroad: we must try them by the word. If they speak not according to that, there is no light in them.

God help us to worship him as the giver of every good gift, and not make idols of the blessings which he gives us. May we make a good use of our gold, that we may appear before the Lord, clothed and ornamented for the marriage supper of the Lamb.

FROM KITTIE.

Bro. Grant:—I have been a reader of your paper for two years. I like it very much. I love the Holy Bible, for I learn to do to others as I would that they should do to me. I often think of the blessed Savior, who came down from heaven and suffered and died that we might live. How thankful we should be to him, the giver of every good and precious gift. Although I am young, I know that I am not too young to die, and should be prepared when called upon to meet my Judge.

Kittie, press on in the service of the Lord. Jesus loves you. May the Savior help you to be very good.—ED.

SONG
Decanter.

There was an old decan-ter, and its mouth was gaping wide; the rosy wine had ebbed away, and left its crystal side;
and the wind
went humming, humming,
up and down the wind it blew, and through the reed-like, hollow neck,
the wildest notes it blew. I placed it in the window, where the blast was blowing free, and fancied that its pale mouth sang the queerest strains to me. "They tell me—puny conquerors! the Plague has slain his ten, and War his hundred thousand of the very best of men; but I"—'twas thus the bottle spake—"but I have conquered more than all your famous conquerors, so feared and famed of yore. Then come, ye youths and maidens all, come drink from out my cup, the beverage that dulls the brain, and burns the spirits up; that puts to shame our conquerors, that slay their scores below; for this has deluged millions with the lava tide of wo. Though in the path of battle, darkest streams of blood may roll; yet while I killed the body, I have damned the very soul. The cholera, the plague, the sword, such ruin never wrought as I, in mirth or malice, on the innocent have brought. And still I breathe upon them, and they shrink before my breath, and year by year my thousands tread the dusty way of death."

"I MEAN TO BE A MAN."

A gentleman once met a little fellow seven years of age, on his way to school, with his book under his arms. Stopping the little fellow for a moment, he said to him:

"Well, my little boy, what do you intend to be when you grow up?"

He had asked the question a great many times before, and some boys had told him they meant to be farmers, some merchants, some ministers; but this little boy's answer was better than them all.

"I mean to be a man," he said.

It matters but little whether he be a farmer, or merchant, or minister, if he be a man, he will be successful, and be loved and respected. We remember the old adage, that "boys will be boys," and we think it strange some times that men will not be men. Read your Bibles; ask your parents and teachers, children, what makes a man, and, like this little boy, resolve to be a man in all things.

Nancy ——

OPEN EYES.

The school, consisting of many little boys and girls, was assembled, and all were engaged in their studies, when a stranger gentleman entered, and at the invitation of the teacher, took his seat. After they had read round, and spelled their lessons, the gentleman was asked to "make some remarks." Instead of doing this, he simply said "I don't want to talk to them, but with them. I want to know who have eyes, and who have none. And now, I want you all to think a minute, and tell me what you saw in coming to school this morning. Who will tell me what he saw?" No answer. Turning to a fine looking little fellow, he said, "My boy, what did you see?"

"I didn't see nothing."

What! come all the way with your eyes shut? Didn't you see the road you came on?"

"Yes, sir."

"And the great bridge you came over?"

"Yes, sir."

"Very well, you did see something, then."

"O, I didn't know you meant such things. I thought you meant new things."

"Well, you get my meaning now. Who else can tell me what he saw?"

"I saw a spotted calf," cried one.

"And I saw a big flock of little ducks swimming," said another.

And so one said one thing, and one another thing, and some of the sights seemed so common, that all the children laughed. It was a great while before he could get them to talk, and even the teacher seemed surprised to hear her scholars talking about common things.

"Now," said the gentleman, "I believe I saw everything that has been mentioned, and some things besides. When I was a boy," (here the children looked on him as if they wanted to say, "is it possible, sir, that you were ever a boy?") "my teacher used to tell us always to 'keep our eyes open,' and thus see and note whatever we met with. Did none of you see that flock of wild geese that flew over you about the time you were coming to school this morning?"

"O, yes, sir, we saw them."

"And yet none of you mentioned them?"

"We forgot them, sir."

"And that huge, poisonous adder which somebody killed on the road?"

"Yes," sir, we all saw that, and looked at it."

"Very well, but you did not so see these things as to remember them. Now, as I was coming along I saw a prisoner shut up, and one who was free came and stole the prisoner's food, snatching it out his mouth. Before I could interfere he had carried it off and was hidden among the trees. The poor prisoner uttered some notes of complaint, and I am afraid the thief will come again and rob him; and though I felt sorry for the prisoner, and know the name of the thief, yet I could do nothing. But if I had had a gun, I do believe I should have shot the thief dead on the spot."

The children began to look wild, and to wonder what kind of man the visitor was.

"I will explain a little more. The prisoner was a beautiful canary-bird shut up in his wire cage, and hanging in the piazza of the white house on the hill; and the thief was Mr. Catbird, who darted out of the bushes, seized the food, and was back again in a moment." The children, here laughed, and one little fellow cried out "capital!"

"Now, then, my children, you see what I mean by having your eyes open, as you come and go to school, and as you pass along in life. One man, you will notice, is very interesting in conversation, and he can tell of a thousand things he has seen and heard,—because his eyes have always been open; while another man equally old, has nothing to say, has noted nothing and remembered nothing. It is just so about your lessons. I have known scholars to read over the lessons again and again, and yet attach no meaning whatever to them. So it is in hearing a sermon,—have the eyes of the mind open, and make the ears to be eyes, and mark and remember what you hear. And especially I want you to read the Bible with your eyes open, and as long as you live notice and remember all you read in that holy book. And now I want you all to look at me, notice just how I am dressed, and go home and tell your parents just how the stranger looked, and all—mind now—all that he has said to you."

The stranger arose and bowed, and the school arose and bowed, and all said "I wish he would come again; I guess he would find my eyes open after this!"—Sunday School Times.

THE RIGHT KIND OF A BOY.

"Take a drink, bub."

"No, I thank you."

"Yes, yes, take some beer. It will do you good."

"O no, I can't," said George; "I belong to the Band of Hope."

The men looked at each other, but no one tried any more to get him to drink.

His mother had sent him to the store to look for his papa, and that was the way he came to be there. While he waited for his papa, one of the men spoke up, "Well, I say, boy, if you won't drink, there is a cent to buy some nuts." "Thank you, sir, for the cent, but I do not spend my cents for nuts, I put them in the bank." When he was gone the men looked at each other, and one said, "I say, Jack, I think it would be as well for all of us to leave off beer and put our cents into the bank," and so they all thought, and agreed to do it.

As for his papa, when he went home that night and saw his wife and babe and thought of all that they had to suffer, he felt very bad. At last he made up his mind to sign the pledge and drink no more, and then they were all happy.—Picture Papers.

A WAY TO GET ALONG.

"How do you like arithmetic?" said Mr. Phelps to John Perkins, as he came home from school with his slate under his arm.

"Not very well."

"How do you get along with it?"

"Well enough. Samuel Price does my sums for me.

"Why don't you get him to eat your dinner for you?"

"I couldn't live without eating. I shouldn't grow any if I didn't eat.'

"Your mind won't grow any if you don't use it. It would be just as reasonable for you to get Samuel to eat your dinner for you, as to ask him to do your studying."

THE EVILS OF TOBACCO.

A boy who smokes or chews, early and frequently, or in any way uses large quantities of tobacco, is never known to make a man of much energy, and generally lacks muscular and physical, as well as mental power.

Boys, do you want to be anything in the world? Shun tobacco. It injures the teeth. It produces an unhealthy state of the throat and lungs, hurts the stomach, blasts the brain and nerves, stops and dwarfs the growth, leads to idleness, and often to dishonesty and habits of strong drink. Shun tobacco, boys, as you would the most baneful poison.

I WON'T GAMBLE.

Two boys had each ten cents. "Come, Charlie," said Tom, "let us have a game of marbles, and stake our ten cents."

"Charlie, Charlie, show your colors," cried a third boy. Charlie jumped up.

"I won't gamble, Tom," said Charlie, "for it is a sin; if you win my ten cents I shall feel very bad, and if I win yours you will feel bad, and I shall be sorry; so let us keep our money until we can spend it for something we want, or at any rate, for something to show for it."

PREPARE TO MEET JESUS.

AIR.—"Meet me in heaven."

Here in this world of sorrow, where many ills abound,
The love of many waxing cold, truth trampled on the ground,
A band of humble pilgrims are sending forth the cry—
The Savior soon is coming, is coming very nigh.

Cho.—Jesus soon is coming, is the watchman's cry;
Prepare, prepare to meet him, to meet him in the sky.

Oh sinner, why stand doubting? the Savior asks you why;
Repent, believe, and be baptized, and not forever die;
He surely will accept you, his promises are sure,
Go unto him just as you are, and he will make you pure.

For when the last loud trumpet resounds from shore to shore,
The Archangel voice will thunder—"Time hence shall be no more";
Probation will be ended, the day of grace be past,
No time then for repentance, the judgment's come at last.

The saints will hail with gladness the coming of that day,
Rejoice to see their Savior, who's been so long away;
They'll meet their loved and lost ones who sleep beneath the sod,
And spend the endless ages forever with their God.

Cho.—Soon with that Savior the saints will ever be;
And roam the new earth o'er and o'er through all eternity.

THE "WOMAN IN THE WILDERNESS."

When brethren, equally honest, differ on points in their faith, these points of difference should be discussed in a kind, christian spirit, in order that the truth may be arrived at, and our faith thus strengthened.

Many suppose that the "woman" that flew "into the wilderness," brought to view in Rev. 12, symbolizes the true church. That this "woman" represents the true church when first brought to view, or before she receives the gift of the "two wings," by which acquisition she is enabled to reach the "wilderness," I readily admit; but that the true church was ever in a symbolic wilderness, I cannot believe. The "woman" is, of course, a symbol, and therefore the "two wings of a great eagle" given unto her are symbolic also, and must refer to something that was added to the church which she did not possess in the beginning.

These "two wings," says Dr. Clarke, "refer to the two grand, independent divisions of the Roman empire, which took place January 17th, A. D. 395, and were given to the woman, Christianity being the established religion of both empires." Here for the first time the church began to affiliate with the governments of earth, which was contrary to the teachings of Christ when on the earth. The historian says that "from this period the christian church was loaded with honors, wealth and power; nor did her virtue ever sustain a severer trial. The chief dignitaries of the empire could scarcely do less than imitate their master; and christianity soon became a necessary qualification for public office. The church now no longer appeared in her ANCIENT SIMPLICITY AND PURITY; lords and princes were among her converts; and she was dressed in robes of state."—(Whelpley's Compend.) We see from this the result of this acquisition of power, and this was the stepping-stone that led finally to her being firmly seated on the "scarlet colored beast."

The woman and the two wings being symbolic, of course her flying with those wings (using these empires for her support and maintenance), and the "wilderness" into which she thus flies must be symbolic also; and the idea that the "wilderness" is literal and refers to any local position on earth, it seems to us, does violence to the whole mode of interpreting symbolic prophecy; for if one portion is symbolic, the whole is, and the "wilderness" can only symbolize her now barren condition, as her former glorious condition when she had just been "espoused as a chaste virgin to Christ" was represented by her being "clothed with the sun," etc. O mighty change! Here was the "falling away" spoken of by Paul, and the beginning of the development of that "man of sin" that was finally to command the adoration of all men.

But the Revelator is carried by the angel "into the WILDERNESS," and there he sees the woman in all the lowest depths of her fallen condition, firmly allied with the civil power and "drunken with the blood of the saints," etc. John saw but one woman go into the wilderness, and she flew there with the "two wings"; and he saw but one woman in the wilderness, and there is but one wilderness; therefore the woman that John saw in the wilderness "drunken with the blood of saints" is the one that flew there by the aid of the "two wings."

Some say that the woman that fled was the persecuted church, while the one on the scarlet colored beast was the persecuting power; therefore the church that fled must be the true church. But let us see from what power and at what time she received her persecution.

The "woman that fled into the wilderness" was persecuted by the "dragon" or "serpent" before the gift of the two wings in 395, while the persecution of the true church by the Catholic power did not commence till the beginning of the 1260 years under Justinian. But again. The persecution of the true church during this long period was by the "beast like a leopard" of Rev. 13; a far different power from the "dragon" or "serpent." Some suppose the "serpent" to be the literal devil. But if that be the case, we are, as Dr. Clarke says, necessarily led to the conclusion that the great apostate spirit is a monster having seven heads and ten horns, and that he has a tail with which he drags after him the "third part of the stars of heaven"; also that he casts out waters as a flood after the woman or church.

Again, in the 13th chapter, this dragon or serpent is said to give up "his power, seat and great authority" to the "beast like a leopard." We think none will admit that the literal devil has as yet abdicated his seat or throne. Again, when was any church, true or false, ever "fed and nourished" from the face of the devil for 1260 years? This dragon or serpent is of course symbolic, and represents the heathen Roman empire, at whose hands the early christian church suffered the most terrible persecution during the first three centuries. It was by the gift of the two wings, or, in other words, the acquisition of the mighty protecting arm of these two empires, after the conversion of Constantine, that shielded her from persecution and caused her to apostatize and become the "mother of harlots and abomination of the earth," or the mouth-piece of the "beast like a leopard."

Again, after John sees the woman fly into the wilderness with her two wings, he sees all those who remained aloof from the apostasy as the "REMNANT OF HER SEED which keep the commandments of God and have the testimony of Jesus Christ."—Rev. 12: 17. A "remnant" is a small portion left after the greater body has been disposed of; so in this case, the remnant of this woman's seed are constituted such by keeping "the commandments of God, and having the testimony of Jesus Christ." This proves positively that the "woman" is not now the true church, else we should have no such remnant brought to view. The woman apostatizes and finally becomes the persecuting power, while the little remnant remains true and suffers persecution at the hands of her kingly paramours for not following her example. Now if the woman's flying into the wilderness fulfilled the command of Jesus to his disciples to "flee" when the "abomination of desolation" was "set up"; then it follows that all those who "kept the commandments of God and had the testimony of Jesus Christ" had to remain behind, inasmuch as they had NO WINGS.

It is true that Gibbon states that "Justinian was punished with the flight of his most faithful subjects"; but this was the flight of that portion of the REMNANT that was fortunate enough to effect their escape, in obedience to the command of Jesus. Again, the woman that fled into the "wilderness" was to be "fed and nourished" from the face of the serpent after her entrance into the wilderness for 1260 years, while the true church was to be "trodden under foot" during the same period, which is directly opposite from being "fed and nourished." But, says one, her place is "prepared of God," therefore she must be the true church. But God has prepared a place for the devil and his angels, and all wicked persons; yet that does not change their moral condition in the least.

The fact that this woman's place is a symbolic "wilderness," when correctly understood, is the very best evidence of her apostasy. God does not "feed her there," but "they" (her earthly lovers) feed and nourish her upon the "blood of the saints" of God. The poor down-trodden church of Christ did not follow the "woman" into the "wilderness," and rather than do this, they were offered as a sacrifice upon the altar of her faith.

But again, says one, Is not the true church represented as being like a "flying eagle" during the 1260 years brought to view under the opening of the fourth seal? We answer, Yes; "as the eagle is ever on the alert, timid, and ready to flee at the approach of danger; so the suffering church of Christ, during a great portion of the dark ages of persecution, had to flee and hide in the mountain fastnesses." But we remark that this represents the church as using what naturally belonged to her (as wings are natural to the eagle) to escape her persecutors; but the "two wings" given to the "woman" was an unnatural or unlawful acquisition of power to the church, and elevated her above the persecutions of the serpent or dragon, while the true church endeavored to flee from the leopard beast.

Under the "Thyatira" state of the church, which begins at the same time that the fourth seal is opened, A. D. 532, we have the woman and the remnant both brought to view. "That woman Jezebel" is represented as seducing some by her false teachings; but there is a remnant who have not this doctrine, upon which the Savior says shall be put no other burden. The word "Thyatira" signifies an "offering or sacrifice," and fitly represents the true church as being sacrificed to the rapacious appetite of the mystical Jezebel or Catholic church.

When the fifth seal is opened, the "souls of them that were slain for the word of God and for the testimony which they held" are seen under the altar, and the characteristics for which they were slain are what constituted the "remnant of the woman's seed" (Rev. 12: 17); but to render it more positive still, the angel informs John that it is the "woman IN THE WILDERNESS" (Rev. 17: 3) that was "drunken with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus."

This is in harmony with Daniel's prophecy. In Dan. 8th, we have the civil power that was to take away the "daily sacrifice" or true worship, and set up the "abomination of desolation" in its stead; and in verse 12th it is said that this power is in alliance with an "host" (church) that had been "given over for the transgression against the daily sacrifice" or true worship.—(Marginal reading). Again, in Dan. 11: 30–33, we have the same king or power represented as having "intelligence with them that forsake the holy covenant." In both instances we have an apostasy of those who had been once true, as no one can forsake what they have never been allied with.

Again (vers. 32 and 33), "And such as do wickedly against the covenant shall be corrupt by flatteries, but the people that do know their God (the remnant of Rev. 12: 17) shall be strong and do exploits. And they that understand among the people shall fall by the sword and by flame, by captivity and by spoil, many days." Here it is seen that the tribulation was brought upon the true church by a union of the civil power with a church which had been once true, but had "forsaken the holy covenant." This harmonizes with the book of Revelation exactly. We call the Catholic church an apostate church, which reveals the fact that she must have been once true in order to have apostatized.

Thus we are not left in doubt about the character of this woman, and this renders all plain. The apostate woman was "fed and nourished" from the face of the "dragon," or infidel power, for 1260 years, and at the same time drunken with the blood of the saints; for the serpent or infidel power was compelled to embrace and profess the Catholic faith, and cease their hostility to christianity, in A. D. 532, by Justinian's edict, who as the head of the great empire was the first Catholic war-making power who compelled "all men" to "embrace and profess the Catholic faith" in "three months," which not only began the war on the true church, but lay the dragon or infidel power crouching at the feet of the "woman" or Catholic church.—See Bower's History of Popes. vol. 1, p. 334.

The serpent was to be held in subjection for 1260 years, at the end of which period he must of course be released from his captivity and begin again his persecution on the Catholic church, as she was to be protected from him but 1260 years. Consequently we find France, as the great serpent or infidel power of modern times, beginning its awful work of desolating the Catholic church in 1792, until, as the historian says, "she remained an appalling spectacle from the Atlantic to the Adriatic." Surely she is no longer "fed and nourished from the face of the serpent." The church of Rome was, during this fearful revolution, stripped of all possessions, and thousands of its clergy and adherents were inhumanly massacred by the serpent or infidel power of France, while the true church was wholly released from captivity, and has since enjoyed full and free toleration. If the "woman" had represented the true church, we should have seen the infidel power making war on the saints, instead of the Catholics, at the end of the 1260 years.

Let us be humble and prize truth above all things else. We are now standing within a few months of the great day of wrath to the wicked, and the glorious consummation of the christian's hope. The 1335 days will, in our humble judgment, end in 1867, at the end of which Daniel will stand in his lot with all whose names are found written in the Book.

THIS GENERATION.

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken."

Now mark the declaration in connection with these signs. "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."—Luke 21. "So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of heaven is nigh at hand." "Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled." What generation but the present generation has witnessed the darkening of the sun and moon, the moon turn to blood, and the falling of the stars?

What did Christ say should take place before these signs, and events in connection, occurred? "But before all these, they shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you, delivering you up to the synagogues, and into prisons, being brought before kings and rulers, for my name's sake."—Luke 21. "For there shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be."—Matt. 24.

The greatest tribulation to the church of Christ, as recorded, commenced about A. D. 532, and continued for nearly 1260 years; when, as is stated, over 50,000,000 of martyrs fell, and sealed their testimony with their blood: thus bringing us down to the time of the darkening of the sun, and other signs and events following, in connection with the coming of the Son of man; when it is declared in the connection, "This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled." Mark this declaration,—"Immediately after the tribulation of those days, shall the sun be darkened," etc. Now what generation but this present generation has ever witnessed the fulfillment of these signs? May the following account make its due impress:

On the 19th day of May A. D. 1780, the sun was darkened, and, as stated by an eye witness, "it was midnight darkness at noon day." Such a darkness, probably, was never known before since the crucifixion of our Lord. The night following was intensely dark, also, although the moon had fulled the day before; and when the intense darkness of the night had abated, "the moon had the appearance of blood."

The next great event or sign was the falling of the stars, which took place Nov. 13th, A. D. 1833; and, as stated, "was the greatest exhibition of celestial fireworks ever witnessed." The prophet Joel spoke of these events which should take place, confirmed by Peter also, who says, "And it shall come pass in the last days, saith God. . . . And I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke. . . . The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come." The opening seals of Revelation 6th, also confirm the same. "And the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood. . . . And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind."

Let us inquire what are the next great events we are to look for, which follow these? "And the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. . . . And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Christ has also said, "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, whoso readeth let him understand." Are we not to understand? "The wise shall understand."

What has the prophet Daniel said in regard to this? "And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days." Christ furthermore has stated, "But for the elect's sake, those days shall be shortened."

What was the abomination that maketh desolate? Evidently the church of Rome, as the Revelator says, "And upon her forehead was a name written, Mystery, Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth." Evidently a desolating power also: "And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and the martyrs of Jesus. . . . And in her also was found the blood of the prophets, and of the saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth."

This was evidently the persecuting power of Papal Rome, which seemed to be fully and completely developed, set up, and established by the Roman Emperor Justinian, in A. D. 532. And from that time onward for over twelve centuries, before the tribulation of those days was succeeded by the darkening of the sun in 1780, let the millions of martyrs who fell victims to its desolating power determine its true character, and the fitness of the appellation of "Abomination that maketh desolate." And also wonderfully fulfilling the prophetic declaration of Daniel,—"And shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time" (or 1260 years). This being consummated, what follows? "But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end." Did not this take place in regard to the papacy in 1792, and fully verified for the last seventy-five years? "Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming."

Furthermore, in connection with "the setting of the abomination that maketh desolate," is this announcement, "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." This declaration, in connection with the preceding passage, seems fully to determine and settle the point of inquiry in regard to the length of time from the setting up of the abomination "to the resurrection"—"to the end of these wonders"—"to the time of the end"—to the time of blessedness, when Daniel shall "stand in his lot at the end of the days."

Again let me inquire, Is not this the generation, and the only generation, that has witnessed these signs, which have all so wonderfully occurred in their order, beginning with the darkening of the sun in 1780? Was not this "immediately after the tribulation of those days?" Now let me repeat what Christ declares in connection with these signs: "So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it (be) is near, even at the door." "Verily I say unto you, THIS GENERATION SHALL NOT PASS TILL ALL THESE THINGS BE FULFILLED."

Brother, sister, are you ready? Are you ready? The year of our Lord 1866, with its momentous interests, is swiftly passing. The year 1867 is hastening on. The hand on the dial of the clock of time seems pointing to the last moments, swiftly numbering, soon to usher in executive scenes. Is every thing on the altar, and no part of the price kept back? Shall the Judge say to you, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me?" Shall you be found among the wise virgins? Are you building on the rock? Are you like a pruned branch, bearing fruit? Are you dead to sin, to the world, and do you abide in Christ? Are you cleansed from all unrighteousness? Do you pray much in your closet, and fast occasionally? Are you a shining light in the world, improving your talent, and disseminating these solemn, dispensational truths of God's word? Are you pressing toward the mark for the prize? Are you fighting the good fight, finishing your course, and keeping the faith? Are you sanctified wholly, and holy in all manner of conversation? Are you ready to be called to the marriage supper of the Lamb?

Dear friends of the various churches, do you believe Christ's words are all true, and will be strictly fulfilled? Will you longer say, "My lord delayeth his coming," and not take heed to these things, as he commanded? Unbelieving Israel, though at the border of the promised land, failed to enter in. Dear impenitent friend, careless, worldly-minded professor, backslider, these moments are golden moments; will you lose them forever? Must it be said of you, "They are joined to their idols, let them alone." Awake! repent!

"Awake, before the dreadful morning rise;
Change your vain thoughts, your crooked ways amend;
Haste to the Savior, make the Judge your friend."

STRAIGHTFORWARDNESS ESSENTIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN.

(Concluded.)

Now, we are not delivered from darkness, while we do the works of darkness; nor from the power of Satan, while we serve him. Untruth, and dishonesty are among the works of darkness; and those who do such works, as much serve the devil as if they were to bow down and worship him. Let us, therefore, upon whom the name of Christ is called, cast away the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light. The tree is known by its fruits; and it is by the difference of the fruit they bring forth, in their life and conversation, that the true and the false professor are distinguished from each other. In doctrine, and in all the outward observances of their common faith, they may agree; but there will always be some manifest and decided tokens in the difference of the fruit they bring forth, that one is the good and the other the corrupt tree. "As the man thinketh, so is he;" and what is passing within, will certainly, in some way or another, be visible without.

Life abounds with circumstances calculated to manifest what are the real principles of most persons, whether professors or profane; and whenever there is a desire of glorifying God, the transactions of every day will yield opportunity for doing so; as they will also afford means for serving the flesh, the world, and the devil. And herein is the conflict of the christian. Something will always have to be sacrificed by the man that seeks to serve God with a pure heart. David refused to offer burnt offerings unto the Lord his God, of that which cost him nothing; and so must all who aim at obtaining the testimony which David received, even to be persons "after God's own heart!"

The great point is, to have the heart established with grace; for true religion is heart, and not head work. Many persons (perhaps almost all who pretend to reflect about any thing) have a notion that truth is a precious thing; and they may find pleasure in the study of it. But knowledge, though useful and valuable, will not be sufficient, of itself, to defend the soul from the attacks of Satan. His business is with the heart, the affections, the will; and provided he can but lead and govern there, he cares little what occupies and amuses the understanding. He has baits suited to the besetting sin of every person; and whilst that sin, be it what it may, remains unmortified, he has an avenue of approach, and power to lead, and mislead, which is not to be resisted by that which is merely held as a notion in the head.

The christian who desires "to adorn the doctrine of God, his Savior in all things," must receive the truth in the love of it; and adopt, as a leading principle, a courageous and persevering habit of self-denial. Nothing more completely baffles and foils our subtle enemy than this. It is to snap asunder all his gins and snares, as Samson broke the bonds of the Philistines; to cut the thread of all his sophistry, and to render nugatory all his contrivances. Nothing is left him to work upon in the man, who, in obedience to the commands of his Lord and master, stands in a continual contrariety to the will of the flesh. As the root of all real piety, let us dwell in the fear of the Lord, which "is the beginning of wisdom." Nothing else can purify the heart from evil, especially when there is a particular inclination to the practice of deceit. Most other sins have such broad features of wickedness as to be recognized on their first appearance; as in the case of anger, envy, pride, etc., which a regard to the opinion of our fellow-creatures will sometimes suffice to restrain. But the workings of deceit are of so secret and internal a character, and usually covered with so plausible and pleasing an exterior in the sight of others, that if they are not opposed by some inward check, they are not likely to be restrained at all. That check can only be found in the fear of that All-seeing eye, which penetrates the deep recesses of the heart; which fear it is that prompts the solemn, saving thought, "Thou God seest me!"

We see in the examples of holy saints and prophets, recorded in the Scriptures, how prominent a place was given in their hearts to uprightness and integrity. Of Job it is said, that he was perfect, upright, and one that feared God and eschewed evil! "I will walk within my house with a perfect heart," says David; "I will set no wicked thing before mine eyes; I hate the work of them that turn aside; it shall not cleave unto me." "He that worketh deceit, shall not dwell within my house; he that telleth lies, shall not tarry in my sight." "Ye are witnesses," says Paul, "and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblameably we behaved ourselves among you that believe." And again: "Herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence towards God and towards men." Again: "We have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, not handling the word of God deceitfully; but, by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God."

O, friends! ye who profess yourselves to be on the Lord's side, in the midst of a world that lieth in wickedness, behold your calling. Ye are the Lord's witnesses, and it is your business to be blameless and harmless, the "sons of God without rebuke, in the midst of a wicked and perverse nation, among whom ye are to shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life!" And not merely are you called upon to hold it forth in the way of giving good instruction, but let your lives preach for you. The world will far more attentively fix their eyes upon what we do, than upon what we say; and though you should speak with the tongue of men and angels, they will never believe you a true disciple of him who says, "Take heed, and beware of covetousness," if they behold you grasping at every means of increasing your wealth: adding storehouse to barn, and warehouse to warehouse, and occupation to occupation, especially if some of these last should be of questionable propriety, when considered as the calling of a religious professor. As little will they give credit to your possessing christian principles, if they detect you in habits of dissimulation. Your walk before the face of your fellow-creatures must be in the King of kings' highway; and not a creeping along, with zig-zag motion, through the winding mazes of duplicity. Let every body see where you are; and do not have to be searched for in holes and corners, where the light of day never enters.

It is a glorious thing to be called upon to fight the battles of the Lord God of hosts, and to stand on his side, in a world where so few will make the smallest sacrifice of their selfish views and wishes, in behalf of him who gives them every thing; though, in profession, they may talk of being ready to part with all, and follow Christ. Human nature is the same as it was when the Lord testified of it by the prophet Ezekiel: "They come unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them: for with their mouth they show much love, but their heart goeth after covetousness." But let it not be so with you. Remember the command: "Put on thy strength, O Zion! put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem! Put on the new man, which, after God, is created in righteousness and true holiness." Put on the beauty of holiness; be living epistles of Christ, "known and read of all men;" and you will find that there is a secret weight and impressiveness in the conduct of a really straightforward and religious man, which operates to restrain, if it fail to remove, deceitful and unworthy practices, in those immediately within the sphere of his example. Truth is a holy and heaven-born thing; and whenever it is found, it diffuses in its very presence, though silent, a sacred, solemnizing influence, which limits and chastises the bold effrontery of falsehood, and causes it, against its will, to be awed and subdued.

Therefore, "stand ye in the ways and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." A rest unknown to the children of deceit, the contrivers, the creepers in by-paths. Ah! what avails it when they have accomplished their purposes? What does the Lord say of those whose "lips have spoken lies," and whose thoughts are thoughts of deceit? "The way of peace they know not, and there is no judgment in their goings; they have made them crooked paths; whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace." Let straightforwardness, then, in thought, word, and deed, be the distinguishing characteristic of the servant of the Lord. It may not, perhaps, array him with much attraction in the eyes of a misjudging world; but, before Him who seeth not as man seeth, it causes him to be "all glorious within." Truth dwelling in his soul, it emanates with steady ray, through every diversity of circumstance and condition which may befall him! His heavenly Father's "seal is on his forehead;" and whatever else may change, his spirit is imbued with that which knows no mutability; but which, arraying him with the "fine linen, clean and white," prepares him for an admission into that holy city, of which it is said, "There shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie."

HOLD FAST.

This is truly a wonderful "age of reason." A short time ago, in defending God's word from the insulting attacks of a skeptic, I was shocked with the defiant assertion that we are "all gods." O, I thought what ways the devil uses to delude God's children from their fortress of faith. But in this instance, as in all, when the proof is demanded, it is not to be found. Reason is the snare of the devil which he uses to entrap the unwary. But in this what a need we see of holding fast. Yes, brethren, hold fast! Do not yield the fortress of truth.

Prove all things. When the skeptic enthrones his reason in the place of divine truth, do not retreat from the field, and thus give the devil the victory. Are you timid to defend God's insulted truth? You need to go to the closet and buckle on the helmet of faith. Put on the "breastplate of righteousness," and in the might of God take your position on the towers of Zion, in battle array.

When any man applies reason in justification of his deeds, you apply God's law. If they conflict, be assured there is something wrong. If you silently admit that God's law is wrong, then you admit every man to be his own moral law maker. When you do this, you initiate an age at the thought of which every christian heart revolts. Every man's reason would then be a sufficient law for governing his actions. This is what the workers of iniquity earnestly desire, and what they are persistently aiming at. They do not like a law that condemns their practice, nor a gospel that reveals their doom.

In this we see the need of holding fast. A soldier, to do good service, must be well armed. Hence, in this conflict, we must arm ourselves well with the truth; and then hold fast to our armor. Shall we permit God's insulted word to be trampled in the dust? Shall we hold our silence, thus telling the enemy he is right? Silence is crime. Arise, timid brother! and in the strength of God, Jonathan-like, go out against the Philistines—the infidelity of this age; and God will give you the victory.

But, by all means, hold fast to the precious doctrines of our faith. Hold fast to the Bible as the lighthouse that guides us into the harbor. When the gladsome trumpet sounds to marshal the soldiers of the cross within the halls of Zion, may you, dear reader, be found in the ranks, is my devout prayer.

LOVE YOUR ENEMIES.

"But I say unto you, love your enemies; bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you."—Matt. 5: 44.
"All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets."—Matt. 7: 12.

This is the language of our blessed Savior when he was on the earth doing the great work which he came to perform, that work of love and mercy to a fallen and lost race; while he was executing and laying out the great plan of salvation and doing his part for the redemption of the human family. He commands men to carry with them a spirit of christian love and meekness, which he possessed and manifested in his daily life. He left an example for men to follow, and he made love the most prominent trait in the christian character; love to God, love to our fellow men, and even to our enemies; and to love our neighbor as ourself; to do good as we may have opportunity.

A forgiving spirit is also to be manifested towards those who injure us in any way; not to pay back in the same coin, but "if a man smite thee on the one cheek, turn to him the other also." Ah! few there be that manifest this spirit in these days, even among those who profess to love God, and say they are looking for Jesus soon to come. Many of them are far from this path to-day.

How many do we find living up to the command to do to others as we would have them do to us? Ah! many that are professing to be travelers to that blessed kingdom will fall of an entrance by disobeying this command; for if we love one another, as the word teaches, then we shall keep this command also; and indeed we cannot inherit eternal life unless we keep all the sayings (and do them) of our blessed Master. We must follow in his footsteps, keep ourselves unspotted from the world, do nothing or say nothing to offend any of the little flock, but to provoke one another to love and good works, ever keeping our eye on Jesus.

I have been pained many times of late to see the spirit manifested in professed christians towards each other, a course which I believe will carry them down to perdition. I do not wonder sinners will not turn to God. One and all, let us get on the whole gospel armor, and set that example before the world that becomes christians, showing the image of Christ in our daily lives; then when Jesus comes he will own and save us.

My prayer is that God will revive his work in all our hearts, and that will burn up every thing that is unlike Christ or contrary to his will, and help us to work willingly and faithfully in his great vineyard, and do good the short time we may remain here. May God grant it for his Name's sake. Amen. N. B. McMurphy.

"Kindle a flame of sacred love"

KIND WORDS.

Much has been said and written upon kind words, but the half has not been told; pen cannot describe, nor tongue express, their full depth. There is a magic in kind and gentle words, which those who have never used them, nor felt their power, but little know. A few kind words have often been the means of saving those who were on the point of turning again to the cold and beggarly elements of the earth. And how frequently has a word fitly spoken sunk deep into the sinner's heart, and brought forth fruit meet for repentance.

A few kind words have many times been the means of saving the young man from a drunkard's grave, who, while in a fit of despondency, has put the wine cup to his lips, hoping thereby to drown all his sorrows and troubles in intoxication. But how very often have harsh words been the means of driving many on still farther in the course which they have thus reluctantly taken. Instead of pointing out to them the great evil they are doing themselves, we turn the cold shoulder to them, cast them out as drunkards, and say, "We will have no more to do with them." O, would that men could but realize the vast importance of kind words in this one respect. If they did, we would see less of that worst of all evils, intemperance, among the young men of our day.

Therefore, dear reader, let me say, after taking into consideration these and many other good effects of kind words, always speak kindly; it is much easier to utter kind than harsh words. When others speak harshly to us, let us always stand ready to return a kind answer. We can never tell how much good we have thus done, until we are brought before the judgment bar of God.

THE BIBLE VIEW OF THE SOUL.

I. "The first man Adam was made a living soul." 1 Cor. 15: 45; the "man became a living soul." Gen. 2: 7. Here are "TWO witnesses." About five hundred and fifty times the word for "soul" applies to the person or creature, as above. Living soul is "living creature" (Gen. 2: 19), and four times.—Gen. 1: 20, 21, 24, 30. In Gen. 7: 21, 22, "The breath of the spirit of life" is asserted of animated and human beings as well. Acts 3: 23; 27: 37; Rev. 16: 3. The "ransom for the soul" was for the selfhood. Ex. 21: 30; 30: 12-16. The personality of "the soul" is sustained by every form of statement—in life—in making atonement and in death. "Dead soul" is made as emphatic as its converse—"living soul." One is the "living," but the other the dead person.

In confirmation of this, the first living soul was subjected to death "by sin"; was driven out and shut off from "the tree of life," lest he should escape the penalty, "and live forever"; "begat a son in his own likeness"; and at the age of nine hundred and thirty years "HE DIED."

II. The "NEW WAY" to "life everlasting"—to "glory, honor, and immortality"—when this mortal shall put "on immortality," and the sowing to the spirit shall reap "life eternal at the resurrection of the just" (as set forth in the gospel), sustains the primary view of the mortality of man and the personality of the soul. Heb. 10: 20; 14; 6; Rom. 2: 7; Gal. 6: 8; 1 Cor. 15; Matt. 7: 14. Jesus "will save"—give life. He "came that we might have life" more abundantly—"life everlasting." His errand and his name assure mortal man of life from the dead, or from the condition of the dying.

III. Our guilty, darkened, dying state, is demonstrated by sacrifices under law, and by Jesus' death—"the just for (in place of) the unjust." The gospel provides instruction for the ignorant, righteousness by faith for the guilty, and a resurrection to "immortality" for those who die in the Lord. All which must be re-adjusted to suit the philosophical, popular, but anti-Biblical notion of the soul.

IV. The original law still stands, re-enacted in the law, and established by the gospel. Rom. 3: 31; 5: 12-21; 6: 21-23; Matt. 5: 17-18. Sin is unto death, death is by sin still. Thus the reign of death, through six thousand years, has justified the truth of God, and fulfilled its penalty in the dying of each and all (save Enoch and Elijah) of the human race.

Thus also the second death of the unjust, who will then have been raised, demonstrates the unalterable truthfulness of "the word"—the absolute falsehood of the tempter; and rid the world of "the tares," "the children of the wicked one," that the whole earth may be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea. This "end of the wicked" is declared in every form, most impressive, emphatic and positive, about five hundred times, says Prof. Hudson. The Antedeluvians, Sodomites, Pharaoh's hosts, etc., "are set forth as ensamples" of those who "live ungodly." 2 Pet. 2: 5.

V. The tempter's lie—the negation and contradiction of divine truth—sustains the primary assertion, "Ye shall SURELY DIE." The addition of "not" made the "lie," as it then reads, "Ye shall not surely die." And what Satan said, those who knew not God died in imagination. They made the greatest murderers of mankind their greatest gods—Dii Majorum, Gentium. Thus, some of the "bloody and deceitful men" who lived out "half their days," took the readiest road to an imagined station among the gods. This dark and delusive picture aids in setting forth the truth of salvation—life and immortality—by Jesus and the resurrection.

Clergymen often say, "Our brother is not dead," etc. Of course, such can have no resurrection. And if they rise not, then even they that have "fallen asleep in Christ are perished." 1 Cor. 15: 18.

VI. The end of death, devil and hell, demand and demonstrate the literality and reality of man's mortality. Hos. 13: 14; 1 Cor. 15: 24-27; Rev. 21: 14; Heb. 2: 14; 1 John 3: 8. Please read "the word."

VII. To close and crown the whole, Christ's mission is to take away the sin of the world, put down all rule, authority and power, until the last enemy, death, is destoyed—even "him that hath the power of death, that is, THE DEVIL." The primal portions of prophecy, promise and prayer, in both Testaments, confirm all this. Then "every creature" joins in praise. Rev. 5: 14. Then there can "be no more death, nothing to hurt or destroy." Rev. 21: 3-5; Isa. 11: 9. Amen.

HUMILITY.

Our blessed Master was a perfect pattern for us to follow in all things. Many fail (in appearance, at least) to be like him in humility. The temptation to put on costly apparel, and gold, and pearls, and "broidered hair," is too strong for some, and the dividing line between dressing plainly and dressing as the world does, is almost lost sight of.

"The disciple is not above his Master," and let us strive to be like him in humility. None of the rich have greater power to make a display than he had, but he would not use this power. He was meek and lowly, wandering about on foot, despised and rejected of men, while the proud Pharisee looked down upon him as an outcast, a "friend of publicans and sinners." And so we are exhorted by the apostle to "be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time; casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you."—2 Pet. 5: 5-7.

We all have faults, imperfections, weakness and infirmity to humble us; therefore let us humbly confess all, and strive to "do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with GOD."—Micah 6: 8.

BANGOR.

Our meetings in Bangor, Me. were a happy success. We left Boston Thursday A. M., Nov. 8th, and on our arrival at B. at 8 P. M., we found the Brn. and Srs. assembled in a prayer meeting. We had a blessed good one. The Spirit of the Lord was with them to afford special comfort. It was a real resting place, after traveling all day. There was much freedom in Jesus. We felt the assurance that our coming meetings would be blest by the Lord.

Here we met Bro. and Sr. Israel Damman, with whom we had a very pleasant interview. They are faithful servants of the Lord. His labors have been signally blest of late, and several have been converted within a few weeks at Hermon and vicinity. He is a true christian and faithful minister of the gospel of the kingdom. His heart is in the work of the Lord. It was cheering to meet a true watchman, who does not shun to declare all the counsel of God, so far as he can see the truth.

Bangor is an enterprising city of some twenty thousand inhabitants. It is noted for its healthy situation, on the banks of the Penobscot river. We enjoyed our visit there very much. We found warm friends of Jesus and his word. There has been but little done in B. for some time, by way of preaching the gospel of the kingdom. There are several in the city who are interested in the "blessed hope."

Friday, the 9th, at 10 A. M., we assembled in Pioneer Hall, and had an excellent conference meeting. The preaching brethren present were I. Damman F. Baker, N. Nason, Tho. Smith, and J. Morrill. We had three meetings each day, and all were seasons of refreshing from the Lord. The interest continued to increase from the beginning to the close. All our conference meetings were heavenly seasons. We had a good love-feast on the Lord's day morning, and large audiences during the day, and in the evening the house was much crowded. The people seemed anxious to hear. The prospect was very encouraging. There is an open door in Bangor for the truth.

Bro. Damman baptized two happy souls, and others were intending to follow their example. We had an interesting communion season in the evening, when about forty united in commemorating the death and sufferings of our Savior.

When we left, some prominent citizens were talking of securing a place for permanent meetings. There is a good field for a faithful minister of Christ, and we think the time has come when an earnest protracted effort should be made there for the salvation of the people. We find a new interest to hear on the truths of the Bible. This interest is becoming quite general. It is a bright omen. The living christians in all churches are becoming convinced that we are living in the last days of this dispensation; and that they may hope to live to see Jesus come in the clouds of heaven. We are convinced that this interest will continue to spread among those who are trying to serve the Lord; but we may expect to see the wicked grow worse and worse, till they are as wicked as were the Sodomites when the storm of destruction swept over the cities of the plain. Scoffers are growing bold, and hypocrites are making great professions of sanctity. Their "form of godliness" is accepted by the popular class for holiness of heart, and thus Satan is blinding their eyes, and leading them captive to the whirlpool of destruction. O what a perilous hour is the one in which we are living! Christian soldier, be brave for the truth. Stand up like the three worthies at the dedication of Nebuchadnezzar's great image. Be firm as the rock Gibraltar,—"immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." The hour of deliverance is at hand, but we must expect a most earnest conflict before the triumph of the saints takes place. Let every one gird on "the whole armor of God," that he may be able to stand against all the wiles of the devil.

ALTON.

After the close of the discussion at New Durham Ridge, on Wednesday, Nov. 14th, we went to Alton, about one mile from the Alton Bay camp-ground, and had a good meeting in the evening. Brn. J. Pinkham, J. G. Smith, and Dr. A. Decker were present. We found an interesting state of things in this place. Brn. Pinkham and C. Emerson have been holding meetings there, and the Lord has greatly blessed their labors. Ten have been baptized, eight of whom were young converts.

On Thursday, Nov. 15th, at 10½ A. M., we met again in the town hall to attend to the ordination of Bro. S. H. F. Varney, of Farmington, N. H. After a sermon by the writer, ordination prayer was offered by Bro. J. G. Smith; hands were laid upon Bro. Varney by Brn. Smith, Pinkham and the writer, and the charge was given by the latter. We commend Bro. Varney to the churches where he may be called to labor, as a faithful christian minister. We would exhort our brethren to see that the young preachers are well sustained with christian sympathy and means for a comfortable living. It is a great cross for one to start out in these last days to preach the unpopular truths committed to our trust; and the young man who is willing to do it for Jesus' sake, should have his heart cheered by all who love the appearing of our coming King.

Bro. Decker preached on Thursday P. M., endeavoring to show that our Savior will come next spring, before the close of the month of May. We fear he will be disappointed; yet we feel no disposition to oppose. Time will soon settle the matter. Let us all be ready, and keep watching till the glad day arrives.

In the evening, we had another good meeting. Several gave heart-cheering testimonies, concerning what the Lord had recently done for them. There is a bright prospect for Alton.

DISCUSSION AT NEW DURHAM RIDGE.

Our discussion at New Durham Ridge, N. H., was one of special interest and profit to the cause of truth. Our opponent was Mr. J. Joy, a well educated F. W. Baptist preacher, who has published a very pointed tract against us, in which he has collected the various false reports that have been in circulation about those who are looking for the speedy coming of Jesus; and also the sayings and doings of some fanatics who have gone out from the church, and are no longer identified with it, nor fellowshiped as brethren in Christ. This pamphlet has been quite widely circulated among people, and caused the uninformed to think that those who are looking for the speedy coming of Christ are unworthy of christian fellowship. On this account, the friends of truth at New Durham Ridge and vicinity felt anxious that the people should have a chance to hear both sides of the subject, and, accordingly, Eld. Joy was invited to defend the points stated in his work. He accepted an invitation to discuss the points of difference between us, and proposed the following resolutions and rules, to which we consented, because he would not debate on any other conditions:

1. "Resolved, Man has a never-ending, undying soul in this life."
2. "Resolved, All men will have eternal conscious existence."
3. "Resolved, The 'Exposition of Present Truth' is a statement of facts, every page from beginning to end."

RULES.

1. One shall have the prerogative to argue and interrogate for fifteen minutes alternately, and the other shall not speak unless asked to.
2. If one makes a mistake in argument, he may correct the fallacy; but if the fallacy be in the premises, he shall yield the floor.
3. If one be entrapped so that he cannot extricate himself therefrom, after a proper time for effort, without denying his premises or doctrine, the discussion shall then close; and the victor shall have thirty minutes to address the people, and the other no time.
4. But if it cannot be clearly decided that one is victor, then, after getting through, each may address the people fifteen minutes.

Each may select one person, and then a third be chosen, as can be agreed, and the three shall be a committee, with one as chairman, to preserve order, time the disputant's rule, and decide the discussion in strict accordance to the above four rules."

With these resolutions and rules before us, and three intelligent men on the committee, the middle one being a chairman, and the other two preachers of the gospel, we commenced our discussion Tuesday afternoon, Nov. 13th, in the Baptist meeting-house; which was filled to overflowing with an intelligent, common-sense audience. Our opponent introduced the subject with much boldness and confidence, by calling our attention to Matt. 10: 28, as proof that man has an immortal soul. Unfortunately for him, this passage, which was his chief one to prove the immortality of the soul, proved directly the opposite; for if the soul were immortal, it could not be destroyed. We should not be taught to "fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell," if both were not to be destroyed in gehenna fire. In harmony with this, we found the prophet declaring that the Lord "shall CONSUME... BOTH soul and body."—Isa. 10: 18. Again, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."—Ezk. 18: 4. "The wages of sin is death."—Rom. 6: 23. In Matt. 3: 12, we read, "He will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into his garner; but he will burn UP the chaff with unquenchable fire." The fact that the fire is "unquenchable," is positive proof that whatever is cast into it must be burnt up, or else not affected at all by the fire; and if the fire should not burn them, there would be no suffering. But when it has burnt them up, all suffering is over. If suffering were "the wages of sin," then the punishment would end with the suffering; but as "the wages of sin is DEATH" (second death), it does not begin till they are DEAD, or burnt up; and will continue as long as they remain dead, which is eternally; hence the punishment of the wicked is eternal death.

We had two sessions of two hours each on Tuesday, and at the close of the second one, our opponent informed the people that the discussion must close up with next session, on Wednesday forenoon. This would not afford time to do the subject justice; but, as he would not agree to any definite time for the continuance of the discussion, we were obliged to submit to his decision. It was finally agreed to begin at 9 A. M., and have a three hour session.

At the beginning of the discussion on Wednesday morning, it was arranged by the committee that when we had spoken two hours and a half, then they should decide who was "victor," and he should "have thirty minutes to address the people, and the other no time." At half past eleven o'clock the committee retired, and after consultation, came back, and stated to the audience that they had decided in favor of the negative. Accordingly, we occupied the half hour to good advantage before a very attentive audience. The Lord gave us a free time in the defense of his blessed word. We were highly gratified with the results of the discussion. We think much good was accomplished. To many the truth looked more glorious than ever before, and they felt more determined than ever to stand up in its defense, and bear all the reproach that might be received in consequence. We left them rejoicing in the blessed hope of soon seeing Jesus, and their dear friends now sleeping in the embrace of death, whom they expect to meet in a short time, where partings are o'er, and sorrows are for ever unknown.

APPROACHING TROUBLES.

The evidences keep increasing which go to prove that "distress of nations" will soon be felt in other places besides India, where it is said that two and a half millions have recently died of famine. No tongue can tell, or pen describe the distress of that people. Already there are signs of approaching distress in this country. It is said a famine is feared in the Southern states before a year shall have passed. Darker clouds keep rising in the political horizon of this world, indicating a terrible storm that will soon burst upon its wicked inhabitants. The days of Noah and Lot have returned, and we see no reason to expect any improvement in society and state till Jesus sets up his kingdom. We can truly say, "Let thy kingdom come."

"A GENERAL EXPECTATION."

The interest on the immediate personal coming of Christ is rapidly spreading in all parts of christendom. This is a bright omen in favor of the fact that our Savior will soon appear. This is as true of the churches in Europe as in America.

The London correspondent of the American Presbyterian says:—

"A general expectation prevails among the clergy of the Established Church that the personal advent of the Lord Jesus is near at hand, and that all things must grow worse and worse till he comes; and, therefore, they acquiesce in 'things as they are,' almost without a murmur.

We expect to see this interest increase among all the friends of Jesus till the time of his coming; while his enemies will become more and more bitter against his appearing.

IS IT ANY MORE WRONG?

BRO. GRANT:—Although I have already asked you several questions, and you have very kindly answered the most of them, yet, as I am desirous to do right in all things, spiritually as well as temporarily; and as I have left off making a business of meeting for the worship of God with those christians who are strongly advocating the future temporal misery of the wicked; and who also say that death is not the only wages of sin; I thought that, by your kind permission, I would like to inquire through the Crisis if you understand it to be any more wrong for christians who do not believe in the future temporal misery of the wicked, not to make a business of meeting for the worship of God with those who do believe in it; than it is for those who do believe in it, not to make a business of meeting for the same purpose with those christians who are just as strongly advocating the eternal misery of the same class? A. S. WHITNEY.

Points of doctrine, not essential to salvation, should never be made tests of fellowship. As persons may be christians believing either view mentioned, these doctrines do not afford a sufficient cause for separation. We would say in the language of Paul, "Let us consider one another, to provoke unto love and to good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching."

WHAT WILL THE POPE DO?

It is becoming a question of much interest, What will the Pope do when Napoleon takes away his troops from Rome? Some think he will go to the island of Malta, others that he will come to the United States; others that he will stay at Rome and die a martyr. A few months will probably settle the inquiry. We shall wait with much interest to learn the result. The following gives another view of the subject:—

"It is currently reported in Paris that the Emperor and his new minister are perfecting a project to bring about a union of the Christians in Turkey and Greece with Rome; to offer to the Pope in exchange for Rome, Jerusalem; to make Jerusalem the centre of the New dispensation, as it was of the old. In this case, Italy can have Rome as well as Venice, and complete her unity."

Something must be done soon. The crisis in Roman affairs is at hand. All observers admit this. Praise the Lord for the bright tokens which show we are near the glorious day for which the church has been waiting for eighteen hundred years.

AUSTRIA.

The defeat of Austria by the Prussians and Italians is an important event in modern history. There is now no Catholic power that is able to support the Papacy except France; and Napoleon is anxiously waiting the opportunity to arrive when he can take the control of the ecclesiastical affairs at Rome as well as the political; and that time appears to be near at hand. Every thing pertaining to the Papacy seems to be rapidly wasting away. An intelligent foreign correspondent of the Boston Journal says:—

"Austria seems to be paralyzed under the crushing defeat of Sadowa. The letters of correspondents and the statements of gentlemen from Vienna are to the same effect, that the people, the government, and the king, are stupified by the unexpected events. Business is at a stand still. The army is smarting under its defeat; the treasury is empty; riots have taken place at Prague and other towns which have been quelled only by the military. Hungary is showing signs of discontent, and also Gallacia. In addition, the Eastern question is looming again upon the public view. Austria is not a united people. The inhabitants who owe allegiance to Francis Joseph speak a dozen or twenty different languages. There is no bond of unity, nor has there been, except the Emperor's will and the battallions under his command. That nation, which two months ago was reckoned one of the mightiest on earth, seems now to be one of the weakest."

THE SWORD.

We have come to a period when the sword is called into constant use. All nations seem to be getting ready for battle scenes. Instead of an approach towards a time when political difficulties would be settled by an arbitration, or congress of nations, people seem more than ever inclined to appeal to the sword instead of the ballot-box.

Notwithstanding the abundance of facts to prove this point, there are many professed watchmen who are so blind as to cry "peace and safety," just as the apostle said they would "in the last days."

An exchange, when speaking of the state of things in the world, gives the following:—

"Spain is fighting with the Spanish American Republic; Paraguay with the Argentine Confederation, including Brazil and Uruguay; the Liberals of Mexico against the Emperor; the Indians of British Honduras against the whites; hostile factions seek to annihilate each other in Hayti; Russia is overwhelming the warriors of Turkstan, and annexing their country; the Chinese imperialists are still striving to subdue the Taeping insurgents."

GIVE, GIVE, GIVE.

Yes, reader, give something. God gives. Christ gives. The angels give. All nature gives. A thousand gratuities flow to our hands. A thousand gifts are bestowed gratis upon us all every day. Gifts are pleasant and profitable. They bless the giver: they gladden the receiver. They betoken kindness: they beget love. Patrimony and wealth are unequally enjoyed; hence gifts and charities are needful among men. Without them the sympathies of the rich dry up, the poor suffer. All are dependent; the rich on the poor for labor, the poor on the rich for pay and sustenance. And both must depend on God. I am satisfied from observation and experience that the less a man gives, the less he will feel like giving; whereas, if he continually draw on his charities, his benevolence will proportionably increase, his beneficence grow. No better way to become a miser can be invented than the perpetual habit of withholding.

Poor christians ought to give, giving in faith in the word of God, that their hearts may not become insensible to the wants of others, or to the appeals for christian charity. Some people are poor, always were poor, and always will be poor, simply because they never give anything to anybody. And they grow poor and niggardly in proportion as their stinginess gets worse. Unmilked cows soon dry up, so do unmilked purses and uncharitable hearts. Crush down your parsimoniousness. "Get all you can, keep all you can, give all you can." Give freely. Give kindly. Give now. "Give, and it shall be given unto you." Do it. D. T. T.

OMENS.

A marked and wonderful year is this 1866. The hundredth birth year of the most numerous Protestant church in America; the advent of the cholera and its fearful ravages in Europe and on this continent; the terrible cattle plagues in England; the laying of the Atlantic cable; the frightful and sweeping cyclones or revolving hurricanes on the sea and land; the disasters by flood in France and our own country; the prostration of over twelve hundred vessels in the same storm; the foundering of the Evening Star at sea, with three hundred souls on board; the drowning of ninety-five abandoned females by this catastrophe; the shaking of the whole north-west coast of North America by an unprecedently severe earthquake; the rapid and fierce war of the great nations on the continent of Europe; the liberation of Italy; the singular and sudden abasement of Austria, the right arm of Popery; the dreadful famine in India, which has destroyed two-thirds of the lower and laboring class of the population; the subversion of an empire in Mexico; the consumption by fire of two very large and crowded cities on this continent, causing the burning of over four thousand dwellings and a loss of over six millions of property; storms at sea destroying over two hundred vessels in one gale; the burning up and utter disappearance of a star in the heavens, supposed to be a central sun with all its satellites; the wane of Mohammedanism in Turkey; the visible decline of Popery, and the expected final downfall of the Papal temporal and civil power at Rome; the menacing attitude of Fenianism; the increasing infidelity and antichristianism of Spiritualism; the general lack of revival everywhere; the potato rot again wide-spread and ruinous; the occurrence of the notable fifteenth of September, when God set his seal to the signal for the ending of the days of the man of sin by the thunder-stamp of an earthquake that shook the south of Europe; the perpetual wars and rumors of war rife in all the world; the universal foreboding of coming evils among the nations; the increasing expectation among prophetic students and pious christians generally of the nearness of the consummation; the marvellous star-shower looked for in November, constituting a sign of Christ's coming;—all, all go to render this year one of the most remarkable years of our times, a year of wonders, a prophetic year, a year worth living to witness. And what is yet to come ere it closes is known to God alone. The safe position for every soul is to be ever ready for a change of worlds. Some great event is evidently at the door. D. T. T.

THE WORKS OF C. F. HUDSON.

The productions of this ripe scholar and profound thinker are not sufficiently valued. We now refer to "Debt and Grace," "Christ our Life," and his several Tracts. No book of a polemical and doctrinal character, of equal importance and interest with that first named, has issued from the American press for the last quarter of a century. The work has received the highest praise from the most learned critics, as a single glance at the author's collection of opinions will show. We never take up the volume without a deep feeling of admiration. There are passages therein of most extraordinary power. There are subtilties of the finest, yet fairest kind. There is logic of the most cogent quality. There are dialectics of the sharpest, most striking method. There is research of the most extensive order. There are theses so invulnerable, as that they are incapable of being overthrown by human reasoning. There is erudition that challenges the studied collegian. There is argument so keen and overwhelming as to be totally unanswerable. There is exegesis of the most intense interest. There are sentences of such concentrated power that, when hurled against the errors of false philosophy, they seem like a thunderbolt. The fairness of statement, for marked and masterly ability, for candor and cool enthusiasm in the handling of the great question, for courtesy in the treatment of opponents, for exhaustive study in the line of thought, for depth of mentality and terse skill in sententious construction, for originality and boldness of conception, as exhibiting the most admirable combination of controversial sharpness with true christian temper on a vexed inquiry, as containing the completest reference to authorities, as a mosaic literary gem in the weaving in of the varied thoughts of others, with the writer's own,—meanwhile with no appearance of pedantry,—as being the most elaborate and comprehensive in its line of investigation, as a splendid vindication of both the mercy and justice of God, as a work not easily mastered by a single perusal, as a discipline for the mind, as a volume just adapted to the needs of our times; the author's book has no parallel in the tomes of modern literature.

In our opinion, the whole body of those who have learned the better and scriptural view concerning the final punishment for sin, and utter end of evil, are deeply indebted to Professor Hudson for his timely aid. Like a giant refreshed with new wine, he entered the arena of debate. The crowd of devouring tongues who shouted in our ears, "Ignorance, ignorance!" stood still and listened. To this champion they gave attention as never to another. Where we had climbed up to grasp, he seemed to stoop to pick up. Where our arms had proved too weak and short, his, stretched out over our heads at the common enemy, wielded the sword of truth with telling effect. Others had done well—he did better. For when we were struggling under our insufficiency to cope with the scholarly legions every where arrayed against us, our brother, just at the right time, came boldly to the rescue, came in the calm consciousness of might and truth, and in him, as never in us, the christian philosopher, the lettered divine, and the cunning student in academic halls finds his match. They strike back, but they hear. And of all who have ventured to break a lance with Hudson, not one has returned from the conflict with the laurels of victory. He still has the field, and is confessedly master of the position. We accord to him the honors, and confess to an unconquerable liking for the company of the noble heretic. And the stale and worn-out arguments against the faith we cherish in common, but amusingly serve to develop in those who use them the temper coiled up in the ironical apothegm of Bishop Warburton, "Orthodoxy, my lord, means my-doxy; heterodoxy means your-doxy." The truth of God is mightier, however, than the time-honored opinions of men. And it will abide.

Having launched his polished shaft at the temple of a hideous error which has shaken it to its base, the skillful and earnest propounder of a just and immortal theodicy rested not. With pen, and tongue, and "Carpet Bag," he proceeded to carry the war for truth into the very midst of his adversaries, and his track through all the land is still luminous with the light of the higher and better knowledge of eternal things. Worn down and weary, we seem for a time to lose sight of the man. Deserving of rank, honor, place, and pay, and with a talent that entitles him to all these, no man wins and wears more modestly, no man has sacrificed more for the sake of the immutable doctrine to the advocacy and defense of which,—though it be all unpopular,—he, in the full vigor of his manhood, enthusiastically set himself, devoting all to the good cause.

His personal work of colporterage may be finished, but our churches should every where seek to place his books in the hands of doctors of divinity, scholars, statesmen, philosophers, and the thinkers of our time, who, failing to answer them with a sneer, will mayhap find it profitable to peruse them and ponder their contents well, and long, before they turn away. The theme is ponderous; its issues are tremendous. They involve the will and purpose of the Almighty Maker respecting the well-being and finale of every human soul. We are brought in contact with the most awful doctrines ever spoken. Death, Heaven, Hell, Judgment, and Infinity, with man's relation to them, rise up before us as we seek to fathom the terrible verities of Debt and Grace. Imagination stands appalled at the magnificence, grandeur, and everlastingness of the coming future. We seem to touch Eternity.

The native modesty of Charles F. Hudson may shrink from such public eulogium as is herein bestowed by one who is not worthy to unloose his shoe-latchet; but nevertheless our humble tribute is justly due to him who, nine years ago, so honored our humble home at Worcester, by making it the chosen place of birth of his wonderful volume, who has aided our cause mightily, and to whom, loving, we give all freely and unasked. The author is mortal and sinful, and seeks the endless life only through Jesus; but the main truth of his pages is immortal, being inspired of God. May he too find at last the endless, incorruptible being which he so delights to contemplate. And if now "he whom thou lovest is sick," let none fail to appreciate his labors in the good cause, or forget him who in strength faithfully wrought, and who now in retirement and affliction may need even more than our praise, our sympathy, and our prayers. God bless Charles F. Hudson! D. T. T.

MISSION LETTERS FROM SWITZERLAND.

NUMBER TWELVE.

BRO. GRANT:—According to our expectations when we last wrote you, we commenced the month of October in our new location, as indicated below, where we are very comfortably situated. In reviewing the thirteen months we passed in Grandson, we feel our hearts overflowing with gratitude to our merciful Father, our covenant-keeping God, for his grace, and for the great assistance rendered us by his dear children, his stewards, that has enabled us to prosecute our labors for our dear Master. In these labors we have experienced the signal blessing of the Lord, praised be his holy name.

My health, which was much impaired when we left America, has been restored, so that I have been able to labor without intermission for the furtherance of the cause of God, and the salvation of our fellowmen. And as I go from place to place, and see the thick darkness that envelopes all classes of the people, the ignorance of the word of God, and indifference to spiritual things, I am nearly overwhelmed with the view of the vastness of the field, and the necessity of earnest, unwearied effort. I pray the Lord that he will raise up more laborers; self-denying, God-fearing men, who rejoice in spending and being spent in his services, and are willing to trust him for their salary, as faithful servants, under the eye of their good Master, well knowing that at the close of the day they shall be rewarded. Several such assistants he has already given me. They are men of little means, but their hearts are warm, and they desire to spend their lives in promulgating the precious truths they had received into their hearts.

The very liberal donation which I received two weeks since for this mission, from my dear brothers and sisters in America, through the Am. Adv. Mission Society, was to me a great evidence of God's faithfulness and sustaining care, as well as of the faithfulness and charity of his children in my dear adopted country. My heart is filled with gratitude that words are feeble to express for this great help. The support of a large family is very expensive in these times of high prices, with the greatest economy, but your generous contributions have not been all expended thus. It has also been necessary for me to attend somewhat to the wants of the dear brethren who are assisting me in the mission; and we have felt so much the necessity of publications that, though straitened for means, we have issued them to the value of 2000 francs. The returns for this expenditure have been small as yet, but we have full confidence that it will much assist the mission to be self-sustaining in future. The field is new—it requires much cultivation. The people listen to these plain truths in astonishment. "So new," so different from what they have before heard, their understandings yield assent to them, they are sent home to their consciences. There are some who receive the truth into good and honest hearts, who at once break away from all opposing influences, and are ready to sacrifice all for it, who feel the necessity of assisting in spreading the light with their means as well as influence. But such are exceptions everywhere, not the rule. The majority, who listen with interest, are easily affected by the influences with which they are surrounded, that are opposed to the heart-searching truths of the Bible, strong even with you, but how much more so in Europe, where the word of God is so little studied or read, where the people are so trammeled by customs and state religion, whose ministers are often men who have not even an intellectual belief in the Bible as the word of God! The influence of such a ministry against the truth of God is awful.

We have struggled against many obstacles to lay a good foundation for this mission in the name of the Lord, and the work requires a constant increase of effort on our part. It rejoices our hearts that Venice, the famous city on the Adriatic, where representatives of many nations congregate, is now in the hands of Victor Emanuel, free for the preaching of the Word. Thousands of tracts must be prepared in different languages, to scatter there, that these nations may be faithfully warned of what is soon coming upon the earth. Our earnest prayer is, that the way may soon be opened for the gospel to be preached in Rome also.

Our greatest want at present is German Bibles. I have found among the mountains of Jura many Germans, and a great destitution of the word of God among them, while there seems to be no lack among those who use the French language, in that respect. Be so kind, Bro. Grant, as to endorse our application to the American Bible Society, for five hundred copies of their Brevier German, 12 mo., the cheapest, best edition within my knowledge. Let us double our diligence, and do with our might the great work that God has entrusted to us, profiting by the pretended peace that we are enjoying for the benefit of the French Exposition the coming summer. When that is over, we expect the European political volcano will explode. Before the coming of that great time of trouble, we must "put on the whole armor of God" (Eph. 6: 13–17), that we may be able to stand.

With warm Christian love, your brother in Christ, M. B. CZECHOWSKI.

Ste. Blaise, Canton de Neuchatel, Suisse, Nov. 1st, 1866.

For the World's Crisis.

"MEN OF ISRAEL, HELP!"

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to call attention to a letter from the pen of Bro. F. H. Chamberlain, in the Crisis of Oct. 17th. In it he says he is in extreme need, and the only way by which he can provide for his family is by selling a few hundred copies of his little work, named the "Bruised Reed." Now if our dear brother is a faithful brother, as we suppose, he ought not to be obliged to suffer with the present enormous prices; these are pinching days for the poor. I say, if he is a worthy brother, as the spirit of his writings testifies, he is a member of the body of Christ, and the other members must sympathize with him in his affliction.

I do not want to be understood as accusing my brethren of penuriousness and lack of brotherly kindness; many have done well, and our people are not a whit behind other denominations in this particular; but time is closing, and we know it, and much is yet to be done every where in the great field.

"God loveth the cheerful giver." Who will send Bro. Chamberlain five, three, two, or one dollars, and get some of his pamphlets, introduce him by his book to your friends, and offer them for sale at fifteen, twenty, twenty-five, or fifty cents each, just what they will pay? Send the monies received back to him, and that will pay him well, and you also will be paid for your labor of love in this world and that which is to come. Try it, brethren and sisters, if you believe God. Send on the greenbacks, remembering by doing good and communicating God is well pleased. We, above all others, should be engaged in every good word and work. This will give him a temporary relief, but something more is necessary.

Is there not a brother among us who needs a clerk? Bro. C. writes a good business hand, and the best way to help him is to put him where he can help himself. What can be done for this poor lame brother, who has a wife and two children to provide for this coming cold winter? Reader, what will you do? will you send him twenty-five cents? Then sit right down and mail it to him. Do not put it off; if you do, you will forget it, and he will suffer for your negligence. His address is F. H. Chamberlain, Sutton, Mass.

For the World's Crisis.

THE STAR-SHOWER IN EUROPE.

We gave some reasons, in the Crisis of Nov. 7, why the expected display of periodic star-showers of Nov. 13 could not occur in America this year, but would in Europe, and might be looked for in America in 1867. It has so far occurred as we predicted. A shower was seen in Europe on the night and morning of Nov. 13–14th, but none in America.

A cable dispatch to the New York Herald, dated at Greenwich Observatory, near London, on the morning of the 14th, thus speaks of that display:—

"The expected meteoric showers were observed last night. At nine o'clock a few meteors fell; at eleven o'clock they had increased in number and size, and between one and two o'clock this morning the maximum was reached. The night was clear, and the stars were out in great numbers. The whole heavens were brilliantly illuminated.

The showers of meteors were of great beauty and brilliancy, and radiated from the constellation Leo, near the star Gamma Leonis. Their direction was mostly from the east to the west. The paths of the meteors were from three to four degrees in the north. Near Ursa Major twenty or thirty were observed at one time, and crossing the zenith fifty or sixty more of unusual size and duration, the majority being larger than stars of the first magnitude. Several exploded from the vicinity of Jupiter; one, of immense dimensions, was colored red, blue, green, orange, and amber. Nearly all had trails of fire. Of two flaming from Leo at the same time, one crossed Beta Geminorum and the other Mars. Two more, one red and the other of an oriental sapphire color, crossed Alpha Orionis.

Some of the meteors burst forth in splendor; one, breaking behind the rising clouds, flashed like sheet lightning, and another of emerald hue burst near Eta Leonis at fifteen minutes after two o'clock A. M., its trail of flame being visible for a minute and a half, and then faded away in brilliant nebulæ.

At three A. M., they commenced to diminish gradually, until, at the present moment, they are all, meteors and stars, fading away in the morning light.

We counted five thousand in one hour,—nearly twelve thousand in all, with the naked eye."

This display, however, does not appear to have been, in number and grandeur, in any way comparable to that in 1833 or 1799. Perhaps the one next year will be greater.

Correspondence.

From Bro. P. P. Canfield.

BRO. GRANT:—I can say with the poet—

"I am waiting still, dear Lord, for thee."

And I have been looking for the Just One since 1854, when I was anxiously waiting the return of the Master. But I did not go back to the world and give up the "blessed hope," as many have since that time. I praise God that while passing through many trials and afflictions, I am homeward bound, looking for the blessed hope, and glorious appearing of our God and Savior Jesus Christ; expecting soon that our hope will be realized. "Let Thy kingdom come."

The little band in this place have been greatly strengthened and encouraged of late by the labors of Bro. J. T. Dixon. I know that his object in laboring in this place has been for the good of the church and the salvation of souls, and get them ready for the judgment day; and notwithstanding the evil reports he had heard of some here, he visited all; Christ-like, he was ready to do all good, backsliders and sinners. Jesus came to save sinners; he "came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." So God's servants should feel; they ought to become fishers of men, and labor to have backsliders come back to Father's house, where there is bread enough and to spare. And, as Bro. D. said, none should preach but those who feel thus.

May God bless Bro. Dixon, and his labors for good in other places as well as here. And be assured he will, and the labors of other preachers of the gospel, if they labor in the same way that Bro. D. has in this place. He labored to unite the church, to build them up in the most holy faith, and not scatter and divide, as many do in these days. Instead of having his mind prejudiced by evil reports, he made up his mind to see for himself, as every servant of God ought to do, and not go into a place to labor, and through the influence of some their minds become prejudiced and they neglect those whom some have tried to injure, and therefore they continue on discouraged and disheartened, almost ready to give up the blessed hope; when, if they could be visited by those who preach the gospel, although they may be backslidden from God, they might be encouraged to do better and go on their way rejoicing. In this way the church might be united and work hand in hand together. When sinners see the church united and all love one another, then they may be constrained to love Jesus. When will preachers learn to unite the children together, and not scatter and divide?

The little flock here, who were much divided when Bro. D. came, are now walking together in love and gospel union. Sinners have been convicted and converted to God, and backsliders have come back to their Father's embrace.

We had the Lord's Supper the first time for some years, which was a blessed season, a heart-searching time to all present. I praise God for sending this faithful laborer here,—one who has been willing to stay as long as the Lord had a work for him to do, and not after preaching two or three sermons, just enough to get people interested in hearing the truth, go and leave them, perhaps among a divided and contentious church, for the enemy to catch away the word that has been sown in their hearts, and be lost. Perhaps some might leave because they do not receive enough pay. There may be some covetous ones in the church that do not what they ought to forward the gospel. Therefore I would say to the preaching brethren that labor for the good of the church and the salvation of souls: when you go into a place to labor, and people become interested in hearing the word, stay as long as the Lord has a work for you to do; and if there are those in the church who have of this world's goods, and see their brother have need, and shut up their bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in such?

All christians ought to know and consider the great sacrifice that God's faithful servants make in leaving pleasant homes, wives and children, to preach the kingdom at hand, to go out among strangers and cold-hearted professors to preach God's truth and give meat in due season to the household of faith, and point sinners to Christ the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world.

The church ought to do all they can in these last hours of time to forward those who preach the word, and beware of covetousness, which is idolatry; for no covetous person can enter the kingdom of God. Be not discouraged then, brethren and sisters in the ministry, for your labor is not in vain in the Lord.

Morris, Ct. P. P. CANFIELD.

From Sr. M. Foss.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been an invalid over three years, and must say with the Psalmist, "Before I was afflicted I went astray. It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy statutes." Oh, how precious the word of God is to me, yea, "sweeter than honey and the honeycomb." And next to the word of God comes the Crisis, in my estimation the best religious paper printed in the world, just what is needed in these "last days;" and as it comes week after week, laden with "a feast of fat things," how it cheers my heart, and increases my faith in the soon coming of Jesus; for I do verily believe, according to the "signs," that long looked for event must be at the doors; and when I read the contribution from Sr. Jackman's pen, I felt that I must respond to it. Yes, sister, with you I will "forsake trifles, and live for God." I will lay aside my outward adornings, and seek the "ornament of a meek and quiet spirit." I will deny self and take the "cross," with the help of my blessed Savior; for I have a real desire to be wholly the Lord's, and be able to say from the heart, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth, as it is in heaven." Oh, glorious day! Oh, blessed hour! when "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever."

Let us be faithful, we that are small and weak; be willing to work in our places; we can do a little for the cause of Christ, if we have but one talent. I am the least of all, but I am going to pledge myself to get one subscriber, if no more, for the Crisis. Now how many of the little ones will do the same? Do not say it is of no use to try; we never know what we can accomplish till we try. You that are strong in the Lord, remember the weak and scattered ones; continue to give "milk" and "meat" in due season, and if faithful you will not lose your reward.

Lower Gilmanton, N. H. M. FOSS.

From Bro. M. R. Phetteplace.

BRO. GRANT:—Although iniquity abounds, and the love of many waxes cold, God has not forsaken his "faithful few," nor ceased to pour into their hearts the "oil of gladness," and the joys of his salvation, and cheer their hearts by the engrafting into Christ, the living vine, of redeemed sinners who have come to him through Jesus Christ.

Efforts to save sinners have been signally blessed of God in Wickford, R. I. This is a new field for the seed-sowers of divine truth. Eld. E. R. Wood and Bro. Chas. H. Sweet commenced a protracted meeting here Oct. 11th, which has continued to the present with increasing interest. About forty have risen for prayers and come forward to the anxious seat, some of whom have found sweet peace in Jesus. Others are laboring under powerful convictions. The tide rises. Four or five backsliders have been reclaimed. The hotel keeper has stopped selling liquor, and attends the meetings. Members of other churches crowd the town house, where the meetings are now held, the hall at first occupied for this purpose proving too small to accommodate the increasing audience. Many of them have received the doctrine of the Lord's speedy advent, and kindred truths that cluster around it. We believe it is God's last message to the perishing. Glad omens of coming deliverance thicken on the horizon, which proclaim deliverance will soon come. Pray for us. Your brother in hope of eternal life, M. R. PHETTEPLACE.

Wickford, R. I.

From Bro. P. B. Stevens.

BRO. GRANT:—We have just closed one of the best meetings I ever attended. It was held in Bro. Hastings' old tent in Wolcott, N. Y., as per notice in the Crisis. The first week was very rainy, which kept the people from coming out to hear, but some came, and good was done. The last week we had good weather, and the people came out in great numbers for miles around, and the manifest results are that twenty-five or thirty have taken sides with the truth as it is in Jesus, and promised to live the truth

"Till deliverance shall come."

Fifteen or sixteen were buried into Christ's death by baptism. There are many more, we hope, who will obey soon. My heart is full of praise to God for his great grace to my fellow men. P. B. STEVENS.

LITTLE WANDERERS' HOME.

It is with feelings of gratitude to my heavenly Father that this day I have the privilege of informing the readers of the Crisis of our success in obtaining a house for the above purpose. Particulars will be given soon.

We have received $2.00 from B. H. S., River Point, R. I.; $1.50 from "a widow in Leroyesville, Pa. "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake." Yours, etc., waiting for Christ,

Obituaries.

CHURCHILL. Died in Lowell, Mass., Nov. 2d, 1866, Bro. Charles Churchill, aged fifty-two years.

Bro. Churchill professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ in his early years, and maintained a christian profession and an orderly walk to the last.

Though at times actively devoted to the work of God, and never indifferent to its prosperity, yet the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, perhaps, sometimes absorbed his attention and exhausted his strength in too great a degree, producing an enfeebled bodily state, and debarring him from the labors of active life.

In his closing days, when earthly helps and hopes seemed failing, he learned to cling more closely to the Lord, and lean more fully on the everlasting arm of strength. Viewing his many infirmities as the merciful corrections of the heavenly Father's hand, he accepted them as a means of weaning his heart from earth, believing that he was thus chastened of the Lord that he might not be condemned with the world.

His closing days were days of special peace and blessing; and he was enabled by divine grace to give good testimony to the mercy of the Lord, who had bought him with his own blood; and so at last he fell sweetly asleep, without a struggle or a groan.

By his request, the writer spoke words of comfort and admonition to a numerous circle of friends and acquaintances, who assembled at his funeral in the first Congregational church in Lowell, the pastor of which, Rev. Mr. Webber, assisted in the services of the occasion.

May the heavenly Father give comfort to those who mourn the loss of an affectionate husband, an indulgent father, a beloved brother, and a faithful friend, and bring them all at last to the blessed land of everlasting life, beyond the scenes of parting, pain and death. H. L. H.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

London, Nov. 13. Dispatches from the East announce that the Turkish Government has ordered a general amnesty to be granted to the insurgents of Candia.

Spite of many denials the rumors of a Prusso-Russian alliance continue to prevail. It is even said that the treaty provides for the admission of the United States into the alliance with a sovereign establishment in the Mediterranean sea, and guaranties to that nation highly favorable commercial advantages.

Brussels, Nov. 14. The King opened the Belgian Chambers yesterday. In his speech he took occasion to allude to his friendly relations with all the great powers, and asserted that strict neutrality should be observed.

The Belgian Catholics have presented to the Pope two thousand needle guns to arm the corps of Pontifical Zouaves.

One half of the work of piercing Mont Cenis is completed. The tunnel will be about seven and two-thirds miles in length, and there is reason to hope that the line may be opened in the course of next year. Paris and Florence will then only be separated by rail thirty-six to forty hours.

Berlin, Nov. 16. The Admiralty of Prussia is engaged in the creation of a strong fleet, and naval recruiting is ordered to commence immediately in the Duchies.

Vienna, Nov. 16. The Journal to-day, in an editorial, says Customs negotiations have commenced between Austria and Prussia. The proposals are calculated to pacify Europe.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says the Emperor's health has improved considerably.

The Paris Presse says the alliance between Russia and Prussia is an accomplished fact. It was entered into with reference to a special object and in anticipation of events already determined upon

The Presse also says that if Russia, in the execution of her plans in the East, should meet with any other obstacle than the Turks, Prussia will range herself on her side. If any foreign intervention should thwart the work of assimilating which Prussia is accomplishing in Northern Germany, or the already prepared absorption of the minor states south of the Maine; Prussia can rely upon the armed co-operation of Russia. It also points out the community of interests between Prussia and Russia in the work of denationalizing Poland.

A royal decree has been issued declaring that the province of Venetia would henceforth form an integral part of the Kingdom of Italy.

Sixteen Senators have been appointed for Venetia.

We learn from Le Nord that the cholera has been very virulent in Belgium. Official statistics just published state that from the commencement of the epidemic to the 15th of September, the number of attacks have been 49,558, and the number of deaths 27,340, or more than half the total number attacked.

Baron James de Rothschild is in a very critical state of health. He is the only surviving son of the founder of the house, is chief of the Paris branch of the Rothschilds, and the most eminent financier of the whole family.

Cable Dispatches.

London, Nov. 19th. It is said that the government is alive to the fact that large numbers of Fenians have been arriving in Ireland weekly, and is well prepared to meet any rebellious movement.

The Reform demonstration in Erinburg on Saturday was a large and imposing one.

Great floods are devasting the counties of York and Lancaster, and many lives have been lost by drowning.

THE EMPEROR OF BRAZIL TO VISIT THE UNITED STATES.—The New York Herald learns, it says, from a reliable source, that it is the intention of His Majesty Don Pedro II. soon to pay a visit to this country. He has long entertained the desire to personally acquaint himself with the conditions of the marvelous progress which we are making in the arts, manufactures and sciences. An excellent chemist, a good engineer, an accomplished linguist and a great admirer of American institutions, he feels that the results of his observations here will not only be productive of advantage to his people, but will tend to draw closer the bonds of amity existing between the two countries.

☞ It will require nineteen and a half acres of glass to cover the roof of the Great Exposition buildings at Paris.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Nov. 16. A New Orleans dispatch says there are fears in commercial circles of an approaching financial crash, owing to the failure of the cotton crop and scarcity of money.

Private advices from the Rio Grande state that a mutinous spirit is apparent in the Liberal army, owing to Ortega's presence on the frontier, and that his emissaries are getting up a powerful party in his favor.

The Herald's Vera Cruz correspondence of the 1st has the following:

Maximilian is on his way back to the capital. It is rumored that Marshal Bazaine sent him word that if he attempted to leave Mexico without permission he (Maximilian) would be placed under arrest, and also that he ordered the commander of the Austrian frigate not to let Maximilian depart on his vessel.

THE JESUITS PROSCRIBED.—The Jesuits who have been compelled to leave North Italy by the cessation of Austrian rule in that country are causing considerable alarm among the population of the cities in which they seek to take up their abode. Prague petitions the Emperor that they may not be permitted to settle there, and the Communal Council of Vienna meets, and by an almost unanimous vote passes resolutions strongly protesting against their residence in the capital. The Jesuit fathers are among the most polite and agreeable men in Europe, their order is very rich, and wherever they go they carry the blessings of education. Nevertheless their presence is dreaded in the chief cities of the most Catholic of empires. The Communal Council of Vienna formally declares that "it is opposed to the establishment of the Jesuits in that city, as well on grounds of conviction as from motives of policy deeply affecting the empire."

DISCOVERY OF THE REMAINS OF A MASTODON. About four weeks ago, while digging the foundation for a mill at Cohoes, N. Y., the workmen turned out the jaw of a mastodon from a spot some thirty feet below the surface. But, according to a correspondent of the Tribune, on Thursday last, this wonderful discovery was eclipsed by the excavation of still further fossiliferous remains, which complete nearly the bones or framework of the mastodon. Eighty-five feet below the earth's surface and about fifty feet below the place of the original discovery, the workmen came upon the remaining bones, consisting as follows: Two tusks, backbone, the upper jaw and cranium, a number of the ribs, the hip-bones, shoulder blades and the bones of the hind legs. The tusks were each nearly six feet long and about nine inches in diameter. One of them, upon exposure to the light, crumbled to pieces, like clay, resembling that substance in appearance and texture.

The ribs, of which there were fourteen found, are about four feet long, the largest being four feet nine inches. The upper jaw-bone is four feet nine inches long from the extremity of the mouth to the cranium, and across the forehead measures about three feet. So heavy is it that it was with difficulty four laborers could move the mass. The sockets in which originally were located the eyes of the monster are almost large enough to admit the head of a man. The hip-bone is five feet long, and weighs one hundred pounds; the shoulder-blades measure two feet nine inches, and weigh about fifty pounds each. The bone of the leg at the knee joint measures thirteen inches in diameter. The vertebræ of the back-bone are eight inches in diameter. The other fragments found are in harmonious proportion to those already mentioned.

Pro. Marsh of Yale College was present soon after the discovery was made, and pronounced it the most remarkable scientific event of the age. The structure will be united in its several parts by means of wire, and thus a very accurate idea can be formed of the size and weight of the monster to which it belonged.

☞ The wife of M. Thayer, a French Senator, has recently appropriated her family jewels of the estimated value of several million francs, to a pious object. The gems have been mounted in a magnificent crown, which received the Pope's blessing, and has since been placed upon the head of the image of the Virgin in the chapel of Touvens.

☞ Two veterans in the matrimonial service are Joseph Webber and his wife of Belchertown, Mass. the one 94 and the other 92 years old, and who were married seventy years ago last April, or four years before the century began. They still enjoy a good degree of health, and are getting to feel quite well acquainted with each other.

☞ The Cincinnati Gazette says hog cholera is prevailing in the country adjacent to Cincinnati, and the producers are killing the animals and sending them to market to save themselves from loss.

☞ Some months ago, a Sunday school edition of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress was published in London, complete, for two cents.

☞ The curvature of the earth amounts to seven inches per mile. A man six feet high cannot be seen from a distance of ten miles.

☞ Nearly eight thousand buildings have been erected in Chicago during the present season, at a cost of about eleven millions of dollars.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 581. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness, if less than 26 weeks, charge five cents; if more than 26 weeks, six cents. From the product (which will be a fraction over the actual indebtedness) deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

For the World's Crisis.

THANKS.

To the dear brothers and sisters, the kind neighbors and friends, who have so kindly visited and tenderly cared for me in my long and painful illness.

God bless you! my brothers, my kind sisters dear,
And you, my dear neighbors and true christian friends;
The warm, grateful thanks of a bosom sincere,
In blessings on you, morn and evening ascends.

With heart warmly melting, o'erflowing in tears,
I think of your goodness, your kind, tender care,
For one who has suffered affliction for years;—
My soul cries God bless you! in heart-gushing prayer.

O! may he deliver when trouble shall come,
May his be the hand that shall make all your bed,
If sickness and sorrow should enter your home,—
The wings of the Highest o'ershadow your head!

Fain would I thank you, but no words can express
The grateful emotion my bosom doth feel;
Our Savior who sees will remember and bless,
In the day of reward your works shall reveal.

O, ever for you my petition ascends,
That the gift of salvation may freely rest down;
And oh! may He grant you, my dear faithful friends,
A home in his kingdom, an unfading crown.

East Roxbury, Vt. ANNA E. MCELLISTER.

For the World's Crisis.

SPIRITUALISM,—WHAT IS IT?

CHRIST, OR ANTICHRIST?

NUMBER THREE.

Perhaps some apology is due the reader for so long a pause in my story. Well, I was sick, grievously sick: but not unto death, thanks to the good mercy that looked down from heaven and saw me, and brought the oil and the wine, and the balm of Gilead.

There is a deal in one's stomach to do with his religion; there is a deal also in the nerves, both heavenly and infernal; and there is such a thing as gout of the brain; all this comes of bad eating and drinking, and thinking. Take care of the body, and look carefully after the laws that govern it. If you take the risk of too much thinking, offended nature will give you the pains for it; and heaven, though pitying, will work you no miracle. God means that nature, in her sphere, shall take care of herself; that wisdom shall come of blunders, and joy from heartaches and grief. If you have reason, give thanks; if you have health, praise God; and if you have religion, count it worth all things else, for what advantage in all things else to-day, and nothing to-morrow?

I count it the happiest of my experiences to have discovered myself a sinner against God; and next, the vanity of philosophy; and after that, the philosophy of vanity. A captive seven years among the spirits, I learned the latter; an hour of liberty, by the grace of God, I learned the former. But moralizing and philosophizing aside, until we have given the spirits another hearing, and taken our leave of the medium.

You will remember my story broke off just where the spirits were about to put money in my purse, and send me forth an apostolic showman and pioneer prophet of the new dispensation. A temptation? To be sure; how otherwise to one with bare hands and empty pockets? But to measure out gold against love, that noblest of all the attributes of life, that godliest thing in nature, and divinest thing in divinity, unpurchased, and unpurchasable. No, that could not be. I was to come to griefs, sorrows, disappointments, and stop a day and a night with the spirits, without the rich man's money, and the entrance of woman's love.

However, I proposed to the rappers that if thy would give me a heart to love their medium, I would accept the golden bonds of matrimony, and become their apostle. And this they promised to do, and why not? They had subjected Miss R. to their will, and why not me? The medium, too, had protested with all her might, but I held myself passive. I was conscious of no unwillingness to yield to their desires, provided my conditions were complied with. I felt a certain kind of unutterable disgust at the whole affair; and yet, possibly, for aught I knew, there was some hidden, undeveloped wisdom in the mystery. But my philosophy was at fault; organization and temperament was the key by which the rappers opened into the mesmeric secrets of the human body. The qualifications for membership are neither moral nor intellectual, but purely physical. Those who fall the most readily under the influence of the mesmerizer, it is found yield the most readily to the influence of the so-called spirits. And this does not happen so much from an infirmity of will, as from the presence of some highly sensitive magnetic fluid, charged by the invisible manipulators. Mine was not a favorable organization, as mesmerizers have repeatedly failed to bring me under their influence. So nothing came, as the rappers failed to bring me under the mesmeric charm, and the projected marriage stood a good chance to come to nothing. Mr. R., of course, was not at all pleased at the turn things were taking. Chagrined at having his generous offer refused, and seeing his sister in a fair way for the mad-house, he resolved, after accusing me of having bewitched the family, to take the medium away, satisfied, he said, that she would be well enough when separated from me.

But the medium protested against this most vehemently, asserting my entire innocence of any mesmerism, or witchcraft, as also her own, and charging nothing to the spirits. But he insisted that she should follow him, and the poor girl reluctantly got ready, and in a couple of hours she was at her brother's house. But, alas! the raps followed the medium. No sooner had she retired for the night than the rappers began their usual entertainment of rapping, moving things about the room, and apparitions.

Mrs. R., who for the first time had heard Rochester knockings, was frightened. Ghosts, witches, or what? Good ghosts, argued she, would have no business out of their graves at night, and as for evils ones—mercy, she could not think of it. But as for witches, she had a dim and uncertain faith in them; and taking this infernal infestation to be a case of witchcraft, she stuck a steel knife-sharpener in the head-board, and assured the medium that the witches could not operate in the presence of steel. But this did not lay the witches. The rappers, in contempt of the impotent steel, set in motion a half dozen more batteries, until not only the bedstead, but the walls as well, and every object in the room, responded with the hideous noises; and thus nothing came of this experiment with the knife-sharpener, except that the medium, by an unlucky turn in one of her tantrums, broke it, at a loss to the unbelieving Mrs. R. of about five dollars.

It now remained for Mr. R. to try his hand at dissolving the mesmeric charm, and silencing the rappers. Entering the room where the invisible operators were in full blast, his wife bewailing the loss of her knife-sharpener, and his sister imploring him to send her back to Henry,—"I will see whether there is no way to stop this bedevilment."

First he resolved upon a personal inspection of the bedstead, doubtless from a secret suspicion that possibly the medium herself might be at the bottom of the mischief, and ordering her up, he made a careful examination, but discovered no human artifice by which the noises could be produced. Meanwhile the rappers took to the floor, where for some time they kept up a vigorous pounding.

"Who are you?" inquired Mr. R.

There was a profound silence.

"Ask how many there are," said the medium.

The question was put, and answered by two raps.

"And who are they?"

The medium quickly answered,—

"My father and Henry's father, the two spirits that appeared at my bedside and charged me, upon penalty of nightly visitations, that I must marry Henry."

"O, I shall see them again to-night, do let me go back. If you have any mercy in you, do let me go back. I must. I shall die, I shall die."

And thus she went on half the night, in this incoherent and piteous raving.

Now here was a plain case for Mr. R. To suppose I could charm the medium with a mesmeric spell, and keep up the delusion for days and weeks together, and when separated a dozen miles from her, was absurd; to suppose that the medium was the producing cause of the raps, against her protestations to the contrary, and when no visible means for producing them could be discovered, was equally at variance with probability; to suppose, therefore, that these phenomena were produced by invisible agents or agencies, was the only rational conclusion, and to this conclusion Mr. R. was forced to come. These things could not be done by the blind forces of nature; they exhibited a certain intelligence, a capacity to understand questions and to answer them, they must therefore be not forces, but intellectual beings, and acting not by accident, but by design.

He asked the rappers what they wanted. They answered, that "E. should marry Henry, and start on a tour West, to spread the doctrines and principles of the new dispensation. We were the chosen disciples of the new order, and marriage was the only thing wanting to make us efficient promoters of the new harmonial gospel," and assured him that nothing should be wanting on his part to give us a prosperous outfit; and all this Mr. R. did not object to if the spirits would see to it that a husband was forthcoming for the medium.

Meanwhile the medium was unchanged in her desire to yield to the spirits, except that her passion, if possible, became more furious and ungovernable.

"I must," she would say, "I must marry him."

The voices of the old grey-haired men who stood at her bedside and charged her to be married, were constantly in her ear, and the sight of these visible ghosts haunted her day and night.

"Let me go, for mercy's sake; I must see Henry. I must, I must, or I shall die."

It is now more than two weeks since these noises began, and the poor girl has scarcely slept at all. She retires, but only to be confronted with bedlam the live long night. Something must be done. She is already fallen under a complete nervous prostration, and insanity and death may be the result. But Mr. R. does not tell the doctor what ails his patient, for it would be a sure disgrace to have it known that he had the "Rochester knockings" in his family. The spirits behave themselves very considerately in the presence of the doctor, listening, but saying nothing. The good will of Mr. R. was of consequence in carrying forward their enterprise, and it would have been bad policy to shock his notion of respectability.

The doctor gives her a little valerian, thinking it a case of nervousness, and goes away. But Mr. R. resorts to a more vigorous treatment, and to render her insensible to the nightly clamor that assailed her, he gave her over doses of gin, and thus in complete drunkenness, only, she escaped her tormentors. Now these spirits, or demons, pretended to be acting under the high commission of heaven, that they were the heralds of a new light, sent to banish error from the world, and redeem mankind from ignorance.

But the idea of forcing a marriage between parties not agreed. How ill does this comport with the doctrine of St. Paul, how can two walk together except they be agreed? It needed, however, no revelation to teach this; for it is but the dictate of good sense. They came to harmonize the world, and began by creating discord; they did not, however, provoke opposition to good principles, but they raised indignation against evil principles.—But I must hasten to the conclusion of this story.

The maiden remained with Mr. R. nearly or quite a week, and during the most of this time was nightly stupefied with gin. This was an excellent preparation for her forthcoming apostleship, and could not but devoutly inspire her with the importance and dignity of her mission. When she returned to me, half frantic with love and fear, she threw all love's diffidence and modesty aside, and flinging her arms around my neck, she implored me, in a wild agony of feeling I shall never forget, in the name of pity and humanity to marry her.

"O," said she, "if you heard them as I do. They will never forgive us, they will never let me go, they will follow me to the ends of the earth, and you will be my murderer."

Observe here, not a word of blame for the spirits. They are acting a good part, and I am an ingrate for refusing, at their dictation, to make a wife of a woman for whom I have no affection.

Charming philosophy this. Well, things were now really getting in a bad way. The girl was mad, the house was in an uproar, the thing had got into the street, the reputation of two good families was involved, and if the affair terminated fatally for the medium, I should certainly fall under the severe condemnation of the family, if not under the public censure also; but had I been willing to make merchandise of marriage, I might have made these adverse winds blow me a fortune.

But my refusal was of no avail. The medium was under the conviction all the time (and the spirits who held her by mesmeric power would let her have no other) that I would yield at last, and immediately upon her return from her brother's, she set the milliners at work upon her wedding-dress.

She was delighted with the pattern, chosen by the spirits, for what could she do without them? and though not over costly, was handsome; and as for mine, bless you, the money would have been forthcoming for that, and the tailors at work, had I not put between myself and her a physical impossibility.

Next day my school term expired, and I determined to avail myself of the opportunity thus offered to leave the place and let the rappers and the medium work out the case as best they could. I told the medium I must leave her, and forever. She looked the picture of despair, and said nothing, and then she drew from my heart a genuine pity. But my resolution to resist these rappers, and not permit them to control me or my affairs, was unshaken. I would save her from their evil machinations by any sacrifice less than myself. As she saw me, however, about to leave, she broke forth in expressions of agony and despair, but said nothing against the spirits.

"O Henry, it is you, it is you, how can you do so? I shall see them. They will rap, they will rap, and I shall die. O, I shall die," were among the last exclamations I heard, as I hurriedly seized my valise, and took the morning train for Boston.

I reached the city that night. Next day, anxious from the experiences I had had in the "Rochester knockings" for further investigations, I went to the rooms of a Miss Little, then a celebrated test medium. I of course was a stranger to her. We sat at the table, no one present besides ourselves. In a few minutes the raps were heard, loud and distinct. I put a number of questions. Some were answered correctly, and others intelligently, but whether correctly I could not say. I examined the room and the table, and kept an eye on the medium, but could discover no sign of trick or imposture.

Of course I consulted them in respect to my experience with Miss R., but put my questions in a way to give no clue to the medium; and what was my surprise to find them perfectly familiar with it; and without any further conversation through the raps, they seized the hand of the medium, and in large, scrawling letters, wrote the following:

"If you had done as we told you to down East, you would get your pockets full of money." And then added, "You are a —— fool, ha, ha, ha." I had been offered money down East to marry a medium and advertise Spiritualism.

Now put this and that together. There is a logic here too manifest to escape attention. One of two things is clear. Either the operators in what had transpired "down East" had followed me to Boston, and answered my questions, and informed me of what had been done there (down East), or I had brought the thing in my own mind, and the medium, by some unknown law of magnetic attraction, had abstracted it, and repeated it back to me, and so in truth I was only holding conversation with myself.

But the numerous cases where information was elicited unknown to both visitor and medium rendered this latter theory untenable, and the supposition that these answers were given by separate intelligences seemed inevitable.

Spirits, then, are they? What spirits? Try them by what they say and do. If their doctrines are false, then they are false spirits; if their philosophy is absurd, then they are ignorant spirits; if their religion is impure, then they are unholy spirits; but if they make us wiser men and women, better husbands and wives, and honester priests and teachers, then they are good spirits, and he is a barbarian who rejects them.

BY M. D. W.

Have been reading an article on "CANT." The author says the word sprang from an ancient stock. "Its root is Roman, and is therefore venerable. The word evidently originates directly from the Latin canto, to sing, and indirectly from the Latin cano, to sing. Cant is a sort of speech. It is a species of shabby mouthing. In its strictest sense, it embraces a series of sounds continually and hypocritically repeated, for the sake of effect. Dryden calls it a whining pretension to goodness in affected terms. In Webster Unabridged it is said to be 'a whining, singing manner of speech; a quaint, affected mode of uttering words either in conversation or preaching,' and he might have added in praying, for in this exercise it is probably as frequently seen as in any other.

"Cant, in conversation, in preaching, or in prayer, ever argues the want of a progressive tendency in the mind of him who uses it. It is a mode of speech which expresses nothing accordant with manly aspiration, or the spirit of intellectual nobleness."

That expresses my own opinion precisely. I have seen much of this exhibited, and I detest it—this affected style or strain in prayer when in public, and omitted in private. Not that we deplore its omission by the fireside, but we detest its being used in public, and then laid aside when there are no ears the individual cares to impress thereby; the great change of tone makes the use of this "cant" abroad the more perceptible and hateful. We can thus see directly through the flimsy veil, and know assuredly that it is all assumed for effect.

There is a semblance of devotion and strong emotion which excites sympathy, and deceives one who never hears the individual pray when the "cant" is laid aside. But there is a semblance only of spirituality in such devotions; the expression, though loud and earnest, savors much of emptiness. There is not "a sound within a sound," "a wheel within a wheel." One never feels the "living waters flow" under the influence of such prayers. The one who offers them is as unmoved, empty, and unblest, as when he began. And how much such prayers savor of "vain repetition," so much repeating over to God what great and wonderful things he has done, and can do.

We would have persons pray in public in the same tone they would pray in private with their families or in the closet. Closet, did we say? We incline to the opinion that those who use "cant" in public have no closet!

But we have wandered away from our author. He comes out square against cant in the sanctuary, cant in the nursery, cant in the parlor, cant in the critic, and cant in the politician; and he gives utterance to some very sensible remarks and capital hits. One more citation, and we close.

"Now permit me to affirm that every instance of grave mouthing, like the one that has been sketched, is an instance of sanctimonious cant. It is the style in which conceited mediocrity and obtuse, stubborn ignorance make their profession of devotedness. It is a strain after effect exhibited in the expression of purposes that the mind has never formed, and of a zeal the heart has never felt. It embraces a loudness which has no accompanying earnestness to make it justifiable. He who uses this kind of cant assumes 'rueful looks of affected concern.' He is unspiritually serious; he is dolefully shallow."

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

SHOWING THE NATURE OF CONTENTMENT.

Having answered these questions, I shall, in the next place, come to describe contentment.

It is a sweet temper of spirit, whereby a christian carries himself in an equal poise in every condition. The nature of this will appear more clear in these three general rules:

1. Contentment is a divine thing. It becomes ours, not by acquisition, but infusion. It is a slip taken off from the Tree of Life, and planted by the Spirit of God in the soul; it is a fruit that grows not in the garden of philosophy, but is of a heavenly birth: it is, therefore, very observable that contentment is joined with godliness, and goes in equipage—"But godliness, with contentment, is great gain."—1 Tim. 6: 6. Contentment being a consequent of godliness, or a companion to it, I call it divine, to contra-distinguish it to that contentment which a moral man may arrive at. Heathen have seemed to have this contentment; but it was only the shadow and picture of it; the beryl, not the true diamond. Theirs was but civil, this is sacred; theirs was only from principles of reason, this of religion; theirs was only lighted at Nature's torch, this at the lamp of Scripture. Reason may a little teach contentment, as thus: "Whatever my condition be, this is that I am born to; and, if I meet with crosses, it is but a catholic misery—all have their share; why, therefore, should I be troubled?" Reason may suggest this; and, indeed, this may be rather constraint than content; but, to live securely and cheerfully upon God, in the abatement of creature supplies, religion can only bring this into the the soul's exchequer.

2. Contentment is an intrinsical thing. It lies within a man; not in the bark, but the root. Contentment hath both its fountain and stream in the soul. The beam hath not its light from the air. The beams of comfort which a contented man hath do not arise from foreign comforts, but from within. As sorrow is seated in the spirit, the heart knows its own grief (Prov. 14: 10); so contentment lies within the soul, and doth not depend upon externals. Hence I gather that outward troubles cannot hinder this blessed contentment. It is a spiritual thing, and ariseth from spiritual grounds, viz., the apprehension of God's love. When there is a tempest without, there may be music within. A bee may sting through the skin, but it can not sting to the heart. Outward afflictions can not sting to a christian's heart, where contentment lies. Thieves may plunder us of our money and plate, but not of this pearl of contentment, unless we are willing to part with it; for it is locked up in the cabinet of the heart. The soul which is possessed of this rich treasure of contentment is like Noah in the ark, that can sing in the midst of a deluge, or as Paul and Silas in the prison.

3. Contentment is an habitual thing. It shines, with a fixed light, in the firmament of the soul. Contentment doth not appear only now and then, as some stars which are seen but seldom; it is a settled temper of the heart; one action doth not denominate it. He is not said to be a liberal man, that gives alms once in his life; a covetous man may do so: but he is said to be liberal that is given to liberality (Rom. 12: 13); that is, who, upon all occasions, is willing to indulge the necessities of the poor: so he is said to be a contented man that is given to contentment. It is not casual, but constant. Aristotle, in his rhetoric, distinguisheth between colors in the face that arise from passion, and those which arise from complexion. The pale face may look red when it blusheth; but this is only a passion: he is said properly to be ruddy and sanguine who is constantly so; it is his complexion. He is not a contented man who is so upon an occasion, and perhaps when he is pleased, but who is so constantly; it is the habit and complexion of the soul.

THE NAME CHRISTIAN.

WAS THE NAME "CHRISTIAN" GIVEN TO THE CHURCH AT ANTIOCH AS A NICKNAME?

"They were called christians first at Antioch."

The original word is Krematizo, which signifies "to impart a divine warning or admonition; give instructions or directions under the guidance of inspiration." Please notice its use in the New Testament (Matt. 2: 12),—"Being warned of God"; also 22d verse. Luke 2: 26,—"It was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost." Acts 10: 22,—"Was warned from God." Rom. 7: 3,—"She shall be called an adulteress." Heb. 8: 5,—"Moses was admonished of God." Heb. 11: 7,—"Noah being warned of God." Heb. 12: 25,—"Who refused him that spake." Acts 11: 26, the disciples "were called." Here we find the use of the word, nothing certainly that looks like a nickname.

Antioch, we understand, was the place where the first church was founded, which was composed of both Jews and Gentiles. God said by the prophet that his people should "be called by a new name which the mouth of the Lord" should "name," (Isa. 62: 2, also 65: 15); and it certainly is fitting that this new name should be conferred upon the church at the time when there is no distinction, but Jew and Gentile come in alike into the great family, and are named of God. Eph. 3: 14, 15; Acts 15: 14.

I understand, then, that at the founding of this church at Antioch, those who founded it were instructed of God to call the disciples Christians,—a name significant. All other names signify a part; only this the whole. A man may be called by all other names, and not be a Christian.

All Christians love Christ, and all who love Christ love his appearing. Let me be a Christian, united to Christ, anointed of God, with grace to carry out the great work for which I was anointed of God; and when it shall be said, "Behold I and the children which God hath given me," let me be accounted worthy to be numbered with them. Until then I sing,

"Christian, sweet name, its worth I view;
O may I wear the nature too."

PRESENT EXPERIENCE.

BRO. GRANT:—Ever since my first acquaintance with "class meetings," I have prized them very highly. In short, I love class meetings. And I propose in this place, with your permission, to give a plain answer to a plain question. The question then for me to answer is this: "What is my present state and standing before God and my own conscience?" My answer is, "Low in the valley of humiliation."

I esteem every one of the children of God better than myself. While I have a firm and abiding trust, and daily access to the throne of grace, I yet take the very lowest seat in the "lowest room" in my Father's house. I feel that this is my proper place and station. I aim to obey from the heart every influence of the Holy Spirit, and "resist unto blood" every temptation of the enemy.

When I look back upon the past, "I abhor myself," and repent in dust and ashes, for I have not lived up to my privilege. Yet I feel assured that my sins are forgiven for Jesus' sake. When I look forward I see (by faith) the end of the race very near. I expect to be perfectly satisfied with the reward I shall then receive. I shall not envy those who receive more, and I shall not murmur against the "Good Man of the house," and say, "Why hast thou given to others more than unto me?" No. All the laborers will have at least a penny, and if others have brighter crowns, and more brilliant stars, I will rejoice that it is so.

But the question may be asked me here, "Do you now enjoy the blessing of perfect love?" I answer freely and frankly, I have not a clear evidence of being in such a state. I am too easily irritated, and have not that constant serenity, calmness and holy zeal, which I think should characterize those who are enjoying the fullness of the blessing. I have more than once professed to be in that blessed state, but never long remained there. I think never so long as two months at any one time.

Yet I do not doubt the testimony of others who say they have enjoyed the blessing constantly for many years. But I honestly confess that I have not remained upon the mountain top. My foot has slipped once and again, and sometimes I hardly dare hope to regain what I have lost. But my constant cry is, "Lord, help me to be pure in heart, and holy in life." I am striving to be perfect in obedience, and have the approval of our blessed Master, even here in the valley.

A NEW MOVEMENT.

I enclose a very important extract relative to the measures now in progress in Europe for the restoration of the Jews. The letter from which it is taken was written by Mr. David Gray, formerly Editor of the Buffalo Courier, and now absent on a tour through Europe. He is a gentleman whose reputation for veracity, as well as ability, entitles his statements to credit. It is not necessary for me to enlarge on the vast significance and importance of this movement. I may barely observe, however, that it is precisely in accordance, not only with a general expectation among a large number of students and expositors of prophecy, but is in particular agreement with that class of interpretations which have recognized as the agent, infallibly certain to be manifest in effecting the return, at first,—the subtle, aspiring, and mysterious Emperor of the French.

Yours truly, C. COLEGROVE.

Sardinia, N. Y.

"I do not think it is generally known in the States that the whole of the European powers are now bound to an international treaty to the observance of certain humane stipulations, operative in time of war, as regards the reciprocal treatment by hostile powers of their sick and wounded. These stipulations comprise the absolute neutralization of ambulances, hospitals, etc., as well as of surgeons and of all sanitary organizations authorized to attend to the needs of armies on battle fields and elsewhere. This treaty was effected mainly through the exertions of Mr. Henry Dunant and other Genevese gentlemen, and the Convention was signed here some two or three years ago. Mr. Dunant's movement, now completely successful, comprehended also the establishment of a permanent Commission, having an international organization, and designed to act at need in any given field, somewhat on the same principle as that of our own Sanitary Commission. The organization was in working order and did marvels of heroic charity during the war just closed. More than three thousand volunteer surgeons and aids were dispatched to the various fields and hospitals by this means, and in every respect the work of the American Societies was successfully emulated. It appears that Austria gave in her adhesion to the Convention last, and just in time to realize for her soldiers its beneficent effects. The international Commission has a branch duly instituted in the United States, of which I believe Rev. Dr. Bellows is at the head, and it is hoped that our government will also concur in the treaty, by which the civilized world will then be under sacred obligation to ameliorate, as far as possible, the horrors of war.

This mention of Mr. Dunant will serve as introduction to the following suggestive document, indicating a still more remarkable movement in which he is now taking a share. The paper has not before been printed in English; it is entitled 'Project of an International Society for the Renovation of the Orient.' I think it will repay perusal, if only for the startling ideas it suggests:

'The disturbing circumstances in which Europe is at present placed ought not to render the fact forgotten that the Eastern question, which has already agitated its governments and peoples, has the strongest tendency to rise anew, perhaps at no distant date, to complicate a situation already sufficiently grave.

The day when this question will demand a definite solution, will in all probability see the whole of Europe plunged in inextricable difficulties. . . .

This association may present itself to the universal public in the manner as follows:

The International Society of the Orient has for its object:

To favor the development of agriculture, of industry, of commerce and of public works in the East and above all in Palestine.

To obtain from the Turkish government certain privileges or monopolies either at Constantinople or in other parts of the empire, chief of which shall be the concession and gradual abandonment of the lands of Palestine.

To distribute, at cash prices, such of these lands as the Company will have acquired or received in concession, and to effect the colonization of the more fertile valleys of the Holy Land. . . .

It is known that Palestine needs only labor in order to produce abundantly. It is a country one of the most remarkable and the most fertile of the globe. In it one meets the products of all the latitudes, and the emigrant of Europe finds herein the climate of his own country. Commerce and private industry which will come to complete the work of agriculture must attract hither, in great numbers, merchants, colonists and capitalists, both Christian and Israelite.

This resurrection of the Orient, seconded by an awakened religious sentiment, will be aided by the co-operation of the Jews themselves, of whom the valuable qualities and remarkable aptitudes cannot but be in the highest degree advantageous to Palestine. . . . The results sought for and achieved by the Society will be beyond a possibility of failure, and that, too, in a future less distant than one can think, as follows:

The reconstruction of the Holy Places of Jerusalem, which could be accomplished as an international work and in a manner worthy of christianity.

The end of the conflict which incessantly renews itself between the great Powers, in regard to the Holy Places.

The transformation of the ancient Jerusalem into a new city which will rival in importance the finest cities of the West. . . .

To prepare the organization of the International Society of the Orient, it is important that many minds be led to preoccupy themselves with these great and noble questions. To this end it is indispensable to institute a Committee composed of men of influence and honor, of diverse nations, having at heart the advancement of the same views in the interest of all.

The elements of that Committee are at present fairly prepared.

Its programme, at once economical, financial, benevolent, scientific, etc., is at the same time international; it can wound the susceptibilities of no nation. Influential names in France, England and elsewhere, are ready to connect themselves therewith.

HENRY DUNANT, Founder of the International Convention, in behalf of wounded in time of war, etc. Geneva, March, 1866.'

I am not permitted to state what has already transpired in connection with this important subject; let it suffice to say that while this written 'Project' has been thrown out in a few quarters as a sort of feeler, the thing itself has moved forward with wonderful celerity and success. Some of the leading names of the Jewish world are at its head, and some of the propositions of the paper have become accomplished facts. Behold, then, a scheme apparently on the way to achieve itself, having for its object nothing less than the reconstruction of the Jewish nationality in its ancient territory! Politically, and I may add religiously, a more startling idea could scarcely be mooted. That mighty 'Eastern Question,' which incessantly looms up to trouble the world's dream, how would that stand affected should such a movement begin and march to completion? . . . .

I have merely indicated a few of the thoughts which crowd upon one in reading Mr. Dunant's paper. The subject is worthy of volumes of comment, for indeed could I repeat to you some of the names which I know to be connected with the realization of the idea, you would readily acquit me of an attempt to manufacture a sensation on false pretenses. Perhaps from the holy places themselves I shall be able some time to write more to you on the same momentous theme. DAVID."

TWO MEALS A DAY.

In a former article were noticed the general facts on which we base our judgment on this subject, such as the relation of labor and rest. Let us now consider some particular facts which sustain our position.

It is estimated that from two to five and one-half hours are required for the digestion of different articles; five hours are generally taken as the average for an ordinary meal, under favorable conditions. We will here notice a few conditions which are deemed unfavorable, and we shall then be prepared to judge more correctly of the proper intervals between the meals.

1. "If more food is taken than is required, even that amount which is required will not be quickly digested."—Lambert's Physiology.

2. "If the food be hurried into the stomach, it may be filled with food indigestible, and all of which would not be needed even if it could be digested."—Id. If eaten too fast the food is neither properly masticated, nor mixed with the saliva so as to favor digestion.

3. Water, or drinks, of which water is the basis, taken while eating, is removed by absorption before digestion takes place; therefore the practice almost universally indulged in, of drinking large quantities of tea, coffee, or water, with meals, retards digestion.

4. In Dr. Beaumont's observations, it was found that "anger would cause the stomach to become pale and comparatively bloodless." I knew a man once to become so exceedingly angry, that his system was not able to recover from the effects of anger, and he soon died. I also in my younger days, once plagued a small animal till he got very angry, and though I did not injure it at all, to my great surprise, it died in a few minutes. This shows that anger tends to suspend the vital forces.

5. "A constantly active mind, especially a fretted disposition, does not allow the stomach to receive, for a sufficient length of time, those nervous influences necessary for a perfect digestion of food."—Lambert's Physiology. With many, fretting is a habit almost constantly indulged in; and as it retards digestion, it must increase the irritation of the system, and induce disease. Therefore it is impossible that a fretter should be healthy; and those who fret much will in time find much to fret about. Thus they become the authors of their own misery.

6. Hard labor, either of body or mind, immediately after eating, will retard digestion; and if the system be otherwise in unfavorable conditions, digestion may thereby be entirely suspended for a time.

7. Grief, either excessive or protracted, will prevent digestion. It is well known that constant sorrow of heart will destroy the appetite by debilitating the stomach, and so gradually suspend the action of the life forces.

Not to enumerate it will be conceded that by these, or some of these causes, viz., eating too fast or too much, drinking largely with meals, or by labor, anger, fretfulness, or grief, almost every one, and almost at all times, induces conditions unfavorable to digestion, besides the ailments of the stomach itself not here noticed; therefore we ought to increase the time estimated for the digestion of food.

Dr. Coles in Philosophy of Health says: "When food is lodged in the stomach, it requires ordinarily about three hours and a half before the entire meal is prepared for, and carried into the duodenum, or second stomach. Then about one hour and a half is needed for forming the chyle, and for its absorption."

Calling five hours the average time required, if breakfast be taken at seven, the process of digestion is barely passed through at twelve. The morning meal being scarcely appropriated, the system cannot yet require more. The person may feel hungry, either from habit, from exhaustion, or other causes, but the necessity for food does not exist. As previously remarked, no person can safely trust his appetite while he is in an exhausted condition; and we are so subjected to the power of habit, that, should we habitually eat six times a day, we should become hungry so often. Also disease, or peculiar conditions of the system may cause a sensation of hunger, as we sometimes eat to fullness and still feel hungry. Now this hungry feeling is not always a call of the system for food, as in the last named case, the stomach has already received more than is required.

If the second meal is then taken at twelve or half-past twelve, there being no requirement for food, digestion must be tardily or imperfectly performed; and it would be truly a marvel if the work of the stomach was again completed at 6 o'clock P. M. Habit, not nature, requires an additional supply at that hour; or if taken at seven, allowing a longer time for the digestion of the second meal, the result is no better, as the third meal will hardly be digested by twelve at night. Up to that time then there can be no good, quiet, refreshing sleep. The stomach has been laboring hard; the nervous system has been under constant excitement; of course the brain has been troubled with disagreeable sensations, perhaps with scenes of horror and frightful images. The person awakes in the morning with an aching stomach, a dullness in the head, a coated tongue, and a dry, feverish mouth. When we consider that this is repeated in an ever-continuing round, is it any wonder that there are no more healthy people in this age? or that man's life is dwindled down to a span? What shall be thought, then, of the practice of many staid, well-disposed people, who make late visits where tea is served in the evening with rich cakes and pies, and other indigestible articles.

On the other hand, suppose we breakfast at seven; allow five hours for digestion, till twelve; then let the stomach rest an hour or more, and take the second meal at half-past one or at two. Five hours more for digestion brings us to seven in the evening; then if the stomach rests till the hour of retiring, other things being favorable, the whole system will sleep, and all together awake in the morning refreshed.

We have tried and know. Where all physiological research and actual experiment agree, we see no chance to doubt.—Health Reformer.

THE BREATH OF LIFE.

Whatever lives must breathe. Whatever shelters or feeds life must breathe also. As is the breath so is the life, for health is but a pulmonary function, and happiness a castle in the air. The blood, stifled with ill-supplied or incapable lungs, blackens and curdles; the hair, stifled beneath an impenetrable hat, dies and falls away; the skin, stifled by garments too many and too close, or smothered by its own unremoved excretions, yields its duty as guardian of the out posts of life and betrays the citadel to the enemy.

It utters its mute protest against rubber boots and air-proof coats, which, unless briefly and loosely worn, are portable death. Houses, too, must breathe as well as garments. A breathless house is suicide made easy. The asthmatic complains of his labored breathing, but forgets that his house wheezes worse than he, through its listed windows and doors. He shuts the casement because it admits cold; he shuts the stove damper because it allows the escape of heat. How is his house to catch its breath with mouth and nostrils closed? Mamma folds her sleeping little ones in blankets, and tucks them into their close cribs with impenetrable Marseilles of a texture fit for a balloon; if the chicks are timid they draw the white drapery over their heads, shutting out any quantity of bugbears, but shutting in a veritable nightmare of exhausted and poisonous air. Warmth is essential to comfort, but pure air and rich blood are the healthiest healers known. The earth itself floats in an air bath forty-five miles in length. The soil must breathe or will not bear. Not only must the plough let in the air from above, but a porous sub-soil or frequent drains must give it an exit from beneath, or you win only grudging gifts from the smothered soil. Choose a flower vase of wedgewood ware, and without an opening at the bottom, and the rose folds its green calyx in despair about its stifled buds. Nay, let the pores in the stems and leaves become choked with dust, and the plant dwindles and dies of voiceless vegetable catarrh. The ocean breathes in the trade-winds and laughs in the shout of the tempest. Its slow beating pulses are the tides; mountain billows are the heaving of its lungs. The kiss of the breeze gives it health and purity; both are strangled by the leaden weight of a breathless calm, and

"Slimy things do crawl with legs
Upon the slimy sea."

Since then our life is but a breath, let it at least be strong and pure, and let us not attempt the futile experiment of seeking it in exhausted receivers.—Springfield Republican.

CURE FOR CHILBLAINS.—I know a remedy against chilblains which is so simple and easy that, doubtless many would hardly think it worth trying. As, however, it completely cured my poor feet, which had suffered for fifteen winters with chilblains, and to which all possible lotions and salves had been ineffectually applied, I am most anxious to give those who are similarly affected, the benefit of my experience. The remedy consists of a hot foot-bath only; but the water must be as hot as can possibly be endured, and the feet, after having been kept in from fifteen to twenty minutes, must be immersed in cold water, to prevent from catching cold. An instant relief will be experienced from the burning and itching sensation.

FRESH AIR.—We have too little fresh air at night in our sleeping-rooms, often almost hermetically sealed as a means of excluding the supposed "poisonous night air." Still others are breathing only about half the necessary quantity at each inspiration, partly from habit and partly from a compression of the chest that admits of only a limited supply. Nature has provided for and demands full, deep and copious inspirations of this grand invigorator and purifier—life-imparting, pure air, inviting full measure, "pressed down," enough to expand the cells, enabling them to eject irritating and poisonous deposits.

THANKS.

To the dear brothers and sisters, the kind neighbors and friends, who have so kindly visited and tenderly cared for me in my long and painful illness.

God bless you! my brothers, my kind sisters dear,
And you, my dear neighbors and true christian friends;
The warm, grateful thanks of a bosom sincere,
In blessings on you, morn and evening ascends.

With heart warmly melting, o'erflowing in tears,
I think of your goodness, your kind, tender care,
For one who has suffered affliction for years;—
My soul cries God bless you! in heart-gushing prayer.

O! may he deliver when trouble shall come,
May his be the hand that shall make all your bed,
If sickness and sorrow should enter your home,—
The wings of the Highest o'ershadow your head!

Fain would I thank you, but no words can express
The grateful emotion my bosom doth feel;
Our Savior who sees will remember and bless,
In the day of reward your works shall reveal.

O, ever for you my petition ascends,
That the gift of salvation may freely rest down;
And oh! may He grant you, my dear faithful friends,
A home in his kingdom, an unfading crown.

SPIRITUALISM,—WHAT IS IT?

CHRIST, OR ANTICHRIST?

NUMBER THREE.

Perhaps some apology is due the reader for so long a pause in my story. Well, I was sick, grievously sick: but not unto death, thanks to the good mercy that looked down from heaven and saw me, and brought the oil and the wine, and the balm of Gilead.

There is a deal in one's stomach to do with his religion; there is a deal also in the nerves, both heavenly and infernal; and there is such a thing as gout of the brain; all this comes of bad eating and drinking, and thinking. Take care of the body, and look carefully after the laws that govern it. If you take the risk of too much thinking, offended nature will give you the pains for it; and heaven, though pitying, will work you no miracle. God means that nature, in her sphere, shall take care of herself; that wisdom shall come of blunders, and joy from heartaches and grief. If you have reason, give thanks; if you have health, praise God; and if you have religion, count it worth all things else, for what advantage in all things else to-day, and nothing to-morrow?

I count it the happiest of my experiences to have discovered myself a sinner against God; and next, the vanity of philosophy; and after that, the philosophy of vanity. A captive seven years among the spirits, I learned the latter; an hour of liberty, by the grace of God, I learned the former. But moralizing and philosophizing aside, until we have given the spirits another hearing, and taken our leave of the medium.

You will remember my story broke off just where the spirits were about to put money in my purse, and send me forth an apostolic showman and pioneer prophet of the new dispensation. A temptation? To be sure; how otherwise to one with bare hands and empty pockets? But to measure out gold against love, that noblest of all the attributes of life, that godliest thing in nature, and divinest thing in divinity, unpurchased, and unpurchasable. No, that could not be. I was to come to griefs, sorrows, disappointments, and stop a day and a night with the spirits, without the rich man's money, and the entrance of woman's love.

However, I proposed to the rappers that if thy would give me a heart to love their medium, I would accept the golden bonds of matrimony, and become their apostle. And this they promised to do, and why not? They had subjected Miss R. to their will, and why not me? The medium, too, had protested with all her might, but I held myself passive. I was conscious of no unwillingness to yield to their desires, provided my conditions were complied with. I felt a certain kind of unutterable disgust at the whole affair; and yet, possibly, for aught I knew, there was some hidden, undeveloped wisdom in the mystery. But my philosophy was at fault; organization and temperament was the key by which the rappers opened into the mesmeric secrets of the human body. The qualifications for membership are neither moral nor intellectual, but purely physical. Those who fall the most readily under the influence of the mesmerizer, it is found yield the most readily to the influence of the so-called spirits. And this does not happen so much from an infirmity of will, as from the presence of some highly sensitive magnetic fluid, charged by the invisible manipulators. Mine was not a favorable organization, as mesmerizers have repeatedly failed to bring me under their influence. So nothing came, as the rappers failed to bring me under the mesmeric charm, and the projected marriage stood a good chance to come to nothing. Mr. R., of course, was not at all pleased at the turn things were taking. Chagrined at having his generous offer refused, and seeing his sister in a fair way for the madhouse, he resolved, after accusing me of having bewitched the family, to take the medium away, satisfied, he said, that she would be well enough when separated from me.

But the medium protested against this most vehemently, asserting my entire innocence of any mesmerism, or witchcraft, as also her own, and charging nothing to the spirits. But he insisted that she should follow him, and the poor girl reluctantly got ready, and in a couple of hours she was at her brother's house. But, alas! the raps followed the medium. No sooner had she retired for the night than the rappers began their usual entertainment of rapping, moving things about the room, and apparitions.

Mrs. R., who for the first time had heard Rochester knockings, was frightened. Ghosts, witches, or what? Good ghosts, argued she, would have no business out of their graves at night, and as for evils ones—mercy, she could not think of it. But as for witches, she had a dim and uncertain faith in them; and taking this infernal infestation to be a case of witchcraft, she stuck a steel knife-sharpener in the head-board, and assured the medium that the witches could not operate in the presence of steel. But this did not lay the witches. The rappers, in contempt of the impotent steel, set in motion a half dozen more batteries, until not only the bedstead, but the walls as well, and every object in the room, responded with the hideous noises; and thus nothing came of this experiment with the knife-sharpener, except that the medium, by an unlucky turn in one of her tantrums, broke it, at a loss to the unbelieving Mrs. R. of about five dollars.

It now remained for Mr. R. to try his hand at dissolving the mesmeric charm, and silencing the rappers. Entering the room where the invisible operators were in full blast, his wife bewailing the loss of her knife-sharpener, and his sister imploring him to send her back to Henry,—"I will see whether there is no way to stop this bedevilment."

First he resolved upon a personal inspection of the bedstead, doubtless from a secret suspicion that possibly the medium herself might be at the bottom of the mischief, and ordering her up, he made a careful examination, but discovered no human artifice by which the noises could be produced. Meanwhile the rappers took to the floor, where for some time they kept up a vigorous pounding.

"Who are you?" inquired Mr. R.

There was a profound silence.

"Ask how many there are," said the medium.

The question was put, and answered by two raps.

"And who are they?"

The medium quickly answered,—

"My father and Henry's father, the two spirits that appeared at my bedside and charged me, upon penalty of nightly visitations, that I must marry Henry."

"O, I shall see them again to-night, do let me go back. If you have any mercy in you, do let me go back. I must. I shall die, I shall die."

And thus she went on half the night, in this incoherent and piteous raving.

Now here was a plain case for Mr. R. To suppose I could charm the medium with a mesmeric spell, and keep up the delusion for days and weeks together, and when separated a dozen miles from her, was absurd; to suppose that the medium was the producing cause of the raps, against her protestations to the contrary, and when no visible means for producing them could be discovered, was equally at variance with probability; to suppose, therefore, that these phenomena were produced by invisible agents or agencies, was the only rational conclusion, and to this conclusion Mr. R. was forced to come. These things could not be done by the blind forces of nature; they exhibited a certain intelligence, a capacity to understand questions and to answer them, they must therefore be not forces, but intellectual beings, and acting not by accident, but by design.

He asked the rappers what they wanted. They answered, that "E. should marry Henry, and start on a tour West, to spread the doctrines and principles of the new dispensation. We were the chosen disciples of the new order, and marriage was the only thing wanting to make us efficient promoters of the new harmonial gospel," and assured him that nothing should be wanting on his part to give us a prosperous outfit; and all this Mr. R. did not object to if the spirits would see to it that a husband was forthcoming for the medium.

Meanwhile the medium was unchanged in her desire to yield to the spirits, except that her passion, if possible, became more furious and ungovernable.

"I must," she would say, "I must marry him."

The voices of the old grey-haired men who stood at her bedside and charged her to be married, were constantly in her ear, and the sight of these visible ghosts haunted her day and night.

"Let me go, for mercy's sake; I must see Henry. I must, I must, or I shall die."

It is now more than two weeks since these noises began, and the poor girl has scarcely slept at all. She retires, but only to be confronted with bedlam the live long night. Something must be done. She is already fallen under a complete nervous prostration, and insanity and death may be the result. But Mr. R. does not tell the doctor what ails his patient, for it would be a sure disgrace to have it known that he had the "Rochester knockings" in his family. The spirits behave themselves very considerately in the presence of the doctor, listening, but saying nothing. The good will of Mr. R. was of consequence in carrying forward their enterprise, and it would have been bad policy to shock his notion of respectability.

The doctor gives her a little valerian, thinking it a case of nervousness, and goes away. But Mr. R. resorts to a more vigorous treatment, and to render her insensible to the nightly clamor that assailed her, he gave her over doses of gin, and thus in complete drunkenness, only, she escaped her tormentors. Now these spirits, or demons, pretended to be acting under the high commission of heaven, that they were the heralds of a new light, sent to banish error from the world, and redeem mankind from ignorance.

But the idea of forcing a marriage between parties not agreed. How ill does this comport with the doctrine of St. Paul, how can two walk together except they be agreed? It needed, however, no revelation to teach this; for it is but the dictate of good sense. They came to harmonize the world, and began by creating discord; they did not, however, provoke opposition to good principles, but they raised indignation against evil principles.—But I must hasten to the conclusion of this story.

The maiden remained with Mr. R. nearly or quite a week, and during the most of this time was nightly stupefied with gin. This was an excellent preparation for her forthcoming apostleship, and could not but devoutly inspire her with the importance and dignity of her mission. When she returned to me, half frantic with love and fear, she threw all love's diffidence and modesty aside, and flinging her arms around my neck, she implored me, in a wild agony of feeling I shall never forget, in the name of pity and humanity to marry her.

"O," said she, "if you heard them as I do. They will never forgive us, they will never let me go, they will follow me to the ends of the earth, and you will be my murderer."

Observe here, not a word of blame for the spirits. They are acting a good part, and I am an ingrate for refusing, at their dictation, to make a wife of a woman for whom I have no affection.

Charming philosophy this. Well, things were now really getting in a bad way. The girl was mad, the house was in an uproar, the thing had got into the street, the reputation of two good families was involved, and if the affair terminated fatally for the medium, I should certainly fall under the severe condemnation of the family, if not under the public censure also; but had I been willing to make merchandise of marriage, I might have made these adverse winds blow me a fortune.

But my refusal was of no avail. The medium was under the conviction all the time (and the spirits who held her by mesmeric power would let her have no other) that I would yield at last, and immediately upon her return from her brother's, she set the milliners at work upon her wedding-dress.

She was delighted with the pattern, chosen by the spirits, for what could she do without them? and though not over costly, was handsome; and as for mine, bless you, the money would have been forthcoming for that, and the tailors at work, had I not put between myself and her a physical impossibility.

Next day my school term expired, and I determined to avail myself of the opportunity thus offered to leave the place and let the rappers and the medium work out the case as best they could. I told the medium I must leave her, and forever. She looked the picture of despair, and said nothing, and then she drew from my heart a genuine pity. But my resolution to resist these rappers, and not permit them to control me or my affairs, was unshaken. I would save her from their evil machinations by any sacrifice less than myself. As she saw me, however, about to leave, she broke forth in expressions of agony and despair, but said nothing against the spirits.

"O Henry, it is you, it is you, how can you do so? I shall see them. They will rap, they will rap, and I shall die. O, I shall die," were among the last exclamations I heard, as I hurriedly seized my valise, and took the morning train for Boston.

I reached the city that night. Next day, anxious from the experiences I had had in the "Rochester knockings" for further investigations, I went to the rooms of a Miss Little, then a celebrated test medium. I of course was a stranger to her. We sat at the table, no one present besides ourselves. In a few minutes the raps were heard, loud and distinct. I put a number of questions. Some were answered correctly, and others intelligently, but whether correctly I could not say. I examined the room and the table, and kept an eye on the medium, but could discover no sign of trick or imposture.

Of course I consulted them in respect to my experience with Miss R., but put my questions in a way to give no clue to the medium; and what was my surprise to find them perfectly familiar with it; and without any further conversation through the raps, they seized the hand of the medium, and in large, scrawling letters, wrote the following:

"If you had done as we told you to down East, you would get your pockets full of money." And then added, "You are a —— fool, ha, ha, ha." I had been offered money down East to marry a medium and advertise Spiritualism.

Now put this and that together. There is a logic here too manifest to escape attention. One of two things is clear. Either the operators in what had transpired "down East" had followed me to Boston, and answered my questions, and informed me of what had been done there (down East), or I had brought the thing in my own mind, and the medium, by some unknown law of magnetic attraction, had abstracted it, and repeated it back to me, and so in truth I was only holding conversation with myself.

But the numerous cases where information was elicited unknown to both visitor and medium rendered this latter theory untenable, and the supposition that these answers were given by separate intelligences seemed inevitable.

Spirits, then, are they? What spirits? Try them by what they say and do. If their doctrines are false, then they are false spirits; if their philosophy is absurd, then they are ignorant spirits; if their religion is impure, then they are unholy spirits; but if they make us wiser men and women, better husbands and wives, and honester priests and teachers, then they are good spirits, and he is a barbarian who rejects them.

BY M. D. W.

Have been reading an article on "Cant." The author says the word sprang from an ancient stock. "Its root is Roman, and is therefore venerable. The word evidently originates directly from the Latin canto, to sing, and indirectly from the Latin cano, to sing. Cant is a sort of speech. It is a species of shabby mouthing. In its strictest sense, it embraces a series of sounds continually and hypocritically repeated, for the sake of effect. Dryden calls it a whining pretension to goodness in affected terms. In Webster Unabridged it is said to be 'a whining, singing manner of speech; a quaint, affected mode of uttering words either in conversation or preaching,' and he might have added in praying, for in this exercise it is probably as frequently seen as in any other.

"Cant, in conversation, in preaching, or in prayer, ever argues the want of a progressive tendency in the mind of him who uses it. It is a mode of speech which expresses nothing accordant with manly aspiration, or the spirit of intellectual nobleness."

That expresses my own opinion precisely. I have seen much of this exhibited, and I detest it—this affected style or strain in prayer when in public, and omitted in private. Not that we deplore its omission by the fireside, but we detest its being used in public, and then laid aside when there are no ears the individual cares to impress thereby; the great change of tone makes the use of this "cant" abroad the more perceptible and hateful. We can thus see directly through the flimsy veil, and know assuredly that it is all assumed for effect.

There is a semblance of devotion and strong emotion which excites sympathy, and deceives one who never hears the individual pray when the "cant" is laid aside. But there is a semblance only of spirituality in such devotions; the expression, though loud and earnest, savors much of emptiness. There is not "a sound within a sound," "a wheel within a wheel." One never feels the "living waters flow" under the influence of such prayers. The one who offers them is as unmoved, empty, and unblest, as when he began. And how much such prayers savor of "vain repetition," so much repeating over to God what great and wonderful things he has done, and can do.

We would have persons pray in public in the same tone they would pray in private with their families or in the closet. Closet, did we say? We incline to the opinion that those who use "cant" in public have no closet!

But we have wandered away from our author. He comes out square against cant in the sanctuary, cant in the nursery, cant in the parlor, cant in the critic, and cant in the politician; and he gives utterance to some very sensible remarks and capital hits. One more citation, and we close.

"Now permit me to affirm that every instance of grave mouthing, like the one that has been sketched, is an instance of sanctimonious cant. It is the style in which conceited mediocrity and obtuse, stubborn ignorance make their profession of devotedness. It is a strain after effect exhibited in the expression of purposes that the mind has never formed, and of a zeal the heart has never felt. It embraces a loudness which has no accompanying earnestness to make it justifiable. He who uses this kind of cant assumes 'rueful looks of affected concern.' He is unspiritually serious; he is dolefully shallow."

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

SHOWING THE NATURE OF CONTENTMENT.

Having answered these questions, I shall, in the next place, come to describe contentment.

It is a sweet temper of spirit, whereby a christian carries himself in an equal poise in every condition. The nature of this will appear more clear in these three general rules:

1. Contentment is a divine thing. It becomes ours, not by acquisition, but infusion. It is a slip taken off from the Tree of Life, and planted by the Spirit of God in the soul; it is a fruit that grows not in the garden of philosophy, but is of a heavenly birth: it is, therefore, very observable that contentment is joined with godliness, and goes in equipage—"But godliness, with contentment, is great gain."—1 Tim. 6: 6. Contentment being a consequent of godliness, or a companion to it, I call it divine, to contra-distinguish it to that contentment which a moral man may arrive at. Heathen have seemed to have this contentment; but it was only the shadow and picture of it; the beryl, not the true diamond. Theirs was but civil, this is sacred; theirs was only from principles of reason, this of religion; theirs was only lighted at Nature's torch, this at the lamp of Scripture. Reason may a little teach contentment, as thus: "Whatever my condition be, this is that I am born to; and, if I meet with crosses, it is but a catholic misery—all have their share; why, therefore, should I be troubled?" Reason may suggest this; and, indeed, this may be rather constraint than content; but, to live securely and cheerfully upon God, in the abatement of creature supplies, religion can only bring this into the the soul's exchequer.

2. Contentment is an intrinsical thing. It lies within a man; not in the bark, but the root. Contentment hath both its fountain and stream in the soul. The beam hath not its light from the air. The beams of comfort which a contented man hath do not arise from foreign comforts, but from within. As sorrow is seated in the spirit, the heart knows its own grief (Prov. 14: 10); so contentment lies within the soul, and doth not depend upon externals. Hence I gather that outward troubles cannot hinder this blessed contentment. It is a spiritual thing, and ariseth from spiritual grounds, viz., the apprehension of God's love. When there is a tempest without, there may be music within. A bee may sting through the skin, but it can not sting to the heart. Outward afflictions can not sting to a christian's heart, where contentment lies. Thieves may plunder us of our money and plate, but not of this pearl of contentment, unless we are willing to part with it; for it is locked up in the cabinet of the heart. The soul which is possessed of this rich treasure of contentment is like Noah in the ark, that can sing in the midst of a deluge, or as Paul and Silas in the prison.

3. Contentment is an habitual thing. It shines, with a fixed light, in the firmament of the soul. Contentment doth not appear only now and then, as some stars which are seen but seldom; it is a settled temper of the heart; one action doth not denominate it. He is not said to be a liberal man, that gives alms once in his life; a covetous man may do so: but he is said to be liberal that is given to liberality (Rom. 12: 13); that is, who, upon all occasions, is willing to indulge the necessities of the poor: so he is said to be a contented man that is given to contentment. It is not casual, but constant. Aristotle, in his rhetoric, distinguisheth between colors in the face that arise from passion, and those which arise from complexion. The pale face may look red when it blusheth; but this is only a passion: he is said properly to be ruddy and sanguine who is constantly so; it is his complexion. He is not a contented man who is so upon an occasion, and perhaps when he is pleased, but who is so constantly; it is the habit and complexion of the soul.

THE NAME CHRISTIAN.

WAS THE NAME "CHRISTIAN" GIVEN TO THE CHURCH AT ANTIOCH AS A NICKNAME?

"They were called christians first at Antioch."

The original word is Krematizo, which signifies "to impart a divine warning or admonition; give instructions or directions under the guidance of inspiration." Please notice its use in the New Testament (Matt. 2: 12),—"Being warned of God"; also 22d verse. Luke 2: 26,—"It was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost." Acts 10: 22,—"Was warned from God." Rom. 7: 3,—"She shall be called an adulteress." Heb. 8: 5,—"Moses was admonished of God." Heb. 11: 7,—"Noah being warned of God." Heb. 12: 25,—"Who refused him that spake." Acts 11: 26, the disciples "were called." Here we find the use of the word, nothing certainly that looks like a nickname.

Antioch, we understand, was the place where the first church was founded, which was composed of both Jews and Gentiles. God said by the prophet that his people should "be called by a new name which the mouth of the Lord" should "name," (Isa. 62: 2, also 65: 15); and it certainly is fitting that this new name should be conferred upon the church at the time when there is no distinction, but Jew and Gentile come in alike into the great family, and are named of God. Eph. 3: 14, 15; Acts 15: 14.

I understand, then, that at the founding of this church at Antioch, those who founded it were instructed of God to call the disciples Christians,—a name significant. All other names signify a part; only this the whole. A man may be called by all other names, and not be a Christian.

All Christians love Christ, and all who love Christ love his appearing. Let me be a Christian, united to Christ, anointed of God, with grace to carry out the great work for which I was anointed of God; and when it shall be said, "Behold I and the children which God hath given me," let me be accounted worthy to be numbered with them. Until then I sing,

"Christian, sweet name, its worth I view;
O may I wear the nature too."

PRESENT EXPERIENCE.

Bro. Grant:—Ever since my first acquaintance with "class meetings," I have prized them very highly. In short, I love class meetings. And I propose in this place, with your permission, to give a plain answer to a plain question. The question then for me to answer is this: "What is my present state and standing before God and my own conscience?" My answer is, "Low in the valley of humiliation."

I esteem every one of the children of God better than myself. While I have a firm and abiding trust, and daily access to the throne of grace, I yet take the very lowest seat in the "lowest room" in my Father's house. I feel that this is my proper place and station. I aim to obey from the heart every influence of the Holy Spirit, and "resist unto blood" every temptation of the enemy.

When I look back upon the past, "I abhor myself," and repent in dust and ashes, for I have not lived up to my privilege. Yet I feel assured that my sins are forgiven for Jesus' sake. When I look forward I see (by faith) the end of the race very near. I expect to be perfectly satisfied with the reward I shall then receive. I shall not envy those who receive more, and I shall not murmur against the "Good Man of the house," and say, "Why hast thou given to others more than unto me?" No. All the laborers will have at least a penny, and if others have brighter crowns, and more brilliant stars, I will rejoice that it is so.

But the question may be asked me here, "Do you now enjoy the blessing of perfect love?" I answer freely and frankly, I have not a clear evidence of being in such a state. I am too easily irritated, and have not that constant serenity, calmness and holy zeal, which I think should characterize those who are enjoying the fullness of the blessing. I have more than once professed to be in that blessed state, but never long remained there. I think never so long as two months at any one time.

Yet I do not doubt the testimony of others who say they have enjoyed the blessing constantly for many years. But I honestly confess that I have not remained upon the mountain top. My foot has slipped once and again, and sometimes I hardly dare hope to regain what I have lost. But my constant cry is, "Lord, help me to be pure in heart, and holy in life." I am striving to be perfect in obedience, and have the approval of our blessed Master, even here in the valley.

A NEW MOVEMENT.

I enclose a very important extract relative to the measures now in progress in Europe for the restoration of the Jews. The letter from which it is taken was written by Mr. David Gray, formerly Editor of the Buffalo Courier, and now absent on a tour through Europe. He is a gentleman whose reputation for veracity, as well as ability, entitles his statements to credit. It is not necessary for me to enlarge on the vast significance and importance of this movement. I may barely observe, however, that it is precisely in accordance, not only with a general expectation among a large number of students and expositors of prophecy, but is in particular agreement with that class of interpretations which have recognized as the agent, infallibly certain to be manifest in effecting the return, at first,—the subtle, aspiring, and mysterious Emperor of the French.

Yours truly, C. Colegrove.

Sardinia, N. Y.

"I do not think it is generally known in the States that the whole of the European powers are now bound to an international treaty to the observance of certain humane stipulations, operative in time of war, as regards the reciprocal treatment by hostile powers of their sick and wounded. These stipulations comprise the absolute neutralization of ambulances, hospitals, etc., as well as of surgeons and of all sanitary organizations authorized to attend to the needs of armies on battle fields and elsewhere. This treaty was effected mainly through the exertions of Mr. Henry Dunant and other Geneveso gentlemen, and the Convention was signed here some two or three years ago. Mr. Dunant's movement, now completely successful, comprehended also the establishment of a permanent Commission, having an international organization, and designed to act at need in any given field, somewhat on the same principle as that of our own Sanitary Commission. The organization was in working order and did marvels of heroic charity during the war just closed. More than three thousand volunteer surgeons and aids were dispatched to the various fields and hospitals by this means, and in every respect the work of the American Societies was successfully emulated. It appears that Austria gave in her adhesion to the Convention last, and just in time to realize for her soldiers its beneficent effects. The international Commission has a branch duly instituted in the United States, of which I believe Rev. Dr. Bellows is at the head, and it is hoped that our government will also concur in the treaty, by which the civilized world will then be under sacred obligation to ameliorate, as far as possible, the horrors of war.

This mention of Mr. Dunant will serve as introduction to the following suggestive document, indicating a still more remarkable movement in which he is now taking a share. The paper has not before been printed in English; it is entitled 'Project of an International Society for the Renovation of the Orient.' I think it will repay perusal, if only for the startling ideas it suggests:

'The disturbing circumstances in which Europe is at present placed ought not to render the fact forgotten that the Eastern question, which has already agitated its governments and peoples, has the strongest tendency to rise anew, perhaps at no distant date, to complicate a situation already sufficiently grave.

The day when this question will demand a definite solution, will in all probability see the whole of Europe plunged in inextricable difficulties. . . .

This association may present itself to the universal public in the manner as follows:

The International Society of the Orient has for its object:

To favor the development of agriculture, of industry, of commerce and of public works in the East and above all in Palestine.

To obtain from the Turkish government certain privileges or monopolies either at Constantinople or in other parts of the empire, chief of which shall be the concession and gradual abandonment of the lands of Palestine.

To distribute, at cash prices, such of these lands as the Company will have acquired or received in concession, and to effect the colonization of the more fertile valleys of the Holy Land. . . .

It is known that Palestine needs only labor in order to produce abundantly. It is a country one of the most remarkable and the most fertile of the globe. In it one meets the products of all the latitudes, and the emigrant of Europe finds herein the climate of his own country. Commerce and private industry which will come to complete the work of agriculture must attract hither, in great numbers, merchants, colonists and capitalists, both Christian and Israelite.

This resurrection of the Orient, seconded by an awakened religious sentiment, will be aided by the co-operation of the Jews themselves, of whom the valuable qualities and remarkable aptitudes cannot but be in the highest degree advantageous to Palestine. . . . The results sought for and achieved by the Society will be beyond a possibility of failure, and that, too, in a future less distant than one can think, as follows:

The reconstruction of the Holy Places of Jerusalem, which could be accomplished as an international work and in a manner worthy of christianity.

The end of the conflict which incessantly renews itself between the great Powers, in regard to the Holy Places.

The transformation of the ancient Jerusalem into a new city which will rival in importance the finest cities of the West. . . .

To prepare the organization of the International Society of the Orient, it is important that many minds be led to preoccupy themselves with these great and noble questions. To this end it is indispensable to institute a Committee composed of men of influence and honor, of diverse nations, having at heart the advancement of the same views in the interest of all.

The elements of that Committee are at present fairly prepared.

Its programme, at once economical, financial, benevolent, scientific, etc., is at the same time international; it can wound the susceptibilities of no nation. Influential names in France, England and elsewhere, are ready to connect themselves therewith.

Henry Dunant, Founder of the International Convention, in behalf of wounded in time of war, etc. Geneva, March, 1866.'

I am not permitted to state what has already transpired in connection with this important subject; let it suffice to say that while this written 'Project' has been thrown out in a few quarters as a sort of feeler, the thing itself has moved forward with wonderful celerity and success. Some of the leading names of the Jewish world are at its head, and some of the propositions of the paper have become accomplished facts. Behold, then, a scheme apparently on the way to achieve itself, having for its object nothing less than the reconstruction of the Jewish nationality in its ancient territory! Politically, and I may add religiously, a more startling idea could scarcely be mooted. That mighty 'Eastern Question,' which incessantly looms up to trouble the world's dream, how would that stand affected should such a movement begin and march to completion? . . . .

I have merely indicated a few of the thoughts which crowd upon one in reading Mr. Dunant's paper. The subject is worthy of volumes of comment, for indeed could I repeat to you some of the names which I know to be connected with the realization of the idea, you would readily acquit me of an attempt to manufacture a sensation on false pretenses. Perhaps from the holy places themselves I shall be able some time to write more to you on the same momentous theme. David."

"This is for your health."—Paul.

TWO MEALS A DAY.

In a former article were noticed the general facts on which we base our judgment on this subject, such as the relation of labor and rest. Let us now consider some particular facts which sustain our position.

It is estimated that from two to five and one-half hours are required for the digestion of different articles; five hours are generally taken as the average for an ordinary meal, under favorable conditions. We will here notice a few conditions which are deemed unfavorable, and we shall then be prepared to judge more correctly of the proper intervals between the meals.

1. "If more food is taken than is required, even that amount which is required will not be quickly digested."—Lambert's Physiology.

2. "If the food be hurried into the stomach, it may be filled with food indigestible, and all of which would not be needed even if it could be digested."—Id. If eaten too fast the food is neither properly masticated, nor mixed with the saliva so as to favor digestion.

3. Water, or drinks, of which water is the basis, taken while eating, is removed by absorption before digestion takes place; therefore the practice almost universally indulged in, of drinking large quantities of tea, coffee, or water, with meals, retards digestion.

4. In Dr. Beaumont's observations, it was found that "anger would cause the stomach to become pale and comparatively bloodless." I knew a man once to become so exceedingly angry, that his system was not able to recover from the effects of anger, and he soon died. I also in my younger days, once plagued a small animal till he got very angry, and though I did not injure it at all, to my great surprise, it died in a few minutes. This shows that anger tends to suspend the vital forces.

5. "A constantly active mind, especially a fretted disposition, does not allow the stomach to receive, for a sufficient length of time, those nervous influences necessary for a perfect digestion of food."—Lambert's Physiology. With many, fretting is a habit almost constantly indulged in; and as it retards digestion, it must increase the irritation of the system, and induce disease. Therefore it is impossible that a fretter should be healthy; and those who fret much will in time find much to fret about. Thus they become the authors of their own misery.

6. Hard labor, either of body or mind, immediately after eating, will retard digestion; and if the system be otherwise in unfavorable conditions, digestion may thereby be entirely suspended for a time.

7. Grief, either excessive or protracted, will prevent digestion. It is well known that constant sorrow of heart will destroy the appetite by debilitating the stomach, and so gradually suspend the action of the life forces.

Not to enumerate it will be conceded that by these, or some of these causes, viz., eating too fast or too much, drinking largely with meals, or by labor, anger, fretfulness, or grief, almost every one, and almost at all times, induces conditions unfavorable to digestion, besides the ailments of the stomach itself not here noticed; therefore we ought to increase the time estimated for the digestion of food.

Dr. Coles in Philosophy of Health says: "When food is lodged in the stomach, it requires ordinarily about three hours and a half before the entire meal is prepared for, and carried into the duodenum, or second stomach. Then about one hour and a half is needed for forming the chyle, and for its absorption."

Calling five hours the average time required, if breakfast be taken at seven, the process of digestion is barely passed through at twelve. The morning meal being scarcely appropriated, the system cannot yet require more. The person may feel hungry, either from habit, from exhaustion, or other causes, but the necessity for food does not exist. As previously remarked, no person can safely trust his appetite while he is in an exhausted condition; and we are so subjected to the power of habit, that, should we habitually eat six times a day, we should become hungry so often. Also disease, or peculiar conditions of the system may cause a sensation of hunger, as we sometimes eat to fullness and still feel hungry. Now this hungry feeling is not always a call of the system for food, as in the last named case, the stomach has already received more than is required.

If the second meal is then taken at twelve or half-past twelve, there being no requirement for food, digestion must be tardily or imperfectly performed; and it would be truly a marvel if the work of the stomach was again completed at 6 o'clock P. M. Habit, not nature, requires an additional supply at that hour; or if taken at seven, allowing a longer time for the digestion of the second meal, the result is no better, as the third meal will hardly be digested by twelve at night. Up to that time then there can be no good, quiet, refreshing sleep. The stomach has been laboring hard; the nervous system has been under constant excitement; of course the brain has been troubled with disagreeable sensations, perhaps with scenes of horror and frightful images. The person awakes in the morning with an aching stomach, a dullness in the head, a coated tongue, and a dry, feverish mouth. When we consider that this is repeated in an ever-continuing round, is it any wonder that there are no more healthy people in this age? or that man's life is dwindled down to a span? What shall be thought, then, of the practice of many staid, well-disposed people, who make late visits where tea is served in the evening with rich cakes and pies, and other indigestible articles.

On the other hand, suppose we breakfast at seven; allow five hours for digestion, till twelve; then let the stomach rest an hour or more, and take the second meal at half-past one or at two. Five hours more for digestion brings us to seven in the evening; then if the stomach rests till the hour of retiring, other things being favorable, the whole system will sleep, and all together awake in the morning refreshed.

We have tried and know. Where all physiological research and actual experiment agree, we see no chance to doubt.—Health Reformer.

THE BREATH OF LIFE.

Whatever lives must breathe. Whatever shelters or feeds life must breathe also. As is the breath so is the life, for health is but a pulmonary function, and happiness a castle in the air. The blood, stifled with ill-supplied or incapable lungs, blackens and curdles; the hair, stifled beneath an impenetrable hat, dies and falls away; the skin, stifled by garments too many and too close, or smothered by its own unremoved excretions, yields its duty as guardian of the out posts of life and betrays the citadel to the enemy.

It utters its mute protest against rubber boots and air-proof coats, which, unless briefly and loosely worn, are portable death. Houses, too, must breathe as well as garments. A breathless house is suicide made easy. The asthmatic complains of his labored breathing, but forgets that his house wheezes worse than he, through its listed windows and doors. He shuts the casement because it admits cold; he shuts the stove damper because it allows the escape of heat. How is his house to catch its breath with mouth and nostrils closed? Mamma folds her sleeping little ones in blankets, and tucks them into their close cribs with impenetrable Marseilles of a texture fit for a balloon; if the chicks are timid they draw the white drapery over their heads, shutting out any quantity of bugbears, but shutting in a veritable nightmare of exhausted and poisonous air. Warmth is essential to comfort, but pure air and rich blood are the healthiest healers known. The earth itself floats in an air bath forty-five miles in length. The soil must breathe or will not bear. Not only must the plough let in the air from above, but a porous sub-soil or frequent drains must give it an exit from beneath, or you win only grudging gifts from the smothered soil. Choose a flower vase of wedgewood ware, and without an opening at the bottom, and the rose folds its green calyx in despair about its stifled buds. Nay, let the pores in the stems and leaves become choked with dust, and the plant dwindles and dies of voiceless vegetable catarrh. The ocean breathes in the trade-winds and laughs in the shout of the tempest. Its slow beating pulses are the tides; mountain billows are the heaving of its lungs. The kiss of the breeze gives it health and purity; both are strangled by the leaden weight of a breathless calm, and

Upon the slimy sea."

Since then our life is but a breath, let it at least be strong and pure, and let us not attempt the futile experiment of seeking it in exhausted receivers.—Springfield Republican.

Cure for Chilblains.—I know a remedy against chilblains which is so simple and easy that, doubtless many would hardly think it worth trying. As, however, it completely cured my poor feet, which had suffered for fifteen winters with chilblains, and to which all possible lotions and salves had been ineffectually applied, I am most anxious to give those who are similarly affected, the benefit of my experience. The remedy consists of a hot foot-bath only; but the water must be as hot as can possibly be endured, and the feet, after having been kept in from fifteen to twenty minutes, must be immersed in cold water, to prevent from catching cold. An instant relief will be experienced from the burning and itching sensation.

Fresh Air.—We have too little fresh air at night in our sleeping-rooms, often almost hermetically sealed as a means of excluding the supposed "poisonous night air." Still others are breathing only about half the necessary quantity at each inspiration, partly from habit and partly from a compression of the chest that admits of only a limited supply. Nature has provided for and demands full, deep and copious inspirations of this grand invigorator and purifier—life-imparting, pure air, inviting full measure, "pressed down," enough to expand the cells, enabling them to eject irritating and poisonous deposits.

CHILDLIKE TRUST.

"I said, "I will refrain
My lips from speaking guile;"
Do Thou my spirit train,
And lead me all the while.

So shall I be thy child,
My Father, God above;
Make me gentle, make me mild,
Fill me with perfect love.

Help me my vows to keep,
And ever trust in thee;
And while I "feed thy sheep,"
May God himself feed me.

May we receive the good
Our Father's hand bestows,
In gentle, childlike mood,
As Jesus ever shows.

The kingdom we receive,
And reign with Jesus there;
O let us never grieve
Him who takes our care.

Our burdens on him cast,
And fear no evil thing;
The night will soon be past,
In glory comes our King.

For the World's Crisis.

THE AUGMENTING DEGENERACY OF OUR TIMES.

Editor of the World's Crisis:—We can hardly avoid uttering an emphatic protest and a solemn admonition to those of our brethren among the different denominations, who persistently assert the moral improvement of mankind in this epoch. In contravention of this error, we beg to submit a few considerations, which, though possibly disregarded, will serve for testimony in the sight of God for the truth. I will ask attention, first, to the manifest and alarmingly increasing corruption in the literature of the times. I apprehend there are few who appreciate the tremendous preponderance of evil in the issues of the press of the present day. Among the pernicious activities of our time, is the prolific production of poisonous romances. These are of every grade of mischief in their composition, but they have to a large extent a property in common, viz., the policy of artful disguise.—The debasing tendency is not only veiled, but many times greatly enhanced by the arts of rhetoric, and an elaborate and polished diction.

Allow me to quote from a recent article in a secular journal of high reputation, on this subject, which ought to arouse our religious instructors from an incredulity strangely inharmonious with the teaching of Revelation itself.

"Almost every novel that is published now-a-days is based upon some form of criminal intercourse between the sexes. The authoress of Adam Bede has followed the general example. Miss Braddon never departs from it, and books of the degrading tendency of Strathmore and Chandos, are in the hands of every girl. Our literature threatens to become worse than the literature of the Restoration. Charles Reade writes a novel which in former days would have been burnt by the common hangman as a public nuisance. The last English papers tell us of a play written by Tom Taylor, which was so atrocious in sentiment that even an Adelphi audience hissed and hooted at it. Such is the moral progress on which we are always priding ourselves. In spite of our schools and churches, the world goes on in its old ways, and accumulates dust and dirt with age. The most sanguine believer in the theory of the "perfectibility of the human race," might well despond of his faith when he sees the universal tendency to move backward rather than forward. One by one the cherished theories of philosophers crumble to pieces. The world, they told us, had grown too wise to permit wars; yet there has never been peace the last ten years. We are no wiser than those who have gone before us; with nations, as with individuals, the experience of the past teaches nothing."

Such is the testimony of an impartial witness, and it bears with just and powerful effect in contradiction to the popular sentiment of Christendom, that the world is destined to a speedy rectification through the vaunted agencies of free speech, and even under a governmental system of so-called democratic equality. Free speech indeed! Free to manifold excess and wickedness. Free to the ingenuities of calumny, and free to serve Satan with industrious and vicious variety and perversity of labor. Who should not see and understand that the world requires a King, even the Son of God from heaven, who has both incomparable excellence of character and irresistible energy in execution; who combines the most enchanting personal loveliness and exalted dignity with unerring wisdom in administration.

The virus and vigor of iniquity, so far from being chiefly overcome in this apostate world, is manifesting itself in new and startling forms of seductive efficiency. Wickedness is taking more determined and cunning advantage of the unwary. Satan is crowding his energies and resources into grand preparation for final and desperate action. Thank God! The result is forecast from eternity, and the head of infernal princes will be broken, and the pestilent dynasty of the powers of darkness be overthrown. Lord Jesus, come quickly, and be glorified in thy kingdom!

Another matter should be perhaps mentioned in this connection, as an index of a lamentable tendency. I refer to the disgraceful fashions of female apparel. I confess that I have seen parents conforming to these immodesties in the attire of their children (which, I suppose, like the foolish extravagances that are reputed to have emanated from the Empress Eugenie for many years past, have a Parisian origin), that struck me with amazement. And I wonder that the wise dictate of parental affection does not instantly and utterly refuse conformity to such a despotism. And only a week or two since, I read an elaborate article upon the subject of tilting skirts, written in a style of mingled satire and admiration, expressing by turns, if I remember rightly, the varied sentiments of astonishment, gratification, and derision.

I will close this article by a reference to another subject of very great interest to those who believe in the doctrine of a living and personal antichrist, and who confidently maintain that while an ereption of saints that are looking for Christ must speedily occur, there will be short period of darkness and tribulation, consequent upon a mighty confederation of evil. I quote from the Examiner, the principal organ of the Baptist denomination, especially in the State of New York.

"If we may credit the Independence Belge, one of the best informed newspapers of Europe, secret negotiations have been carried on for some months, through the medium, it is supposed, of the French government, between the Court of Rome and the Patriarch of the Greek church, for the purpose of fusing the two communions into one powerful religious organization. A grave difficulty, which at first threatened to bring the negotiation to a premature conclusion, has at length been amicably adjusted. The Patriarch held absolutely to the right of priests to marry, while the Pope resisted this innovation. Finally, however, rather than give up the union, the Court of Rome yielded so far as to grant the right of marrying to simple priests, excluding from this privilege all the higher dignitaries of the church. The Patriarch is disposed, it is said, to accept this compromise, and is putting forth all his efforts to induce the Eastern Church to accede to the conditions imposed on Rome."

I do not introduce this quotation to unsettle for a single moment the expectation which is so intensely felt among Adventists, of the downfall of papacy. By no means. The hour is swiftly, swiftly advancing. The Lord Jesus will about the same time, we conclude, take away his ready ones into glory. But wo! wo! wo! to those that are left behind, if they come under the power of that terrible combination of anti-christian energies, which is even now preparing on a grand scale. May God help them in this hour and power of darkness!

Let us look with praying and equally anxious and joyful anticipation for our Lord and Savior Almighty, to come like the lightning shining in the East. We look for him. We think of his appearing amid the perplexing cares of the day, and we think of it in the silence and quiet of the night. We think of it in these cool and beautiful evenings, when down through the pure autumnal air the stars are shining, and as their ten thousand lights glow serenely through all the canopy of heaven, we think of the time, O, how longed for! when the Prince of the House of David shall suddenly send his flame of glory through and athwart the constellations; when the wonderful ruddy lustre of his majesty shall light up all the landscape of earth and sky, when meteoric flames shall leap in incessant showers either way from the front of that intense brightness. We can but faintly imagine it, and more feebly portray it,—but we look for it, and wait for it, and pray for it. Quickly, quickly, may the moment of eternal renovation come; yes, renovation, resurrection and redemption. Clinton Colegrove.

"ADVENTISM."

In a recent copy of the Morning Star, I find an article with the above heading. The writer says:—

"The christian world has come generally to believe, that christianity will continue to spread, its influence be more and more generally felt, and its principles more and more strictly embraced and carried out, until the whole world shall become evangelized. But there is an active minority, who see only the dark side of life, who tell us the world is growing worse and worse century by century, that all hopes of the world's conversion are based upon a mere conception of the Word of God, or a criminal ease in Zion. Such persons tell us the world will grow worse and worse until Christ comes to destroy it, which coming they assure us is at the very doors. The subject is of sufficient importance to demand an occasional notice. The stronghold of Adventism is found in the second chapter of Daniel; at least we are led to judge that they so consider it, from the amount of labor bestowed upon it.

"As this is the corner-stone of the whole fabric, we will give a few moments to its consideration. Nebuchadnezzar had a dream; Daniel interpreted it for him. The king saw a great image whose head was gold, his breast and arms were silver, his belly and thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay; a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet, that were of iron and clay, and broke them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like chaff of the summer threshing floor; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.—Dan. 2: 32-35.

All are agreed that the image represents the four great kingdoms of ancient times, in order: Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome. All are agreed that the stone represents Christ's kingdom. The point at issue is simply on the question of time; has the stone smitten the image as yet, or is that event yet future? The Adventists claim that it is yet future, while others say it is past. If the stone has smitten the image, it must have taken place at the first coming of Christ. If this be the true meaning of the text, then 'Adventism falls to the ground,' for the stone 'became a great mountain and filled the whole earth,' which means that christianity is to fill the whole earth before the end of the world. But if the event is yet future, as the Adventists claim, that filling can only take place at Christ's second coming. It is seldom that error and truth confront each other so squarely. This we regard as a fortunate circumstance. When did the stone smite the image? Daniel says it smote the image upon 'his feet.' But the legs and feet of the image, by common consent, represent Rome, and Rome was destroyed by the barbarians, A. D. 476.—Hence it follows that if the image was smitten upon his feet, it must have taken place before that date. It follows, therefore, that the 'stone' refers to Christ's first, and not his second coming, and by consequence Adventism falls to the ground."

Here are a few points to which I wish to call attention.

1. "The christian world has come generally to believe" in the world's conversion. That is so; for it was not believed by the primitive church; and Luther boldly pronounced it a "falsehood forged by the devil"—but true enough, it "has come to be believed."

2. But a few "persons tell us that the world will grow worse and worse." Yes, and Paul is included in the number; so we are not ashamed of our company or our faith.

3. "Rome was destroyed by the barbarians." That is not so; it was only divided. Rome was represented by the "iron" section, while the "feet and toes" were explained to mean "the kingdom shall be divided." This was done in the fifth century; and therefore the stone, which symbolizes the Celestial Kingdom, could not have "smote" the image prior to that epoch, as the "feet," or divided state of the kingdom, had not come into existence previously. Let it also be observed (1) that this kingdom was to be set up "in the days of these kings"—not before their rise; and (2) the same divisions of Rome are, in another vision, symbolized by "ten horns," which the angel explains to mean, "ten kings that shall rise" "OUT OF THE KINGDOM"; and (3) that "another shall rise after them," and persecute the saints for a "time, times, and the dividing of time," or 1260 years, and continue to exist "till the Ancient of Days come, and judgment be given to the saints of the Most High, and the time comes that the saints possess the KINGDOM"; which fact locates the kingdom symbolized by the stone down this side of Rome's division, and also this side of the long career of the Papal horn; (4) the Revelator locates the same kingdom under the sounding of the seventh trump—not till then will the "kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ"; and at the sound of this trump Christ appears, for it is said, "The nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, at the time of the dead that they should be judged" (Rev. 11: 15-18), and Christ "shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing."

This fixes the introduction of the kingdom at the resurrection. So "Adventism falls to the ground" only by falling upon Bible ground, and that is good enough for us, and it don't hurt our feelings any to fall upon such a foundation.

But our remarkable friend—remarkable for his blunders—has made the discovery that "not a toe remains." This is an unpardonable perversion of facts. Look at France, England, Spain, etc. Are they obsolete? It is true that these ancient divisions have passed through various changes, and some of them now exist under modern names, but a greater blunder could not be made than to say that "not a toe remains." Is this the only way by which Adventism is to be disposed of? Must history be perverted to pave the way for an overthrow of Adventism? Well, Adventism bids fair to survive such sickly assaults as this.

Our friend adds:—

"The toes were composed largely of clay, the prophet thereby symbolizing that the kingdoms represented by these were both small and weak."

He concludes that this weakness does not characterize the nations of modern Europe. Who told our friend that the "clay" symbolized weakness? The facts are all against such a conclusion. When the silver took the place of the gold, it indicated a new power; when the brass took the place of the silver, it signified a new power; when the iron took the place of the brass, it represented a new power; so when the "clay" is brought to view as being mixed with the iron, it clearly brings to view a new power mingled with the divisions of the Roman kingdom, which new element was the Papacy, and is symbolized in the seventh of Daniel by the little horn that came up among the ten. Let it be remembered that the little horn must have its full time before the kingdom comes; it was not to come before the little horn, and have the horn come up and desolate the spiritual kingdom for 1260 years. This horn has been smiting the church, but the church has not yet smitten the image.—Wm. Sheldon.—Voice.

DISINTERESTED BENEVOLENCE.

The question has oftentimes been discussed, whether there is any such thing as disinterested benevolence; and the discussion has frequently been void of profit, because it confounded all the proper grounds of action. It is taken for granted by a great many persons that disinterested benevolence means acting without any pleasure, or expectation of pleasure for ourselves, in any course of conduct. Now, a man that shall do a right thing without enjoying it, is not a true man—certainly not a saint. Who, that has enjoyed doing good things once, does not know that he will enjoy doing good things when he does them again? To ask a man to do good things without the anticipation of enjoyment, is asking him to act in violation of the fundamental laws which God has put in him. When I eat a peach, and find it good, I expect that, if I eat another, it will taste good also. If I had denied myself bread that I wanted, and given it to a little child that was almost starving, and had found that I derived ten times as much pleasure from seeing the child eat it as I would have derived from eating it myself, I could not do the same thing over again, and not think that I was going to be happy. And it is taken for granted that under such circumstances the happiness that we enjoy is a motive of conduct, that we pay ourselves for doing good with the price of special enjoyment, and that therefore there is no disinterested benevolence in our conduct.

Let us look a little at the grounds of human action. There is to every faculty its own appropriate pleasure and pain, from the lowest to the highest. There is a pleasure in gratifying the animal instinct of hunger. The same is true of thirst. To each of the lower sentiments there is a peculiar response of pleasure or of pain. As you go up in the line of development of the human mind, each affection has its pleasure. There is pleasure in every one of the faculties from which conduct proceeds. God meant that it should be so. In ordinary circumstances, it is low and moderate. It is capable of being high and ecstatic. No person, therefore, lives in accordance with the laws of God and his own mind, without living on the side where there is pleasure—not tumultuous, excessive and exhaustive pleasure, but gentle and wholesome pleasure. And to have a theory of benevolence which requires that you should act without pleasure, or without a conception of it, is to have a theory which requires that you should unmake yourself, and be what God never meant that you should be, and does not want that you should be.

If I do a good thing because it is pleasant for me to do good things, I act from a disinterested motive. If I do a reverent thing because the instinctive beauty of reverence inclines me to it, I act disinterestedly. If I love and obey God because loving and obeying God are in themselves pleasant to me, that is disinterested. The musician tells you that the reason why he makes certain chords is, that they are pleasant to his ear; and that is all his theory about it. And in respect to every course of conduct which is right, a man should have the remunerations that belong to it upon its own level of faculties.

Then, what do I mean by disinterested benevolence? I mean this: seeking the welfare of another person, without regard to any benefit that I myself am to receive. I may incidentally receive some benefit, and I may have a consciousness that some benefit will come to me; but the course of conduct is disinterested, notwithstanding.

For instance, I propose to run for the mayoralty, or for Congress; and I say to myself, "There is a Methodist church in that neighborhood, and there are a good many voters interested in it, and they are greatly in want of means. Now, I will go and hear their story, and will slap out a thousand dollars, and set them all right. The action will be a good one, and they will think I am a good christian, and will tell what I have done to this church and that, and I shall get the whole Methodist vote of the town. The action would be a good one, it is true; but, as my object would be to get votes, I do not think I could claim that it was a disinterested action. But suppose, on the other hand, a generous man, believing in the gospel, and willing to make sacrifices for its sake, should find a church that was a blessing to the community, but that was struggling for an existence, and should say, "I could not use a thousand dollars so that it would serve the Master's cause better than by giving it to that church," and should act accordingly; would it not be true that he acted disinterestedly? Some unbeliever in disinterested benevolence says to him, "I suppose you think you acted from disinterested motives." He says, "I do not suppose that I acted with perfection; I do not know that I had zeal or love enough; I do not know but my action may have been in some degree adulterated; but, so far as I could see, my motive was to do good." "But was there not the feeling that you would look back upon what you had done with satisfaction? I guess, if you probe your motives, you will find that they were not entirely disinterested." "Well," the man says, "I know that I never thought at all whether anything would come back to me, or whether anybody would be led to serve me; I simply thought that it would be pleasant to serve Christ by helping his disciples." Now, I say that that man's act was free enough from selfishness to be called an act of disinterested benevolence. You must not expect angelic conduct in human beings. All that anybody ought to ask is, that, when doing good, you shall do it for the love of doing good, and not for some remuneration. "If ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same?" And if you do good only where you know that remuneration in some shape will come back to you, the act, though good, is not of a high grade. But where a man does good not for remuneration, not for praise, not for favor, but because his conscience and his benevolence inspire him to do it, and because he loves to do it, it is right, and it is sufficiently unselfish to warrant the claim that there is such a thing as disinterested benevolence.

In the next place, the question arises as to the extent to which a man can live disinterestedly. Men widely differ in respect to their natural capacity for this. They are differently constituted. Some men are made to be beautiful, and some are made to be homely. God makes people just as it pleases him, externally and internally. There are some people whose life-world is to harmonize the elements of their being; and there are some people the elements of whose being are nearly harmonized at the beginning, and whose business it is to help the world, and to succor those who are less favored than themselves. There are some persons, I believe, that, after they are once established in the way of religion, and under the divine influence, act, pretty much their whole life, disinterestedly. I heard my father say of my mother, who died when I was small, that he did not remember one selfish thing that she did during the seventeen years that he lived with her. She, of course, in reckoning with her own conscience before God, would have given a different account; but this was the testimony that he bore—and he was a discerning man, quick to know. I have seen persons, the current of whose thoughts it seemed to me was to please others. I do not mean that they did not think of themselves sometimes; I mean that it was their meat and their drink to do the will of God toward their fellow-men.

Well, can everybody live so? Everybody can live a great deal nearer so by trying than by not trying. Can anybody come anywhere near living so? No, probably not. Judging from facts as they are, we should not be led to think it. But in everybody the aim, the thing striven after, may so far be the good of others, and obedience to God's will, that it may be said that they are acting from disinterested benevolence.

I suppose many persons will say, "We have tried it, and we are discouraged." The trouble is that you have tried it on too broad a scale. Let me illustrate what I mean. If I have fifty acres of ground that I want to bring into thorough culture, I will take ten acres, and do the best I can to bring them into good tilth and heart. When these ten acres are pretty well under way, I will take in hand ten acres more. In that manner, by degrees, I shall manage to bring it all into a right condition. But if I undertake to improve the whole fifty acres at once, I shall fail

A great many persons, when they become christians, undertake to do everything at once, and it transcends their power, and failure and utter discouragement are the result. Why should they not undertake one point at a time? If a man, for example, wishes to be disinterested, wishes to live to do good, let him begin at home. The mother of a household would find but little difficulty, usually, in acting disinterestedly toward her child, because she would be impelled to it by the power of the maternal instinct; but a mother sometimes would have a good opportunity to practice disinterestedness towards her servants, acting as if they were children, or if they were standing in the relation of wards, and she in the relation of guardian. There is a great deal that may be done in that direction. It is not a good plan to go away from home to practice christian virtues. If you succeed in practicing them at home, you will have no trouble in practicing them away from home. If a person wishes to act from a higher grade of motives, let him first direct his attention to one class of habits where he is faulty, and endeavor to correct that. He should not neglect others; but let him make that the specialty. If you will take notice, you will see, in spiritual things as well as in temporal things, that, if you gain one victory, you will be more likely to gain others, because it will give you courage; whereas, if you fail, and break down, you say, "There is no use."

If a person can, for the sake of other people, control his tongue, that is a great deal. You are, we will suppose, very quick to discern faults, and you have a nice way of lashing the subjects of them. There is that little sentence that acts like a probe, and everybody sees it; and the person squirms, and you say, "I merely told you the truth." Yes, but you told the truth so sharply that it cut the person in two! You touched his nerve of sensibility, and caused him the extremest anguish. If you have the gift of saying bitter things, and if, for the sake of the happiness of others, you will not do do it, you are practicing disinterested benevolence. If you sacrifice your own tendency to say cutting things for the sake of sparing other people's feelings, you practice disinterested benevolence. Here is a man that is accustomed to yield to the tendency in him to exaggerate; and he sees that it does mischief; and he says, "However much effort it may require, I will destroy that tendency for the sake of helping others." I have known men that being addicted to the use of tobacco, said to young men—perhaps their own children—"I have been using tobacco twenty years, and it would cost me a bitter trial to break off the habit now; but, if you will agree that you will not touch it, I will agree that I will discontinue its use." I call such acts as these acts of disinterested benevolence.

It is not my purpose to paint the ideal of a saint, with the expectation that you will attain it so completely as to do everything with disinterested benevolence; but I do say that all of us can go up many degrees higher than we do in living for others, and not for ourselves. One way of doing this is to look into our own character and conduct, and see how many things we can do for the sake of making others happier, and how many things we can forbear doing for the sake of making them happier. And we are not to make them happier alone, but to please them to edification. Try this, and you will be surprised to find how your own happiness lies in that direction. Not that I would present your happiness as a motive, but it will be a reward, if it is not a motive.—Independent.

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

REASONS PRESSING TO HOLY CONTENTMENT.

Having opened the nature of contentment, I come next to lay down some reasons or arguments to contentment, which may preponderate with us.

The first is, God's precept. It is charged upon us a duty. "Be content with such things as ye have."—Heb. 13: 5. The same God who hath bid us believe, hath bid us be content; if we obey not, we run ourselves into a state of discontent. God's word is a sufficient warrant; it hath authority in it, and must be a sacred spell to discontent. Be it so, was enough among Pythagoras' scholars: Be it enacted, is the royal style. God's word must be the star that guides, and his will the weight that moves our obedience. His word is a law, and hath majesty enough in it to captivate us into obedience: our hearts must not be more unquiet than the raging sea, which at his word is stilled. Matt. 8: 26.

2. The second reason enforcing contentment is, God's promise; for "He hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee" (Heb. 13: 5), where God hath engaged himself under hand and seal for our necessary provisions. If a king should say to one of his subjects, "I will take care for thee; as long as I have any crown revenues, thou shalt be provided for; if thou art in danger, I will secure thee; if in want, I will supply thee"; would not that subject be content? Behold, God hath here made a promise to the believer, and, as it were, entered into bonds for his security. "I will never leave thee." Shall not this charm the devil of discontent? "Leave thy fatherless children with me, I will preserve them alive."—Jer. 49: 11. Methinks I see the godly man on his death-bed, much discontented, and hear him complaining—"What will become of my wife and children when I am dead and gone? They may come to poverty." God saith, Trouble not thyself; be content; I will take care of thy children, and let thy widow trust in me. God hath made a promise to us that he will not leave us, and hath entailed the promise upon our wives and children; and will not this satisfy? True faith will take God's single bond, without calling for witnesses.

3. Be content; because our condition in life is according to the will of God, and he sits at the helm of all his providences, to make them subservient to his own glory and the good of mankind.

Let a christian often think with himself, "Who hath placed me here, whether I am in a higher state or lower? Not chance, or fortune, as the poor blind heathen imagined. No; it is the all-wise God, that hath, by his providence, fixed me in this orb; and we ought to be content is that situation where he has placed us. Say not such a one hath occasioned this to me." Look not too much at the under wheel. We read in Ezekiel (1: 16) of a wheel within a wheel. God's providence is the cause of the turning of the wheels, and his divine influence is the inner wheel that moves all the rest.

God has a design in all his providences, to make all things work together for good to them that love him. Say then, with David, I was silent, because thou Lord didst it. Ps. 39. God hath set us in our station, and he hath done it in wisdom, and this should be a counterpoise against our discontent. We fancy such a condition in life good for us; whereas, if we were our own carvers, we should often cut the worst piece. Lot being put to his choice, did choose Sodom (Gen. 13: 10, 11), which soon after was burned with fire. Rachel was very desirous of children. "Give me children," said she, "or else I die" (Gen. 30: 1); and it cost her her life in bringing forth a child. Abraham was earnest for Ishmael. "O that Ishmael may live before thee" (Gen. 17: 18); but he had little comfort, either of him or his seed: he was born a son of strife; his hand was against every man, and every man's hand against him. The disciples wept for Christ's leaving the world; they chose his corporeal presence; whereas it was best for them that Christ should be gone, or else the Comforter would not come (John 16: 7). David desired the life of his child, and he wept and fasted for it; but when he saw it was the will of God to take it, he cries out, in the language of holy submission, "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me."—2 Sam. 12: 23.

We often stand in our own light: if we should sort or parcel out our own comforts, we should hit upon the wrong. Is it not well for the child that the parent should choose for it? Were it left to itself, it would, perhaps, choose a knife to cut its own fingers. A man in a fit calls for wine, which, if he had it, were little better than poison. It is well for the patient that he is at the physician's appointment.

The consideration of God's overruling providence in all our concerns in life, should work our hearts to holy contentment. The wise God hath ordered our condition. If he sees it better for us to abound, we shall abound; if he sees it better for us to want, we shall want. Be content to be at God's disposal. God sees, in his infinite wisdom, the same condition is not convenient for all. That which is good for one may be bad for another. One season of weather will not serve all men's occasions. One needs sunshine, another rain. One condition in life will not fit every man, no more than one suit of apparel will fit every body. Prosperity is not fit for all, nor yet adversity. If one man be brought low, perhaps he can bear it better. He hath a greater portion of grace, more faith and patience, he can gather grapes of thorns, and pick some comforts out of the cross. Every one cannot do this. Another man is seated in an eminent place of dignity. He is fitter for it. Perhaps it is a place requiring more parts and judgment, which every one is not capable of. Perhaps he can use his estate better; he hath a public heart as well as a public place. The all-wise God sees that condition to be bad for one which is good for another. Hence it is he placeth men in different orbs and spheres, some higher, some lower. One man desires health. God sees sickness better for him. God will work health out of sickness, by bringing the body of sin into a consumption. Another man desires liberty. God sees restraint better, for he will work his liberty by restraint. When his feet are bound, his heart shall be most enlarged. Did we believe this, it would give check to the sinful disputes and cavils of our hearts. Shall I be discontented and murmur at the wise dispensations of God's providence? Is this to be a child, or a rebel?

MEETING FOR WORSHIP.

How highly you ought to prize the privilege of assembling often to unite in prayer and praise, and to listen to the preaching of the word. Many are deprived of this privilege, and I am one of that number. And I feel it to be a great trial to be thus shut out from communion with the people of my choice. We feel as though we had no place with the people here, no home with them. They meet, but it seems so cold and formal, so little love, or manifestation of the Spirit, such a lack of union and fellowship even among the members, that we have little inclination to meet with them, and listen to the traditions of Rome, or heathen fables.

How strange, that those who profess to believe the Bible, and preach the doctrines of that book, should make so prominent, doctrines that are not to be found there. No wonder so many of the converts backslide. It seems hardly possible that it should be otherwise. It is in harmony with the prophecy, "The love of many shall wax cold." Truly we may say, "Here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come. By him, therefore, let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God, continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name."

While you enjoy communion with the saints, do not forget to pray for those who have not that privilege. And we can enjoy reading the Bible, and prayer, and the reading the words of truth and love that come to us in the Crisis, and other Advent publications. Multitudes have no other preaching but these silent and welcome messengers. And many more have first seen the light of the truth, and been led to embrace it, by the same means. Let all do what they can to extend the influence of these publications. And may the Lord help us to be ready to hail his appearing with joy.

WHERE ARE THE HIGHWAYS?

"Go ye therefore into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage."—Matt. 22: 9.

We learn two facts directly from this parable. First, chronologically, it is the last call of the gospel before the marriage supper. Second, it is to other than the (pretended) friends of the Lord; that is, to other than the Jewish nation.

1st. It must be the last call, because it is made after the supper is all ready, which was the case at the first advent of Christ. He and his forerunner cried, saying, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand"; and the declaration was made only to the house of Israel, which heeded it not, but despised the invitation, "and went their ways; one to his farm, another to his merchandise," etc.; as the result, the king sends forth his army, and destroys them, and burns up their city. Then says "to his servants, The wedding is ready, but they which were bidden were not worthy. Go ye therefore into the highways," etc.

In Luke 14th chapter, we have a repetition of this parable, with more characteristics brought to view; which are, that after the invitation was extended to the friends that had been previously bidden (verse 17), and upon its being rejected by them, he then sends "into the streets and lanes of the city," for the poor, the lame, the halt and blind, etc., and yet there is room. Then another call is made to those in "highways and hedges," that the house might be filled (verse 23); and none of these men that were bidden shall taste of the supper (vere 24).

Now there can be no other consistent application of this parable, only that those who were bidden, that should not taste of the supper, were the Jews; and upon what grounds can we argue that their posterity will be any more favored than they were, only as they come in with the Gentile, having lost their identity as Jews; there being no difference between Jew and Greek, under the last calls, for all are reckoned in unbelief. Rom. 11: 32; Gal. 3: 22, 28.

We see, therefore, that our mission is to the highways and hedges, not to the great in the cities, who would despise the meek and lowly spirit of Jesus. Our cities mould the character of the country, and are always in the advance in every thing,—vice, pride, and idolatry, as well as science and religion. Go to the history of their origin, and you find a church erected as the first stepping-stone to their greatness; around which cluster the people, till a village is incorporated; then it becomes a city, and men become proud and lifted up, and like Nebuchadnezzar say, "Is

CHILDLIKE TRUST.

"I said, "I will refrain
 My lips from speaking guile;"
Do Thou my spirit train,
 And lead me all the while.

So shall I be thy child,
 My Father, God above;
Make me gentle, make me mild,
 Fill me with perfect love.

Help me my vows to keep,
 And ever trust in thee;
And while I "feed thy sheep,"
 May God himself feed me.

May we receive the good
 Our Father's hand bestows,
In gentle, childlike mood,
 As Jesus ever shows.

The kingdom we receive,
 And reign with Jesus there;
O let us never grieve
 Him who takes our care.

Our burdens on him cast,
 And fear no evil thing;
The night will soon be past,
 In glory comes our King.

For the World's Crisis.

THE AUGMENTING DEGENERACY OF OUR TIMES.

Editor of the World's Crisis:—We can hardly avoid uttering an emphatic protest and a solemn admonition to those of our brethren among the different denominations, who persistently assert the moral improvement of mankind in this epoch. In contravention of this error, we beg to submit a few considerations, which, though possibly disregarded, will serve for testimony in the sight of God for the truth. I will ask attention, first, to the manifest and alarmingly increasing corruption in the literature of the times. I apprehend there are few who appreciate the tremendous preponderance of evil in the issues of the press of the present day. Among the pernicious activities of our time, is the prolific production of poisonous romances. These are of every grade of mischief in their composition, but they have to a large extent a property in common, viz., the policy of artful disguise.—The debasing tendency is not only veiled, but many times greatly enhanced by the arts of rhetoric, and an elaborate and polished diction.

Allow me to quote from a recent article in a secular journal of high reputation, on this subject, which ought to arouse our religious instructors from an incredulity strangely inharmonious with the teaching of Revelation itself.

"Almost every novel that is published now-a-days is based upon some form of criminal intercourse between the sexes. The authoress of Adam Bede has followed the general example. Miss Braddon never departs from it, and books of the degrading tendency of Strathmore and Chandos, are in the hands of every girl. Our literature threatens to become worse than the literature of the Restoration. Charles Reade writes a novel which in former days would have been burnt by the common hangman as a public nuisance. The last English papers tell us of a play written by Tom Taylor, which was so atrocious in sentiment that even an Adelphi audience hissed and hooted at it. Such is the moral progress on which we are always priding ourselves. In spite of our schools and churches, the world goes on in its old ways, and accumulates dust and dirt with age. The most sanguine believer in the theory of the "perfectibility of the human race," might well despond of his faith when he sees the universal tendency to move backward rather than forward. One by one the cherished theories of philosophers crumble to pieces. The world, they told us, had grown too wise to permit wars; yet there has never been peace the last ten years. We are no wiser than those who have gone before us; with nations, as with individuals, the experience of the past teaches nothing."

Such is the testimony of an impartial witness, and it bears with just and powerful effect in contradiction to the popular sentiment of Christendom, that the world is destined to a speedy rectification through the vaunted agencies of free speech, and even under a governmental system of so-called democratic equality. Free speech indeed! Free to manifold excess and wickedness. Free to the ingenuities of calumny, and free to serve Satan with industrious and vicious variety and perversity of labor. Who should not see and understand that the world requires a King, even the Son of God from heaven, who has both incomparable excellence of character and irresistible energy in execution; who combines the most enchanting personal loveliness and exalted dignity with unerring wisdom in administration.

The virus and vigor of iniquity, so far from being chiefly overcome in this apostate world, is manifesting itself in new and startling forms of seductive efficiency. Wickedness is taking more determined and cunning advantage of the unwary. Satan is crowding his energies and resources into grand preparation for final and desperate action. Thank God! The result is forecast from eternity, and the head of infernal princes will be broken, and the pestilent dynasty of the powers of darkness be overthrown. Lord Jesus, come quickly, and be glorified in thy kingdom!

Another matter should be perhaps mentioned in this connection, as an index of a lamentable tendency. I refer to the disgraceful fashions of female apparel. I confess that I have seen parents conforming to these immodesties in the attire of their children (which, I suppose, like the foolish extravagances that are reputed to have emanated from the Empress Eugenie for many years past, have a Parisian origin), that struck me with amazement. And I wonder that the wise dictate of parental affection does not instantly and utterly refuse conformity to such a despotism. And only a week or two since, I read an elaborate article upon the subject of tilting skirts, written in a style of mingled satire and admiration, expressing by turns, if I remember rightly, the varied sentiments of astonishment, gratification, and derision.

I will close this article by a reference to another subject of very great interest to those who believe in the doctrine of a living and personal antichrist, and who confidently maintain that while an ereption of saints that are looking for Christ must speedily occur, there will be short period of darkness and tribulation, consequent upon a mighty confederation of evil. I quote from the Examiner, the principal organ of the Baptist denomination, especially in the State of New York.

"If we may credit the Independence Belge, one of the best informed newspapers of Europe, secret negotiations have been carried on for some months, through the medium, it is supposed, of the French government, between the Court of Roman and the Patriarch of the Greek church, for the purpose of fusing the two communions into one powerful religious organization. A grave difficulty, which at first threatened to bring the negotiation to a premature conclusion, has at length been amicably adjusted. The Patriarch held absolutely to the right of priests to marry, while the Pope resisted this innovation. Finally, however, rather than give up the union, the Court of Rome yielded so far as to grant the right of marrying to simple priests, excluding from this privilege all the higher dignitaries of the church. The Patriarch is disposed, it is said, to accept this compromise, and is putting forth all his efforts to induce the Eastern Church to accede to the conditions imposed on Rome."

I do not introduce this quotation to unsettle for a single moment the expectation which is so intensely felt among Adventists, of the downfall of papacy. By no means. The hour is swiftly, swiftly advancing. The Lord Jesus will about the same time, we conclude, take away his ready ones into glory. But wo! wo! wo! to those that are left behind, if they come under the power of that terrible combination of anti-christian energies, which is even now preparing on a grand scale. May God help them in this hour and power of darkness!

Let us look with praying and equally anxious and joyful anticipation for our Lord and Savior Almighty, to come like the lightning shining in the East. We look for him. We think of his appearing amid the perplexing cares of the day, and we think of it in the silence and quiet of the night. We think of it in these cool and beautiful evenings, when down through the pure autumnal air the stars are shining, and as their ten thousand lights glow serenely through all the canopy of heaven, we think of the time, O, how longed for! when the Prince of the House of David shall suddenly send his flame of glory through and athwart the constellations; when the wonderful ruddy lustre of his majesty shall light up all the landscape of earth and sky, when meteoric flames shall leap in incessant showers either way from the front of that intense brightness. We can but faintly imagine it, and more feebly portray it,—but we look for it, and wait for it, and pray for it. Quickly, quickly, may the moment of eternal renovation come; yes, renovation, resurrection and redemption. Clinton Colegrove.

"ADVENTISM."

In a recent copy of the Morning Star, I find an article with the above heading. The writer says:—

"The christian world has come generally to believe, that christianity will continue to spread, its influence be more and more generally felt, and its principles more and more strictly embraced and carried out, until the whole world shall become evangelized. But there is an active minority, who see only the dark side of life, who tell us the world is growing worse and worse century by century, that all hopes of the world's conversion are based upon a mere conception of the Word of God, or a criminal ease in Zion. Such persons tell us the world will grow worse and worse until Christ comes to destroy it, which coming they assure us is at the very doors. The subject is of sufficient importance to demand an occasional notice. The stronghold of Adventism is found in the second chapter of Daniel; at least we are led to judge that they so consider it, from the amount of labor bestowed upon it.

"As this is the corner-stone of the whole fabric, we will give a few moments to its consideration. Nebuchadnezzar had a dream; Daniel interpreted it for him. The king saw a great image whose head was gold, his breast and arms were silver, his belly and thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay; a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet, that were of iron and clay, and broke them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like chaff of the summer threshing floor; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.—Dan. 2: 32–35.

All are agreed that the image represents the four great kingdoms of ancient times, in order: Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome. All are agreed that the stone represents Christ's kingdom. The point at issue is simply on the question of time; has the stone smitten the image as yet, or is that event yet future? The Adventists claim that it is yet future, while others say it is past. If the stone has smitten the image, it must have taken place at the first coming of Christ. If this be the true meaning of the text, then 'Adventism falls to the ground,' for the stone 'became a great mountain and filled the whole earth,' which means that christianity is to fill the whole earth before the end of the world. But if the event is yet future, as the Adventists claim, that filling can only take place at Christ's second coming. It is seldom that error and truth confront each other so squarely. This we regard as a fortunate circumstance. When did the stone smite the image? Daniel says it smote the image upon 'his feet.' But the legs and feet of the image, by common consent, represent Rome, and Rome was destroyed by the barbarians, A. D. 476.—Hence it follows that if the image was smitten upon his feet, it must have taken place before that date. It follows, therefore, that the 'stone' refers to Christ's first, and not his second coming, and by consequence Adventism falls to the ground."

Here are a few points to which I wish to call attention.

1. "The christian world has come generally to believe" in the world's conversion. That is so; for it was not believed by the primitive church; and Luther boldly pronounced it a "falsehood forged by the devil"—but true enough, it "has come to be believed."

2. But a few "persons tell us that the world will grow worse and worse." Yes, and Paul is included in the number; so we are not ashamed of our company or our faith.

3. "Rome was destroyed by the barbarians." That is not so; it was only divided. Rome was represented by the "iron" section, while the "feet and toes" were explained to mean "the kingdom shall be divided." This was done in the fifth century; and therefore the stone, which symbolizes the Celestial Kingdom, could not have "smote" the image prior to that epoch, as the "feet," or divided state of the kingdom, had not come into existence previously. Let it also be observed (1) that this kingdom was to be set up "in the days of these kings"—not before their rise; and (2) the same divisions of Rome are, in another vision, symbolized by "ten horns," which the angel explains to mean, "ten kings that shall rise" "OUT OF THE KINGDOM"; and (3) that "another shall rise after them," and persecute the saints for a "time, times, and the dividing of time," or 1260 years, and continue to exist "till the Ancient of Days come, and judgment be given to the saints of the Most High, and the time comes that the saints possess the KINGDOM"; which fact locates the kingdom symbolized by the stone down this side of Rome's division, and also this side of the long career of the Papal horn; (4) the Revelator locates the same kingdom under the sounding of the seventh trump—not till then will the "kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ"; and at the sound of this trump Christ appears, for it is said, "The nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, at the time of the dead that they should be judged" (Rev. 11: 15–18), and Christ "shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing."

This fixes the introduction of the kingdom at the resurrection. So "Adventism falls to the ground" only by falling upon Bible ground, and that is good enough for us, and it don't hurt our feelings any to fall upon such a foundation.

But our remarkable friend—remarkable for his blunders—has made the discovery that "not a toe remains." This is an unpardonable perversion of facts. Look at France, England, Spain, etc. Are they obsolete? It is true that these ancient divisions have passed through various changes, and some of them now exist under modern names, but a greater blunder could not be made than to say that "not a toe remains." Is this the only way by which Adventism is to be disposed of? Must history be perverted to pave the way for an overthrow of Adventism? Well, Adventism bids fair to survive such sickly assaults as this.

"The toes were composed largely of clay, the prophet thereby symbolizing that the kingdoms represented by these were both small and weak."

He concludes that this weakness does not characterize the nations of modern Europe. Who told our friend that the "clay" symbolized weakness? The facts are all against such a conclusion. When the silver took the place of the gold, it indicated a new power; when the brass took the place of the silver, it signified a new power; when the iron took the place of the brass, it represented a new power; so when the "clay" is brought to view as being mixed with the iron, it clearly brings to view a new power mingled with the divisions of the Roman kingdom, which new element was the Papacy, and is symbolized in the seventh of Daniel by the little horn that came up among the ten. Let it be remembered that the little horn must have its full time before the kingdom comes; it was not to come before the little horn, and have the horn come up and desolate the spiritual kingdom for 1260 years. This horn has been smiting the church, but the church has not yet smitten the image.—Wm. Sheldon.—Voice.

DISINTERESTED BENEVOLENCE.

The question has oftentimes been discussed, whether there is any such thing as disinterested benevolence; and the discussion has frequently been void of profit, because it confounded all the proper grounds of action. It is taken for granted by a great many persons that disinterested benevolence means acting without any pleasure, or expectation of pleasure for ourselves, in any course of conduct. Now, a man that shall do a right thing without enjoying it, is not a true man—certainly not a saint. Who, that has enjoyed doing good things once, does not know that he will enjoy doing good things when he does them again? To ask a man to do good things without the anticipation of enjoyment, is asking him to act in violation of the fundamental laws which God has put in him. When I eat a peach, and find it good, I expect that, if I eat another, it will taste good also. If I had denied myself bread that I wanted, and given it to a little child that was almost starving, and had found that I derived ten times as much pleasure from seeing the child eat it as I would have derived from eating it myself, I could not do the same thing over again, and not think that I was going to be happy. And it is taken for granted that under such circumstances the happiness that we enjoy is a motive of conduct, that we pay ourselves for doing good with the price of special enjoyment, and that therefore there is no disinterested benevolence in our conduct.

Let us look a little at the grounds of human action. There is to every faculty its own appropriate pleasure and pain, from the lowest to the highest. There is a pleasure in gratifying the animal instinct of hunger. The same is true of thirst. To each of the lower sentiments there is a peculiar response of pleasure or of pain. As you go up in the line of development of the human mind, each affection has its pleasure. There is pleasure in every one of the faculties from which conduct proceeds. God meant that it should be so. In ordinary circumstances, it is low and moderate. It is capable of being high and ecstatic. No person, therefore, lives in accordance with the laws of God and his own mind, without living on the side where there is pleasure—not tumultuous, excessive and exhaustive pleasure, but gentle and wholesome pleasure. And to have a theory of benevolence which requires that you should act without pleasure, or without a conception of it, is to have a theory which requires that you should unmake yourself, and be what God never meant that you should be, and does not want that you should be.

If I do a good thing because it is pleasant for me to do good things, I act from a disinterested motive. If I do a reverent thing because the instinctive beauty of reverence inclines me to it, I act disinterestedly. If I love and obey God because loving and obeying God are in themselves pleasant to me, that is disinterested. The musician tells you that the reason why he makes certain chords is, that they are pleasant to his ear; and that is all his theory about it. And in respect to every course of conduct which is right, a man should have the remunerations that belong to it upon its own level of faculties.

Then, what do I mean by disinterested benevolence? I mean this: seeking the welfare of another person, without regard to any benefit that I myself am to receive. I may incidentally receive some benefit, and I may have a consciousness that some benefit will come to me; but the course of conduct is disinterested, notwithstanding.

For instance, I propose to run for the mayoralty, or for Congress; and I say to myself, "There is a Methodist church in that neighborhood, and there are a good many voters interested in it, and they are greatly in want of means. Now, I will go and hear their story, and will slap out a thousand dollars, and set them all right. The action will be a good one, and they will think I am a good christian, and will tell what I have done to this church and that, and I shall get the whole Methodist vote of the town. The action would be a good one, it is true; but, as my object would be to get votes, I do not think I could claim that it was a disinterested action. But suppose, on the other hand, a generous man, believing in the gospel, and willing to make sacrifices for its sake, should find a church that was a blessing to the community, but that was struggling for an existence, and should say, "I could not use a thousand dollars so that it would serve the Master's cause better than by giving it to that church," and should act accordingly; would it not be true that he acted disinterestedly? Some unbeliever in disinterested benevolence says to him, "I suppose you think you acted from disinterested motives." He says, "I do not suppose that I acted with perfection; I do not know that I had zeal or love enough; I do not know but my action may have been in some degree adulterated; but, so far as I could see, my motive was to do good." "But was there not the feeling that you would look back upon what you had done with satisfaction? I guess, if you probe your motives, you will find that they were not entirely disinterested." "Well," the man says, "I know that I never thought at all whether anything would come back to me, or whether anybody would be led to serve me; I simply thought that it would be pleasant to serve Christ by helping his disciples." Now, I say that that man's act was free enough from selfishness to be called an act of disinterested benevolence. You must not expect angelic conduct in human beings. All that anybody ought to ask is, that, when doing good, you shall do it for the love of doing good, and not for some remuneration. "If ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same?" And if you do good only where you know that remuneration in some shape will come back to you, the act, though good, is not of a high grade. But where a man does good not for remuneration, not for praise, not for favor, but because his conscience and his benevolence inspire him to do it, and because he loves to do it, it is right, and it is sufficiently unselfish to warrant the claim that there is such a thing as disinterested benevolence.

In the next place, the question arises as to the extent to which a man can live disinterestedly. Men widely differ in respect to their natural capacity for this. They are differently constituted. Some men are made to be beautiful, and some are made to be homely. God makes people just as it pleases him, externally and internally. There are some people whose life-world is to harmonize the elements of their being; and there are some people the elements of whose being are nearly harmonized at the beginning, and whose business it is to help the world, and to succor those who are less favored than themselves. There are some persons, I believe, that, after they are once established in the way of religion, and under the divine influence, act, pretty much their whole life, disinterestedly. I heard my father say of my mother, who died when I was small, that he did not remember one selfish thing that she did during the seventeen years that he lived with her. She, of course, in reckoning with her own conscience before God, would have given a different account; but this was the testimony that he bore—and he was a discerning man, quick to know. I have seen persons, the current of whose thoughts it seemed to me was to please others. I do not mean that they did not think of themselves sometimes; I mean that it was their meat and their drink to do the will of God toward their fellow-men.

Well, can everybody live so? Everybody can live a great deal nearer so by trying than by not trying. Can anybody come anywhere near living so? No, probably not. Judging from facts as they are, we should not be led to think it. But in everybody the aim, the thing striven after, may so far be the good of others, and obedience to God's will, that it may be said that they are acting from disinterested benevolence.

I suppose many persons will say, "We have tried it, and we are discouraged." The trouble is that you have tried it on too broad a scale. Let me illustrate what I mean. If I have fifty acres of ground that I want to bring into thorough culture, I will take ten acres, and do the best I can to bring them into good tilth and heart. When these ten acres are pretty well under way, I will take in hand ten acres more. In that manner, by degrees, I shall manage to bring it all into a right condition. But if I undertake to improve the whole fifty acres at once, I shall fail.

A great many persons, when they become christians, undertake to do everything at once, and it transcends their power, and failure and utter discouragment are the result. Why should they not undertake one point at a time? If a man, for example, wishes to be disinterested, wishes to live to do good, let him begin at home. The mother of a household would find but little difficulty, usually, in acting disinterestedly toward her child, because she would be impelled to it by the power of the maternal instinct; but a mother sometimes would have a good opportunity to practice disinterestedness towards her servants, acting as if they were children, or if they were standing in the relation of wards, and she in the relation of guardian. There is a great deal that may be done in that direction. It is not a good plan to go away from home to practice christian virtues. If you succeed in practicing them at home, you will have no trouble in practicing them away from home. If a person wishes to act from a higher grade of motives, let him first direct his attention to one class of habits where he is faulty, and endeavor to correct that. He should not neglect others; but let him make that the specialty. If you will take notice, you will see, in spiritual things as well as in temporal things, that, if you gain one victory, you will be more likely to gain others, because it will give you courage; whereas, if you fail, and break down, you say, "There is no use."

If a person can, for the sake of other people, control his tongue, that is a great deal. You are, we will suppose, very quick to discern faults, and you have a nice way of lashing the subjects of them. There is that little sentence that acts like a probe, and everybody sees it; and the person squirms, and you say, "I merely told you the truth." Yes, but you told the truth so sharply that it cut the person in two! You touched his nerve of sensibility, and caused him the extremest anguish. If you have the gift of saying bitter things, and if, for the sake of the happiness of others, you will not do do it, you are practicing disinterested benevolence. If you sacrifice your own tendency to say cutting things for the sake of sparing other people's feelings, you practice disinterested benevolence. Here is a man that is accustomed to yield to the tendency in him to exaggerate; and he sees that it does mischief; and he says, "However much effort it may require, I will destroy that tendency for the sake of helping others." I have known men that being addicted to the use of tobacco, said to young men—perhaps their own children—"I have been using tobacco twenty years, and it would cost me a bitter trial to break off the habit now; but, if you will agree that you will not touch it, I will agree that I will discontinue its use." I call such acts as these acts of disinterested benevolence.

It is not my purpose to paint the ideal of a saint, with the expectation that you will attain it so completely as to do everything with disinterested benevolence; but I do say that all of us can go up many degrees higher than we do in living for others, and not for ourselves. One way of doing this is to look into our own character and conduct, and see how many things we can do for the sake of making others happier, and how many things we can forbear doing for the sake of making them heppier. And we are not to make them happier alone, but to please them to edification. Try this, and you will be surprised to find how your own happiness lies in that direction. Not that I would present your happiness as a motive, but it will be a reward, if it is not a motive.—Independent.

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

REASONS PRESSING TO HOLY CONTENTMENT.

Having opened the nature of contentment, I come next to lay down some reasons or arguments to contentment, which may preponderate with us.

The first is, God's precept. It is charged upon as a duty. "Be content with such things as ye have."—Heb. 13: 5. The same God who hath bid us believe, hath bid us be content; if we obey not, we run ourselves into a state of discontent. God's word is a sufficient warrant; it hath authority in it, and must be a sacred spell to discontent. Be it so, was enough among Pythagoras' scholars: Be it enacted, is the royal style. God's word must be the star that guides, and his will the weight that moves our obedience. His word is a law, and hath majesty enough in it to captivate us into obedience: our hearts must not be more unquiet than the raging sea, which at his word is stilled. Matt. 8: 26.

2. The second reason enforcing contentment is, God's promise; for "He hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee" (Heb. 13: 5), where God hath engaged himself under hand and seal for our necessary provisions. If a king should say to one of his subjects, "I will take care for thee; as long as I have any crown revenues, thou shalt be provided for; if thou art in danger, I will secure thee; if in want, I will supply thee"; would not that subject be content? Behold, God hath here made a promise to the believer, and, as it were, entered into bonds for his security. "I will never leave thee." Shall not this charm the devil of discontent? "Leave thy fatherless children with me, I will preserve them alive."—Jer. 49: 11. Methinks I see the godly man on his deat-bed, much discontented, and hear him complaining—"What will become of my wife and children when I am dead and gone? They may come to poverty." God saith, Trouble not thyself: be content; I will take care of thy children, and let thy widow trust in me. God hath made a promise to us that he will not leave us, and hath entailed the promise upon our wives and children; and will not this satisfy? True faith will take God's single bond, without calling for witnesses.

3. Be content; because our condition in life is according to the will of God, and he sits at the helm of all his providences, to make them subservient to his own glory and the good of mankind.

Let a christian often think with himself, "Who hath placed me here, whether I am in a higher state or lower? Not chance, or fortune, as the poor blind heathen imagined. No; it is the all-wise God, that hath, by his providence, fixed me in this orb; and we ought to be content in that situation where he has placed us. Say not such a one hath occasioned this to me." Look not too much at the under wheel. We read in Ezekiel (1: 16) of a wheel within a wheel. God's providence is the cause of the turning of the wheels, and his divine influence is the inner wheel that moves all the rest.

God has a design in all his providences, to make all things work together for good to them that love him. Say then, with David, I was silent, because thou Lord didst it. Ps. 39. God hath set us in our station, and he hath done it in wisdom, and this should be a counterpoise against our discontent. We fancy such a condition in life good for us; whereas, if we were our own carvers, we should often cut the worst piece. Lot being put to his choice, did choose Sodom (Gen. 13: 10, 11), which soon after was burned with fire. Rachel was very desirous of children. "Give me children," said she, "or else I die" (Gen. 30: 1); and it cost her her life in bringing forth a child. Abraham was earnest for Ishmael. "O that Ishmael may live before thee" (Gen. 17: 18); but he had little comfort, either of him or his seed: he was born a son of strife; his hand was against every man, and every man's hand against him. The disciples wept for Christ's leaving the world; they chose his corporeal presence; whereas it was best for them that Christ should be gone, or else the Comforter would not come (John 16: 7). David desired the life of his child, and he wept and fasted for it; but when he saw it was the will of God to take it, he cries out, in the language of holy submission, "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me."—2 Sam. 12: 23.

We often stand in our own light: if we should sort or parcel out our own comforts, we should hit upon the wrong. Is it not well for the child that the parent should choose for it? Were it left to itself, it would, perhaps, choose a knife to cut its own fingers. A man in a fit calls for wine, which, if he had it, were little better than poison. It is well for the patient that he is at the physician's appointment.

The consideration of God's overruling providence in all our concerns in life, should work our hearts to holy contentment. The wise God hath ordered our condition. If he sees it better for us to abound, we shall abound; if he sees it better for us to want, we shall want. Be content to be at God's disposal. God sees, in his infinite wisdom, the same condition is not convenient for all. That which is good for one may be bad for another. One season of weather will not serve all men's occasions. One needs sunshine, another rain. One condition in life will not fit every man, no more than one suit of apparel will fit every body. Prosperity is not fit for all, nor yet adversity. If one man be brought low, perhaps he can bear it better. He hath a greater portion of grace, more faith and patience, he can gather grapes of thorns, and pick some comforts out of the cross. Every one cannot do this. Another man is seated in an eminent place of dignity. He is fitter for it. Perhaps it is a place requiring more parts and judgment, which every one is not capable of. Perhaps he can use his estate better; he hath a public heart as well as a public place. The all-wise God sees that condition to be bad for one which is good for another. Hence it is he placeth men in different orbs and spheres, some higher, some lower. One man desires health. God sees sickness better for him. God will work health out of sickness, by bringing the body of sin into a consumption. Another man desires liberty. God sees restraint better, for he will work his liberty by restraint. When his feet are bound, his heart shall be most enlarged. Did we believe this, it would give check to the sinful disputes and cavils of our hearts. Shall I be discontented and murmur at the wise dispensations of God's providence? Is this to be a child, or a rebel?

For the World's Crisis.

MEETING FOR WORSHIP.

How highly you ought to prize the privilege of assembling often to unite in prayer and praise, and to listen to the preaching of the word. Many are deprived of this privilege, and I am one of that number. And I feel it to be a great trial to be thus shut out from communion with the people of my choice. We feel as though we had no place with the people here, no home with them. They meet, but it seems so cold and formal, so little love, or manifestation of the Spirit, such a lack of union and fellowship even among the members, that we have little inclination to meet with them, and listen to the traditions of Rome, or heathen fables.

How strange, that those who profess to believe the Bible, and preach the doctrines of that book, should make so prominent, doctrines that are not to be found there. No wonder so many of the converts backslide. It seems hardly possible that it should be otherwise. It is in harmony with the prophecy, "The love of many shall wax cold." Truly we may say, "Here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come. By him, therefore, let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God, continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name."

While you enjoy communion with the saints, do not forget to pray for those who have not that privilege. And we can enjoy reading the Bible, and prayer, and the reading the words of truth and love that come to us in the Crisis, and other Advent publications. Multitudes have no other preaching but these silent and welcome messengers. And many more have first seen the light of the truth, and been led to embrace it, by the same means. Let all do what they can to extend the influence of these publications. And may the Lord help us to be ready to hail his appearing with joy.

For the World's Crisis.

WHERE ARE THE HIGHWAYS?

"Go ye therefore into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage."—Matt. 22: 9.

We learn two facts directly from this parable. First, chronologically, it is the last call of the gospel before the marriage supper. Second, it is to other than the (pretended) friends of the Lord; that is, to other than the Jewish nation.

1st. It must be the last call, because it is made after the supper is all ready, which was the case at the first advent of Christ. He and his forerunner cried, saying, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand"; and the declaration was made only to the house of Israel, which heeded it not, but despised the invitation, "and went their ways; one to his farm, another to his merchandize," etc.; as the result, the king sends forth his army, and destroys them, and burns up their city. Then says "to his servants, The wedding is ready, but they which were bidden were not worthy. Go ye therefore into the highways," etc.

In Luke 14th chapter, we have a repetition of this parable, with more characteristics brought to view; which are, that after the invitation was extended to the friends that had been previously bidden (verse 17), and upon its being rejected by them, he then sends "into the streets and lanes of the city," for the poor, the lame, the halt and blind, etc., and yet there is room. Then another call is made to those in "highways and hedges," that the house might be filled (verse 23); and none of these men that were bidden shall taste of the supper (vere 24).

Now there can be no other consistent application of this parable, only that those who were bidden, that should not taste of the supper, were the Jews; and upon what grounds can we argue that their posterity will be any more favored than they were, only as they come in with the Gentile, having lost their identity as Jews; there being no difference between Jew and Greek, under the last calls, for all are reckoned in unbelief. Rom. 11: 32; Gal. 3: 22, 28.

We see, therefore, that our mission is to the highways and hedges, not to the great in the cities, who would despise the meek and lowly spirit of Jesus. Our cities mould the character of the country, and are always in the advance in every thing,—vice, pride, and idolatry, as well as science and religion. Go to the history of their origin, and you find a church erected as the first stepping-stone to their greatness; around which cluster the people, till a village is incorporated; then it becomes a city, and men become proud and lifted up, and like Nebuchadnezzar say, "Is not this great Babylon that I have built"? As the result of this spirit, we see the mighty granite pile, with its steeple high, and loud-sounding bell, and its magnificent interior, and as we enter it amidst the jargon sounds of a screaming and thundering organ, and chanting choir, and gaze on the display of architecture and extravagance, one's mind is carried back to the Amphitheatre of proud Rome; and we cannot help but think them as fit for the gladiator, or wild beast, as for the worship of God in the spirit of Christ. Let a meek and humble follower of Christ, from the highways and hedges, get into one of these city churches, and you might as well think to listen to the harpings of Judah's captives beside the cold streams of Babylon, as to expect a lisp from him in such a place. No, the spirit that reigns there would suppress all acclamation of feeling that burns in a heart filled with the love of Christ.

Then away from granite piles and Gothic edifices, whose towers mark the Sodoms of these last days. Yes, away to the highways and hedges, where there is a little true piety left, and your words of truth will be to them like "apples of gold in pictures of silver."

Listen to the sobs of the honest farmer, as he, repenting, calls for mercy. O what music to the servant's ear, and how it thrills the hearts of angels. I love it, and it has been my blessed portion to be in it of late. I have buried thirty-six souls by baptism into death within the last month, and I expect to have the privilege of burying many more, before Jesus comes, though I think he is coming very soon.

Ye ministers of Christ, arise and gird anew your armor, and get out into the hills and valleys, among the common people, where you can breathe freely, and see souls converted to the gospel of the kingdom. And ye stewards of God's treasuries, receive a word of exhortation. See that ye withhold not from the highway and hedge preachers, who are not disposed to lavish all their time and strength on you and your church, but bid them God-speed in their labors of love to the people of low estate, which inhabit the hills and valleys of the country. God bless them. I love them, and will spend what little time there is left me in telling the glad news of a soon coming kingdom to them, if I have to live on potatoes without butter or salt. Who says Amen to this? WM. A. FENN.

[We hope there will be many who will heartily respond, Amen.—ED.]

For the World's Crisis.

LIGHT SPREADING.

It has of late been often asked by the lovers of truth, "Can nothing be done for the city of Quebec?" Is there no way by which the gospel of the coming kingdom of God can be introduced to that city, careless and at ease upon the ominous events of the present hour, as shown by the sure precursors of that great day of God, so long and so often foretold? The question is at length solved. All the Sauls of Tarsus are not yet dead, for at the expense of reputation, popularity, and even a comfortable living, the Lord has pressed into the field a man of piety, talent, and learning, with the message written on his lips, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." The Rev. John Salmon, Wesleyan Methodist missionary of nine years standing in the connection, stationed at Quebec, and greatly beloved by his brethren, was baptized only a few weeks since, and then with open honesty (for which all give him credit) told the chairman of the district that he could sprinkle no more infants, and also that upon the immortality of the soul he entertained the strongest doubts, and, as a consequence, also of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked; and so sent in his resignation, in order to be consistent.

For three years past, his mind has been deeply exercised upon these and their kindred doctrines; but from a conscientious fidelity, which he believed he owed to the body with which he was connected, he grappled with conviction, until at length compelled to yield to a superior power.

Last winter, the first time I saw him, he preached in the Methodist chapel here, on the Sabbath; and on the following Tuesday evening, I heard his address from the missionary platform, and from both I was brought to the conclusion that either Methodism had changed its position, or he would not long occupy their pulpits.

We may place a cover over the mouth of a volcano, girdle an earthquake with a cable, blot out the sun with our finger, and then tell about stopping the onward course of truth. No priest, no inquisitor, no roaring Bull from the Vatican, can manage this. Man with the heaven-inspired Word in his hand will think, and let him think. No danger of infidelity. This scarecrow must be laid aside. We are coming up to the judgment. Truth can take care of itself. None but the priesthood seem to dread any danger. We may as well charge ourselves with the onerous duties of taking care of the sun, or adjusting the heavens after a shower of rain, as to feel feverish about God's affairs.

By pressing invitation, I prevailed upon Eld. Salmon to visit Danville, which he did, and to good acceptance preached three times, and baptized two pious, well instructed persons, the husband and his companion. These were the first that his hands had ever employed in burying and raising again in the likeness of the death and resurrection of Jesus, and gracefully it was performed. He could not be prevailed upon to stop over the coming Lord's day, because of his engagement in Quebec, where he has planted his Master's colors, surrounded as they are by the impregnable ramparts of ancient truth, against which the gates of mortality and the grave shall not prevail. Amen, even so; come, Lord Jesus.

FARMINGTON.

Our meetings in Farmington, N. H., were seasons of much interest. Farmington is a flourishing village on the Dover and Winnipiseogee R. R., eighteen miles from Dover, on the way to Alton Bay. There has been little preaching in F. on the subject of the Lord's coming, and the other great truths that distinguish us from other denominations, but we found a great desire to hear, as was manifested by the very large audiences which came to the meetings. They have a large hall, which was much crowded with those who gave the best attention to the word spoken. The prospect there is very encouraging. We were with them two evenings, and over the Lord's day. Brn. J. G. Smith and J. Pinkham were present to assist in the work. The people seemed greedy for the word of life. Indeed, we find a general increase of interest to hear about the coming of our Savior, and a preparation for the great event.

"LEAP FOR JOY."

Our Savior has said, "Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake. Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy; for behold your reward is great in heaven."—Luke 6: 22, 23. We were forcibly reminded of the foregoing after reading the following in "Present Truth," published by Eld. J. Joy, with whom we discussed at New Durham Ridge, Nov. 13th and 14th. When referring to those who believe as we do, he says:—

"They themselves know (or ought to) that they are false teachers, sent forth to deceive the people in these last days; carried about with every wind of doctrine by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive."—Present Truth, p. 22.

Again he says the gospel we preach "is no gospel, but a base perversion of truth and promulgation of heresies by false teachers. And we know it is the last times because of these teachers."

LIVING SOUL.

The following is extracted from the November number of The Rainbow, an able monthly, published at No. 9 Newington Green, London, N., Eng., edited by Dr. Wm. Leask.

When speaking of the creation of man, after quoting Gen. 2: 7, as follows: "And the Lord God formed man, dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul," the writer remarks: "Every thing which God created with life, was so created 'a living soul,' just as was 'the man.' Four times is this asserted in Gen. 1: 'Every thing that creepeth upon the earth wherein is a living soul.' It is a pity that our translation does not preserve in each place, and in Gen. 2: 19, the same rendering, 'living soul,' which it gives to Gen. 2: 7."

The following is found in a note on the use of nephesh chagah, a term which occurs first in Genesis, first chapter, and is applied to all animals in the sea and on the land, before it is applied to man:

"Verse 20, 'creature that hath life'; verse 21, 'living creature'; verse 24, 'the living creature'; verse 30, 'life'; and 2: 19, 'living creature'; all nephesh chagah, the same word in Hebrew which is used in the description of Adam, the man, becoming a 'living soul.'"

We are glad to see this admission from an able writer and scholar, who believes in the natural immortality of man. We find the truth on the nature of man is rapidly spreading among those who are willing to take the Bible as their only rule of faith and practice. Many are greatly astonished to see how very plainly the Scriptures teach that man is wholly mortal, and does not put on immortality till after the second coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead. We believe this great truth will be embraced generally by the Lord's children, and thus they will become armed against Spiritualism, the great Satanic delusion.

"INSANE UNDERTAKING."

Some time since we noticed a statement in the papers that a colony, composed of several individuals, purposed to go from Maine to Palestine to commence a settlement in the Holy Land, because the promised time had come for rebuilding Jerusalem, when the inhabitants would be again favored by the Lord. Mr. H. H. Jessup, the American missionary, writing from Beirut, Sept. 3d, 1866, says:—

"We are all distressed at the news of the coming of a colony of Americans from Maine to settle at Jaffa. The Consul at Jerusalem has written to Mr. Seward to dissuade the deluded people from such an insane undertaking; but they will not be dissuaded. Nothing less than the 'sacred' soil will satisfy them. They will find the Turkish government suspicious, and opposed to them at every step. Once outside of Jaffa gardens, the plain is frequented by the Bedouin, and they will find the Holy Land too hot for them in more senses than one. It seems sad that sober reason could not have reached them. I have noticed advertisements of the scheme in the papers from time to time, but regarded it as a hoax. We now hear that they are coming. May the Lord have mercy on them."

We think all will do well to wait till the Lord sends his angels to gather together his elect, when our Savior shall appear in all his glory;—wait till the sanctuary is cleansed, and our Eden home is duly prepared.

SHOOTING STARS.

It appears from the following, that the telegram in the New York Herald of Nov. 14th, which appeared in the Crisis last week, purporting to come from Europe, relating to the falling stars, was not reliable:—

THE NOVEMBER METEORS—The Astronomical Theory of Shooting Stars. Prof. Loomis of Yale College has written the following interesting letter relative to the recent meteoric display, and giving the scientific explanation of the phenomenon of shooting stars. The letter appears in the New York Post Journal.

YALE COLLEGE, Nov. 15.

On Monday night, Nov. 12, a company of observers at this place counted six hundred and ninety-six shooting stars in five hours and twenty minutes, which is about four times the average number visible for the same period throughout the year. On Tuesday night, Nov. 13, another company counted eight hundred and eighty-one shooting stars in five hours, which is five times the average number. On Wednesday night the sky was overcast, so that no observations could be made. We conclude, then, that the number of shooting stars visible about the 13th, was very remarkable; nevertheless this display is not to be compared with that of November 13, 1833, in which the number of meteors was variously estimated at from ten thousand to thirty thousand per hour. The grand display, therefore, which it was supposed might possibly occur this year, has not been witnessed in the United States, and probably not in Europe, or it would have been announced to us by telegraph. It may have been witnessed in Asia or in the Pacific Ocean, but if such had been the case it seems probable that the number visible in the United States would have been greater than it was. The telegram in this morning's Herald, purporting to have come from Greenwich, is evidently spurious. It is therefore probable that there has not been witnessed this year in any part of the world a display of meteors at all to be compared with the grand display of 1833.

PAPAL MATTERS.

The condition of the Papacy is daily becoming more and more critical. None can see any chance to revive the dying power of the Pope. Truly, the days of the Papal power are numbered, weighed in the balance, and found wanting. We are rapidly approaching a scene of sublime importance to the friends of Jesus.

Mr. Gladstone recently had an interview with the Pope, of which a Florence paper gives the following account:—

"Mr. Gladstone found the Pope calm as usual. They did not speak of politics till near the close of the conversation. His Holiness complained of the Austrian government, while admitting that the events in Germany had rendered it unable to assist the Holy See, and he almost excused the conduct of the Vienna Cabinet. Mr. Gladstone congratulated him, upon the arrival of the Antibes Legion at Rome. The Pope said to this, 'Terrestrial legions have the defect of often missing the object they aim at. Besides, what matters it to me what may happen? Believe me that when the French have gone I shall be none the less protected, seeing that the legions which defend the church are never wanting'; and his Holiness raised his eyes to heaven.

Mr. Gladstone turned the conversation upon Italy, and he asked what truth there might be in the preliminaries for negotiations with the government of Florence, mentioned in the papers. This is what the Pope answered: 'I do not read the journals, and on this subject I know nothing whatever. All I know is that when I die I shall not leave to my successor the sacred and inviolable heritage of Saint Peter.'

The conversation respecting Italy having ceased, Ireland was spoken of, and the Pope warmly recommended to Mr. Gladstone his well-beloved flock. Then, smiling, he added, 'If I am obliged to leave Rome, even although Ireland be distant from the centre of christianity, I would not, perhaps, disdain to take up my abode there. Malta, a place almost altogether commercial, now that the revolutionists have begun to accuse my poor clergy of simony, would not have my preference.' In conclusion, he said he would go wherever Providence determined—that great Providence which never failed to judge men who were not eternal. In uttering these words, the Pope showed much emotion."

THE VENETIANS.

The Venetians are having a great rejoicing over the departure of the Austrians from their territory. "Carleton," the special correspondent from Europe, writing from Venice, Oct. 27th, 1866, says:—"I think that I never saw a whole community insane with joy till last Sunday night, although I have witnessed many lively and inspiring demonstrations at home." Sunday, Oct. 21st, was their day "for taking the plebiscite. We should call it an election day." In describing the scenes of the day, Carleton says:—

"All business was suspended in the city—not that it was Sunday, but because it was election day. Ordinarily there is no cessation of work on Sunday. You may see the shoemaker on his bench and the merchant behind his counter. You may hear the ring of the hammer upon the anvil, and the cry of the hucksters in the streets; but this day is to be devoted by the people to their country. A seller of roasted chestnuts has set up his roaster by the entrance to St. Marks; near him is a newspaper stand—a wonder in Venice, never seen by this generation till a few days ago. Beside newspapers, we notice caricatures of soldiers in Italy bearing to its grave the double-headed black eagle of Austria, while the Pope follows as chief mourner. Another represents a wheat field, with Garibaldi bending down to his task with a sharp sickle, reaping a crop of priests and monks. Still another represents that simple-hearted man as a school-master, and the Pope as his scholar, in the character of a naughty boy receiving a spanking! This within six paces of the vestibule of St. Mark's! Verily there are new times in Venice. A few days ago but one newspaper, and that muzzled; now as numerous as in New York and as radical as any there.

And here let us step aside a moment to see a sight of yesterday, and which I shall see again to-morrow. Not a stone's throw from St. Mark's, to-morrow morning you may see a man who has been a soldier under Garibaldi sitting behind a table in a thronged public square with Bibles and Testaments for sale. That is a new and strange sight in Venice. Heretofore no Protestant service has been publicly permitted by the Emperor of Austria. Protestants desiring to meet for religious worship have been compelled to obtain permission of the authorities to meet in some private apartment; but to-day upon the walls of the houses you may read the proclamation of Victor Emanuel that the Roman and Apostolic religion is the religion of Italy, but that all other religions are tolerated. There is religious freedom to this people such as they never before enjoyed. The golden hand of the great zodiacal clock marks the beginning of a golden era to-day. Thrilling the thought that this is the day of National Enfranchisement! Henceforth for this people there is an unobstructed course to knowledge, virtue, prosperity and happiness. Whether they will reach such a goal it is not my purpose to discuss.

It would be hardly fair to leave this subject here, with the possible impression upon the minds of your readers that the Austrians are the greatest of all despots, and thieves also. Let them have their due. The rule of Austria has not been without its benefit; for although despotic, its severity has been directed towards the greater despotism of caste, which was the curse of Venice. Venetian nobility, so called, has been crushed and ground to the finest powder. The old palaces never again will resound to the footsteps of nobles who look with contempt upon a man who labors for his bread; that class has disappeared, and the people to-day are, as in the United States, upon a common level, with all possibilities before them, each to win or miss the palm in the race of life. For this work, for reducing all to one plane, Austria may be commended. Yet I hardly think that such was her motive. She did it rather because it was congenial to her feelings.

We have stood too long at the door of St. Mark's. The organ is pealing, and the priests are chanting the mass. Worshipers are kneeling on the pavement and mumbling their prayers. Around the high altar are the priests in gorgeous robes, with boys swinging golden censers. A man in a blue coat, with a money box which he shakes continually, walks around the church calling for contributions. Here and there we see a man kneeling and repeating his prayers or counting his beads, but nearly all the worshipers are women of the poorer class. A squad of soldiers enter and gaze at the faded glory of the edifice, with little regard for the worship.

It is pleasant and refreshing to sit down in an out of the way place, close my eyes, and listen to the solemn music of the choir and the organ, and think of other assemblies far over the sea, on this beautiful day. I am lost in reverie. The music ceases, and the priest at the altar takes up his part, and the spell is broken. The Grand Piazza is filling up. The National Guard are out, bands of music are playing, and from the crowd we hear the shout of Viva Italia!"

WHERE WILL THE WOMAN DIE?

Believing that the Pope is the Man of Sin, and that the Papal Hierarchy at Rome constitutes the Mystery Babylon of the Revelation, and holding that the Scriptures unerringly teach the destruction of this Papal antichristian power by the brightness of Christ's coming, which order of things,—one event causing the other,—precludes the possibility of an interval between the ruin of that Wicked and the advent of the Lord; it is well, in connection with this subject, to inquire, "Where will Popery utterly perish?" The "when?" is plainly at the epiphany of Jesus; but at the time Christ destroys Antichrist, where will the latter be found? As the moment approaches when the King of Italy is expected to take possession of Rome, various rumors are afloat as to where the Pope and his cardinals will flee to; and Ireland, England, Vienna, Madrid, Ottawa in Canada West, Washington, Malta, and Jerusalem in the Holy Land, are all in turn announced as the selected place of refuge and re-establishment of the exiled Pontif and his court. The latest broached is a union of the Greek and Catholic churches with the Pope sovereign of both at Jerusalem. But we think the powerful autocrat of all the Russias will be likely to have something to say about that, and as he is the principal head of the Greek church in the East, the plan cannot succeed without his sanction, which his personal ambition and dislike to the Pope will unquestionably compel him to withhold. The view to us looks unlikely.

We beg leave to inquire of all prophetic students if the sacred prophecies do not constrain us to believe that the Man of Sin and Mystery Babylon must perish at and in its old seat and capital Rome, "the Eternal City"? Can we go outside of Rome to find the beginning, the full reign, or the end of this power? Can we read Revelation eighteenth in any other light? The fact may not be expressly stated, but is it not fairly deducible from the general tenor of the prophecies concerning the Romish civil power? We think so. As Belshazzar perished at Babylon, the seat of his power; so the terminal number of the series of ecclesiastical tyrants, who have all ruled in one city, goes out amid smoke and fire and thunder, at Rome, and with Rome. Hence we do not take stock in the removal of the Woman from the back of the "seven hills." The politico-religious amazonian harlot, denominated "the great city," dies in her own bed, when the Almighty shall kindle the torch underneath it. And the nations will wonder and faint for fear at the awful stroke. We do not guess, nor prophesy, nor choose to map out the future, but such are our convictions at present. The things to come are with God, but we cannot think the Pope and his cardinals will go out of Rome. D. T. T.

DO YOU READ YOUR CRISIS?

I frequently find persons who take our paper, who seem neither to know nor to remember scarcely any thing that is in it. And the reason is obvious. They do not carefully read the paper. They just skim it over, look at the headings of most of the articles, carelessly peruse a few of its numerous and varied compositions, and throwing it aside, engross their minds with secular business, and are little better off than those who do not take any christian paper at all. Sometimes they let several numbers accumulate in the house before they look at them; then read in a dull, sleepy, or perhaps hurried way, and not unfrequently will begin to complain that the paper is dry and dead, when the fact is the Crisis is the most live paper in the land, and the real lack is only in their dull, dead hearts. The paper is not written or published without mental labor, toil, and prayer; and it seems not only a folly, but a wrong, both to the subscriber and publisher, that its contents should ever be read in a prayerless, careless spirit, or the wholly secular newspaper substituted for it by an Adventist.

Brother and sister, read your paper. Take time to do so, and pray to God that if there is any good, or light, or sanctifying power in its pages, you and your family may obtain the benefit of it. I would again kindly inquire, "Do you read the Crisis?" D. T. T.

"THEIR WORM DIETH NOT."

The phrase "their worm" can not denote their soul. The word soul, or spirit, is not found in the passage. If it were lawful to construe their worm into any part of the lost sinner, then we could as well thus construe "their fire." But the spirit and soul are nowhere styled a worm, or a fire, in the Bible. And we regard it as a wild system of verbal criticism and scriptural exposition that seeks such an unnatural and forced construction of the text. The puerility of the thing is an admission of a lack of real argument. And if the worm is undying, still the soul is not said to be such. Hence if the sinner be not immortal, and the two-fold enemy set to devour it possess such adamantine qualities as to be fitly styled "unquenchable" and undying, it is not hard to calculate the result of this fearful conflict which has gehenna for its battle-field, and God as disposer of the unequal combatants. Either of the poor lost soul's antagonists alone and single would prove an overmatch for it. Much less can it, being corruptible and perishable, withstand the combined and deadly assaults of the two, the selected agents of the second death. "But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, . . . shall utterly perish in their own corruption."—2 Pet. 2: 12. There is no stronger passage to prove utter destruction than that one about the worm and the fire. Kind Savior, forbid me their grasp! D. T. T.

BACKBITING.

Backbiting is biting in the back, and behind the back. It is secret slander. It is speaking ill of the absent. The backbiter avoids a calm, open facing of his victim, and the gentle, manly and womanly reproof, with eye in eye; preferring like Dan to bite in the heels, to slander behind the ear, to whisper and magnify one's faults in some too willing ear when he or she is away. So Satan did slyly to Eve, slandering and belieing God, and creating distrust. So men and women do. So little-souled christians do. I have been guilty of it. And you too, reader, have done this mean work. It was performing the devil's drudgery. We all know it, and feel so, but alas! too many keep at the miserable business. The unholy tongue aches to be rattling on in censure of some poor erring mortal.

In the name of all that is high, and good, and noble, and beautiful, let us all quit this hateful and pestiferous backbiting. God hates it. The Bible forbids it. The generous, noble heart detests it. Families and churches and societies are shattered to pieces by it. A Spanish proverb says, "The slanderer should be hung up by the tongue, and be that listens by the ears." And verily, that person who eagerly listens to the vile trash is guilty with him who expectorates it. Men and women of God, wives and husbands, churches, friends, and all, there is a chance to reform here. D. T. T.

THE SCARLET-COLORED BEAST.

And her scarlet and purpled-robed rider.—Rev. 17: 3-4.

As all red colors betoken blood-shed in the Scripture (Rev. 6: 4, &c.,) and scarlet is a more glorious red than simple red; it betokens this Roman kingdom not only simply to be blood-thirsty, but even to glory in their blood-shed and murders. And further, beside the spiritual (typical?) meaning of these colors, the Princes of that empire, both first and last, even both Emperors and Popes, were really and corporeally clothed in purple and scarlet, in their Pontificals, as is to be read in the Decret distinct, 96, where Constantine the Emperor gives his imperial garments of purple and scarlet to Pope Sylvester the First, and his successors, to be worn by them as they do to this day.—Lord John Napier, 1611.

The apparel of this great whore is said in the fourth verse to be purple and scarlet, beautified with gold, precious stones, and pearls. And were not the Roman Emperors so adorned? But the Popes marvellously vaunt themselves of this color, saying that they received this privilege from great Constantine to wear royal robes, as Gratian records; and Durand gives reasons of their wearing scarlet, viz., first, that they are ready to give their lives for their sheep; secondly, as scarlet is twice dyed, so their charity is exceeding great, both toward God and men. But if we desire to see this Man of Sin attired in all points like the whore of Babylon, observe him as he is described in the Book of his own Ceremony, after this manner: "He that is new elect to the Papal dignity is presently disrobed of his old attire, and covered with a garment of white wool, with red hose and sandals, adorned with a golden cross, a red girdle with golden clasps, a red cap, a red rochet, a long Albe and Aumuse, and a Stole behung with pearls." And after all these they cast upon him a red cloak of costly price, and a mitre adorned with gold and precious stones. Their cardinals also wear red hats, and seldom go forth unless clad in scarlet. Besides, all the seats of the cardinals in the great hall of the palace are painted red, together with the arms of the Pope.—Theo Beard, D. D., 1625.

It is well known that the Romish court for some ages has used this color, whose purpled Fathers—in whom resides the power to create Popes—are clothed in scarlet. Scarlet too is the color of blood, and John saw the woman drunk with the blood of saints.—David Pareus, 1644.

It is very proper to add here this observation of Du Moulin, in his Apology for the Confession of Faith of James the First, who says, "The Pope Paul II. first distributed scarlet cloth to his cardinals, as well as for themselves, as for their mules; that this prophecy, which agrees in general with the See of Rome, might also agree with every pillar of that See; that is, to be mounted on a beast colored with scarlet. The scarlet color being that of blood is the symbol of slaughter, &c.—Charles Daubus, 1720.

There are seventy cardinals. The dignity of cardinal is the highest in the Latin church, after that of Pope, who is elected by them alone. Cardinals have also the rank of secular princes, being classed with electors, and next after kings. Their ensignia (beside those worn by bishops, which all cardinals, even those who are not in sacred orders are entitled to use,) are a purple mantle, a scarlet hat, and a ring of sapphire set in gold.—The New American Cyclopedia, 1863.

Beside this, all the books of the Papal inquisition are bound in red. Truly, this prophetic coat is cut and made for the power that has ruled so long at Rome. The fit is an exact one. Rome may be loth to put it on, but she only can wear it. The prophecy is unerring; the history answers to it as face answers to face in the glass. D. T. T.

SR. ANNA E. SMITH'S MISSION IN NEW YORK.

Very few, I apprehend, understand Sister Smith's labors among the poor in the city of New York. Her self-denial in order to benefit and save them, is indeed worthy of notice. She supports herself and family by her own efforts, independent of all her mission work. Other missionaries have to first support themselves out of the donations they receive, and then the balance goes to sustain their mission. Sr. Smith has a situation where, by working five hours a day, five days in a week, she can earn her living. A christian man employs her for that time to read the Bible to the poor, the lowly, and the sick. He does not give for other objects particularly, leaving them to other persons; but this is his special work to read God's word to those poor souls. Sister Smith goes and carries it five hours in a day, five days in a week, for which she receives thirty dollars per month, and in doing this she is brought in constant contact with the poor, the wretched and needy, and then (after her work is done for her employer) on her own responsibility she goes among them and ministers to their wants, holding meetings, starting missions, Sunday schools, etc.

It will be seen, therefore, that she is a self-supporting missionary; and that all funds entrusted to her hands go not to support the missionary, but to the mission work, she asking no salary, but supporting herself as above stated, that she may, like Paul, be chargeable to none.

In her mission work, she needs books, tracts, clothes, and money, to distribute among the poor creatures, to alleviate their wants, both temporarily and spiritually. Those, therefore, who can aid in this work, will, I believe, find their charities worthily bestowed, if entrusted to Sr. Anna E. Smith. Let Sr. Smith give notice through the Crisis, where boxes or barrels of clothing can be sent, and where letters should be directed. Brethren and sisters, those of you who have this world's goods, open your hearts, and with liberal hands contribute to this work of saving the perishing, the little time left us to work, that at last, when the redeemed return and come to Zion, you may come with them, with rejoicing, bringing your sheaves with you.

DIME APIECE.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to call the attention of the brethren and sisters to that "DIME-APIECE" call of Sr. Albright, for the benefit of Bro. Fenn. I need not say to our Eastern brethren he is worthy, for you all know his ability and usefulness; but I wish to say to all who will now lend a helping hand, that all you send will not only make Bro. Fenn feel that he has our christian sympathy, but also it will be perfectly safe in the hands of Sister Mary, who will rejoice to be the honored instrument in the providence of God, of delivering safely to Bro. F. some two or three hundred dollars, to help him to go and sound the alarm, that Jesus is soon coming to judge the world. Come brethren, one and all, let us do as we would be done by. I sympathise with Bro. Fenn so much in his loss, that I will be one of two hundred to send Sister Mary two hundred dollars. Who will join this little army? Come, now, let us see whose dollars, or five dollars, shall be sent first. I think that my dollar will be the first, for I shall send it immediately. Let us remember that "with such sacrifices God is ever well pleased." C. F. SWEET.

AN APPEAL.

I wish to say to the friends of Jesus that the brethren of Yalesville, Ct., have built them a house of worship; there not being any building of any kind that they could get for that purpose, private houses being too small. The brethren are few in number, poor as to this world's goods, but are rich in faith and good works. They are now in want of funds to pay up their bills.

Now, brethren, here is a capital chance for you to invest from $5 to $100 in a house of God. In what better place could it be? It will pay better than government bonds. The debt is $500, and the man who holds the claim has kindly offered to give them $100, if they will settle it all up by January 1st. Now who will be one of ten to give $50, and square the account, and thus help the cause of God, and relieve the little band of their heavy burden? Direct to the treasurer, W. S. Chandler, Yalesville, Conn.

In behalf of the cause,

THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

CLOSE OF THE VOLUME.

With the December numbers will close the present volume of the Young Pilgrim, and also the paid subscriptions of a portion of its subscribers. We hope that we shall not be obliged to part company with any of them, but continue our pleasant visits the year to come, as we have the year past. If there are any to whom packages are addressed, who do not wish them continued, or who wish any alteration or addition made in the number of copies sent to them, or any change in the direction, they are earnestly entreated to give notice at once. Do not wait till after the commencement of the next volume, but do it now.

Also, let all who wish for the next volume take immediate measures to secure payment for it, so that it may be forwarded before the commencement of the new year.

Bills have been sent to the few who have not paid for the volume soon to close. It is hoped that all such will see that they are paid without delay.

PLEASE NOTICE.

According to newspaper law, every subscriber who does not order his paper stopped at the expiration of his paid subscription, is considered as wishing it continued. It will therefore be understood that the Young Pilgrim is sent to subscribers until an ORDER is received to stop it.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

It is a good time now, near the commencement of a new volume for the friends of the Young Pilgrim to make an effort to increase its number of subscribers. We hope, on our part, to be able to make it still more acceptable to its readers, and worthy of a larger circulation. A little exertion on the part of every one, would soon double its number of readers, and to the same extent increase its usefulness. Who will get one, two, five, ten, twenty, fifty, and so on? W. B. H.

RUFUS W. PIERCE, having removed to Mystic, Ct., wishes all letters to be addressed to him there.

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. E. Smith.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—According to my promise at Wilbraham, I write you, through the Crisis, of my next trip to Hackensack. I met them on Saturday, Oct. 6th, and found them all in trouble about their mission house. Mr. Lozer had, in my absence at Nyack camp-meeting, demanded the key of the place, and said they must get some other place, after promising that they could stay there, rent free, as long as they wanted it for a mission. But now he demands rent, and that by the week. We called a church meeting on Monday evening, and demanded his account of debit and credit. He had our eight months collections. He presented his account, and after reading it before the meeting, said he would be qualified to it, but he had no account of our dedication collection, nor of the Sabbath School excursion, by which we paid all the expenses, and made six or seven dollars clear, which was to go to the Sabbath School fund, and some other things of importance, which he did not report in his account.

He reports received in and paid out, and due the mission, $4.41. Then the men that labored night and day to get the building moved to the place, handed in their bills, amounting to $117, saying they did the work for the mission, but, if he took the house away from the people, they wanted their pay. He seemed surprised, and a good deal worried about the matter, for he did not wish the public to know how badly he had used us. I think it will bring out those that are my true friends, who will stand by me. We must save the premises, as he has sold or is about to sell them to other parties, and of course we shall look for another place.

But there are three men in the village who have taken bold with me to get our building up on our lot, that is already paid for, they promising to stand by me till the building is up. We can get the lumber and brick on six months' credit. The mission people appointed a committee of three to take charge of this work in my absence, they being men with the best recommendations as to christian character and ability, whose sympathies are with the colored people; men who have been known in the place from fifteen to forty years, and are competent in every way to take hold of this thing, and see me righted, and see that the lumber and all the material is bought as cheap as possible, and keep all the accounts of the same.

Now I start again to put up this house for the Lord, and who will help me? I have, after a great deal of labor and toil and prayer, succeeded in getting a missionary for this not this great Babylon that I have built"? As the result of this spirit, we see the mighty granite pile, with its steeple high, and loud-sounding bell, and its magnificent interior, and as we enter it amidst the jargon sounds of a screaming and thundering organ, and chanting choir, and gaze on the display of architecture and extravagance, one's mind is carried back to the Amphitheatre of proud Rome; and we cannot help but think them as fit for the gladiator, or wild beast, as for the worship of God in the spirit of Christ. Let a meek and humble follower of Christ, from the highways and hedges, get into one of these city churches, and you might as well think to listen to the harpings of Judah's captives beside the cold streams of Babylon, as to expect a lisp from him in such a place. No, the spirit that reigns there would suppress all acclamation of feeling that burns in a heart filled with the love of Christ.

Then away from granite piles and Gothic edifices, whose towers mark the Sodoms of these last days. Yes, away to the highways and hedges, where there is a little true piety left, and your words of truth will be to them like "apples of gold in pictures of silver."

Listen to the sobs of the honest farmer, as he, repenting, calls for mercy. O what music to the servant's ear, and how it thrills the hearts of angels. I love it, and it has been my blessed portion to be in it of late. I have buried thirty-six souls by baptism into death within the last month, and I expect to have the privilege of burying many more, before Jesus comes, though I think he is coming very soon.

Ye ministers of Christ, arise and gird anew your armor, and get out into the hills and valleys, among the common people, where you can breathe freely, and see souls converted to the gospel of the kingdom. And ye stewards of God's treasuries, receive a word of exhortation. See that ye withhold not from the highway and hedge preachers, who are not disposed to lavish all their time and strength on you and your church, but bid them God-speed in their labors of love to the people of low estate, which inhabit the hills and valleys of the country. God bless them. I love them, and will spend what little time there is left me in telling the glad news of a soon coming kingdom to them, if I have to live on potatoes without butter or salt. Who says Amen to this? WM. A. FENN.

[We hope there will be many who will heartily respond, Amen.—ED.]

For the World's Crisis.

LIGHT SPREADING.

It has of late been often asked by the lovers of truth, "Can nothing be done for the city of Quebec?" Is there no way by which the gospel of the coming kingdom of God can be introduced to that city, careless and at ease upon the ominous events of the present hour, as shown by the sure precursors of that great day of God, so long and so often foretold? The question is at length solved. All the Sauls of Tarsus are not yet dead, for at the expense of reputation, popularity, and even a comfortable living, the Lord has pressed into the field a man of piety, talent, and learning, with the message written on his lips, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." The Rev. John Salmon, Wesleyan Methodist missionary of nine years standing in the connection, stationed at Quebec, and greatly beloved by his brethren, was baptized only a few weeks since, and then with open honesty (for which all give him credit) told the chairman of the district that he could sprinkle no more infants, and also that upon the immortality of the soul he entertained the strongest doubts, and, as a consequence, also of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked; and so sent in his resignation, in order to be consistent.

For three years past, his mind has been deeply exercised upon these and their kindred doctrines; but from a conscientious fidelity, which he believed he owed to the body with which he was connected, he grappled with conviction, until at length compelled to yield to a superior power.

Last winter, the first time I saw him, he preached in the Methodist chapel here, on the Sabbath; and on the following Tuesday evening, I heard his address from the missionary platform; and from both I was brought to the conclusion that either Methodism had changed its position, or he would not long occupy their pulpits.

We may place a cover over the mouth of a volcano, girdle an earthquake with a cable, blot out the sun with our finger, and then tell about stopping the onward course of truth. No priest, no inquisitor, no roaring Bull from the Vatican, can manage this. Man with the heaven-inspired Word in his hand will think, and let him think. No danger of infidelity. This scarecrow must be laid aside. We are coming up to the judgment. Truth can take care of itself. None but the priesthood seem to dread any danger. We may as well charge ourselves with the onorous duties of taking care of the sun, or adjusting the heavens after a shower of rain, as to feel feverish about God's affairs.

By pressing invitation, I prevailed upon Eld. Salmon to visit Danville, which he did, and to good acceptance preached three times, and baptized two pious, well instructed persons, the husband and his companion. These were the first that his hands had ever employed in burying and raising again in the likeness of the death and resurrection of Jesus, and gracefully it was performed. He could not be prevailed upon to stop over the coming Lord's day, because of his engagement in Quebec, where he has planted his Master's colors, surrounded as they are by the impregnable ramparts of ancient truth, against which the gates of mortality and the grave shall not prevail. Amen, even so; come, Lord Jesus.

Danville, C. E. J. PORTER.

He is employed as clerk in our office, in the place formerly occupied by Bro. Wm. B. Herron.

FARMINGTON.

Our meetings in Farmington, N. H., were seasons of much interest. Farmington is a flourishing village on the Dover and Winnipiseogee R. R., eighteen miles from Dover, on the way to Alton Bay. There has been little preaching in F. on the subject of the Lord's coming, and the other great truths that distinguish us from other denominations, but we found a great desire to hear, as was manifested by the very large audiences which came to the meetings. They have a large hall, which was much crowded with those who gave the best attention to the word spoken. The prospect there is very encouraging. We were with them two evenings, and over the Lord's day. Brn. J. G. Smith and J. Pinkham were present to assist in the work. The people seemed greedy for the word of life. Indeed, we find a general increase of interest to hear about the coming of our Savior, and a preparation for the great event.

"LEAP FOR JOY."

Our Savior has said, "Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake. Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy; for behold your reward is great in heaven."—Luke 6: 22, 23. We were forcibly reminded of the foregoing after reading the following in "Present Truth," published by Eld. J. Joy, with whom we discussed at New Durham Ridge, Nov. 13th and 14th. When referring to those who believe as we do, he says:—

"They themselves know (or ought to) that they are false teachers, sent forth to deceive the people in these last days; carried about with every wind of doctrine by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive."—Present Truth, p. 22.

Again he says the gospel we preach "is no gospel, but a base perversion of truth and promulgation of heresies by false teachers. And we know it is the last times because of these teachers."

LIVING SOUL.

The following is extracted from the November number of The Rainbow, an able monthly, published at No. 9 Newington Green, London, N., Eng., edited by Dr. Wm. Leask.

When speaking of the creation of man, after quoting Gen. 2: 7, as follows: "And the Lord God formed man, dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul," the writer remarks: "Every thing which God created with life, was so created 'a living soul,' just as was 'the man.' Four times is this asserted in Gen. 1: 'Every thing that creepeth upon the earth wherein is a living soul.' It is a pity that our translation does not preserve in each place, and in Gen. 2: 19, the same rendering, 'living soul,' which it gives to Gen. 2: 7."

The following is found in a note on the use of nephesh chagah, a term which occurs first in Genesis, first chapter, and is applied to all animals in the sea and on the land, before it is applied to man:

"Verse 20, 'creature that hath life'; verse 21, 'living creature'; verse 24, 'the living creature'; verse 30, 'life'; and 2: 19, 'living creature'; all nephesh chagah, the same word in Hebrew which is used in the description of Adam, the man, becoming a 'living soul.'"

We are glad to see this admission from an able writer and scholar, who believes in the natural immortality of man. We find the truth on the nature of man is rapidly spreading among those who are willing to take the Bible as their only rule of faith and practice. Many are greatly astonished to see how very plainly the Scriptures teach that man is wholly mortal, and does not put on immortality till after the second coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead. We believe this great truth will be embraced generally by the Lord's children, and thus they will become armed against Spiritualism, the great Satanic delusion.

"INSANE UNDERTAKING."

Some time since we noticed a statement in the papers that a colony, composed of several individuals, purposed to go from Maine to Palestine to commence a settlement in the Holy Land, because the promised time had come for rebuilding Jerusalem, when the inhabitants would be again favored by the Lord. Mr. H. H. Jessup, the American missionary, writing from Beirut, Sept. 3d, 1866, says:—

"We are all distressed at the news of the coming of a colony of Americans from Maine to settle at Jaffa. The Consul at Jerusalem has written to Mr. Seward to dissuade the deluded people from such an insane undertaking; but they will not be dissuaded. Nothing less than the 'sacred' soil will satisfy them. They will find the Turkish government suspicious, and opposed to them at every step. Once outside of Jaffa gardens, the plain is frequented by the Bedouin, and they will find the Holy Land too hot for them in more senses than one. It seems sad that sober reason could not have reached them. I have noticed advertisements of the scheme in the papers from time to time, but regarded it as a hoax. We now hear that they are coming. May the Lord have mercy on them."

We think all will do well to wait till the Lord sends his angels to gather together his elect, when our Savior shall appear in all his glory;—wait till the sanctuary is cleansed, and our Eden home is duly prepared.

SHOOTING STARS.

It appears from the following, that the telegram in the New York Herald of Nov. 14th, which appeared in the Crisis last week, purporting to come from Europe, relating to the falling stars, was not reliable:—

THE NOVEMBER METEORS—The Astronomical Theory of Shooting Stars. Prof. Loomis of Yale College has written the following interesting letter relative to the recent meteoric display, and giving the scientific explanation of the phenomenon of shooting stars. The letter appears in the New York Post Journal.

YALE COLLEGE, Nov. 15.

On Monday night, Nov. 12, a company of observers at this place counted six hundred and ninety-six shooting stars in five hours and twenty minutes, which is about four times the average number visible for the same period throughout the year. On Tuesday night, Nov. 13, another company counted eight hundred and eighty-one shooting stars in five hours, which is five times the average number. On Wednesday night the sky was overcast, so that no observations could be made. We conclude, then, that the number of shooting stars visible about the 13th, was very remarkable; nevertheless this display is not to be compared with that of November 13, 1833, in which the number of meteors was variously estimated at from ten thousand to thirty thousand per hour. The grand display, therefore, which it was supposed might possibly occur this year, has not been witnessed in the United States, and probably not in Europe, or it would have been announced to us by telegraph. It may have been witnessed in Asia or in the Pacific Ocean, but if such had been the case it seems probable that the number visible in the United States would have been greater than it was. The telegram in this morning's Herald, purporting to have come from Greenwich, is evidently spurious. It is therefore probable that there has not been witnessed this year in any part of the world a display of meteors at all to be compared with the grand display of 1833.

PAPAL MATTERS.

The condition of the Papacy is daily becoming more and more critical. None can see any chance to revive the dying power of the Pope. Truly, the days of the Papal power are numbered, weighed in the balance, and found wanting. We are rapidly approaching a scene of sublime importance to the friends of Jesus.

Mr. Gladstone recently had an interview with the Pope, of which a Florence paper gives the following account:—

"Mr. Gladstone found the Pope calm as usual. They did not speak of politics till near the close of the conversation. His Holiness complained of the Austrian government, while admitting that the events in Germany had rendered it unable to assist the Holy See, and he almost excused the conduct of the Vienna Cabinet. Mr. Gladstone congratulated him, upon the arrival of the Antibes Legion at Rome. The Pope said to this, 'Terrestrial legions have the defect of often missing the object they aim at. Besides, what matters it to me what may happen? Believe me that when the French have gone I shall be none the less protected, seeing that the legions which defend the church are never wanting'; and his Holiness raised his eyes to heaven.

Mr. Gladstone turned the conversation upon Italy, and he asked what truth there might be in the preliminaries for negotiations with the government of Florence, mentioned in the papers. This is what the Pope answered: 'I do not read the journals, and on this subject I know nothing whatever. All I know is that when I die I shall not leave to my successor the sacred and inviolable heritage of Saint Peter.'

The conversation respecting Italy having ceased, Ireland was spoken of, and the Pope warmly recommended to Mr. Gladstone his well-beloved flock. Then, smiling, he added, 'If I am obliged to leave Rome, even although Ireland be distant from the centre of christianity, I would not, perhaps, disdain to take up my abode there. Malta, a place almost altogether commercial, now that the revolutionists have begun to accuse my poor clergy of simony, would not have my preference.' In conclusion, he said he would go wherever Providence determined—that great Providence which never failed to judge men who were not eternal. In uttering these words, the Pope showed much emotion."

THE VENETIANS.

The Venetians are having a great rejoicing over the departure of the Austrians from their territory. "Carleton," the special correspondent from Europe, writing from Venice, Oct. 27th, 1866, says:—"I think that I never saw a whole community insane with joy till last Sunday night, although I have witnessed many lively and inspiring demonstrations at home." Sunday, Oct. 21st, was their day "for taking the plebiscite. We should call it an election day." In describing the scenes of the day, Carleton says:—

"All business was suspended in the city—not that it was Sunday, but because it was election day. Ordinarily there is no cessation of work on Sunday. You may see the shoemaker on his bench and the merchant behind his counter. You may hear the ring of the hammer upon the anvil, and the cry of the hucksters in the streets; but this day is to be devoted by the people to their country. A seller of roasted chestnuts has set up his roaster by the entrance to St. Marks; near him is a newspaper stand—a wonder in Venice, never seen by this generation till a few days ago. Beside newspapers, we notice caricatures of soldiers in Italy bearing to its grave the double-headed black eagle of Austria, while the Pope follows as chief mourner. Another represents a wheat field, with Garibaldi bending down to his task with a sharp sickle, reaping a crop of priests and monks. Still another represents that simple-hearted man as a school-master, and the Pope as his scholar, in the character of a naughty boy receiving a spanking! This within six paces of the vestibule of St. Mark's! Verily there are new times in Venice. A few days ago but one newspaper, and that muzzled; now as numerous as in New York and as radical as any there.

And here let us step aside a moment to see a sight of yesterday, and which I shall see again to-morrow. Not a stone's throw from St. Mark's, to-morrow morning you may see a man who has been a soldier under Garibaldi sitting behind a table in a thronged public square with Bibles and Testaments for sale. That is a new and strange sight in Venice. Heretofore no Protestant service has been publicly permitted by the Emperor of Austria. Protestants desiring to meet for religious worship have been compelled to obtain permission of the authorities to meet in some private apartment; but to-day upon the walls of the houses you may read the proclamation of Victor Emanuel that the Roman and Apostolic religion is the religion of Italy, but that all other religions are tolerated. There is religious freedom to this people such as they never before enjoyed. The golden hand of the great zodiacal clock marks the beginning of a golden era to-day. Thrilling the thought that this is the day of National Enfranchisement! Henceforth for this people there is an unobstructed course to knowledge, virtue, prosperity and happiness. Whether they will reach such a goal it is not my purpose to discuss.

It would be hardly fair to leave this subject here, with the possible impression upon the minds of your readers that the Austrians are the greatest of all despots, and thieves also. Let them have their due. The rule of Austria has not been without its benefit; for although despotic, its severity has been directed towards the greater despotism of caste, which was the curse of Venice. Venetian nobility, so called, has been crushed and ground to the finest powder. The old palaces never again will resound to the footsteps of nobles who look with contempt upon a man who labors for his bread; that class has disappeared, and the people to-day are, as in the United States, upon a common level, with all possibilities before them, each to win or miss the palm in the race of life. For this work, for reducing all to one plane, Austria may be commended. Yet I hardly think that such was her motive. She did it rather because it was congenial to her feelings.

We have stood too long at the door of St. Mark's. The organ is pealing, and the priests are chanting the mass. Worshipers are kneeling on the pavement and mumbling their prayers. Around the high altar are the priests in gorgeous robes, with boys swinging golden censers. A man in a blue coat, with a money box which he shakes continually, walks around the church calling for contributions. Here and there we see a man kneeling and repeating his prayers or counting his beads, but nearly all the worshipers are women of the poorer class. A squad of soldiers enter and gaze at the faded glory of the edifice, with little regard for the worship.

It is pleasant and refreshing to sit down in an out of the way place, close my eyes, and listen to the solemn music of the choir and the organ, and think of other assemblies far over the sea, on this beautiful day. I am lost in reverie. The music ceases, and the priest at the altar takes up his part, and the spell is broken. The Grand Piazza is filling up. The National Guard are out, bands of music are playing, and from the crowd we hear the shout of Viva Italia!"

FASHIONABLE AMUSEMENTS.—The rapid and dangerous increase of this evil has induced Bro. W. H. Spencer to issue a tract on this subject, to arrest its progress. It is compact, pointed, and convincing. Let all true christians assist in scattering the right missiles into the enemy's ranks. Send a little postage money, and get a specimen package. Sent post paid, retail, 50 cents per hundred copies. WHERE WILL THE WOMAN DIE?

Believing that the Pope is the Man of Sin, and that the Papal Hierarchy at Rome constitutes the Mystery Babylon of the Revelation, and holding that the Scriptures unerringly teach the destruction of this Papal antichristian power by the brightness of Christ's coming, which order of things,—one event causing the other,—precludes the possibility of an interval between the ruin of that Wicked and the advent of the Lord; it is well, in connection with this subject, to inquire, "Where will Popery utterly perish?" The "when?" is plainly at the epiphany of Jesus; but at the time Christ destroys Antichrist, where will the latter be found? As the moment approaches when the King of Italy is expected to take possession of Rome, various rumors are afloat as to where the Pope and his cardinals will flee to; and Ireland, England, Vienna, Madrid, Ottawa in Canada West, Washington, Malta, and Jerusalem in the Holy Land, are all in turn announced as the selected place of refuge and re-establishment of the exiled Pontif and his court. The latest broached is a union of the Greek and Catholic churches with the Pope sovereign of both at Jerusalem. But we think the powerful autocrat of all the Russias will be likely to have something to say about that, and as he is the principal head of the Greek church in the East, the plan cannot succeed without his sanction, which his personal ambition and dislike to the Pope will unquestionably compel him to withhold. The view to us looks unlikely.

We beg leave to inquire of all prophetic students if the sacred prophecies do not constrain us to believe that the Man of Sin and Mystery Babylon must perish at and in its old seat and capital Rome, "the Eternal City"? Can we go outside of Rome to find the beginning, the full reign, or the end of this power? Can we read Revelation eighteenth in any other light? The fact may not be expressly stated, but is it not fairly deducible from the general tenor of the prophecies concerning the Romish civil power? We think so. As Belshazzar perished at Babylon, the seat of his power; so the terminal number of the series of ecclesiastical tyrants, who have all ruled in one city, goes out amid smoke and fire and thunder, at Rome, and with Rome. Hence we do not take stock in the removal of the Woman from the back of the "seven hills." The politico-religious amazonian harlot, denominated "the great city," dies in her own bed, when the Almighty shall kindle the torch underneath it. And the nations will wonder and faint for fear at the awful stroke. We do not guess, nor prophesy, nor choose to map out the future, but such are our convictions at present. The things to come are with God, but we cannot think the Pope and his cardinals will go out of Rome. D. T. T.

DO YOU READ YOUR CRISIS?

I frequently find persons who take our paper, who seem neither to know nor to remember scarcely any thing that is in it. And the reason is obvious. They do not carefully read the paper. They just skim it over, look at the headings of most of the articles, carelessly peruse a few of its numerous and varied compositions, and throwing it aside, engross their minds with secular business, and are little better off than those who do not take any christian paper at all. Sometimes they let several numbers accumulate in the house before they look at them; then read in a dull, sleepy, or perhaps hurried way, and not unfrequently will begin to complain that the paper is dry and dead, when the fact is the Crisis is the most live paper in the land, and the real lack is only in the dull, dead hearts. The paper is not written or published without mental labor, toil, and prayer; and it seems not only a folly, but a wrong, both to the subscriber and publisher, that its contents should ever be read in a prayerless, careless spirit, or the wholly secular newspaper substituted for it by an Adventist.

Brother and sister, read your paper. Take time to do so, and pray to God that if there is any good, or light, or sanctifying power in its pages, you and your family may obtain the benefit of it. I would again kindly inquire, "Do you read the Crisis?" D. T. T.

"THEIR WORM DIETH NOT."

The phrase "their worm" can not denote their soul. The word soul, or spirit, is not found in the passage. If it were lawful to construe their worm into any part of the lost sinner, then we could as well thus construe "their fire." But the spirit and soul are nowhere styled a worm, or a fire, in the Bible. And we regard it as a wild system of verbal criticism and scriptural exposition that seeks such an unnatural and forced construction of the text. The puerility of the thing is an admission of a lack of real argument. And if the worm is undying, still the soul is not said to be such. Hence if the sinner be not immortal, and the two-fold enemy set to devour it possess such adamantine qualities as to be fitly styled "unquenchable" and undying, it is not hard to calculate the result of this fearful conflict which has gehenna for its battle-field, and God as disposer of the unequal combatants. Either of the poor lost soul's antagonists alone and single would prove an overmatch for it. Much less can it, being corruptible and perishable, withstand the combined and deadly assaults of the two, the selected agents of the second death. "But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, . . . shall utterly perish in their own corruption."—2 Pet. 2: 12. There is no stronger passage to prove utter destruction than that one about the worm and the fire. Kind Savior, forbid me their grasp! D. T. T.

BACKBITING.

Backbiting is biting in the back, and behind the back. It is secret slander. It is speaking ill of the absent. The backbiter avoids a calm, open facing of his victim, and the gentle, manly and womanly reproof, with eye in eye; preferring like Dan to bite in the heels, to slander behind the ear, to whisper and magnify one's faults in some too willing ear when he or she is away. So Satan did slyly to Eve, slandering and belieing God, and creating distrust. So men and women do. So little-souled christians do. I have been guilty of it. And you too, reader, have done this mean work. It was performing the devil's drudgery. We all know it, and feel so, but alas! too many keep at the miserable business. The unholy tongue aches to be rattling on in censure of some poor erring mortal.

In the name of all that is high, and good, and noble, and beautiful, let us all quit this hateful and pestiferous backbiting. God hates it. The Bible forbids it. The generous, noble heart detests it. Families and churches and societies are shattered to pieces by it. A Spanish proverb says, "The slanderer should be hung up by the tongue, and he that listens by the ears." And verily, that person who eagerly listens to the vile trash is guilty with him who expectorates it. Men and women of God, wives and husbands, churches, friends, and all, there is a chance to reform here. D. T. T.

THE SCARLET-COLORED BEAST.

And her scarlet and purpled-robed rider.—REV. 17: 3-4.

As all red colors betoken blood-shed in the Scripture (Rev. 6: 4, &c.,) and scarlet is a more glorious red than simple red; it betokens this Roman kingdom not only simply to be blood-thirsty, but even to glory in their blood-shed and murders. And further, beside the spiritual (typical?) meaning of these colors, the Princes of that empire, both first and last, even both Emperors and Popes, were really and corporeally clothed in purple and scarlet, in their Pontificals, as is to be read in the Decret distinct, 96, where Constantine the Emperor gives his imperial garments of purple and scarlet to Pope Sylvester the First, and his successors, to be worn by them as they do to this day.—Lord John Napier, 1611.

The apparel of this great whore is said in the fourth verse to be purple and scarlet, beautified with gold, precious stones, and pearls. And were not the Roman Emperors so adorned? But the Popes marvellously vaunt themselves of this color, saying that they received this privilege from great Constantine to wear royal robes, as Gratian records; and Durand gives reasons of their wearing scarlet, viz., first, that they are ready to give their lives for their sheep; secondly, as scarlet is twice dyed, so their charity is exceeding great, both toward God and men. But if we desire to see this Man of Sin attired in all points like the whore of Babylon, observe him as he is described in the Book of his own Ceremony, after this manner: "He that is new elect to the Papal dignity is presently disrobed of his old attire, and covered with a garment of white wool, with red hose and sandals, adorned with a golden cross, a red girdle with golden clasps, a red cap, a red rochet, a long Albe and Aumusse, and a Stole behung with pearls." And after all these they cast upon him a red cloak of costly price, and a mitre adorned with gold and precious stones. Their cardinals also wear red hats, and seldom go forth unless clad in scarlet. Besides, all the seats of the cardinals in the great hall of the palace are painted red, together with the arms of the Pope.—Theo Beard, D. D., 1626.

It is well known that the Romish court for some ages has used this color, whose purpled Fathers—in whom resides the power to create Popes—are clothed in scarlet. Scarlet too is the color of blood, and John saw the woman drunk with the blood of saints.—David Pareus, 1644.

It is very proper to add here this observation of Du Moulin, in his Apology for the Confession of Faith of James the First, who says, "The Pope Paul II. first distributed scarlet cloth to his cardinals, as well as for themselves, as for their mules; that this prophecy, which agrees in general with the See of Rome, might also agree with every pillar of that See; that is, to be mounted on a beast colored with scarlet. The scarlet color being that of blood is the symbol of slaughter, &c.—Charles Daubus, 1720.

There are seventy cardinals. The dignity of cardinal is the highest in the Latin church, after that of Pope, who is elected by them alone. Cardinals have also the rank of secular princes, being classed with electors, and next after kings. Their ensignia (beside those worn by bishops, which all cardinals, even those who are not in sacred orders are entitled to use,) are a purple mantle, a scarlet hat, and a ring of sapphire set in gold.—The New American Cyclopedia, 1863.

Beside this, all the books of the Papal inquisition are bound in red. Truly, this prophetic coat is cut and made for the power that has ruled so long at Rome. The fit is an exact one. Rome may be loth to put it on, but she only can wear it. The prophecy is unerring; the history answers to it as face answers to face in the glass. D. T. T.

For the World's Crisis.

SR. ANNA E. SMITH'S MISSION IN NEW YORK.

Very few, I apprehend, understand Sister Smith's labors among the poor in the city of New York. Her self-denial in order to benefit and save them, is indeed worthy of notice. She supports herself and family by her own efforts, independent of all her mission work. Other missionaries have to first support themselves out of the donations they receive, and then the balance goes to sustain their mission. Sr. Smith has a situation where, by working five hours a day, five days in a week, she can earn her living. A christian man employs her for that time to read the Bible to the poor, the lowly, and the sick. He does not give for other objects particularly, leaving them to other persons; but this is his special work to read God's word to those poor souls. Sister Smith goes and carries it five hours in a day, five days in a week, for which she receives thirty dollars per month, and in doing this she is brought in constant contact with the poor, the wretched and needy, and then (after her work is done for her employer) on her own responsibility she goes among them and ministers to their wants, holding meetings, starting missions, Sunday schools, etc.

It will be seen, therefore, that she is a self-supporting missionary; and that all funds entrusted to her hands go not to support the missionary, but to the mission work, she asking no salary, but supporting herself as above stated, that she may, like Paul, be chargeable to none.

In her mission work, she needs books, tracts, clothes, and money, to distribute among the poor creatures, to alleviate their wants, both temporarily and spiritually. Those, therefore, who can aid in this work, will, I believe, find their charities worthily bestowed, if entrusted to Sr. Anna E. Smith. Let Sr. Smith give notice through the Crisis, where boxes or barrels of clothing can be sent, and where letters should be directed. Brethren and sisters, those of you who have this world's goods, open your hearts, and with liberal hands contribute to this work of saving the perishing, the little time left us to work, that at last, when the redeemed return and come to Zion, you may come with them, with rejoicing, bringing your sheaves with you.

DIME APIECE.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to call the attention of the brethren and sisters to that "DIME-APIECE" call of Sr. Albright, for the benefit of Bro. Fenn. I need not say to our Eastern brethren he is worthy, for you all know his ability and usefulness; but I wish to say to all who will now lend a helping hand, that all you send will not only make Bro. Fenn feel that he has our christian sympathy, but also it will be perfectly safe in the hands of Sister Mary, who will rejoice to be the honored instrument in the providence of God, of delivering safely to Bro. F. some two or three hundred dollars, to help him to go and sound the alarm, that Jesus is soon coming to judge the world. Come brethren, one and all, let us do as we would be done by. I sympathize with Bro. Fenn so much in his loss, that I will be one of two hundred to send Sister Mary two hundred dollars. Who will join this little army? Come, now, let us see whose dollars, or five dollars, shall be sent first. I think that my dollar will be the first. for I shall send it immediately. Let us remember that "with such sacrifices God is ever well pleased." C. F. SWEET.

For the World's Crisis.

AN APPEAL.

I wish to say to the friends of Jesus that the brethren of Yalesville, Ct., have built them a house of worship; there not being any building of any kind that they could get for that purpose, private houses being too small. The brethren are few in number, poor as to this world's goods, but are rich in faith and good works. They are now in want of funds to pay up their bills.

Now, brethren, here is a capital chance for you to invest from $5 to $100 in a house of God. In what better place could it be? It will pay better than government bonds. The debt is $500, and the man who holds the claim has kindly offered to give them $100, if they will settle it all up by January 1st. Now who will be one of ten to give $50, and square the account, and thus help the cause of God, and relieve the little band of their heavy burden? Direct to the treasurer, W. S. Chandler, Yalesville, Conn.

In behalf of the cause,

THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

CLOSE OF THE VOLUME.

With the December numbers will close the present volume of the Young Pilgrim, and also the paid subscriptions of a portion of its subscribers. We hope that we shall not be obliged to part company with any of them, but continue our pleasant visits the year to come, as we have the year past. If there are any to whom packages are addressed, who do not wish them continued, or who wish any alteration or addition made in the number of copies sent to them, or any change in the direction, they are earnestly entreated to give notice at once. Do not wait till after the commencement of the next volume, but do it now.

Also, let all who wish for the next volume take immediate measures to secure payment for it, so that it may be forwarded before the commencement of the new year.

Bills have been sent to the few who have not paid for the volume soon to close. It is hoped that all such will see that they are paid without delay.

PLEASE NOTICE.

According to newspaper law, every subscriber who does not order his paper stopped at the expiration of his paid subscription, is considered as wishing it continued. It will therefore be understood that the Young Pilgrim is sent to subscribers until an ORDER is received to stop it.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

It is a good time now, near the commencement of a new volume for the friends of the Young Pilgrim to make an effort to increase its number of subscribers. We hope, on our part, to be able to make it still more acceptable to its readers, and worthy of a larger circulation. A little exertion on the part of every one, would soon double its number of readers, and to the same extent increase its usefulness. Who will get one, two, five, ten, twenty, fifty, and so on? W. B. H.

RUFUS W. PIERCE, having removed to Mystic, Ct., wishes all letters to be addressed to him there.

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. E. Smith.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—According to my promise at Wilbraham, I write you, through the Crisis, of my next trip to Hackensack. I met them on Saturday, Oct. 6th, and found them all in trouble about their mission house. Mr. Loser had, in my absence at Nyack campmeeting, demanded the key of the place, and said they must get some other place, after promising that they could stay there, rent free, as long as they wanted it for a mission. But now he demands rent, and that by the week. We called a church meeting on Monday evening, and demanded his account of debit and credit. He had our eight months collections. He presented his account, and after reading it before the meeting, said he would be qualified to it, but he had no account of our dedication collection, nor of the Sabbath School excursion, by which we paid all the expenses, and made six or seven dollars clear, which was to go to the Sabbath School fund, and some other things of importance, which he did not report in his account.

He reports received in and paid out, and due the mission, $4.41. Then the men that labored night and day to get the building moved to the place, handed in their bills, amounting to $117, saying they did the work for the mission, but, if he took the house away from the people, they wanted their pay. He seemed surprised, and a good deal worried about the matter, for he did not wish the public to know how badly he had used us. I think it will bring out those that are my true friends, who will stand by me. We must save the premises, as he has sold or is about to sell them to other parties, and of course we shall look for another place.

But there are three men in the village who have taken hold with me to get our building up on our lot, that is already paid for, they promising to stand by me till the building is up. We can get the lumber and brick on six months' credit. The mission people appointed a committee of three to take charge of this work in my absence, they being men with the best recommendations as to christian character and ability, whose sympathies are with the colored people; men who have been known in the place from fifteen to forty years, and are competent in every way to take hold of this thing, and see me righted, and see that the lumber and all the material is bought as cheap as possible, and keep all the accounts of the same.

Now I start again to put up this house for the Lord, and who will help me? I have, after a great deal of labor and toil and prayer, succeeded in getting a missionary for this mission, and the salary is all subscribed for. Thank God for this. This missionary, who is to take the charge of this mission, preach, take charge of the prayer and class-meetings, is a most excellent preacher, and a good nurse for the young converts; is a most excellent christian, and the last two years received, and now believes, the blessed truth of Jesus' soon coming. So after hard toiling and long waiting, I have the desire of my heart, in that one thing, praise the Lord; and I believe I shall in all the rest.

Our Sabbath School numbers forty-five, and can be increased to sixty. We shall start our day school as soon as the missionary arrives, which I expect will be in two weeks. We shall have night schools also for the adults. Each one will pay a certain amount per week; the price has not yet been decided upon. Our new building will be twenty-five by forty, and then it will not hold all on Sunday evenings, as this church is always crowded to excess. We want to get our house up as soon as possible, so as to have our protracted meeting, as there are sinners there that ought to be converted, and must be, before Jesus comes, or be lost. O may my heavenly Father help this one time.

I shall have to raise nine hundred dollars by the second day of April. You that have faith, do you think it can be done? I have never failed in anything that I felt God wanted me to do, and I don't think we shall in this. Will you pray especially for this one thing?

I shall visit the churches wherever I am sent for, in behalf of this mission. I ask no pay for my labors, nor ever did; but, like Esther, I ask for my people. May God direct every step, and every penny. If any of the brethren wish me to come and labor among them, write me as early as possible. Your sister in the highways and hedges,

ANNA E. SMITH.

From Sr. A. (Mussey) Tripp.

BRO. GRANT:—As it has been many weeks since I have written for the Crisis, I would like to report myself as being still among the living, concerning whom there is hope. Perhaps some of my friends are thinking I have lost my name, and myself also; but in this they are mistaken, for I have lost neither name nor self, for I still retain my old name, with an addition, and am not among the lost. Thank God, I still live to praise his blessed name.

Since I came to the State of Maine, I have at times felt a special blessing from the Lord resting upon me, as I have tried to obey God in proclaiming the gospel; and I expect to labor in the gospel field until called from labor to reward. Although my coming among my brethren in different places may not be so frequent as formerly, yet be assured my work is not done, and my voice will be heard somewhere in the gospel field, pealing forth this last warning message, God helping me.

For the last few years, I have been looking forward to 1868 for the consummation of our blessed hope, and that year truly is very near; but recently my soul has been stirred within me, and a spirit of waking has come upon me so powerfully, that it seems somewhat like the spirit of 1843–4, that Jesus Christ is about to appear in his glory, and the coming year—1867, may be the year of jubilee. Amen, my soul replies. Tokens thicken, and we are almost home, children.

Time is in the Bible, and will yet be understood by the waiting church. As we draw near the day of redemption, light will shine more and more, until the prophecies will unfold such rays of heavenly light that the bride will know beyond a doubt when the time of translation is nearing, so that she will be watching daily the hour of her coming Lord and Bridegroom, fully awake, and on the watch-tower. As we have passed one, two, and three watches, and are now near or coming into the fourth watch, it must be the morning watch, and is the last one named, which will be the getting up time of the saints, and the white-robed millions will be borne away by angels to meet their Lord and King, no more to sigh or weep. Some are weeping to-day over the loss of loved ones recently departed. Dear Sister Whitehead, God bless you. We all mourn with you, and the tear-drops freely fall, when we think of our dear Bro. Whitehead, that his voice is hushed in death, and we shall hear it no more till the trump of God shall sound to awaken the dead. Then we'll hear him, with the entombed millions, who will arise from their dusty beds and sing for joy, "The Lord has come."

O praise our God, all ye his saints. Ye ministers of his, that do his will in pealing forth the glad tidings of the coming kingdom, sound it out, and sound it long and loud. Let your voices echo and re-echo to earth's remotest bounds, Behold he cometh; he cometh to judge the world in righteousness, and his people with his truth.

And sisters dear, don't ever fear;
Handmaidens too, God calls on you;
Go sound the message far and near,
For Christ may come the coming year.

O blessed Jesus! and shall we see him so soon? We have waited long; we have toiled and prayed; we have sowed in tears; we have been willing to suffer reproach for his truth and name's sake; and now, behold he comes to vindicate his truth, justify his people, and give them the victory and the crown. Death will be destroyed, tears wiped away, sorrow and mourning all gone, Eden restored, the new earth blooming, the City comes down, the river of life runs, the tree of life grows and spreads its beautiful green branches, no more to wither; the birds of paradise will sing, God's glory fill the whole earth, and the saints take the kingdom and possess it for ever, even for ever and ever. Good enough, thank the Lord; and let all who wait our coming King say, Amen and amen. Your sister, looking for Jesus,

Searsport, Me. A. MUSSEY TRIPP.

From Bro. E. McCulloch.

BRO. GRANT:—My pen has been silent for some time, waiting that I might have something cheering to write. We have been waiting, watching, and praying and laboring, to the end that God would pour out his spirit in this place, and arouse perishing mankind to a sense of their danger, while they were without hope, and without God in the world; and although his special blessing in this particular has seemed to be delayed, yet God, ever faithful to his promise, has visited us in great mercy of late. Sinners have been converted, and found peace in believing, and we had the privilege, one week ago to-day, of baptizing three young men, and others we expect will follow their example as soon as convenient. Others are requesting the prayers of God's dear children in their behalf. Backsliders are being reclaimed and brought back to the fold of Christ. God's name is honored and glorified, where once it was blasphemed and ridiculed. Thus the Lord has been blessing us, and pouring out his spirit upon us, of late; and with joy we hasten to spread the good news, and thus encourage our brethren in other places to hold on to the arm of the Lord, "for in due time we shall reap if we faint not." Brethren, pray for us. Yours in hope of eternal life, E. MCCULLOCH.

Savoy, Nov. 18th, 1866.

From Bro. W. H. Fisher.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—From a sense of duty, I wish to write a few lines to you, through the Crisis. The Lord has blessed me, and still does greatly. Hallelujah! I read in the word that to whom much is given, much will be required. Therefore, if we have the blessings of God bestowed upon us largely, it throws upon us the greater responsibility. I feel from the depth of my soul that we are upon the threshold of the judgment.—"And so do I," says one. "I believe it," says another. "Every thing looks like it," says a third. Now the question is, do we live as though we believed it? Seeing ye look for such things, "what manner of persons ought ye to be," etc. Would being engaged in the light and trifling things of this world be the "manner" of persons the apostle speaks of? Would following the world's fashions, its maxims, or partaking of its spirit, be the "manner" of persons the apostle Peter would have you to be? Yet, I am sorry to say, this is the manner of many who profess to be looking for just such things as are spoken of by the apostle. WM. H. FISHER.

For the World's Crisis.

THE HOME FESTIVAL.

BRO. GRANT:—The following lines, written by my sister, who died the last year, may be read with some interest just at this time. S. HALL.

Why beats the heart so joyous as the festive hour draws near,
Marked by the gathered plenty which crowns the fading year?
Why throbs the pulse so wildly, the eye grow strangely bright,
As each perspective pleasure beams on the mental sight?

It is the expected joy of meeting once again
Loved friends whose hours of absence to the heart were hours of pain;
Of greeting those for whom our hearts have kept a treasured place,
And recalling those sweet memories which time can ne'er efface.

It is the glad reunion of kindred spirits here,
Which make the home festivities to every heart so dear;
Where dwell those purer pleasures that know the least alloy,
Where fancy's bright imaginings find reality in joy.

That dear home festival! how it helps to break the snare,
Thickly woven round life's pathway with many a mesh of care;
How it helps to brighten every link in friendship's golden chain,
And gives the heart new strength to meet the ills of life again.

But o'er some hearts and homes a cloud is gathered now,
Whose "silver lining" sheds no light upon the darkened brow;
To whom this scene of gladness but sad remembrance brings
Of joys too quickly faded, fit type of earthly things.

Hearts that were once the gayest in saddest sorrow bow,
And friends that here were wont to meet, are widely severed now;
Parted are some forever; in distant lands some roam,
Whose hearts are yearning even now to share the joys of home.

Hours that to some are sunshine, to others darkest prove;
Let us bear the thought upon our hearts, and with spirits not too gay,
Seek to lighten each of sorrow, and to cheer each lonely way.
Thus is it ever changing, as on through life we range.

For the World's Crisis.

WE SHALL SOON SEE JESUS.

I am so glad that Jesus is soon to come. The hope of soon seeing Jesus cheers my heart, and causes me to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. "O hail happy day," day of sweet release to all the weary ones of earth. When all the good of earth will meet and never part again. The curse removed, death destroyed, and no more sin. Is it possible that we are so near the rest that remains for the people of God? Is it possible that we shall soon see him whom we love so dearly, and best of all, be made like him? There no wave of sorrow will roll over us again. There no tempter's power will ever be known, no pinching want, no rude storms, beat upon us; no farewells ever spoken, no separation ever known. O how I do long to be there. Lord, let thy kingdom come; let thy dear saints go home.

I am so glad that I am willing to be any thing or nothing for Christ's sake. We are called the filth and off-scouring of all things. Are we willing to be falsely accused for Christ's sake? Ah, yes, I can bear any thing, Lord, if at last I can have a home with Jesus, and walk and talk with all thy dear ones, that shall come from the East, from the West, from the North, and the South, and sit down in the kingdom with all the chosen ones. O I am glad from a full heart, that we are so near the port of everlasting rest. So near leaving the cross to wear a bright, unfading crown.

Dear ones in Jesus, the Lord help you, one and all, to be faithful, and by and by we shall all meet to be no more separated. I would love to meet you all in the better land. Pray for me, your poor, unworthy sister, in deep and heavy affliction, but who expects soon to rest.

N. Dana, Mass. LUTHERA B. WEAVER.

ALLEGED DISCOVERY OF THE ANCIENT OPHIR.—The last antiquarian sensation, and one which bids fair to exceed the Nineveh discoveries of Mr. Layard—if the announcement is only true—is the discovery of the ancient gold-exporting city of Ophir, of biblical fame. The alleged discovery points to that part of Southeastern Africa lying north of Zululand as the site of the old city. The tribe living in the locality allow, it is said, no approach to the ruins, from which it is supposed they procure the materials for the manufacture of certain gold ornaments they are in the habit of wearing. Discarding a great many probable falsehoods and exaggerations, the truth of the matter seems to be that gold is found in the corner of Africa indicated, and that there are some traces there of an ancient civilized settlement. Biblical allusions seem to confirm this supposition, and the majority of antiquarians lean to the opinion that Ophir was situated somewhere in that part of the continent of Africa.—Public Opinion.

Obituaries.

CLIFT. Died in New York, Nov. 8th, 1866, Willis Clift, in the sixty-seventh year of his age.

Bro. Clift was a direct descendant of the fifth generation of one of the Pilgrims who landed from the May Flower upon Plymouth Rock. At the age of seven years, he was converted to Methodism, and lived a christian life to its close. Under the preaching of Bro. H. L. Hastings, he embraced the views of the soon coming of Christ, and the hope of the resurrection. For the last seven years he has been a constant attendant of the Advent church, now worshiping in 24th street. At his own request, the prayer meeting was held at his house on Oct. 28th, which he enjoyed to a very great degree, rejoicing in the prospect of soon seeing the King in his beauty. That night, being taken with another attack of apoplexy, he was rendered unconscious, from which he never recovered, but fell asleep in Jesus the 8th inst., to await the resurrection of the just; the hope of which, while in life, gave him so much comfort and consolation. He leaves a wife to mourn their separation, but who sorrows not as those who have no hope.

A short discourse upon the occasion was delivered by the writer, from Job 14: 14.

THOMAS J. COX.

COCHRIN. Died in Searsport, Me., Sept. 30th, 1866, of consumption, Clara E., daughter of Capt. Franklin and Eliza Cochrin, and daughter of Mr. Benjamin Tripp, aged fourteen years.

Clara was a good girl, of a lovely disposition, but had never given her youthful heart to the Lord. When told by her grandfather that she must die, it seemed hard at first to leave friends and part with her schoolmates and youthful companions, to enjoy their society no more in this life; but she wished prayers to be offered in her behalf, which was readily granted; after which she calmly submitted, gave up all, and made the necessary preparation for her journey, bidding adieu to love friends and schoolmates, exhorting them to prepare to meet her in heaven. So Clara sleeps, but will awake in the morning.

Then sleep, Clara, sleep, in thy casket so low,
With the flowers on thy bosom and wreath on thy brow;
The flowers will fade in the dark, silent tomb,
But Jesus will deck thee in immortal bloom.

WHIPPLE. Died at his residence in Brockport, Monroe Co., N. Y., Oct. 20th, 1866, Bro. Job Whipple, aged seventy years and two months.

He was deeply afflicted with a disease of the stomach, or chest, but bore his pains with christian fortitude and patience. He professed religion for several years, but like many others neglected the duty of baptism, until some less than two years ago, when Bro. Himes, being at Brockport, baptized him in the likeness of the death of our Lord. Since that time, his devout life has convinced his associates that he held sweet communion with the Father of spirits. He died in peace, and, as we trust, sleeps in Jesus. C. P. SWEET.

Voice of the West, please copy.

MILES. Died in Mansville, N. Y., Aug. 20th, 1866, of cancer, Bro. Harry Miles, aged fifty-six years.

Bro. Miles was one of those christians who was known by what he did, as well as said. The funeral was in the Baptist church, where we set forth the hope of the church. May God guide the lonely widow and children in the path of duty, that they may share in the blessed hope of the gospel soon to be realized. WM. A. PENN.

ACKERMAN. Fell asleep in Sharon, Conn., Nov. 8th, 1866, Jerusha, wife of John Ackerman, aged fifty years.

She leaves a companion and six children to mourn. Sister Ackerman's work was done. For the past year she has been faithful. The last enemy has conquered for a time, but we expect victory will soon be given through Jesus Christ our Lord. Then it will be said, "O death, where is thy sting, O grave, where is thy victory." Sermon by the writer. Text, Eccl. 8: 8. GEO. L. TEEPLE.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

The "Moniteur Du Soir" says transport ships necessary for the conveyance of French troops from Mexico are ready. The same journal says the Mexican government, so far from entertaining feelings of anxiety or hesitation, is redoubling its efforts for carrying out energetically the task undertaken by Maximilian.

Negotiations for the apportionment of the Pontifical debt were still being carried on in Paris.

ITALY.

Victor Emanuel entered Venice on the 7th. The reception was magnificent, enthusiastic and very great. He attended a great Te Deum at the Cathedral of St. Mark, the Patriarch of Venice officiating. The crowds prevented military evolutions. The National Guard was mobilized. Distinguished persons from all countries were present.

The elections of Deputies to the Tyrolese Diet are said to have resulted in the return of members favorable to the union of Tyrol with Italy.

Prussia.

News from Candia via Constantinople states, it is confidently asserted, that the insurrection is at an end. The insurgents had submitted to the imperial authorities, and the Greeks were returning home. Akiff Pasha was to be Governor General of the island. Concessions would be granted to the Christians by Turkey.

Cable Dispatches.

Paris, Nov. 20. Preparations for the evacuation of Rome by the French troops will be finally completed on the 16th of December.

Nov. 23. A popular outbreak against the government of Spain is liable to occur at any moment. There are vague rumors that the Queen will abdicate to avoid the threatened storm.

London, Nov. 23. A number of persons accused of Fenianism have been arrested at Limerick, and large quantities of pikes and other arms seized by the authorities.

The Paris correspondent of the London Post says the relations between England and the United States will soon be critical.

Advices from Crete state that the Cretan Assembly deny the report that they have submitted to the Turks.

Berlin, Nov. 21. There is a report that the King of Prussia has written a letter to the Pope offering protection to Rome.

It is reported that the steamship Great Eastern will begin to make regular trips between New York and Brest early in March.

But little sensation has been occasioned in Florence by the Papal allocution; the people, it is said, generally smile at it as an impotent demonstration and "the last splutter of an expiring lamp."

The health of Count de Bismark is said to be such as to require further leave of absence.

Paris, Nov. 23. La France editorially admits that the departure of Maximilian from Mexico is likely to take place at any moment, if it has not already been accomplished.

Intelligence received at Florence from Rome states that it has been decided at a secret consistory that the Pope would be obliged to quit Rome. He will seek an asylum in Malta. The ecclesiastical authorities of Malta have received a semi-official notification of this decision.

The French Emperor has invited Prince Napoleon to take part in the labors of the military organization committee.

The iron-clad squadron has been ordered to be ready for sailing on the 28th inst. It is stated that they are to bring back the French troops from Rome.

London, Nov. 24. The condition of the Mexican Empire is the leading topic in England and on the continent.

The Fenian agitation in Ireland still continues. Many arrests of persons and seizures of arms have already been made. An American named McGillverny, agent of the Fenians, was arrested at Dublin to-day and imprisoned. Many others, whom the authorities have spotted, will be immediately arrested.

An editorial article in the Times this morning believes that the Emperor Maximilian has actually abdicated, and looks for the intervention of the United States Government as the next step as a matter of course, but hopes that good results will follow. It is reported that twenty transports will sail from Brest to bring home the French troops immediately after the arrival of the next mail from Mexico.

The King of Prussia has written to the Pope, offering protection to Rome.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Nov. 22. A Toronto dispatch says a large annexation meeting was held last night. Resolutions were adopted urging the Canadian people to accept the terms of annexation offered by the last Congress.

Col. Thomas J. Kelley, Deputy C. O. I. R., is in charge of the Fenian headquarters in this city. Stephens has not been seen at the headquarters for some time past, and the impression prevails that he will not be seen again. Arms are being received from all parts of the United States, Massachusetts taking the lead in the contributions. One of the wealthiest merchants of this city has promised that he would on the 1st of December make over to Col. Kelly in ships and war material, an amount equal to what Stephens had received since his arrival in this country. The Californian Fenians have pledged themselves to contribute $11,000 to the same, through Stephens. Special messengers are constantly arriving from Ireland reporting the condition of affairs there.

The Roman official journal states that a telegraphic despatch was received at Rome on the 9th of October, at 3:50 P. M., which had been sent from Baltimore on the same day at 11:30 A. M. The following is a copy of the telegram:—

"To His Holiness Pope Pius IX.:

Seven Archbishops and forty Bishops assembled in council, unanimously salute Your Holiness, wish you long life, and pray for the preservation of all the ancient and sacred rights of the Holy See.

Signed, MARTIN JOHN SPALDING, Archbishop of Baltimore and President of the Council."

New Orleans, Nov. 24. Maximilian has taken the decisive step of abdication, the rupture between himself and the French being complete. He has left Mexico in the hands of Gen. Bazaine and Castelnau. The latter is understood to have full authority from Napoleon to supersede the Marshal himself if necessary.

A YANKEE AMONG THE SAINTS.—The Farmington Chronicle says:—"Mr. Weston, the Little Blue pupil recently mentioned as the publisher of a paper at Salt Lake, has been mobbed by the Mormons for his boldness in denouncing their devilitries, and been warned to leave their city. His assailants numbered some twelve, and were thickly disguised and heavily armed. They dragged him to a remote part of the city, and, with four revolvers pointed at his head obliged him to promise that he would immediately leave the territory, and take with him Capt. Brown and Dr. Williamson, two prominent Gentiles, the former of whom was some time before taken from his house and threatened with drowning if he did not leave the city. Mr. Weston says that he considers his promise to leave the territory invalid, as it was extorted by force, and he shall stop as long as he pleases, and talk more plainly about the Mormons than ever. He offers to fight the Mormons singly with whatever weapon they may choose, if they will come to his office and make known their grievances. The result of this difficulty between the Mormons and Gentiles, which seems now to have come to an open issue, will be of the greatest importance, and the government will have to act with rare delicacy, but with no questionable firmness. General Connor is the principle owner of the Vidette, which is edited by young Weston, and has had too much acquaintance with both Mormons and Indians to be likely to be intimidated by the turn affairs have taken."

ITEMS.

☞ The Rome correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette says it is not impossible that the Pope will be deprived of his territory up to the gates of Rome, and that he could not resist such a step. Napoleon has been in constant telegraphic communication with the Pope for some time. Napoleon is said to have remarked to his emissary, Cardinal de Reisach, "The telegraph will enable you to give me instant warning. Can't you hold out against the revolution for three days? Make head for that time, and I will be again in Rome."

☞ The Memphis Post says that trade is very dull at present, and adds an explanation: "The alarming shortness of the cotton crop, the receipts diminishing instead of increasing at the hight of the season, and the heavy indebtedness with which the South will close the year, is creating not a little uneasiness in commercial circles. A well-informed Mississippi planter says that in the country counties of that State not an average of half a dozen planters can pay their debts."

☞ J. H. Surratt, the alleged accomplice in the murder of President Lincoln, was discovered serving in the Papal Zouaves, under the name of John Watson. He was arrested upon a demand of Gen. King, but afterwards ran the guard, leaped over a precipice, and escaped into the Italian territory. The Italian authorities are on the alert and endeavoring to recapture him.

☞ About a thousand buildings are in course of erection on the burnt district of Portland, or under contract. One master mason has four hundred and fifty men in his employ, and the pay roll of all the hands in the burnt district amounts to $75,000 per week. The streets have been widened and straightened, squares laid out, and the sections generally much improved.

☞ The Grand Trunk Railway freight depot at Port Sarnia, in Canada, has been destroyed by fire. A large amount of freight and eighteen cars were consumed. The books of the railroad and the equipments for two military companies to fight the Fenians were lost. Loss $500,000.

☞ The Observer says, it is a sad fact that many of the modern Jews are simply infidels. At the dedication of a new temple at Cincinnati, costing $250,000, the preacher (Dr. Wise) proclaimed a disbelief in a coming Messiah and in miracles. "They are not all Israel which are of Israel."

☞ It is understood, says the Raleigh Sentinel, that the rice crop of Cape Fear is almost an entire failure. Before the war, the rice crop of that region was annually about 215,000 bushels. The present year it will not go beyond 20,000 bushels.

☞ The people of Victoria, Vancouver's Island, have petitioned Queen Victoria to allow the colony to withdraw from the British and annex itself to the United States Government.

THE INVITATION.

From the heights of glory
See Jesus bending down,
His loving hands stretched o'er thee,
Thy life with joy to crown.

Come and taste the blessing
He kindly waits to give,
Then his peace possessing,
Thy soul shall ever live.

Yes, thy Savior calleth,
Then listen to his voice;
He now all sin removeth,
Oh, make his path thy choice.

Patiently he waiteth
For his wandering sheep;
O'er them gently watcheth,
And oft for them doth weep.

Can you then be careless,
Say, thoughtless sinner, say?
Shall your eyes be tearless
While thus from him away?

Listen to his story,
And then from Satan flee;
Jesus Christ, so holy,
Saith, "Sinner, come to me.

"On the earth I suffered—
Oh, sinner, 'twas for thee,
And my body offered
On the sacrificial tree."

From the heights of glory
Thy Savior calls thee now;
Listen to his story,
And humbly to him bow.

Come and taste the blessing
He patient waits to give,
Then all else possessing,
Forever thou shalt live.

FASHIONABLE AMUSEMENTS.

In this progressive age, popular amusements have outstripped everything, and have succeeded in drawing millions to the foot of their polluting throne into the broad road to ruin. The theatre, bearing the sceptre of popularity, is an amusement which occupies the time and attention of the multitude.

Indulgence in fashionable amusements is objectionable, even as a relaxation from secular pursuits. The farmer and mechanic have little occasion for the exercise of dancing. The student's mind is polluted and distracted, rather than refreshed, by plays and cards. And the merchant finds that either of these unfits him for serious business. Indeed, the time usually allotted to these diversions, together with the violence of one of them, and the long confinement of many persons to one room, renders the plea of health, or useful relaxation, entirely chimerical.

The word of God allows no excuse for sin. God requires that all men, in all conditions and circumstances in life, should consecrate themselves wholly to his service. He says "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Prove any pursuit contrary to the requirements of God, as revealed in his word, and we must instantly renounce it; we are duty-bound to do so at all hazards. As surely as God is true, "the workers of iniquity shall not go unpunished." In whatever light public opinion may regard fashionable amusements, let us proceed to show positively that they are not in keeping with the general tenor of the Scriptures.

1. THEY ARE A CRIMINAL WASTE OF TIME. Time affords opportunity to do good to those around us; to promote the purity and happiness of our fellow creatures; and prepare for the terrible reality of the eternity before us. Time is precious. Every moment of time is given you by the great Author of life; and you must render an account to him for the manner in which you employ it. This you will not dare to deny. Neither will you deny the fact that the cruel monster, death, is on your track. He will surely overtake you. The awful realities of the death-bed are before you, and you must meet it. Every moment of time brings nearer that scene. Life is uncertain. No one knows at what hour the angel of death may call. There is important work to be done. The moments fly. To-morrow, or even to-day, may possibly be the last of your probationary state.

Therefore, situated as we are, every hour, nay, every moment is important. You know not but may be suspended upon it your eternal destiny. Placed in circumstances so solemn and momentous, can any rational, conscientious person consent to sit, hour after hour, night after night, in a play-house, attending amusements which are vain and frivolous, and whose general morale is bad? Can you appeal to the great Searcher of hearts in vindication of your course? Can you say you are acting as an accountable and dying creature ought to act? No! The most determined advocate of fashionable amusements living would not dare to deny this. Would he not be shocked at the thought of seriously adopting such a principle? Either, then, the scriptural precept to redeem time, and the scriptural rule of disposing of time, must be rejected, or fashionable amusements must be denounced as a criminal waste of time.

2. THEY DISSIPATE THE MIND. Fashionable amusements—theatrical entertainments, and the like—are not merely an unprofitable and criminal waste of time, but they have a direct tendency to dissipate the mind, and destroy all care and desire for the eternal welfare of others. Let me appeal to the experience of those who have been habitual attendants of the theatre, whether this amusement is not strongly unfavorable to everything like a religious frame of mind? When you return from the most decent play that was ever exhibited, did you have any desire for prayer, or for holding communion with God in any sacred exercise? Is there not something in the sentiment uttered, in the scenery displayed, in the dress, attitudes, and deportment of the performers, and in the licentious appearance and libertine conduct of many of the spectators, which is calculated, to say the least, to expel all seriousness from the mind; and we might say, also, to drive away all thoughts of God, eternity, and of the judgment to come. We need not wait for an answer. Every one, who has had the least experience, knows these things are true. He can bear his testimony that these things have a direct tendency to give the mind a vain and frivolous cast; to make it familiar with licentious images and objects; to banish a taste for devotion and that spirituality which is the duty and happiness of the christian.

Will any person, who means to stand on religious ground, venture to deny that whatever has this tendency must be criminal in the sight of God? Whatever draws the heart from that which is sober, useful, and pious, and inspires it with a prevailing taste for the gay, the romantic, the extravagant, the sensual, and the impure, cannot but be deeply pernicious. Do fashionable amusements teach a man how to live, how to be useful, and how to die? Alas, no! They do not tend to inspire those serious, practical sentiments which become one who remembers that he may be called to-morrow to quit this transient scene.

3. THEY ARE EXPENSIVE. Can any one form a just estimate of how many thousands of dollars are sometimes wasted in one night at the theatre, the card table, or at a single ball? No one can form an estimate of what must be expended in extravagant dress, and useless ornaments. Many a mechanic, who is struggling on poverty's brink, might now be in possession of a beautiful home, if he had saved what he annually expended for those soul-destroying entertainments.

But reason and Scripture demand that we devote our property, as well as our other talents, to the service of the Redeemer in doing good. He enjoins upon us to relieve the sufferings of the poor—especially of the flock. If we look around us, how many members of the human family in affliction do we behold? how many that call for and deserve assistance? Look to the barren shores of heathen lands. Will any man of common humanity be expensive in his amusement while millions of perishing heathen imploringly extend their hands to him for assistance? for the only book that makes known to them the way of life? God forbid! Who can estimate the infinite cost of diversions thus purchased? When the dead, both small and great, stand before God, and the books are opened, the heathen will rise up in judgment and condemn the profession and practice that denies them the gospel.

My beloved reader, if this representation of worldly amusements be true; if any man living would hardly dare upon his knees ask the blessing of God upon it before he went, or implore the sanctified use of it after he returned; and if the patrons of fashionable amusements encourage and support sin as a trade; then, I ask, how can any man, who claims to be barely moral, conscientiously countenance such a seminary of vice? Can a disciple of Jesus, who claims to be governed by the Spirit and to imitate the divine Master? Christ commands us to "live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present evil world," and to have "no fellowship with the works of darkness, but rather to reprove them"; to "shun the company of the profane," and to pray, "Lead us not into temptation."

We have briefly shown that fashionable amusements are not consistent with the word of God. Then, reader, if you call yourself a christian,—a follower of the meek and lowly Savior,—can you ever again be seen in the presence of this monster that will drag you down to the lowest depths of ruin? Will you ever permit willingly any of your friends to continue in this soul-destroying practice? Do not say that the habits of society are such that you cannot help it. The question is with you to decide. Will you obey God, or man? He commands you, "Be not conformed to this world." "Come out from among them and be separate." Will you timidly give way to that which you acknowledge to be wrong? or will you dare to obey God and do right, though the perishing world be against you? Consider the awful presence of Jehovah before whom you must shortly stand. Will you take the Scriptures, or the maxims of a corrupt world for your guide? There is eternal life on the one hand; eternal death on the other. Attendant on the theatre! consider the guilt your conduct carries with you. It ought to alarm you. Every time you attend that scene of temptation and vice, you sin against the purity and good order of civil society, and against God? Can you realize this, and still go with a quiet conscience? How do you think this subject will appear to you upon your death-bed? How will the remembrance of having yielded to its allurements then lie upon your conscience? Think of that hour; and oh! be wise in time.

NUMBER THIRTY-THREE.

ELISHA BESIEGED IN DOTHAN.

Once more the Syrian hordes had invaded the land of Israel, and were closely guarding the mountain passes. Very nice plans had been devised by the Syrian king for the capture of Jehoram. But each time he was so signally defeated, that he began to suspect treachery in his own camp. On inquiry being made, however, it transpired that it was Elisha who told the king of Israel all the plans of his enemy. Greatly irritated by this discovery, the Syrian king determined to capture the prophet at all hazards.

Being informed that Elisha abode in Dothan, a city located in a narrow pass in the mountains of Gilboa, the Syrian sent a chosen host to besiege the city; this was accomplished in the darkness of night, and before the dawn of day, every pass was guarded, so that no escape seemed possible for the inhabitants of the doomed city. When morning dawned upon Dothan, the citizens looked out beyond the walls with consternation. A host had sprung up around them, as if by magic, in a single night. Without means of defense, their cause seemed a hopeless one. Even the servant of Elisha partook of the same feeling. His heart was dismayed as he looked upon the passes and the valleys, bristling with the glittering spears of the Syrian hosts. The banners of the dreaded foe were flaunted proudly on every side. All around was the dark array of horse and chariot, ready to descend upon the unprotected city. In his fear, the servant turned to Elisha and said, "Alas, my master! how shall we do?" And he answered, "Fear not; for they that be with us are more than they that be with them."

Then the eyes of the servant were opened, and a vision of the guardians of Elisha greeted him. The mountains glowed with the fiery chariots and horses of celestial hosts. The array of cherubim and seraphim was terrible to behold. Invisible to all other mortal eyes, there they were, ranged in sublime phalanxes, that seemed to stretch away in the dim ether beyond the mountains; silent and invisible to the mortal foe, stood that immortal host, ready to protect the humble servant of God. At the summons, the work of their vengeful swords would be quick and irresistible.

While in fancied security and boastful strength, the Syrian hosts surrounded the gates of Dothan, they in turn were compassed by foes invisible and invincible at the right hand of Jehovah. A more sublime spectacle never burst upon the vision of mortal, than that morning scene of the celestial watchers over the safety of Elisha. Well might the servant of God feel serene, with such strength on his side. Idle seemed the defiance of the enemy.

Thus confident should the christian ever feel; for they that are for him are more than they that are with them. The arm of Jehovah is never shortened, that it cannot save, even in the most adverse circumstances. He is ever ready to succor his children.

When the Syrians came down to Elisha, they were smitten with blindness, in answer to his prayer, and he led them whither he would. What a strange scene. An entire host led captive by the humble man they had so lately sought and surrounded. The Syrians groped and stumbled after the prophet, over hills and through valleys, over rough ways and smooth, for twelve weary miles; till by the strange sounds that greeted them, they knew they must be in some city of the enemy. Wild and confused must have been their emotions, while toiling in blindness along the uncertain way; but what must have been their feelings when their eyes were opened at last, and they stood in the streets of Samaria, in the presence of the king of Israel, and surrounded by his warriors. They were ready to die with abject fear; for having no further lease of life, what more could they expect? When last they beheld the light, they felt conscious of their power, and were miles away in the hills and valleys around Dothan; here, they were in the power of their most inveterate foe. There has seldom been such a sudden transition from seeming security to fear. The feeling of exultation and revenge was uppermost in the heart of Jehoram, when he saw all these enemies in his power. "My father, shall I smite them? Shall I smite them?" asked the king of Elisha? But the more merciful prophet answered, "Thou shalt not smite them; wouldst thou smite those whom thou hast taken captive with thy sword and with thy bow? Set bread and water before them, that they may eat and drink and go to their master." Then they were feasted and treated more as if they had come on a mission of friendship, than of war and rapine. Then they were sent away, departing with feelings of awe and friendship for those whom they had so lately hated as foes.

What could have been more magnanimous than this conduct of Elisha? It discovered the greatness of his soul, the nobleness of his principles. He was conscious of his power, but he felt it was greater to be merciful than to be revengeful. He knew the Lord would protect him, if he did liberate his sworn foes.

Thus was Israel once more freed from her foes, and another golden chapter added to the miracle life of the prophet.

THE HAPPY HOME.

OR, WOMAN'S INFLUENCE OVER MEN.

"'Mid pleasures and palaces, though we may roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home."

"Here woman reigns; the mother, daughter, wife,
Strews with fresh flowers the narrow way of life."

Woman's influence over man is powerful every step, for good or evil. How vastly important for young men to select virtuous, prudent, intelligent wives, for their life companions; those that will elevate the affections, purify the heart, and lead to deeds noble and generous; wiver that will, in all respects, make men better, wiser, happier, and more useful.

Some men are made over, molded over and over, fairly renovated, turned and overturned, by the good influence of their better halves.

We now have in our mind's eye one especially who has been thus made over anew, transformed by his amiable, lovely, intelligent, prudent, active, God-fearing wife. Had it not been for this angel of a woman, to all appearance the man would have lived and died in obscurity, a mere skeleton of a being! Had he been left to grope his way in single life through the murky, dizzy shades of this tempting world, doubtless he would never have been known in the public walks of usefulness, of virtuous life. But God in great mercy gave him a better half, far better, to hold up his goings and cheer him on to duty, to deeds noble, praiseworthy, God-like! She took him by the hand, raised him up, held him up. This same man is now somebody, whereas he in all probability would have been nobody.

This is but one instance of woman's influence over man, but are there not thousands of similar, happifying cases? How forcibly this establishes God's word on this point.

See Prov. 31, verse 13th, to the end. Also Prov. 18: 22:—"Whoso findeth a wife findeth a good thing—obtaineth favor of the Lord."

Young man, in choosing "a help-meet," look out; be sure and ask God to direct in a choice so momentous. Go importune Wisdom, grace divine; take not a single step till you seek heavenly counsel. Be sure and let God choose—else, instead of rising, you sink lower than the grave.

"How sweet to have a friend below, in whom we can confide;
To bless us if we act aright, and if we err to chide;
To whom we can reveal each thought and feeling of our heart;
Who shares with us each earthly joy, and in our grief bears part.

But it is better far than this, to have a friend above,
Whose power is equal to, and lasting as his love;
Who gives us every earthly friend, and all we here possess;
And if we do his holy will, is always sure to bless."

"WE SHALL BE LIKE HIM."

"As we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."—1 Cor. 15: 49.

We inherit from Adam a corrupt nature, a mortal and perishing body. We have a resemblance to Adam, and like him we are "of the earth, earthy." And we, "even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."

We earnestly desire to be entirely free from all the frailties, weakness, and infirmity which we now possess, and "be clothed upon" by our house which is from heaven.

How desirable it seems to be like Jesus, even in outward form; but it is much more desirable to be like him in spirit. The lack of this spiritual likeness is what we most deplore, and the hope of being made complete in him, is our most comforting and cheering hope. "And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure." Here we feel the keen edge of the sword of the Spirit. Are we pure, even as Christ is pure? "Every man, that hath this hope . . . purifieth himself." How is this work accomplished? I mean our part of the work. How can we purify ourselves, or work together with God in this work of purification? "By taking heed," is the Bible answer, "according to thy word." As we have had bad habits, so we must by constant effort form good habits. Man can see only the outward appearance, and it is by this that men form opinions of each other. If our habits are all good, our language always pure, and if in these things we are like Christ, men "take knowledge of us, that we have been with Jesus," and learned of him. Every bad habit is a "weight," a hindrance and a clog, which must be laid aside before we have his likeness perfected in us.

How easy all can see the difference between what men are, and what they ought to be. Are we in all points just what we should be? If not, what shall we do about it? For one, I am resolved what to do. I know that I must perish unless I do it. Lord, help me to "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth easily beset, and . . . run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the Author and finisher of our faith."

"I can but perish if I go;
I am resolved to try;
For if I stay away I know
I must forever die."

THIRTY SECONDS TOO LATE.

The Rev. Mr. Bell was always punctual. Whoever might be too late at meeting, or any where else, they all knew that Mr. Bell would not. If called to attend a wedding, his foot was on the door-step, and his hand on the bell-handle, when the clock was striking the hour. It was at first quite annoying to his flock, to go according to their old habits to a funeral, and meet it on the way to the grave; or go to a wedding, and find it all over before they thought of getting there. So old Mr. Slow waited on the minister, to ask him why he was always in a hurry, and so afraid of being too late.

"Well, my good friend, I will tell you; and if, after hearing me, you do not think I am about right in this thing, I will try to alter."

"That's surely fair," slowly said Mr. Slow, as if afraid to commit himself.

"When I was a young man, and had been preaching only a few months, I was invited to go to a distant mountain town and preach to a destitute people. I went for some weeks, and then returned home for a few days, promising to be back, without fail, the next Sabbath. Well, I had a pleasant week among my relatives, and was so much engaged that I hardly thought of my solemn duties till Saturday returned, and then my sister and a beautiful friend of hers, persuaded me to go out a little while in the little white boat Cinderilla, on our beautiful lake. The day was fine, and Cinderilla spun and darted under my oars as if a thing of life. When we got ashore, I found it two o'clock, and I knew the cars started in fifteen minutes. I left the ladies, and ran home and caught up my carpet-bag and ran for the depot. I saw that the cars had arrived, I heard the bell ring. With all my strength I ran. I saw them start. I redoubled my efforts, and got within fifteen feet of the cars. O, for thirty seconds more! Thirty seconds too late! No more!

"The next day was a fair, still, sweet Sabbath. My mountain people gathering, coming down from the glens, and following the rills, filled the house of worship. But there was no minister, and the hungry sheep had no shepherd to feed them. He was thirty seconds too late!

"There was a poor old blind man, who lived four miles from the church, and seldom could he get to meeting. That day he ate breakfast early, and his little grand-daughter led him all the way down the mountain to the church. How weary and sad and disappointed he was. There was no minister to speak to him. He was thirty seconds too late!

There was a great gathering of children to the Sabbath school. And their little eyes glistened, for their minister had promised to preach them a "little sermon" to-day. But he was not there. He was thirty seconds too late.

"There was a sick child up one of the mountain, and she had been inquiring all the week for her minister. She was so anxious to see him and have him pray with her. How she hailed the Sabbath, when he would be there. But no, he was not there. He was thirty seconds too late!

"That poor old blind man never came to the church again. He was too feeble, and never heard another sermon or prayer. That little girl was dead before I got back, and I could only shed tears over her cold corpse. I had been thirty seconds too late!

"On my bended knees I asked God's forgiveness, and promised him that, if possible, I would not be thirty seconds too late again. And now, Mr. Slow, am I not about right in my punctuality?"

"Well, I guess—it—don't—look—quite—so—unreasonable—as—it—might!"

SHORT SERMON.

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets."—Matt. 7: 12.

Dear reader, in order to fulfill this divine injunction, we must obey from the heart two of the greatest commandments that we have found recorded in God's holy book: love God with all our heart, might, mind, and strength, and our neighbor as ourselves; for "on these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." But how can we do this, if the holy principle of love is not rooted in our hearts by the Holy Ghost? The great principle of love, or charity, must be so firmly rooted and grounded in our intellectual faculties, as to be the ruling power in all our actions.

But how is it with us in relation to our dealings with our kind Benefactor? Are we honest in all our dealings with him? We wish him to be honest and true to us; and we know that our Father in heaven is always true and faithful to his children; then, of course, we should be true and faithful to him. When we ask the Lord to bless us, and continue his favors and kindness to us, and fill us with his love, we do not wish for half a blessing, and half favors, and half kindness, and to be half filled with his love; no indeed; but we ask him for a full supply of his blessings and his love; and when we are sincere and true-hearted, and ask in faith, we get what we ask for, and our dear Father never deceives us. And now, kind reader, you and I should be true and honest with the Lord, and never try to cheat or deceive him, but give him our whole hearts, and our affections; yes, love him with all the heart, might, mind and strength, and devote our whole lives to his service; and all we have and are should be at his will and disposal.

We are informed by our dear Savior, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." So you see by this, kind reader, that if I should cheat and defraud one of the dear saints of Christ, it would be doing the same to Christ; and if I should tell a lie to one of God's dear children, it would be telling a lie to Christ; and we all know what will be the fate of liars. How do we wish to have our dear brethren and sisters treat us, in all their intercourse with us? Certainly, we wish to be treated with kindness and with proper respect from those who profess to be our friends, and not to meet us with a cold shoulder, or with a frown, or a cross look, if we should be poor and unpopular in this world. Then, of course, you and I must try, in the name of the Lord and in his strength, to treat others as we would wish to have them treat us; and we know that like begets like, and the spirit of kindness begets the spirit of kindness. He that would have friends, let him show himself friendly; and when we hear of any of the saints in want and in distress, let us hasten to do them good, and thus imitate the spirit of our Lord and Master, and especially be kind to the unholy and unthankful, and thereby win them over to our lovely Redeemer. How much good we might do if we would.

And now, dear reader, I would ask you if it would not be doing us a great favor, in the hour of sickness or distress, or in some dreadful calamity, to have some one or more befriend us, and do all that he could to help us? Surely it would. Then, if you are blessed with abundance, go thou and do likewise; for you would have men show kindness to you in like circumstances; and remember that while you are doing thus to the saints, you are doing it to Christ. Furthermore, if you are in possession of riches, and profess to be a follower of the dear Savior, you are one of God's stewards over the goods and property he has put into your hands; and if it was a great favor for you to be led into the way of salvation through the great Redeemer, by the exertions of God's dear saints, then you should do the same to lead others to Christ, by all the means in your power. Yes, kind reader, help scatter those little preachers—tracts, and thus promulgate the great truths of God's sacred book, and by so doing be the means of saving some poor souls from eternal death; for you would that others should do so to you, if you were in the gall of bitterness and in the bonds of iniquity.

Are there not many ways or means for us to make use of, in order to promote the work of the Lord, by doing to others as we would that others should do unto us? Yes, when we meet together for the purpose of blending our hearts and voices in the praises of our divine Benefactor, do we not sometimes undertake to steady the ark by our own hands, and thus bring death upon the meetings, instead of spiritual life and union? Perhaps some one wants to have the meetings conducted in popular style, which is sure death to the church; or perhaps some one takes up all the time in exhortation, and deprives others of the privilege of saying a few words for Jesus and his cause. Kind reader, you would not wish others to do so to you, and you must not do so to others. But let us love our neighbors as ourselves, and thus be the true children of our Father who is in heaven, and then we shall be ready for the coming of the Just One. Amen. B. PERHAM.

INCONSISTENCIES.

It is inconsistent for a man to try to pull a mote out of his brother's eye, when he has a beam in his own eye.

It is inconsistent for a man to exhort people to "repent and be baptized," when he refuses to be baptized himself.

It is inconsistent to profess to be looking for the Lord, and then be laying plans for years to come.

It is inconsistent for a man to say I love God, and at the same time be hating his brother.

It is inconsistent for a man to pray—"Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those that trespass against us," and then not speak to one for weeks and months who he thinks has trespassed against him.

It is inconsistent for a man to go away from home to preach, when he lives so in his family that none of them have any confidence in him.

It is inconsistent for a man to be circulating reports about others, whose truthfulness he cannot vouch for.

It is inconsistent for a man to preach against sectarianism, when he is a strong sectarian himself.

It is inconsistent for a man to pray, "Thy kingdom come," and at the same time be doing all in his power to sustain and uphold the kingdoms of this world.

It is inconsistent for a man to say he has conscientious scruples against fighting, and then go to the ballot box and vote. A man to vote to put a man into office, is in duty bound to sustain him.

It is inconsistent for a man to profess to be a "pilgrim and a stranger," and at the same time be meddling with all of the affairs of the world.

It is inconsistent for a man to profess that "death is the gate to endless joy," and then when any one is sick to get all of the doctors in the town or city to try to keep them out of heaven.

It is inconsistent for a man to profess to believe that the righteous dead are in heaven praising God, and then go and weep and lament over their graves.

It is inconsistent for a man to profess to believe in the future punishment of the wicked, and then believe that they will not have a resurrection.

It is inconsistent for a man to profess to be a believer in and follower of Christ, and at the same time deny some of his plain statements.

It is inconsistent to be inconsistent in any way, and I pray God to help christians to be consistent. "O consistency, thou art a jewel."

THE THORN.

BRO. GRANT:—Endorsing fully Bro. Taylor's view of Paul's "thorn in the flesh," I wish to add still another reason for it. When he was apprehended and placed before a council of priests for examination, at the commencement of his defense, the high priest commanded them that stood by to smite him on the mouth; at which Paul demurred with some severity; and they that stood by said, "Revilest thou God's high priest?" And Paul replied, "I wist not, brethren, that he was the high priest." We should think Paul would have distinguished him at once, by his priestly vestments, if he had not been partially blind. S. HALL.

SUGGESTIONS TO FARMERS.

Paint all tools exposed to the weather, and if with a light colored paint, they will heat, warp, and crack the least in the sun.

Dip well-seasoned shingles in lime, wash and dry them before laying, and they will last much longer, and not become covered with moss.

In hitching a horse to a common rail or worm fence, always select the inside corner, which will be more secure by its bracing position, and the halter will not become tangled among the projecting ends of the rails, as when hitched to an outside corner.

Always tie a halter by making first a single loop, and then thrusting the end of the halter through this loop. This is quickly untied, and will never become untied of itself.

Dip the tips of nails in grease, and they will easily drive into any hard wood, where, otherwise, they would double and break.

In screwing nuts into any part of machinery, in cold weather, be careful not to heat them first by the hands, or they will contract after being screwed on tight, and become immovable afterwards.

In plowing, or teaming on the road, in hot weather, always rest the horses on an eminence, where they may receive the cool breeze, and where one minute will be worth two in a warm valley.

Always set a post fence over a ditch, or near good drainage, and the posts, always remaining dry, will last many years longer than those standing in wet sub-soil.

Always keep a supply of copper wire on hand, of different size, for repairing tools; it is greatly superior to either twine or iron wire.

In laying out gardens for fruits and vegetables, place every thing in drills, or rows, so that they may be cultivated by a horse, and thus save the expense of hand labor.

Remove every stone from the track in the highway. A single projection, which might have been removed in one minute, has battered and injured a thousand wagons, at a damage equal to a hundred days' labor.

When board fences become old, and the boards begin to come off, nail upright facing strips upon them against each post, and the boards will be held to their place, and the fence will last several years longer.

Every farmer should have a neat tool room, against the smooth walls of which a suitable place should be provided for hanging up every tool. An accurate outline of each tool should be painted on the wall, to remind every man of its absence, when left out of place.

Oil paint, applied to houses and barns, outbuildings and fences, will last much longer, and harden better, if put on as late as the middle of autumn, instead of during the heat of summer.

Every bin and granary should have a scale or upright row of figures marked inside, showing accurately the number of bushels to fill it to each figure. This will enable the farmer to know at a glance how much grain he has raised, or has on hand.—Rural Affairs.

CHILDREN IN ENGLISH IRON MILLS.

A correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, who has visited some of the iron furnaces in the "black country" of Staffordshire and Worcestershire, tells these sad stories:

"In the mills and forges boys of all ages, from eight and upward, may be found amid the labyrinth of machinery and the coils of heated iron, engaged by day and night in tugging long, red-hot seething bars. Their activity is very great, owing to the nature of their work, which requires rapidity of movement, and contrasts strangely with their otherwise jaded and worn appearance. In addition to the labor of dragging along the iron, each of these little fellows has to run, in short stages, a distance of more than eleven miles every day, in an oppressive atmosphere, thick with dust and steam. Owing to the quick and uncertain movements of the hot iron bars in their passage through successive rolls before having time to cool, the occupation of these boys is attended with some danger, a serious burn being an almost every day occurrence.

Standing in the midst of an extensive forge a few years ago I was alarmed by a cry of terror at the further end of the works. There was a general rush to the spot, and I shall never forget the horrible and sickening sight that met our view. A large rod of seething iron, in coming from the rolls, had somehow twisted aside, and had literally pierced through the body of a little fellow some ten years old. For a while the roar of the machinery was suspended, and two or three brawny men carried the hapless creature home; but when the first thrill of horror had passed away, the wheels were again set in motion and all went on as before.

The lives of these boys are almost entirely spent in the forges, except the hours allotted to sleep. They have their meals there, and in the snatches of leisure it is their playground. In most of the works is the arm or basin of a canal, the water of which is kept in a state of chronic fever, and in which, despite its inky color, they delight to bathe, both in winter and summer. So constant are they in their ablutions that they often come out parboiled, like a washerwoman's thumb. Some of the proprietors of these works have provided night schools for the instruction of the children in their employ; but as a rule, they are in mind and body alike neglected, and the densest ignorance prevails. They have no home training, most of their houses being locked up all day, the parents and all the children being out at work; and returning home fatigued at night, nothing but bed or a carousal in the Fox and Dragon is acceptable.

Returning home late one evening I saw two little children, a boy and girl, lying asleep upon a door step, which proved to be that of their own home. On awakening them they told me they were waiting for their mother to come out of the neighboring tavern and open the door. They had no father, and had been hard at work all day. The boy worked in a forge, the girl in a foundry, and the mother in a japanning factory, and though thus separated all day there seemed no bond of affection to bind them when they met together.

West of Dudley is a strange, wild region, known as the 'nailing district,' composed of scattered hamlets, to all the houses of which is attached what appears to the stranger a blacksmith shop. The manufacture of wrought nails is, and has been for a century or more, the great staple industry of the district. It is carried on by the nailers in their own houses. In few trades of the district does the employment of women and young children assume a more objectionable form than in this. The women seem to have lost all traces of the modesty of their sex, and from childhood are addicted to swearing, smoking—resembling as far as possible the other sex in their habits and deportment, even to the wearing of their coarse flannel jackets. They mostly marry very young, often at fourteen, and seldom later than eighteen or twenty. With such women for mothers, it is not difficult to judge of their children. From tenderest ages, often from five or six years, they are trained to that round of labor in which their lives are doomed to be spent. The first stage is 'blowing the bellows,' and next they are taught to forge the smaller kinds of nails.

The hours of labor are dreadfully prolonged, often exceeding sixteen hours per day; the rate of remuneration is very low, and the homes are consequently wretchedly poor. Entering one of them lately, I saw the father, mother and eight sons and daughters, all toiling in a small, ill-ventilated, dirty hovel. It was growing late in the evening, and I inquired: 'Is it not time to cease your day's work?' 'Oh, noo, maister,' rejoined the mother; 'we've a moit's work afore us yet, or there'll be no bread o' the loaf o' Sunday.' It was Friday night, and it was, as I learned, a practice to work from Friday morning until Saturday afternoon, without having more than short snatches of rest for meals. While I lingered, a little fellow, who could not have been more than eight, fell from his work apparently exhausted, but his father, on observing it, threw at him a hammer handle, telling him with an oath, to recommence his work. He took no part in our conversation, having, like his two eldest daughters, a short pipe in his mouth, which seemed to him and them 'the calumet of peace.'

This is by no means a solitary case. Hundreds of such instances are to be found of boys and girls, just emerged from babyhood, ill fed, ill clothed and overworked, trained amid vulgarity and vice, and in the densest gloom of ignorance. Were it not for Sunday schools I shudder to think of the future of these hapless children.

In other branches of the hardware and metal trades the evils of child labor equally abound, especially in the foundries, japan works and tin-plate factories, but, as a rule, they are less aggravated in the large establishments than in the smaller workshops."

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.

Now, dear children, is there not a good reason for you to be thankful for your pleasant homes, kind parents, schools and Sunday schools? Try to be contented with your many blessings. If you should be discontented with your lot, think of those poor children, of whom you have just been reading, who have to work so hard from the time they are eight years old, and then think how much better is your condition. May the Lord help you all to be good.

A SINGING STUDENT BOY.

Many years ago a student boy was seen and heard in an ancient town singing. He was a stout, plainly dressed boy, but his face was pale and his eyes were sad and tearful. His voice was most musical, and the songs he sang were in beautiful words, and about sacred things. Every time he finished a song, he stepped to the door of a house and gave a gentle tap. When it was opened, he said, in humble tones:

"Please give a poor student boy a morsel of bread?"

From door to door he sang his sweet songs, until his body was weary and his heart sad. Scarcely able to stand, he at last turned his steps homeward.

Just at that moment Ursula Cotta, a burgher's wife, who had heard his songs and seen him driven from her neighbor's doors, as he humbly asked for bread, felt her heart yearn with pity towards the helpless boy. She opened the door, beckoned to the young singer, smiled sweetly upon him, and in tones that sounded like heavenly melodies to his ear, said:

"Come in, poor boy, and refresh thyself at my table!"

Happy little singer! how he enjoyed that delicious meal. And when the good dame and her husband told him to make their house his future home, his heart melted. With eyes half filled with tears, he looked into the faces of his friends, and said:

"I shall now pursue my studies without being obliged to beg my bread from grudging hands. I shall have you, sir, for a father, and you, sweet Ursula, for a mother. My heart shall once more learn to love. I shall be happier than I can express."

The singing boy studied hard and well. Years after the world heard him uttering his voice against Popery. He became the chief of that reformation which gave an open Bible to the world. His name was Martin Luther.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS' MOTHER.

"Twelve or fifteen years ago," says ex-Governor Briggs, "I left Washington three or four weeks in the spring. While at home, I possessed myself of the letters of Mr. Adams' mother, and read them with exceeding interest. I remember an expression in one of the letters addressed to her son, while yet a boy twelve years of age, in Europe. Says she: 'I would rather see you laid in your grave than you should grow up a profane and graceless boy.'"

"After returning to Washington, I went over and said to Mr. Adams: 'I have found out who made you!'"

"What do you mean," said he.

"I replied, 'I have been reading the letters of your mother.'"

"If I had spoken that dear name to some little boy who had been for weeks away from his dear mother, his eyes could not have flashed more brightly, or his face glowed more quickly than did the eye and face of that venerable old man when I pronounced the name of his mother. He stood up in his peculiar manner, and emphatically said: 'Yes, Mr. Briggs, all that is good in me I owe to my mother.'"

"O, what a testimony was that from this venerable man to his mother, who had, in his remembrance, all the stages of his manhood, 'All that is good in me I owe to my mother!' Mothers, think of this when your bright-eyed little boy is about. Mothers make the first impressions upon their children, and these are last to be effaced."

THE INVITATION.

From the heights of glory
 See Jesus bending down,
His loving hands stretched o'er thee,
 Thy life with joy to crown.

Come and taste the blessing
 He kindly waits to give,
Then his peace possessing,
 Thy soul shall ever live.

Yes, thy Savior calleth,
 Then listen to his voice;
He now all sin removeth,
 Oh, make his path thy choice.

Patiently he waiteth
 For his wandering sheep;
O'er them gently watcheth,
 And oft for them doth weep.

Can you then be careless,
 Say, thoughtless sinner, say?
Shall your eyes be tearless
 While thus from him away?

Listen to his story,
 And then from Satan flee;
Jesus Christ, so holy,
 Saith, "Sinner, come to me.

"On the earth I suffered—
 Oh, sinner, 'twas for thee,
And my body offered
 On the sacrificial tree."

From the heights of glory
 Thy Savior calls thee now;
Listen to his story,
 And humbly to him bow.

Come and taste the blessing
 He patient waits to give,
Then all else possessing,
 Forever thou shalt live.

FASHIONABLE AMUSEMENTS.

In this progressive age, popular amusements have outstripped everything, and have succeeded in drawing millions to the foot of their polluting throne into the broad road to ruin. The theatre, bearing the sceptre of popularity, is an amusement which occupies the time and attention of the multitude.

Indulgence in fashionable amusements is objectionable, even as a relaxation from secular pursuits. The farmer and mechanic have little occasion for the exercise of dancing. The student's mind is polluted and distracted, rather than refreshed, by plays and cards. And the merchant finds that either of these unfits him for serious business. Indeed, the time usually allotted to these diversions, together with the violence of one of them, and the long confinement of many persons to one room, renders the plea of health, or useful relaxation, entirely chimerical.

The word of God allows no excuse for sin. God requires that all men, in all conditions and circumstances in life, should consecrate themselves wholly to his service. He says "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Prove any pursuit contrary to the requirements of God, as revealed in his word, and we must instantly renounce it; we are duty-bound to do so at all hazards. As surely as God is true, "the workers of iniquity shall not go unpunished." In whatever light public opinion may regard fashionable amusements, let us proceed to show positively that they are not in keeping with the general tenor of the Scriptures.

1. They are a criminal waste of time. Time affords opportunity to do good to those around us; to promote the purity and happiness of our fellow creatures; and prepare for the terrible reality of the eternity before us. Time is precious. Every moment of time is given you by the great Author of life; and you must render an account to him for the manner in which you employ it. This you will not dare to deny. Neither will you deny the fact that the cruel monster, death, is on your track. He will surely overtake you. The awful realities of the death-bed are before you, and you must meet it. Every moment of time brings nearer that scene. Life is uncertain. No one knows at what hour the angel of death may call. There is important work to be done. The moments fly. To-morrow, or even to-day, may possibly be the last of your probationary state.

Therefore, situated as we are, every hour, nay, every moment is important. You know not but may be suspended upon it your eternal destiny. Placed in circumstances so solemn and momentous, can any rational, conscientious person consent to sit, hour after hour, night after night, in a play-house, attending amusements which are vain and frivolous, and whose general morale is bad? Can you appeal to the great Searcher of hearts in vindication of your course? Can you say you are acting as an accountable and dying creature ought to act? No! The most determined advocate of fashionable amusements living would not dare to deny this. Would he not be shocked at the thought of seriously adopting such a principle? Either, then, the scriptural precept to redeem time, and the scriptural rule of disposing of time, must be rejected, or fashionable amusements must be denounced as a criminal waste of time.

2. They dissipate the mind. Fashionable amusements—theatrical entertainments, and the like—are not merely an unprofitable and criminal waste of time, but they have a direct tendency to dissipate the mind, and destroy all care and desire for the eternal welfare of others. Let me appeal to the experience of those who have been habitual attendants of the theatre, whether this amusement is not strongly unfavorable to everything like a religious frame of mind? When you return from the most decent play that was ever exhibited, did you have any desire for prayer, or for holding communion with God in any sacred exercise? Is there not something in the sentiment uttered, in the scenery displayed, in the dress, attitudes, and deportment of the performers, and in the licentious appearance and libertine conduct of many of the spectators, which is calculated, to say the least, to expel all seriousness from the mind; and we might say, also, to drive away all thoughts of God, eternity, and of the judgment to come. We need not wait for an answer. Every one, who has had the least experience, knows these things are true. He can bear his testimony that these things have a direct tendency to give the mind a vain and frivolous cast; to make it familiar with licentious images and objects; to banish a taste for devotion and that spirituality which is the duty and happiness of the christian.

Will any person, who means to stand on religious ground, venture to deny that whatever has this tendency must be criminal in the sight of God? Whatever draws the heart from that which is sober, useful, and pious, and inspires it with a prevailing taste for the gay, the romantic, the extravagant, the sensual, and the impure, cannot but be deeply pernicious. Do fashionable amusements teach a man how to live, how to be useful, and how to die? Alas, no! They do not tend to inspire those zealous, practical sentiments which become one who remembers that he may be called to-morrow to quit this transient scene.

3. They are expensive. Can any one form a just estimate of how many thousands of dollars are sometimes wasted in one night at the theatre, the card table, or at a single ball? No one can form an estimate of what must be expended in extravagant dress, and useless ornaments. Many a mechanic, who is struggling on poverty's brink, might now be in possession of a beautiful home, if he had saved what he annually expended for those soul-destroying entertainments.

But reason and Scripture demand that we devote our property, as well as our other talents, to the service of the Redeemer in doing good. He enjoins upon us to relieve the sufferings of the poor—especially of the flock. If we look around us, how many members of the human family in affliction do we behold? how many that call for and deserve assistance? Look to the barren shores of heathen lands. Will any man of common humanity be expensive in his amusement while millions of perishing heathen imploringly extend their hands to him for assistance? for the only book that makes known to them the way of life? God forbid! Who can estimate the infinite cost of diversions thus purchased? When the dead, both small and great, stand before God, and the books are opened, the heathen will rise up in judgment and condemn the profession and practice that denies them the gospel.

My beloved reader, if this representation of worldly amusements be true; if any man living would hardly dare upon his knees ask the blessing of God upon it before he went, or implore the sanctified use of it after he returned; and if the patrons of fashionable amusements encourage and support sin as a trade; then, I ask, how can any man, who claims to be barely moral, conscientiously countenance such a seminary of vice? Can a disciple of Jesus, who claims to be governed by the Spirit and to imitate the divine Master? Christ commands us to "live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present evil world," and to have "no fellowship with the works of darkness, but rather to reprove them"; to "shun the company of the profane," and to pray, "Lead us not into temptation."

We have briefly shown that fashionable amusements are not consistent with the word of God. Then, reader, if you call yourself a christian,—a follower of the meek and lowly Savior,—can you ever again be seen in the presence of this monster that will drag you down to the lowest depths of ruin? Will you ever permit willingly any of your friends to continue in this soul-destroying practice? Do not say that the habits of society are such that you cannot help it. The question is with you to decide. Will you obey God, or man? He commands you, "Be not conformed to this world." "Come out from among them and be separate." Will you timidly give way to that which you acknowledge to be wrong? or will you dare to obey God and do right, though the perishing world be against you? Consider the awful presence of Jehovah before whom you must shortly stand. Will you take the Scriptures, or the maxims of a corrupt world for your guide? There is eternal life on the one hand; eternal death on the other. Attendant on the theatre! consider the guilt your conduct carries with you. It ought to alarm you. Every time you attend that scene of temptation and vice, you sin against the purity and good order of civil society, and against God? Can you realize this, and still go with a quiet conscience? How do you think this subject will appear to you upon your death-bed? How will the remembrance of having yielded to its allurements then lie upon your conscience? Think of that hour; and oh! be wise in time.

NUMBER THIRTY-THREE.

ELISHA BESIEGED IN DOTHAN.

Once more the Syrian hordes had invaded the land of Israel, and were closely guarding the mountain passes. Very nice plans had been devised by the Syrian king for the capture of Jehoram. But each time he was so signally defeated, that he began to suspect treachery in his own camp. On inquiry being made, however, it transpired that it was Elisha who told the king of Israel all the plans of his enemy. Greatly irritated by this discovery, the Syrian king determined to capture the prophet at all hazards.

Being informed that Elisha abode in Dothan, a city located in a narrow pass in the mountains of Gilboa, the Syrian sent a chosen host to besiege the city; this was accomplished in the darkness of night, and before the dawn of day, every pass was guarded, so that no escape seemed possible for the inhabitants of the doomed city. When morning dawned upon Dothan, the citizens looked out beyond the walls with consternation. A host had sprung up around them, as if by magic, in a single night. Without means of defense, their cause seemed a hopeless one. Even the servant of Elisha partook of the same feeling. His heart was dismayed as he looked upon the passes and the valleys, bristling with the glittering spears of the Syrian hosts. The banners of the dreaded foe were flaunted proudly on every side. All around was the dark array of horse and chariot, ready to descend upon the unprotected city. In his fear, the servant turned to Elisha and said, "Alas, my master! how shall we do?" And he answered, "Fear not; for they that be with us are more than they that be with them."

Then the eyes of the servant were opened, and a vision of the guardians of Elisha greeted him. The mountains glowed with the fiery chariots and horses of celestial hosts. The array of cherubim and seraphim was terrible to behold. Invisible to all other mortal eyes, there they were, ranged in sublime phalanxes, that seemed to stretch away in the dim ether beyond the mountains; silent and invisible to the mortal foe, stood that immortal host, ready to protect the humble servant of God. At the summons, the work of their vengeful swords would be quick and irresistible.

While in fancied security and boastful strength, the Syrian hosts surrounded the gates of Dothan, they in turn were compassed by foes invisible and invincible at the right hand of Jehovah. A more sublime spectacle never burst upon the vision of mortal, than that morning scene of the celestial watchers over the safety of Elisha. Well might the servant of God feel serene, with such strength on his side. Idle seemed the defiance of the enemy.

Thus confident should the christian ever feel; for they that are for him are more than they that are with them. The arm of Jehovah is never shortened, that it cannot save, even in the most adverse circumstances. He is ever ready to succor his children.

When the Syrians came down to Elisha, they were smitten with blindness, in answer to his prayer, and he led them whither he would. What a strange scene. An entire host led captive by the humble man they had so lately sought and surrounded. The Syrians groped and stumbled after the prophet, over hills and through valleys, over rough ways and smooth, for twelve weary miles; till by the strange sounds that greeted them, they knew they must be in some city of the enemy. Wild and confused must have been their emotions, while toiling in blindness along the uncertain way; but what must have been their feelings when their eyes were opened at last, and they stood in the streets of Samaria, in the presence of the king of Israel, and surrounded by his warriors. They were ready to die with abject fear; for having no further lease of life, what more could they expect? When last they beheld the light, they felt conscious of their power, and were miles away in the hills and valleys around Dothan; here, they were in the power of their most inveterate foe. There has seldom been such a sudden transition from seeming security to fear. The feeling of exultation and revenge was uppermost in the heart of Jehoram, when he saw all these enemies in his power. "My father, shall I smite them? Shall I smite them?" asked the king of Elisha? But the more merciful prophet answered, "Thou shalt not smite them; wouldst thou smite those whom thou hast taken captive with thy sword and with thy bow? Set bread and water before them, that they may eat and drink and go to their master." Then they were feasted and treated more as if they had come on a mission of friendship, than of war and rapine. Then they were sent away, departing with feelings of awe and friendship for those whom they had so lately hated as foes.

What could have been more magnanimous than this conduct of Elisha? It discovered the greatness of his soul, the nobleness of his principles. He was conscious of his power, but he felt it was greater to be merciful than to be revengeful. He knew the Lord would protect him, if he did liberate his sworn foes.

Thus was Israel once more freed from her foes, and another golden chapter added to the miracle life of the prophet.

THE HAPPY HOME.

OR, WOMAN'S INFLUENCE OVER MEN.

"'Mid pleasures and palaces, though we may roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home."

"Here woman reigns; the mother, daughter, wife,
Strews with fresh flowers the narrow way of life."

Woman's influence over man is powerful every step, for good or evil. How vastly important for young men to select virtuous, prudent, intelligent wives, for their life companions; those that will elevate the affections, purify the heart, and lead to deeds noble and generous; wives that will, in all respects, make men better, wiser, happier, and more useful.

Some men are made over, molded over and over, fairly renovated, turned and overturned, by the good influence of their better halves.

We now have in our mind's eye one especially who has been thus made over anew, transformed by his amiable, lovely, intelligent, prudent, active, God-fearing wife. Had it not been for this angel of a woman, to all appearance the man would have lived and died in obscurity, a mere skeleton of a being! Had he been left to grope his way in single life through the murky, dizzy shades of this tempting world, doubtless he would never have been known in the public walks of usefulness, of virtuous life. But God in great mercy gave him a better half, far better, to hold up his goings and cheer him on to duty, to deeds noble, praiseworthy, God-like! She took him by the hand, raised him up, held him up. This same man is now somebody, whereas he in all probability would have been nobody.

This is but one instance of woman's influence over man, but are there not thousands of similar, happifying cases? How forcibly this establishes God's word on this point.

See Prov. 31, verse 13th, to the end. Also Prov. 18: 22:—"Whoso findeth a wife findeth a good thing—obtaineth favor of the Lord."

Young man, in choosing "a help-meet," look out; be sure and ask God to direct in a choice so momentous. Go importune Wisdom, grace divine; take not a single step till you seek heavenly counsel. Be sure and let God choose—else, instead of rising, you sink lower than the grave.

"How sweet to have a friend below, in whom we can confide;
To bless us if we act aright, and if we err to chide;
To whom we can reveal each thought and feeling of our heart;
Who shares with us each earthly joy, and in our grief bears part.
But it is better far than this, to have a friend above,
Whose power is equal to, and lasting as his love;
Who gives us every earthly friend, and all we here possess;
And if we do his holy will, is always sure to bless."

"WE SHALL BE LIKE HIM."

"As we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."—1 Cor. 15: 49.

We inherit from Adam a corrupt nature, a mortal and perishing body. We have a resemblance to Adam, and like him we are "of the earth, earthy." And we, "even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."

We earnestly desire to be entirely free from all the frailties, weakness, and infirmity which we now possess, and "be clothed upon" by our house which is from heaven.

How desirable it seems to be like Jesus, even in outward form; but it is much more desirable to be like him in spirit. The lack of this spiritual likeness is what we most deplore, and the hope of being made complete in him, is our most comforting and cheering hope. "And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure." Here we feel the keen edge of the sword of the Spirit. Are we pure, even as Christ is pure? "Every man, that hath this hope . . . purifieth himself." How is this work accomplished? I mean our part of the work. How can we purify ourselves, or work together with God in this work of purification? "By taking heed," is the Bible answer, "according to thy word." As we have had bad habits, so we must by constant effort form good habits. Man can see only the outward appearance, and it is by this that men form opinions of each other. If our habits are all good, our language always pure, and if in these things we are like Christ, men "take knowledge of us, that we have been with Jesus," and learned of him. Every bad habit is a "weight," a hindrance and a clog, which must be laid aside before we have his likeness perfected in us.

How easy all can see the difference between what men are, and what they ought to be. Are we in all points just what we should be? If not, what shall we do about it? For one, I am resolved what to do. I know that I must perish unless I do it. Lord, help me to "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth easily beset, and . . . run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the Author and finisher of our faith."

"I can but perish if I go;
I am resolved to try;
For if I stay away I know
I must forever die."

THIRTY SECONDS TOO LATE.

The Rev. Mr. Bell was always punctual. Whoever might be too late at meeting, or any where else, they all knew that Mr. Bell would not. If called to attend a wedding, his foot was on the door-step, and his hand on the bell-handle, when the clock was striking the hour. It was at first quite annoying to his flock, to go according to their old habits to a funeral, and meet it on the way to the grave; or go to a wedding, and find it all over before they thought of getting there. So old Mr. Slow waited on the minister, to ask him why he was always in a hurry, and so afraid of being too late.

"Well, my good friend, I will tell you; and if, after hearing me, you do not think I am about right in this thing, I will try to alter."

"That's surely fair," slowly said Mr. Slow, as if afraid to commit himself.

"When I was a young man, and had been preaching only a few months, I was invited to go to a distant mountain town and preach to a destitute people. I went for some weeks, and then returned home for a few days, promising to be back, without fail, the next Sabbath. Well, I had a pleasant week among my relatives, and was so much engaged that I hardly thought of my solemn duties till Saturday returned, and then my sister and a beautiful friend of hers, persuaded me to go out a little while in the little white boat Cinderilla, on our beautiful lake. The day was fine, and Cinderilla spun and darted under my oars as if a thing of life. When we got ashore, I found it two o'clock, and I knew the cars started in fifteen minutes. I left the ladies, and ran home and caught up my carpet-bag and ran for the depot. I saw that the cars had arrived, I heard the bell ring. With all my strength I ran. I saw them start. I redoubled my efforts, and got within fifteen feet of the cars. O, for thirty seconds more! Thirty seconds too late! No more!

"The next day was a fair, still, sweet Sabbath. My mountain people gathering, coming down from the glens, and following the rills, filled the house of worship. But there was no minister, and the hungry sheep had no shepherd to feed them. He was thirty seconds too late!

"There was a poor old blind man, who lived four miles from the church, and seldom could he get to meeting. That day he ate breakfast early, and his little grand-daughter led him all the way down the mountain to the church. How weary and sad and disappointed he was. There was no minister to speak to him. He was thirty seconds too late!

There was a great gathering of children to the Sabbath school. And their little eyes glistened, for their minister had promised to preach them a "little sermon" to-day. But he was not there. He was thirty seconds too late.

"There was a sick child up one of the mountain, and she had been inquiring all the week for her minister. She was so anxious to see him and have him pray with her. How she hailed the Sabbath, when he would be there. But no, he was not there. He was thirty seconds too late!

"That poor old blind man never came to the church again. He was too feeble, and never heard another sermon or prayer. That little girl was dead before I got back, and I could only shed tears over her cold corpse. I had been thirty seconds too late!

"On my bended knees I asked God's forgiveness, and promised him that, if possible, I would not be thirty seconds too late again. And now, Mr. Slow, am I not about right in my punctuality?"

"Well, I guess—it—don't—look—quite—so—unreasonable—as—it—might!"

SHORT SERMON.

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets."—Matt. 7: 12.

Dear reader, in order to fulfill this divine injunction, we must obey from the heart two of the greatest commandments that we have found recorded in God's holy book: love God with all our heart, might, mind, and strength, and our neighbor as ourselves; for "on these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." But how can we do this, if the holy principle of love is not rooted in our hearts by the Holy Ghost? The great principle of love, or charity, must be so firmly rooted and grounded in our intellectual faculties, as to be the ruling power in all our actions.

But how is it with us in relation to our dealings with our kind Benefactor? Are we honest in all our dealings with him? We wish him to be honest and true to us; and we know that our Father in heaven is always true and faithful to his children; then, of course, we should be true and faithful to him. When we ask the Lord to bless us, and continue his favors and kindness to us, and fill us with his love, we do not wish for half a blessing, and half favors, and half kindness, and to be half filled with his love; no indeed; but we ask him for a full supply of his blessings and his love; and when we are sincere and true-hearted, and ask in faith, we get what we ask for, and our dear Father never deceives us. And now, kind reader, you and I should be true and honest with the Lord, and never try to cheat or deceive him, but give him our whole hearts, and our affections; yes, love him with all the heart, might, mind and strength, and devote our whole lives to his service; and all we have and are should be at his will and disposal.

We are informed by our dear Savior, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." So you see by this, kind reader, that if I should cheat and defraud one of the dear saints of Christ, it would be doing the same to Christ; and if I should tell a lie to one of God's dear children, it would be telling a lie to Christ; and we all know what will be the fate of liars. How do we wish to have our dear brethren and sisters treat us, in all their intercourse with us? Certainly, we wish to be treated with kindness and with proper respect from those who profess to be our friends, and not to meet us with a cold shoulder, or with a frown, or a cross look, if we should be poor and unpopular in this world. Then, of course, you and I must try, in the name of the Lord and in his strength, to treat others as we would wish to have them treat us; and we know that like begets like, and the spirit of kindness begets the spirit of kindness. He that would have friends, let him show himself friendly; and when we hear of any of the saints in want and in distress, let us hasten to do them good, and thus imitate the spirit of our Lord and Master, and especially be kind to the unholy and unthankful, and thereby win them over to our lovely Redeemer. How much good we might do if we would.

And now, dear reader, I would ask you if it would not be doing us a great favor, in the hour of sickness or distress, or in some dreadful calamity, to have some one or more befriend us, and do all that he could to help us? Surely it would. Then, if you are blessed with abundance, go thou and do likewise; for you would have men show kindness to you in like circumstances; and remember that while you are doing thus to the saints, you are doing it to Christ. Furthermore, if you are in possession of riches, and profess to be a follower of the dear Savior, you are one of God's stewards over the goods and property he has put into your hands; and if it was a great favor for you to be led into the way of salvation through the great Redeemer, by the exertions of God's dear saints, then you should do the same to lead others to Christ, by all the means in your power. Yes, kind reader, help scatter those little preachers—tracts, and thus promulgate the great truths of God's sacred book, and by so doing be the means of saving some poor souls from eternal death; for you would that others should do so to you, if you were in the gall of bitterness and in the bonds of iniquity.

Are there not many ways or means for us to make use of, in order to promote the work of the Lord, by doing to others as we would that others should do unto us? Yes, when we meet together for the purpose of blending our hearts and voices in the praises of our divine Benefactor, do we not sometimes undertake to steady the ark by our own hands, and thus bring death upon the meetings, instead of spiritual life and union? Perhaps some one wants to have the meetings conducted in popular style, which is sure death to the church; or perhaps some one takes up all the time in exhortation, and deprives others of the privilege of saying a few words for Jesus and his cause. Kind reader, you would not wish others to do so to you, and you must not do so to others. But let us love our neighbors as ourselves, and thus be the true children of our Father who is in heaven, and then we shall be ready for the coming of the Just One. Amen. B. Perham.

INCONSISTENCIES.

It is inconsistent for a man to try to pull a mote out of his brother's eye, when he has a beam in his own eye.

It is inconsistent for a man to exhort people to "repent and be baptized," when he refuses to be baptized himself.

It is inconsistent to profess to be looking for the Lord, and then be laying plans for years to come.

It is inconsistent for a man to say I love God, and at the same time be hating his brother.

It is inconsistent for a man to pray—"Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those that trespass against us," and then not speak to one for weeks and months who he thinks has trespassed against him.

It is inconsistent for a man to go away from home to preach, when he lives so in his family that none of them have any confidence in him.

It is inconsistent for a man to be circulating reports about others, whose truthfulness he cannot vouch for.

It is inconsistent for a man to preach against sectarianism, when he is a strong sectarian himself.

It is inconsistent for a man to pray, "Thy kingdom come," and at the same time be doing all in his power to sustain and uphold the kingdoms of this world.

It is inconsistent for a man to say he has conscientious scruples against fighting, and then go to the ballot box and vote. A man to vote to put a man into office, is in duty bound to sustain him.

It is inconsistent for a man to profess to be a "pilgrim and a stranger," and at the same time be meddling with all of the affairs of the world.

It is inconsistent for a man to profess that "death is the gate to endless joy," and then when any one is sick to get all of the doctors in the town or city to try to keep them out of heaven.

It is inconsistent for a man to profess to believe that the righteous dead are in heaven praising God, and then go and weep and lament over their graves.

It is inconsistent for a man to profess to believe in the future punishment of the wicked, and then believe that they will not have a resurrection.

It is inconsistent for a man to profess to be a believer in and follower of Christ, and at the same time deny some of his plain statements.

It is inconsistent to be inconsistent in any way, and I pray God to help christians to be consistent. "O consistency, thou art a jewel."

THE THORN.

Bro. Grant:—Endorsing fully Bro. Taylor's view of Paul's "thorn in the flesh," I wish to add still another reason for it. When he was apprehended and placed before a council of priests for examination, at the commencement of his defense, the high priest commanded them that stood by to smite him on the mouth; at which Paul demurred with some severity; and they that stood by said, "Revilest thou God's high priest?" And Paul replied, "I wist not, brethren, that he was the high priest." We should think Paul would have distinguished him at once, by his priestly vestments, if he had not been partially blind. S. SUGGESTIONS TO FARMERS.

Paint all tools exposed to the weather, and if with a light colored paint, they will heat, warp, and crack the least in the sun.

Dip well-seasoned shingles in lime, wash and dry them before laying, and they will last much longer, and not become covered with moss.

In hitching a horse to a common rail or worm fence, always select the inside corner, which will be more secure by its bracing position, and the halter will not become tangled among the projecting ends of the rails, as when hitched to an outside corner.

Always tie a halter by making first a single loop, and then thrusting the end of the halter through this loop. This is quickly untied, and will never become untied of itself.

Dip the tips of nails in grease, and they will easily drive into any hard wood, where, otherwise, they would double and break.

In screwing nuts into any part of machinery, in cold weather, be careful not to heat them first by the hands, or they will contract after being screwed on tight, and become immovable afterwards.

In plowing, or teaming on the road, in hot weather, always rest the horses on an eminence, where they may receive the cool breeze, and where one minute will be worth two in a warm valley.

Always set a post fence over a ditch, or near good drainage, and the posts, always remaining dry, will last many years longer than those standing in wet sub-soil.

Always keep a supply of copper wire on hand, of different size, for repairing tools; it is greatly superior to either twine or iron wire.

In laying out gardens for fruits and vegetables, place every thing in drills, or rows, so that they may be cultivated by a horse, and thus save the expense of hand labor.

Remove every stone from the track in the highway. A single projection, which might have been removed in one minute, has battered and injured a thousand wagons, at a damage equal to a hundred days' labor.

When board fences become old, and the boards begin to come off, nail upright facing strips upon them against each post, and the boards will be held to their place, and the fence will last several years longer.

Every farmer should have a neat tool room, against the smooth walls of which a suitable place should be provided for hanging up every tool. An accurate outline of each tool should be painted on the wall, to remind every man of its absence, when left out of place.

Oil paint, applied to houses and barns, outbuildings and fences, will last much longer, and harden better, if put on as late as the middle of autumn, instead of during the heat of summer.

Every bin and granary should have a scale or upright row of figures marked inside, showing accurately the number of bushels to fill it to each figure. This will enable the farmer to know at a glance how much grain he has raised, or has on hand.—Rural Affairs.

CHILDREN IN ENGLISH IRON MILLS.

A correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, who has visited some of the iron furnaces in the "black country" of Staffordshire and Worcestershire, tells these sad stories:

"In the mills and forges boys of all ages, from eight and upward, may be found amid the labyrinth of machinery and the coils of heated iron, engaged by day and night in tugging long, red-hot seething bars. Their activity is very great, owing to the nature of their work, which requires rapidity of movement, and contrasts strangely with their otherwise jaded and worn appearance. In addition to the labor of dragging along the iron, each of these little fellows has to run, in short stages, a distance of more than eleven miles every day, in an oppressive atmosphere, thick with dust and steam. Owing to the quick and uncertain movements of the hot iron bars in their passage through successive rolls before having time to cool, the occupation of these boys is attended with some danger, a serious burn being an almost every day occurrence.

Standing in the midst of an extensive forge a few years ago I was alarmed by a cry of terror at the further end of the works. There was a general rush to the spot, and I shall never forget the horrible and sickening sight that met our view. A large rod of seething iron, in coming from the rolls, had somehow twisted aside, and had literally pierced through the body of a little fellow some ten years old. For a while the roar of the machinery was suspended, and two or three brawny men carried the hapless creature home; but when the first thrill of horror had passed away, the wheels were again set in motion and all went on as before.

The lives of these boys are almost entirely spent in the forges, except the hours allotted to sleep. They have their meals there, and in the snatches of leisure it is their playground. In most of the works is the arm or basin of a canal, the water of which is kept in a state of chronic fever, and in which, despite its inky color, they delight to bathe, both in winter and summer. So constant are they in their ablutions that they often come out parboiled, like a washerwoman's thumb. Some of the proprietors of these works have provided night schools for the instruction of the children in their employ; but as a rule, they are in mind and body alike neglected, and the densest ignorance prevails. They have no home training, most of their houses being locked up all day, the parents and all the children being out at work; and returning home fatigued at night, nothing but bed or a carousal in the Fox and Dragon is acceptable.

Returning home late one evening I saw two little children, a boy and girl, lying asleep upon a door step, which proved to be that of their own home. On awakening them they told me they were waiting for their mother to come out of the neighboring tavern and open the door. They had no father, and had been hard at work all day. The boy worked in a forge, the girl in a foundry, and the mother in a japanning factory, and though thus separated all day there seemed no bond of affection to bind them when they met together.

West of Dudley is a strange, wild region, known as the 'nailing district,' composed of scattered hamlets, to all the houses of which is attached what appears to the stranger a blacksmith shop. The manufacture of wrought nails is, and has been for a century or more, the great staple industry of the district. It is carried on by the nailers in their own houses. In few trades of the district does the employment of women and young children assume a more objectionable form than in this. The women seem to have lost all traces of the modesty of their sex, and from childhood are addicted to swearing, smoking—resembling as far as possible the other sex in their habits and deportment, even to the wearing of their coarse flannel jackets. They mostly marry very young, often at fourteen, and seldom later than eighteen or twenty. With such women for mothers, it is not difficult to judge of their children. From tenderest ages, often from five or six years, they are trained to that round of labor in which their lives are doomed to be spent. The first stage is 'blowing the bellows,' and next they are taught to forge the smaller kinds of nails.

The hours of labor are dreadfully prolonged, often exceeding sixteen hours per day; the rate of remuneration is very low, and the homes are consequently wretchedly poor. Entering one of them lately, I saw the father, mother and eight sons and daughters, all toiling in a small, ill-ventilated, dirty hovel. It was growing late in the evening, and I inquired: 'Is it not time to cease your day's work?' 'Oh, noa, maister,' rejoined the mother; 'we've a noit's work afore us yet, or there'll be no bread o' the loaf o' Sunday.' It was Friday night, and it was, as I learned, a practice to work from Friday morning until Saturday afternoon, without having more than short snatches of rest for meals. While I lingered, a little fellow, who could not have been more than eight, fell from his work apparently exhausted, but his father, on observing it, threw at him a hammer handle, telling him with an oath, to recommence his work. He took no part in our conversation, having, like his two eldest daughters, a short pipe in his mouth, which seemed to him and them 'the calumet of peace.'

This is by no means a solitary case. Hundreds of such instances are to be found of boys and girls, just emerged from babyhood, ill fed, ill clothed and overworked, trained amid vulgarity and vice, and in the densest gloom of ignorance. Were it not for Sunday schools I shudder to think of the future of these hapless children.

In other branches of the hardware and metal trades the evils of child labor equally abound, especially in the foundries, japan works and tin-plate factories, but, as a rule, they are less aggravated in the large establishments than in the smaller workshops."

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.

Now, dear children, is there not a good reason for you to be thankful for your pleasant homes, kind parents, schools and Sunday schools? Try to be contented with your many blessings. If you should be discontented with your lot, think of those poor children, of whom you have just been reading, who have to work so hard from the time they are eight years old, and then think how much better is your condition. May the Lord help you all to be good.

A SINGING STUDENT BOY.

Many years ago a student boy was seen and heard in an ancient town singing. He was a stout, plainly dressed boy, but his face was pale and his eyes were sad and tearful. His voice was most musical, and the songs he sang were in beautiful words, and about sacred things. Every time he finished a song, he stepped to the door of a house and gave a gentle tap. When it was opened, he said, in humble tones:

"Please give a poor student boy a morsel of bread?"

From door to door he sang his sweet songs, until his body was weary and his heart sad. Scarcely able to stand, he at last turned his steps homeward.

Just at that moment Ursula Cotta, a burgher's wife, who had heard his songs and seen him driven from her neighbor's doors, as he humbly asked for bread, felt her heart yearn with pity towards the helpless boy. She opened the door, beckoned to the young singer, smiled sweetly upon him, and in tones that sounded like heavenly melodies to his ear, said:

"Come in, poor boy, and refresh thyself at my table!"

Happy little singer! how he enjoyed that delicious meal. And when the good dame and her husband told him to make their house his future home, his heart melted. With eyes half filled with tears, he looked into the faces of his friends, and said:

"I shall now pursue my studies without being obliged to beg my bread from grudging hands. I shall have you, sir, for a father, and you, sweet Ursula, for a mother. My heart shall once more learn to love. I shall be happier than I can express."

The singing boy studied hard and well. Years after the world heard him uttering his voice against Popery. He became the chief of that reformation which gave an open Bible to the world. His name was Martin Luther.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS' MOTHER.

"Twelve or fifteen years ago," says ex-Governor Briggs, "I left Washington three or four weeks in the spring. While at home, I possessed myself of the letters of Mr. Adams' mother, and read them with exceeding interest. I remember an expression in one of the letters addressed to her son, while yet a boy twelve years of age, in Europe. Says she: 'I would rather see you laid in your grave than you should grow up a profane and graceless boy.'"

"After returning to Washington, I went over and said to Mr. Adams: 'I have found out who made you!'"

"What do you mean," said he.

"I replied, 'I have been reading the letters of your mother.'"

"If I had spoken that dear name to some little boy who had been for weeks away from his dear mother, his eyes could not have flashed more brightly, or his face glowed more quickly than did the eye and face of that venerable old man when I pronounced the name of his mother. He stood up in his peculiar manner, and emphatically said: 'Yes, Mr. Briggs, all that is good in me I owe to my mother.'"

"O, what a testimony was that from this venerable man to his mother, who had, in his remembrance, all the stages of his manhood, 'All that is good in me I owe to my mother!' Mothers, think of this when your bright-eyed little boy is about. Mothers make the first impressions upon their children, and these are last to be effaced."

BAPTISM, AUG. 27th, 1866.

The Sabbath sun was nearing home,
And shone upon a motley throng,
Which from Mount Wilbraham had come,
And stood the river bank along;
With voices tuned in sweet accord,
They sang loved hymns unto their Lord.

The man of God stood in the stream,
While softest breezes fanned his brow;
Methought of John when Jesus said—
"Suffer it to be so now;
Thus it becomes us to fulfill
All righteousness" to do His will.

Methought of Jordan's fringed bank,
Of multitudes thus gathered there;
The "dove" which crowned the Holy One,
And God's own voice that thrilled the air;
As from that scene my mind returned,
With fond desire my spirit burned.

The singing ceased, and silence came
In voice distinct, low-toned, and slow;
The man of God then did explain
This rite, and what it does foreshow.
Through resurrection we shall live,
Through faith in Christ we do believe.

'Twas a solemn scene, for fifteen souls
With Christ were buried on that day;
Peace, river like, did rest on those
Who his command did then obey
O may they ever faithful prove,
And dwell for aye in Jesus' love.

And there was one, a meek-eyed child,
Who "followed Jesus" then and there;
On her return such blessings shone
On that young face so pure and fair,
The people caught it on the shore,
And cried, "Bless God forevermore"!

ONE MORE INVITATION.

"Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways, for why will you die?"

Dear impenitent friend, consider now as this, God's gracious invitation, is presented and offered for your immediate acceptance; we entreat you, consider now for what you are selling your eternal, unchangeable, everlasting welfare; and in the language of Baxter and the Bible you are now once more invited to turn from the ways of sin and death to the blessed service of the ever living God; and then, if faithful to the end, eternal joys will be your portion; then your Judge will be you friend, even when millions of ages have rolled away.

But if, with all the slighted invitations, you should slight this one also, and judgment scenes should soon overtake you, remember, oh, remember how you will then compare the value of the pleasures of sin with the value of "the recompense of reward."

"To think of the low delights of the flesh, or the applauding breath of mortals, or the possessing of heaps of gold, and then to think of everlasting glory. This is all I had for my soul, my God, my hopes of blessedness!" It cannot possibly be expressed how these thoughts will tear your very heart. Then you will exclaim against your folly, "O miserable wretch! did I set my soul for sale at so base a price? Did I part with my God for a little dirt and dross; and sell my Savior as Judas for a little silver? I had but a dream of delight for my hopes of immortality. I am now awakened; it is all vanished. My morsels are now turned to gall, and my cups to wormwood. When they were past my taste, the pleasure perished. And is this all that I have had for the inestimable treasure? What a mad exchange did I make! What if I had gained all the world, and lost my soul? But, alas! how small a part of the world was it for which I gave up enduring riches! I, who am now to have my portion with damned fiends, might have been among the blest. The Lord did set before me life and death; and having chosen death, I deserve to suffer it. The prize was held out before me; if I had run well, I might have obtained it; if I had striven, I might have had the victory; if I had fought valiantly, I had been crowned."

It will yet more pierce you to remember that your obtaining the crown was not only possible, but very probable. And with what self-reproach will you exclaim—"O, had I yielded to that invitation, then graciously offered me, and like all others so thoughtlessly rejected, which proved to be my last; and to that still, small voice within me, saying, 'Flee from the wrath to come'; 'Turn to God, and live!' then had my soul been delivered. On that point hinged my eternal destiny. Mercy and grace still waiting for me then, though long rejected, at last has fled for ever! I once had the gentle gales of the Spirit. I was almost resolved to have been wholly for God. I was even turning from my base, seducing sins. I had cast off my old companions, and was associating with the godly. Yet I turned back, lost my hold, and broke my promises. I was almost persuaded to be a real christian, yet I conquered those persuasions. What workings were in my heart when a faithful servant of Christ pressed home the truth!

"O how fair was my prospect once for the crown! I almost had it, and yet I have lost it. O, had I then followed on to know the Lord, I had even now been blessed among the saints. Why did I not take up my cross, when so often admonished, or awake from the carnal lethargy of my heart? Why did I seek to pervert the right ways of the Lord, or suffer myself to be allured to destruction by the example of worldly-minded, fruitless, barren professors, or by false teachers, false prophets, Satan's emissaries, who said 'peace and safety,' when sudden destruction was at hand? O how long did Christ stand knocking at the door of my heart! How long did the Spirit strive with me, as if he was loth to take a denial! O why did I not yield to its regenerating, soul-saving power?

"The cup of salvation was often most freely offered me. Gospel invitations and solemn admonitions were continually sounding in my ear. Bible tracts were often presented by faithful friends. Yet amid all these soul-saving influences, unheeded, I have passed the brief span of my earthly probation, and now these precious privileges, these golden moments are all fled, to return no more! Free and full salvation, so repeatedly offered, I have rejected for ever! Jesus Christ was often set before me in the gospel, who once died that I might live; yet by my unbelief and indifference I set him at nought, who would have been my Savior.

"And now, unrepenting, unforgiven, unrenewed, I must be for ever banished from the presence of God and the Lamb; for ever from the presence of all the holy angels; for ever from the presence of all the glorified at God's right hand; for ever from the presence of all that is pure and holy, happy, just, and good. I am now a loathing to them all; yes, a loathing to myself also. My choice was free and voluntary. I might have chosen the service of God, instead of which I slighted all the invitations of his love. I might have been clothed in the spotless garments of Christ's righteousness, and fitted for the unfading glories of the everlasting kingdom; but I chose the defilements of sin, and am now only fit to be cast off for ever."

Impenitent sinner, backslider, fruitless professor, the word may soon go forth, "Cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground?" This day, this hour, this passing moment, is only yours. Delays are often fatal. Another week, and probationary scenes with you may have come to an end; and ere you are aware, "the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God" may suddenly burst upon you. Now, will you longer delay? or will you at once take heed to these solemn warnings and this life-giving invitation, "Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways, for why will you die"?

Remember, if you lay this message by undecided, then it will be numbered with other neglected invitations; and it may prove to be your last. Now, if you are not fully decided at once to call, and continue to call on the Lord for salvation, then you are requested, urged, entreated, not to lay this tract aside until you carefully, seriously, and prayerfully read it all through once more.

S. L. Manley.

For the World's Crisis.

A CONFLICT IN THEOLOGY.

A few logical deductions from positions assumed in popular theology, create a conflict that subjects God to the power of evil.

1. "God is Almighty in power; therefore he can accomplish his purposes."

2. "His purpose to destroy sin is understood by his law, which forbids sin."

3. "Man is immortal, and free to choose sin or righteousness."

4. "Many choose sin; being immortal, they will live eternally in sin."

In the above the first two propositions are correct, the others are false; hence a conflict, which denies the supreme power of God, and makes evil more mighty than good.

That God is almighty, is admitted and believed by the mass of christian professors of the evangelical churches. Being almighty, he is able to subdue every antagonistic power to his government, and enforce his law that prohibits sin in his universe. This is one of the foundation stones of the christian faith. Without this attribute, God would fail to be God; and the faith that supports the christian would dwindle to skepticism and distrust and disregard of God's promises or threatenings. Every thing that robs God of his almighty power, is a heresy that is destructive of the christian religion. Doctrine that is not in harmony with, or subjected to, the attributes of God, is to be rejected as false and detrimental to the christian faith.

"Man is immortal." This is a doctrine of theology that is looked upon by the church as a truth that must be received without question. Suppose for argument we admit it; what follows? He has the power of endless life, and with it the power to act in rebellion against God's government through a never-ending eternity. It may be an eternal life in misery, but that does not take from him the power to sin and rebel against God. Thus we see (if this be true) that God with his almighty power delegated to man a power that is more than a match for himself; for he has made a law that forbids sin, and delegated to man a power to resist that law and ever remain in rebellion against his government; which subjects God to a necessity of an eternal rebellion in his empire, which, to say the least, reflects upon his infinite wisdom. Thus, by one false position, theology creates a conflict of the attributes of God that presents to the thinking mind a God of weakness in power and wisdom.

Again. His infinite wisdom and justice framed a law to govern the subjects of his empire, forbidding sin; but his almighty power, not acting in harmony with his wisdom, delegated man with power to resist to all eternity the law that infinite wisdom had dictated.

Truly, here is "the conflict of the ages." Ho! ye champions of theology, come to the rescue! Where is the harmonious whole that reflects glory and honor to the God of the Bible? You tell us it is a mystery. What is a mystery? God's almighty power, or his wisdom? or the short-sightedness of man in assuming that man is immortal, in the absence of one salutary text from God's word that will sustain the assumption? Come down from your battlements of mist and assumed dignity as expounders of God's holy law, and meet the question in the glorious light of God's blessed word, and show us the beautiful harmony of the attributes of God.

We believe God's word, and that by his almighty power and infinite wisdom, based upon his eternal justice and mercy, he created man a mortal being, with power to choose life or death; and God's power and infinite wisdom are sufficient to execute his law, and purge out rebellion, and give us a clean universe free from the taint of sin or any thing that will mar the beauty and harmony of God's government and universe.

For the World's Crisis.

SATAN'S SNARES.

In these perilous days of darkness that immediately precede the glorious dawning of day, it seems to me that the christian's pathway was never so completely beset with the snares of Satan. And the reason is obvious. We are living in the very last hours of the night, and Satan's time is limited. He knows that he is soon to be bound, to deceive the nations no more. So these passing moments, which are so dear to the little flock, are equally precious to him to finish his infamous work. Hence we should watch

"Satan the fowler, who betrays
Unguarded souls a thousand ways."

To find Satan's snares, we have not to look beyond our own immediate pathway. They are all around us. They fill the air and haunt the earth. But let us scrutinize them more closely, that we may be enabled to keep out of the snare of the fowler.

The snare is always concealed,—secreted to deceive. "Surely in vain is the net spread in the sight of any bird." It is true. No successful trapper ever approaches his prey to reveal his real object, and then set his trap for them. Ah, no! He goes quietly in the darkness of night, and secretes his snare in their pathway; and the prey, unsuspecting of danger, and utterly ignorant of his intentions, is suddenly fast in the fowler's snare. This is precisely so with Satan. He is a cunning fowler. He has not had six thousand years' experience at trapping without learning some thing of the business. He is an experienced trapper. He thoroughly understands the nature of the game he intends to entrap. He knows their frequent haunts and traveled pathway. He is well posted on their weakness, and understands the right time to set his snare. These things it is well to bear in mind. Deception and secrecy are the principles on which he proceeds to capture his objects. You, christian reader, are the object which he is trying to ensnare.

Again. His snare is well adapted to the circumstances and nature of the prey. A trapper always employs different traps for different kinds of game. A man would hardly expect to capture a lark with a trap set to catch the roving beast of the forest. So, dear reader, bear in mind this one fact, that Satan employs different snares for differently constituted persons; and he always approaches his objects on their weak sides.

It would be impossible to search out all his snares. They are as numerous as the leaves of the forest. Pride is one of his snares; and he applies it to the different kinds. One person takes pride in extravagant dress; another in extreme plainness. Both are victims of his snare. He would hardly tempt the rich man with a desire for more wealth; but he captures him easily with the pride of mastership over his servants, and over the poor. Pride of generosity is another snare that has a fearful effect in leading God's children astray. Satan is a mighty preacher. He preaches charity to secrete his snare, and then captures them through pride. He creeps into the pulpit, and conceals his trap there. And, oh, how many are led captive through the love of praise. How many smooth over God's truth, that they may receive the praise of men, instead of putting on the blacksmith's blows, that will mould into the image of God the iron hearts of his hearers, on the anvil of truth. Whoever compromises with sin in any form falls a sure victim to the fowler.

There is one point I wish to impress upon your minds. The force of example is one of Satan's most dangerous snares. He conceals it where you lest expect it. Perhaps your nearest friend, or most respected christian brother, has the snare concealed in his bosom. When the fowler fails to get the game within his trap, he sends out a decoy. All know the use of the decoy-duck. The church contains many such. They are the most exemplary to outward appearance; but when you approach them close enough, you are surprised to discover their real character. Satan is careful in selecting a decoy. He would not present the example of the worldling for the true child of God to follow, for he knows he would pass it by. But he approaches him with the example of some christian brother, whom you would least suspect of doing wrong. He attempts to sear your conscience with his smooth words: "Why, such and such a brother did so and so; it will not be wrong for you, for he is the most exemplary member of the church." Oh, beware, brother; that is the snare of the devil. If you heed that voice, you will suddenly discover yourself in the fowler's trap.

Then our safety lies in following our course entirely independent of any one. We should follow no man any further than he follows Christ. When they fall from the highway, by the delusive voice of the arch-deceiver, let us not follow their example; but to strike out boldly, like a man swimming for his life. Let us stick firmly to our resolution, regardless of every one else: "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

Having noticed briefly some of Satan's snares for entraping the christian world, there is one point further that I wish to call your attention to. The Adventists, as a people, are the special objects of Satan's snares. He owes them a special revenge. They are the most energetic in uncovering his traps, and warning the world of the nearness of its doom. What other people have so successfully brought to light his trap, concealed by tradition, by which he tried to capture the whole world, by his fables of immortal-soulism, a "spirit land," etc.? Oh, dear reader, beware of his traps. Shun his decoys, which preach peace! peace! when there is no peace. When they attempt to ensnare you by the cry of safety, like the little lark, soar up above his concealed instrument of capture. Do not meddle with his traps. Keep above them, and trust in your Life Preserver. Look to Jesus in faith and confidence, for "Surely he shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler."—Psa. 91: 3. We are not at a loss to discover his snares. Walk close to God, and apply the scriptural test to every thing you are tempted to do, and whatsoever you are induced to do that is not for the glory of God, be assured there is a snare connected with it.

Beloved brethren, watch! Be constant in prayer, and "surely he shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler." Christ has told us, if we resist the devil he will flee from us. Resist him in your daily walk, and watch always that you fall not a victim in his hands. Christ gave that command to this people, to "watch." He knew the opposition we should meet in advocating and sustaining those great truths which are undermining the devil's throne. He knew the ingenuity Satan would use to trap us, hence he says, "Watch." The best position to watch for an enemy is from an elevation. Therefore, let us elevate ourselves on the cross, and then looking to Jesus in faith, we can say,

"Amid a thousand snares I stand,
Upheld and guarded by thy hand."

But, reader, perhaps I may be addressing one who has been caught in the fowler's net. If so, listen to the voice of a friend. Your strength, perhaps, like Sampson's when he was entrapped, is gone. You feel weak and desolate. Oh, for the love of all that is dear to eternity, break away at once. Look to Jesus. Like Samson, pray to God to give you strength, and "Surely he will deliver thee from the snare of the fowler."

"His honor is engaged to save
The meanest of his sheep;
All that his heavenly Father gave
His hands securely keep."

Rochester, N. Y. Wm. H. Spencer.

For the World's Crisis.

WHAT ARE FIRST FRUITS?

Not the general harvest, but, taking the Bible lexicographers and common sense, we should answer: that portion of fruit or produce first matured or ripened; and Webster adds, "The first or earliest effect of any thing, either in a good or bad sense."

"First fruits" is a term frequently used in the Old and New Testaments, and in such a manner that a mistake as to its signification seems quite unnecessary. The first mention of this term occurs in Ex. 22: 29, where Moses reiterates to the people the command God gave him on Mount Sinai relative to offering the first fruits, not only of grain, fruit, etc., but the first-born son should be set apart for God. The first sheaf of grain bound must be waved before the Lord: it was a pledge of the harvest, but of course was not the harvest, but the first fruits. This is the type, now for the antitype.

We find it distinctly stated in 1 Cor. 15, that Christ is the FIRST FRUITS, or, as some translators have it, "the first of the first fruits." He was the first born from the dead, the first born among many brethren; showing conclusively that this birth was among, or with, or in close proximity to others, which class inspiration denominates as Christ's brethren. Rom. 8: 29.

We read in Matt. 27, that many bodies of the saints which slept arose after Christ's resurrection, and appeared unto many. Now as Christ led a multitude of captives at his ascension, is not the inference very strong that it was the company raised just subsequent to his own resurrection—those who had been held in captivity by the king of terrors? Certain it is that there is a company called, justified, and glorified, before the "innumerable company" are gathered, and inspiration declares these to be the first fruits to God and to the Lamb.

Now is this the harvest? No; for the harvest is at the end of the world, and we have no account that God's reapers were employed in gathering the first fruits. It would appear that the great husbandman himself gathered the wave sheaf without the agency of angels.

Now after the first fruits had been called, justified, and glorified, two resurrections are plainly taught in the Scriptures; and how any can say that, if there is a space of time between the resurrection of the righteous and the wicked it makes three resurrections; or, if there are two resurrections in the future then we shall have three resurrections, is to me truly astonishing. The space of time between the two resurrections we will not now discuss, but briefly notice a few scriptures to prove that the righteous and wicked are not raised at one and the same time.

I am aware that the positive assertions which Christ and Paul make relative to the resurrection of the righteous and the wicked do not prove but that they may be raised at the same time. But there are other scriptures which seem to set this matter in a plain light.

Let us look at 1 Thess. 4: 16, and the programme, or the order of events to transpire at the coming of Christ, is before us.

First, the Lord himself descends with a trio of sounds (whether musical or otherwise is not stated); but "the dead in Christ rise FIRST"; then those who live are changed, and with those who have been raised are caught up together to meet the Lord in the air.

Now there is no mention here of the wicked dead, yet we know there are as positive declarations that the wicked dead shall be raised, as there are that the righteous will. But Christ's dead are raised FIRST. Then of course the devil's dead are not raised before or at the same time; if so, this scripture would be untrue.

Again, in Heb. 11: 35, we read of those saints who were tortured, but would not accept deliverance; and the reason given is, that they might obtain a BETTER resurrection, showing there is one resurrection better than the other; and when we turn to Rev. 20: 6, we find why it is "better": "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power."

Now is it not plain that the Scriptures teach that there are first fruits, after that the harvest, which occurs at the end of this age; and then subsequently another angel thrusts in his sickle and gathers the vine of the earth and casts it into the great winepress of the wrath of God? CONVERSATION.

Did you ever see a person who could not talk, sing, pray, or speak one word aloud? Yes, we have. Did you ever feel to thank the Lord that you had the power of speech? Only think of it for a moment. Suppose from to-day we could never again sing, or speak to our friends; how badly we should feel. We remember of reading that Moses on a certain occasion complained to God that he was slow of speech. We think if Moses could not have spoken at all, he would have felt much worse. Then as the Lord has blessed us with the power of speech, how careful we ought to be how we use it.

How often we hear, among those who profess to be looking for Jesus, language like this, especially when you tell them something that surprises them: "O my Lord!" "Good Lord!" "For heaven's sake!" "For God's sake!" One would suppose, to hear them, that they had a right to use the name of God vainly, as well as sacredly. We read in the word of God that we should not take the name of the Lord in vain; that is, to no purpose, idly, foolishly. How careful, then, ought we to be not to use the name of the Lord in this way, but always sacredly.

We read in the word of the Lord of vain words, vain imaginations, vain and unruly talkers, vain religion, and many other vain and unprofitable things, which we think should not belong to a christian. Paul says, "Let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ." And Christ says, "Swear not at all"; so then we have no right to say "By George!" "By golly!" "By gracious!" "By heaven!" or by the earth, or by any other thing. Peter says, Let your conversation be holy. There is a volume contained in that word holy. I need say but little about that. We read of holy men and women of old, who are our examples.

"Be ye perfect," as Christ is perfect. Not perfect Gods, nor angels, but perfect christians—righteous christians; for Christ came not to call the righteous. Be pure-minded christians; then your conversation will be right. The pure in heart shall "see God." Paul wished to stir up the pure minds of his brethren. Again, Our conversation is in heaven, from whence we look for the Savior.

Thus we see that christians of other days possessed not such corrupt and vulgar hearts as the so-called christians of these days. When we come in contact with such persons, we shudder and keep our mouths and ears shut, and at the first convenient moment quietly withdraw, thinking the while, if the heart and mind are so defiled, how fruitless the person must be. May the Lord help us to have pure conversation at all times and in all places. N. D. Babcock.

LOOK TO JESUS.

Paul exhorts all who are running the heavenly race to "look to Jesus, the author and finisher of their faith."....

1. Look to Jesus to be kept in the narrow way. The Grecian racer, while running on the course, kept his eyes on the mark of the prize. This was done for the guidance of his body. If he gazed on the spectators as he ran, he would stumble out of the course. If you fix your eyes on Jesus, your rapidity will be increased and you will be kept from making crooked paths. You will follow your eyes. If you fix them on your brethren, you will either be imitating them, or finding fault with them. If you fix them on the world, you will be desiring its honors, and conforming to its ways, or you will be overcome by its scoffs, and frowns. Then look to Jesus.

2. Look to Jesus to be made like him. He is the model of a christian. "His nature and his name is love." He is meek, loving, pure and good. It is not the will of God that you be like some one else, but it is his will that you be like Jesus. "Let this mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus." It is not essential either to your salvation or usefulness that the capacity and gifts of another be yours, but that you have the mind of Christ. When you sit for a likeness, you sit not for some one's else, but for your own. If you want the likeness of Jesus on your heart, you must not look to Bro. A., or to sister B., and try to be like them, but look to Jesus. It is not doing the same work, or passing through the same trial that another passes, or having the same light, or strength of faith, or spiritual manifestations that another has, that is to constitute you a christian, but to have the fruit of the Spirit, which "is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance." Then look to Jesus.

3. Look to Jesus in the day of prosperity. If you are a christian, you will be industrious and economizing. Consequently, you will probably accumulate more or less property. But "if riches increase, set not your heart upon them." Give liberally for God's cause. Look to Jesus for directions as to where and how much you ought to give of his money. Unless you do, the enemy will either direct your mind to some speculation, or say to you "bank it." Beware! "The love of money is the root of all evil; which, while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." The reason why many cannot see Jesus when they look, is because the mighty dollar hides him from their view. The heart that is not open wide enough to empty out its love of money, is not open wide enough to receive the love of God. Many have fallen for the want of a thorough consecration on this point. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that that withholdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth to poverty." Then look to Jesus.

4. Look to Jesus in the day of temptation and trial. You have left the service of Satan. He hates you for it. He will not let you alone till you get to glory. He will do all he can to overthrow you. His strategems are cunningly devised. His wiles are many. When you are in favor with God he will say you are not. He is the "accuser of the brethren." When the waves of discouragement roll around you, he will say "where now is your God?" But look to Jesus. He has overcome the devil. He will give you power over him. Is the day of trial upon you? Do cares like a wild deluge come? Do storms of sorrow fall? Does hell's host withstand you? Look up! The Jesus before the glance of whose eye in the days of his flesh the mob fell to the ground like men shot in battle; who sent the devils to the herd of swine; who rebuked the maddened waves of old Galilee; who was with the Hebrews in the flame, and with Daniel in the lions' den, is your Savior. "He is the fulness of the Godhead bodily." He is mighty to save. His eye is on you. You have in him a friend "who sticketh closer than a brother." Trust in, and obey him, and all will be well. Look to Jesus.—Earnest Christian.

WAS IT SO?

We often hear it said that Noah was shut in the ark seven days before the flood came. Was it so? Does the account state this to have been the case? Let us examine it a little.

When the ark was completed, God said to Noah, "Come thou and all thy house into the ark. . . . Of every clean beast shalt thou take unto thee by sevens, the male and his female; and of beasts that are not clean by two, the male and his female. Of fowls also of the air by sevens, to keep seed alive upon the face of the earth. For yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights. And Noah went in, and his sons, and his wife, and his sons' wives with him into the ark, because of the waters of the flood. Of clean beasts, and of beasts that are not clean, and of fowls, and of every thing that creepeth upon the earth. They went in two and two unto Noah into the ark, the male and the female, as God had commanded Noah. And it came to pass after seven days, that the waters of the flood were upon the earth. In the six hundredth year of Noah's life, in the second month, the same day, were all the fountains of the great deep broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened. In the SELF-SAME DAY entered Noah, and Shem, and Ham, and Japheth, the sons of Noah, and Noah's wife, and the three wives of his sons with them into the ark, they and every beast after his kind, and all the cattle after their kind, and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind, and every fowl after his kind, every bird of every sort. And they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the breath of life. And they that went in, went in male and female of all flesh as the Lord had commanded him: and the Lord shut him in."

When? On the first day of the seven? Nay, verily, but "on the self-same day" that the flood of waters was upon the earth.

Seven days were given unto Noah, in which time the beasts and fowls were gathered into the ark, and arranged in their respective places, and the provision stored for their sustenance. After these seven days of preparation had expired, Noah was shut into the ark. This looks far more consistent, and in harmony with the record, than the common view so often advanced, that Noah and his family, and all the beasts, etc., entered the ark on the first of the seven days, and were there shut in, exposed for a week to the scoffs of a doomed world. So large a multitude could not enter the ark in one day, and they, with the abundant provision necessary, be stored in their places.

Many, too, are of the opinion that the saints will sorrow seven days previous to translation, the time of that event, because Jesus directs attention to Noah as a type. But we find that he does not speak directly of Noah himself as a type, but of the "days of Noah," the "days that were before the flood," and the condition of the ungodly, that as they were eating and drinking, etc., until the day Noah entered the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away, so also shall the coming of the Son of man be." He also directs our attention to the "days of Lot," bringing to view the same facts respecting the condition of the Sodomites, and says that the same day that Lot went out of Sodom the fire came and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed."

Why not then with equal propriety say that the saints will know not the time until the night previous to the coming of the Son of man, because Lot did not know until then respecting the destruction of the cities of the plain? The Savior refers as fully to the one case as the other.

But the time is not the question before the mind, but the condition of the world in the "days of the Son of man." The "days of Noah" and "the days of Lot" were the days just prior to the destruction of the ungodly by the flood and the fiery tempest. "The days of the Son of man" are the days just prior to his revelation from heaven.

The Savior speaks of "days" and a "day." "The day that Noah entered into the ark, and the flood came." (A proof of the correctness of our previous position.) "The same day that Lot went out of Sodom." "Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed. In that day, he which shall be upon the house top, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away: and he that is in the field, let him not return back. Remember Lot's wife." This, and its connection, certainly favors the general teaching of the Savior respecting the lack of knowledge, both on the part of saint and sinner, respecting "the day and hour" of his coming previous to that event.

Let us, therefore, watch, for we know not when the time is, lest coming suddenly, he find us sleeping. M. D. W.

"PRAY WITHOUT CEASING."

"In every thing give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."—1 Thess. 5: 17, 18.

God has made it the duty of man to pray. In fact, it is one of the greatest weapons that the christian uses in his warfare with the enemy. It is the life of the christian. The fervent, faithful prayer of the righteous availeth much; so we learn in the word of truth; and indeed we learn that it saveth the sick.

In the first place we are to pray for all men, giving thanks, etc. We are to pray for rulers and all that are in authority. We are also to pray with and for each other, and most earnestly for ourselves. We are to pray in faith, believing that we shall receive the things for which we ask; for we learn that without faith it is impossible to please God; consequently it is useless to pray doubting we receive the things asked for.

We are to pray with the spirit and with the understanding also. We must understand what we pray for, and the Spirit we have when we ask for it. We must pray fervently, have our hearts and minds in it; not merely pray with the lips, while our minds are wandering, but our prayers must come from the heart, having the help of the Spirit, to avail anything with God. We are not to use vain repetitions, but simple, heartfelt prayer is what gives life and vitality to the christian.

Secret prayer is a very plain duty, as we find recorded in the word of God. Jesus says, "He that seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." There are many occasions when secret prayer is especially beneficial and needful.

1. In temptation we need to pray for help to overcome; for without divine aid we can effect nothing in this direction. The great adversary of our souls has various ways to tempt us, and it needs earnest, faithful prayer to overcome and resist the temptation.

2. In time of trial we need to pray for the strong arm of the Lord to be round about us, to help us up in the hour of need. Many and various are the trials we have to pass through, but if we hold on to our strong tower, we shall come off conquerors over all.

3. In time of trouble we are to go to our heavenly Father for aid and consolation. Faithful, fervent prayer will do much for us in this direction.

4. When affliction comes, let us go to Him who is ever ready to hear the cry of his children, and he will make even this burden light.

5. In adversity let us pray for that wisdom that cometh from God, and that grace which will sustain through all circumstances in life.

6. In prosperity we should pray much, that we do not get lifted up and proud, but that we keep humble at the feet of Jesus.

Finally, we should be instant in prayer, under every circumstance, for when we leave off praying we begin to lose our life and vitality as christians. Why are we not more alive and awake in the cause of Christ? Is it not because we do not pray more? I believe it is. Let us pray more, live nearer to God, be alive in his work, and live in his everlasting kingdom. Amen. N. B. McMurphy.

THANKS.

I would say with David, "O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good; because his mercy endureth forever." "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me? I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord. I will pay my vows unto the Lord now, in the presence of all his people."

How great is his goodness to us. Our hearts flow with gratitude and love to him and to his people. May abundant blessings rest upon all who have cheered us by their kind deeds and their kind words. Truly, ye shall not lose your reward. The Master will say, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me. Enter ye into the joy of your Lord."

Beloved friends, still remember us in your prayers, that we may do our whole duty, and be ready to meet the Lord.

BAPTISM, AUG. 27th, 1866.

The Sabbath sun was nearing home,
And shone upon a motley throng,
Which from Mount Wilbraham had come,
And stood the river bank along;
With voices tuned in sweet accord,
They sang loved hymns unto their Lord.

The man of God stood in the stream,
While softest breezes fanned his brow;
Methought of John when Jesus said—
"Suffer it to be so now;
Thus it becomes us to fulfill
All righteousness" to do His will.

Methought of Jordan's fringed bank,
Of multitudes that gathered there;
The "dove" which crowned the Holy One,
And God's own voice that thrilled the air:
As from that scene my mind returned,
With fond desire my spirit burned.

The singing ceased, and silence came
In voice distinct, low-toned, and slow;
The man of God then did explain
This rite, and what it does foreshow:
Through resurrection we shall live,
Through faith in Christ we do believe.

'T was a solemn scene, for fifteen souls
With Christ were buried on that day;
Peace, river like, did rest on those
Who his command did then obey
O may they ever faithful prove,
And dwell for aye in Jesus' love.

And there was one, a meek-eyed child,
Who "followed Jesus" then and there;
On her return such blessings shone
On that young face so pure and fair,
The people caught it on the shore,
And cried, "Bless God forevermore"!

ONE MORE INVITATION.

"Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways, for why will you die?"

Dear impenitent friend, consider now as this, God's gracious invitation, is presented and offered for your immediate acceptance; we entreat you, consider now for what you are selling your eternal, unchangeable, everlasting welfare; and in the language of Baxter and the Bible you are now once more invited to turn from the ways of sin and death to the blessed service of the ever living God; and then, if faithful to the end, eternal joys will be your portion; then your Judge will be you friend, even when millions of ages have rolled away.

But if, with all the slighted invitations, you should slight this one also, and judgment scenes should soon overtake you, remember, oh, remember how you will then compare the value of the pleasures of sin with the value of "the recompense of reward."

"To think of the low delights of the flesh, or the applauding breath of mortals, or the possessing of heaps of gold, and then to think of everlasting glory. This is all I had for my soul, my God, my hopes of blessedness!" It cannot possibly be expressed how these thoughts will tear your very heart. Then you will exclaim against your folly, "O miserable wretch! did I set my soul for sale at so base a price? Did I part with my God for a little dirt and dross; and sell my Savior as Judas for a little silver? I had but a dream of delight for my hopes of immortality. I am now awakened; it is all vanished. My morsels are now turned to gall, and my cups to wormwood. When they were past my taste, the pleasure perished. And is this all that I have had for the inestimable treasure? What a mad exchange did I make! What if I had gained all the world, and lost my soul? But, alas! how small a part of the world was it for which I gave up enduring riches! I, who am now to have my portion with damned fiends, might have been among the blest. The Lord did set before me life and death; and having chosen death, I deserve to suffer it. The prize was held out before me; if I had run well, I might have obtained it; if I had striven, I might have had the victory; if I had fought valiantly, I had been crowned."

It will yet more pierce you to remember that your obtaining the crown was not only possible, but very probable. And with what self-reproach will you exclaim—"O, had I yielded to that invitation, then graciously offered me, and like all others so thoughtlessly rejected, which proved to be my last; and to that still, small voice within me, saying, 'Flee from the wrath to come'; 'Turn to God, and live!' then had my soul been delivered. On that point hinged my eternal destiny. Mercy and grace still waiting for me then, though long rejected, at last has fled for ever! I once had the gentle gales of the Spirit. I was almost resolved to have been wholly for God. I was even turning from my base, seducing sins. I had cast off my old companions, and was associating with the godly. Yet I turned back, lost my hold, and broke my promises. I was almost persuaded to be a real christian, yet I conquered those persuasions. What workings were in my heart when a faithful servant of Christ pressed home the truth!

"O how fair was my prospect once for the crown! I almost had it, and yet I have lost it. O, had I then followed on to know the Lord, I had even now been blessed among the saints. Why did I not take up my cross, when so often admonished, or awake from the carnal lethargy of my heart? Why did I seek to pervert the right ways of the Lord, or suffer myself to be allured to destruction by the example of worldly-minded, fruitless, barren professors, or by false teachers, false prophets, Satan's emissaries, who said 'peace and safety,' when sudden destruction was at hand? O how long did Christ stand knocking at the door of my heart! How long did the Spirit strive with me, as if he was loth to take a denial! O why did I not yield to its regenerating, soul-saving power?

"The cup of salvation was often most freely offered me. Gospel invitations and solemn admonitions were continually sounding in my ear. Bible tracts were often presented by faithful friends. Yet amid all these soul-saving influences, unheeded, I have passed the brief span of my earthly probation, and now these precious privileges, these golden moments are all fled, to return no more! Free and full salvation, so repeatedly offered, I have rejected for ever! Jesus Christ was often set before me in the gospel, who once died that I might live; yet by my unbelief and indifference I set him at nought, who would have been my Savior.

"And now, unrepenting, unforgiven, unrenewed, I must be for ever banished from the presence of God and the Lamb; for ever from the presence of all the holy angels; for ever from the presence of all the glorified at God's right hand; for ever from the presence of all that is pure and holy, happy, just, and good. I am now a loathing to them all; yea, a loathing to myself also. My choice was free and voluntary. I might have chosen the service of God, instead of which I slighted all the invitations of his love. I might have been clothed in the spotless garments of Christ's righteousness, and fitted for the unfading glories of the everlasting kingdom; but I chose the defilements of sin, and am now only fit to be cast off for ever."

Impenitent sinner, backslider, fruitless professor, the word may soon go forth, "Cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground?" This day, this hour, this passing moment, is only yours. Delays are often fatal. Another week, and probationary scenes with you may have come to an end; and ere you are aware, "the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God" may suddenly burst upon you. Now, will you longer delay? or will you at once take heed to these solemn warnings and this life-giving invitation, "Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways, for why will you die"?

Remember, if you lay this message by undecided, then it will be numbered with other neglected invitations; and it may prove to be your last. Now, if you are not fully decided at once to call, and continue to call on the Lord for salvation, then you are requested, urged, entreated, not to lay this tract aside until you carefully, seriously, and prayerfully read it all through once more.

A CONFLICT IN THEOLOGY.

A few logical deductions from positions assumed in popular theology, create a conflict that subjects God to the power of evil.

1. "God is Almighty in power; therefore he can accomplish his purposes."

2. "His purpose to destroy sin is understood by his law, which forbids sin."

3. "Man is immortal, and free to choose sin or righteousness."

4. "Many choose sin; being immortal, they will live eternally in sin."

In the above the first two propositions are correct, the others are false; hence a conflict, which denies the supreme power of God, and makes evil more mighty than good.

That God is almighty, is admitted and believed by the mass of christian professors of the evangelical churches. Being almighty, he is able to subdue every antagonistic power to his government, and enforce his law that prohibits sin in his universe. This is one of the foundation stones of the christian faith. Without this attribute, God would fail to be God; and the faith that supports the christian would dwindle to skepticism and distrust and disregard of God's promises or threatenings. Every thing that robs God of his almighty power, is a heresy that is destructive of the christian religion. Doctrine that is not in harmony with, or subjected to, the attributes of God, is to be rejected as false and detrimental to the christian faith.

"Man is immortal." This is a doctrine of theology that is looked upon by the church as a truth that must be received without question. Suppose for argument we admit it; what follows? He has the power of endless life, and with it the power to act in rebellion against God's government through a never-ending eternity. It may be an eternal life in misery, but that does not take from him the power to sin and rebel against God. Thus we see (if this be true) that God with his almighty power delegated to man a power that is more than a match for himself; for he has made a law that forbids sin, and delegated to man a power to resist that law and ever remain in rebellion against his government; which subjects God to a necessity of an eternal rebellion in his empire, which, to say the least, reflects upon his infinite wisdom. Thus, by one false position, theology creates a conflict of the attributes of God that presents to the thinking mind a God of weakness in power and wisdom.

Again. His infinite wisdom and justice framed a law to govern the subjects of his empire, forbidding sin; but his almighty power, not acting in harmony with his wisdom, delegated man with power to resist to all eternity the law that infinite wisdom had dictated.

Truly, here is "the conflict of the ages." Ho! ye champions of theology, come to the rescue! Where is the harmonious whole that reflects glory and honor to the God of the Bible? You tell us it is a mystery. What is a mystery? God's almighty power, or his wisdom? or the short-sightedness of man in assuming that man is immortal, in the absence of one salutary text from God's word that will sustain the assumption? Come down from your battlements of mist and assumed dignity as expounders of God's holy law, and meet the question in the glorious light of God's blessed word, and show us the beautiful harmony of the attributes of God.

We believe God's word, and that by his almighty power and infinite wisdom, based upon his eternal justice and mercy, he created man a mortal being, with power to choose life or death; and God's power and infinite wisdom are sufficient to execute his law, and purge out rebellion, and give us a clean universe free from the taint of sin or any thing that will mar the beauty and harmony of God's government and universe.

SATAN'S SNARES.

In these perilous days of darkness that immediately precede the glorious dawning of day, it seems to me that the christian's pathway was never so completely beset with the snares of Satan. And the reason is obvious. We are living in the very last hours of the night, and Satan's time is limited. He knows that he is soon to be bound, to deceive the nations no more. So these passing moments, which are so dear to the little flock, are equally precious to him to finish his infamous work. Hence we should watch

"Satan the fowler, who betrays
Unguarded souls a thousand ways."

To find Satan's snares, we have not to look beyond our own immediate pathway. They are all around us. They fill the air and haunt the earth. But let us scrutinize them more closely, that we may be enabled to keep out of the snare of the fowler.

The snare is always concealed,—secreted to deceive. "Surely in vain is the net spread in the sight of any bird." It is true. No successful trapper ever approaches his prey to reveal his real object, and then set his trap for them. Ah, no! He goes quietly in the darkness of night, and secretes his snare in their pathway; and the prey, unsuspecting of danger, and utterly ignorant of his intentions, is suddenly fast in the fowler's snare. This is precisely so with Satan. He is a cunning fowler. He has not had six thousand years' experience at trapping without learning something of the business. He is an experienced trapper. He thoroughly understands the nature of the game he intends to entrap. He knows their frequent haunts and traveled pathway. He is well posted on their weakness, and understands the right time to set his snare. These things it is well to bear in mind. Deception and secrecy are the principles on which he proceeds to capture his objects. You, christian reader, are the object which he is trying to ensnare.

Again. His snare is well adapted to the circumstances and nature of the prey. A trapper always employs different traps for different kinds of game. A man would hardly expect to capture a lark with a trap set to catch the roving beast of the forest. So, dear reader, bear in mind this one fact, that Satan employs different snares for differently constituted persons; and he always approaches his objects on their weak sides.

It would be impossible to search out all his snares. They are as numerous as the leaves of the forest. Pride is one of his snares; and he applies it to the different kinds. One person takes pride in extravagant dress; another in extreme plainness. Both are victims of his snare. He would hardly tempt the rich man with a desire for more wealth; but he captures him easily with the pride of mastership over his servants, and over the poor. Pride of generosity is another snare that has a fearful effect in leading God's children astray. Satan is a mighty preacher. He preaches charity to secrete his snare, and then captures them through pride. He creeps into the pulpit, and conceals his trap there. And, oh, how many are led captive through the love of praise. How many smooth over God's truth, that they may receive the praise of men, instead of putting on the blacksmith's blows, that will mould into the image of God the iron hearts of his hearers, on the anvil of truth. Whoever compromises with sin in any form falls a sure victim to the fowler.

There is one point I wish to impress upon your minds. The force of example is one of Satan's most dangerous snares. He conceals it where you lest expect it. Perhaps your nearest friend, or most respected christian brother, has the snare concealed in his bosom. When the fowler fails to get the game within his trap, he sends out a decoy. All know the use of the decoy-duck. The church contains many such. They are the most exemplary to outward appearance; but when you approach them close enough, you are surprised to discover their real character. Satan is careful in selecting a decoy. He would not present the example of the worldling for the true child of God to follow, for he knows he would pass it by. But he approaches him with the example of some christian brother, whom you would least suspect of doing wrong. He attempts to sear your conscience with his smooth words: "Why, such and such a brother did so and so; it will not be wrong for you, for he is the most exemplary member of the church." Oh, beware, brother; that is the snare of the devil. If you heed that voice, you will suddenly discover yourself in the fowler's trap.

Then our safety lies in following our course entirely independent of any one. We should follow no man any further than he follows Christ. When they fall from the highway, by the delusive voice of the arch-deceiver, let us not follow their example; but to strike out boldly, like a man swimming for his life. Let us stick firmly to our resolution, regardless of every one else: "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

Having noticed briefly some of Satan's snares for entrapping the christian world, there is one point further that I wish to call your attention to. The Adventists, as a people, are the special objects of Satan's snares. He owes them a special revenge. They are the most energetic in uncovering his traps, and warning the world of the nearness of its doom. What other people have so successfully brought to light his trap, concealed by tradition, by which he tried to capture the whole world, by his fables of immortal-soulism, a "spirit land," etc.? Oh, dear reader, beware of his traps. Shun his decoys, which preach peace! peace! when there is no peace. When they attempt to ensnare you by the cry of safety, like the little lark, soar up above his concealed instrument of capture. Do not meddle with his traps. Keep above them, and trust in your Life Preserver. Look to Jesus in faith and confidence, for "Surely he shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler."—Psa. 91: 3. We are not at a loss to discover his snares. Walk close to God, and apply the scriptural test to every thing you are tempted to do, and whatsoever you are induced to do that is not for the glory of God, be assured there is a snare connected with it.

Beloved brethren, watch! Be constant in prayer, and "surely he shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler." Christ has told us, if we resist the devil he will flee from us. Resist him in your daily walk, and watch always that you fall not a victim in his hands. Christ gave that command to this people, to "watch." He knew the opposition we should meet in advocating and sustaining those great truths which are undermining the devil's throne. He knew the ingenuity Satan would use to trap us, hence he says, "Watch." The best position to watch for an enemy is from an elevation. Therefore, let us elevate ourselves on the cross, and then looking to Jesus in faith, we can say,

"Amid a thousand snares I stand,
Upheld and guarded by thy hand."

But, reader, perhaps I may be addressing one who has been caught in the fowler's net. If so, listen to the voice of a friend. Your strength, perhaps, like Sampson's when he was entrapped, is gone. You feel weak and desolate. Oh, for the love of all that is dear to eternity, break away at once. Look to Jesus. Like Samson, pray to God to give you strength, and "Surely he will deliver thee from the snare of the fowler."

"His honor is engaged to save
The meanest of his sheep;
All that his heavenly Father gave
His hands securely keep."

WHAT ARE FIRST FRUITS?

Not the general harvest, but, taking the Bible lexicographers and common sense, we should answer: that portion of fruit or produce first matured or ripened; and Webster adds, "The first or earliest effect of any thing, either in a good or bad sense."

"First fruits" is a term frequently used in the Old and New Testaments, and in such a manner that a mistake as to its signification seems quite unnecessary. The first mention of this term occurs in Ex. 22: 29, where Moses reiterates to the people the command God gave him on Mount Sinai relative to offering the first fruits, not only of grain, fruit, etc., but the first-born son should be set apart for God. The first sheaf of grain bound must be waved before the Lord: it was a pledge of the harvest, but of course was not the harvest, but the first fruits. This is the type, now for the antitype.

We find it distinctly stated in 1 Cor. 15, that Christ is the FIRST FRUITS, or, as some translators have it, "the first of the first fruits." He was the first born from the dead, the first born among many brethren; showing conclusively that this birth was among, or with, or in close proximity to others, which class inspiration denominates as Christ's brethren. Rom. 8: 29.

We read in Matt. 27, that many bodies of the saints which slept arose after Christ's resurrection, and appeared unto many. Now as Christ led a multitude of captives at his ascension, is not the inference very strong that it was the company raised just subsequent to his own resurrection—those who had been held in captivity by the king of terrors? Certain it is that there is a company called, justified, and glorified, before the "innumerable company" are gathered, and inspiration declares these to be the first fruits to God and to the Lamb.

Now is this the harvest? No; for the harvest is at the end of the world, and we have no account that God's reapers were employed in gathering the first fruits. It would appear that the great husbandman himself gathered the wave sheaf without the agency of angels.

Now after the first fruits had been called, justified, and glorified, two resurrections are plainly taught in the Scriptures; and how any can say that, if there is a space of time between the resurrection of the righteous and the wicked it makes three resurrections; or, if there are two resurrections in the future then we shall have three resurrections, is to me truly astonishing. The space of time between the two resurrections we will not now dispute, but briefly notice a few scriptures to prove that the righteous and wicked are not raised at one and the same time.

I am aware that the positive assertions which Christ and Paul make relative to the resurrection of the righteous and the wicked do not prove but that they may be raised at the same time. But there are other scriptures which seem to set this matter in a plain light.

Let us look at 1 Thess. 4: 16, and the programme, or the order of events to transpire at the coming of Christ, is before us.

First, the Lord himself descends with a trio of sounds (whether musical or otherwise is not stated); but "the dead in Christ rise FIRST"; then those who live are changed, and with those who have been raised are caught up together to meet the Lord in the air.

Now there is no mention here of the wicked dead, yet we know there are as positive declarations that the wicked dead shall be raised, as there are that the righteous will. But Christ's dead are raised FIRST. Then of course the devil's dead are not raised before or at the same time; if so, this scripture would be untrue.

Again, in Heb. 11: 35, we read of those saints who were tortured, but would not accept deliverance; and the reason given is, that they might obtain a BETTER resurrection, showing there is one resurrection better than the other; and when we turn to Rev. 20: 6, we find why it is "better": "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power."

Now is it not plain that the Scriptures teach that there are first fruits, after that the harvest, which occurs at the end of this age; and then subsequently another angel thrusts in his sickle and gathers the vine of the earth and casts it into the great winepress of the wrath of God? CONVERSATION.

Did you ever see a person who could not talk, sing, pray, or speak one word aloud? Yes, we have. Did you ever feel to thank the Lord that you had the power of speech? Only think of it for a moment. Suppose from to-day we could never again sing, or speak to our friends; how badly we should feel. We remember of reading that Moses on a certain occasion complained to God that he was slow of speech. We think if Moses could not have spoken at all, he would have felt much worse. Then as the Lord has blessed us with the power of speech, how careful we ought to be how we use it.

How often we hear, among those who profess to be looking for Jesus, language like this, especially when you tell them something that surprises them: "O my Lord!" "Good Lord!" "For heaven's sake!" "For God's sake!" One would suppose, to hear them, that they had a right to use the name of God vainly, as well as sacredly. We read in the word of God that we should not take the name of the Lord in vain; that is, to no purpose, idly, foolishly. How careful, then, ought we to be not to use the name of the Lord in this way, but always sacredly.

We read in the word of the Lord of vain words, vain imaginations, vain and unruly talkers, vain religion, and many other vain and unprofitable things, which we think should not belong to a christian. Paul says, "Let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ." And Christ says, "Swear not at all"; so then we have no right to say "By George!" "By golly!" "By gracious!" "By heaven!" or by the earth, or by any other thing. Peter says, Let your conversation be holy. There is a volume contained in that word holy. I need say but little about that. We read of holy men and women of old, who are our examples.

"Be ye perfect," as Christ is perfect. Not perfect Gods, nor angels, but perfect christians—righteous christians; for Christ came not to call the righteous. Be pure-minded christians; then your conversation will be right. The pure in heart shall "see God." Paul wished to stir up the pure minds of his brethren. Again, Our conversation is in heaven, from whence we look for the Savior.

Thus we see that christians of other days possessed not such corrupt and vulgar hearts as the so-called christians of these days. When we come in contact with such persons, we shudder and keep our mouths and ears shut, and at the first convenient moment quietly withdraw, thinking the while, if the heart and mind are so defiled, how fruitless the person must be. May the Lord help us to have pure conversation at all times and in all places. N. D. BABCOCK.

LOOK TO JESUS.

Paul exhorts all who are running the heavenly race to "look to Jesus, the author and finisher of their faith."....

1. Look to Jesus to be kept in the narrow way. The Grecian racer, while running on the course, kept his eyes on the mark of the prize. This was done for the guidance of his body. If he gazed on the spectators as he ran, he would stumble out of the course. If you fix your eyes on Jesus, your rapidity will be increased and you will be kept from making crooked paths. You will follow your eyes. If you fix them on your brethren, you will either be imitating them, or finding fault with them. If you fix them on the world, you will be desiring its honors, and conforming to its ways, or you will be overcome by its scoffs, and frowns. Then look to Jesus.

2. Look to Jesus to be made like him. He is the model of a christian. "His nature and his name is love." He is meek, loving, pure and good. It is not the will of God that you be like some one else, but it is his will that you be like Jesus. "Let this mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus." It is not essential either to your salvation or usefulness that the capacity and gifts of another be yours, but that you have the mind of Christ. When you sit for a likeness, you sit not for some one's else, but for your own. If you want the likeness of Jesus on your heart, you must not look to Bro. A., or to sister B., and try to be like them, but look to Jesus. It is not doing the same work, or passing through the same trial that another passes, or having the same light, or strength of faith, or spiritual manifestations that another has, that is to constitute you a christian, but to have the fruit of the Spirit, which "is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance." Then look to Jesus.

3. Look to Jesus in the day of prosperity. If you are a christian, you will be industrious and economizing. Consequently, you will probably accumulate more or less property. But "if riches increase, set not your heart upon them." Give liberally for God's cause. Look to Jesus for directions as to where and how much you ought to give of his money. Unless you do, the enemy will either direct your mind to some speculation, or say to you "bank it." Beware! "The love of money is the root of all evil; which, while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." The reason why many cannot see Jesus when they look, is because the mighty dollar hides him from their view. The heart that is not open wide enough to empty out its love of money, is not open wide enough to receive the love of God. Many have fallen for the want of a thorough consecration on this point. "There is that that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that that withholdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth to poverty." Then look to Jesus.

4. Look to Jesus in the day of temptation and trial. You have left the service of Satan. He hates you for it. He will not let you alone till you get to glory. He will do all he can to overthrow you. His strategems are cunningly devised. His wiles are many. When you are in favor with God he will say you are not. He is the "accuser of the brethren." When the waves of discouragement roll around you, he will say "where now is your God?" But look to Jesus. He has overcome the devil. He will give you power over him. Is the day of trial upon you? Do cares like a wild deluge come? Do storms of sorrow fall? Does hell's host withstand you? Look up! The Jesus before the glance of whose eye in the days of his flesh the mob fell to the ground like men shot in battle; who sent the devils to the herd of swine; who rebuked the maddened waves of old Galilee; who was with the Hebrews in the flame, and with Daniel in the lions' den, is your Savior. "He is the fulness of the Godhead bodily." He is mighty to save. His eye is on you. You have in him a friend "who sticketh closer than a brother." Trust in, and obey him, and all will be well. Look to Jesus.—Earnest Christian.

WAS IT SO?

We often hear it said that Noah was shut in the ark seven days before the flood came. Was it so? Does the account state this to have been the case? Let us examine it a little.

When the ark was completed, God said to Noah, "Come thou and all thy house into the ark. . . . Of every clean beast shalt thou take unto thee by sevens, the male and his female; and of beasts that are not clean by two, the male and his female. Of fowls also of the air by sevens, to keep seed alive upon the face of the earth. For yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights. And Noah went in, and his sons, and his wife, and his sons' wives with him into the ark, because of the waters of the flood. Of clean beasts, and of beasts that are not clean, and of fowls, and of every thing that creepeth upon the earth. They went in two and two unto Noah into the ark, the male and the female, as God had commanded Noah. And it came to pass after seven days, that the waters of the flood were upon the earth. In the six hundreth year of Noah's life, in the second month, the same day, were all the fountains of the great deep broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened. In the SELF-SAME DAY entered Noah, and Shem, and Ham, and Japheth, the sons of Noah, and Noah's wife, and the three wives of his sons with them into the ark, they and every beast after his kind, and all the cattle after their kind, and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind, and every fowl after his kind, every bird of every sort. And they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the breath of life. And they that went in, went in male and female of all flesh as the Lord had commanded him: and the Lord shut him in.

When? On the first day of the seven? Nay, verily, but "on the self-same day" that the flood of waters was upon the earth.

Seven days were given unto Noah, in which time the beasts and fowls were gathered into the ark, and arranged in their respective places, and the provision stored for their sustenance. After these seven days of preparation had expired, Noah was shut into the ark. This looks far more consistent, and in harmony with the record, than the common view so often advanced, that Noah and his family, and all the beasts, etc., entered the ark on the first of the seven days, and were there shut in, exposed for a week to the scoffs of a doomed world. So large a multitude could not enter the ark in one day, and they, with the abundant provision necessary, be stored in their places.

Many, too, are of the opinion that the saints will sorrow seven days previous to translation, the time of that event, because Jesus directs attention to Noah as a type. But we find that he does not speak directly of Noah himself as a type, but of the "days of Noah," the "days that were before the flood," and the condition of the ungodly, that as they were eating and drinking, etc., until the day Noah entered the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away, so also shall the coming of the Son of man be." He also directs our attention to the "days of Lot," bringing to view the same facts respecting the condition of the Sodomites, and says that the same day that Lot went out of Sodom the fire came and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed."

Why not then with equal propriety say that the saints will know not the time until the night previous to the coming of the Son of man, because Lot did not know until then respecting the destruction of the cities of the plain? The Savior refers as fully to the one case as the other.

But the time is not the question before the mind, but the condition of the world in the "days of the Son of man." The "days of Noah" and "the days of Lot" were the days just prior to the destruction of the ungodly by the flood and the fiery tempest. "The days of the Son of man" are the days just prior to his revelation from heaven.

The Savior speaks of "days" and a "day." "The day that Noah entered into the ark, and the flood came." (A proof of the correctness of our previous position.) "The same day that Lot went out of Sodom." "Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed. In that day, he which shall be upon the house top, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away: and he that is in the field, let him not return back. Remember Lot's wife." This, and its connection, certainly favors the general teaching of the Savior respecting the lack of knowledge, both on the part of saint and sinner, respecting "the day and hour" of his coming previous to that event.

Let us, therefore, watch, for we know not when the time is, lest coming suddenly, he find us sleeping. M. D. W.

"PRAY WITHOUT CEASING."

"In every thing give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."—1 Thess. 5: 17, 18.

God has made it the duty of men to pray. In fact, it is one of the greatest weapons that the christian uses in his warfare with the enemy. It is the life of the christian. The fervent, faithful prayer of the righteous availeth much; so we learn in the word of truth; and indeed we learn that it saveth the sick.

In the first place we are to pray for all men, giving thanks, etc. We are to pray for rulers and all that are in authority. We are also to pray with and for each other, and most earnestly for ourselves. We are to pray in faith, believing that we shall receive the things for which we ask; for we learn that without faith it is impossible to please God; consequently it is useless to pray doubting we receive the things asked for.

We are to pray with the spirit and with the understanding also. We must understand what we pray for, and the Spirit we have when we ask for it. We must pray fervently, have our hearts and minds in it; not merely pray with the lips, while our minds are wandering, but our prayers must come from the heart, having the help of the Spirit, to avail anything with God. We are not to use vain repetitions, but simple, heartfelt prayer is what gives life and vitality to the christian.

Secret prayer is a very plain duty, as we find recorded in the word of God. Jesus says, "He that seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." There are many occasions when secret prayer is especially beneficial and needful.

1. In temptation we need to pray for help to overcome; for without divine aid we can effect nothing in this direction. The great adversary of our souls has various ways to tempt us, and it needs earnest, faithful prayer to overcome and resist the temptation.

2. In time of trial we need to pray for the strong arm of the Lord to be round about us, to help us up in the hour of need. Many and various are the trials we have to pass through, but if we hold on to our strong tower, we shall come off conquerors over all.

3. In time of trouble we are to go to our heavenly Father for aid and consolation. Faithful, fervent prayer will do much for us in this direction.

4. When affliction comes, let us go to Him who is ever ready to hear the cry of his children, and he will make even this burden light.

5. In adversity let us pray for that wisdom that cometh from God, and that grace which will sustain through all circumstances in life.

6. In prosperity we should pray much, that we do not get lifted up and proud, but that we keep humble at the feet of Jesus.

Finally, we should be instant in prayer, under every circumstance, for when we leave off praying we begin to lose our life and vitality as christians. Why are we not more alive and awake in the cause of Christ? Is it not because we do not pray more? I believe it is. Let us pray more, live nearer to God, be alive in his work, and live in his everlasting kingdom. Amen. N. B. MCMURPHY.

THANKS.

I would say with David, "O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good; because his mercy endureth forever." "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me? I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord. I will pay my vows unto the Lord now, in the presence of all his people."

How great is his goodness to us. Our hearts flow with gratitude and love to him and to his people. May abundant blessings rest upon all who have cheered us by their kind deeds and their kind words. Truly, ye shall not lose your reward. The Master will say, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me. Enter ye into the joy of your Lord."

Beloved friends, still remember us in your prayers, that we may do our whole duty, and be ready to meet the Lord.

A LETTER FROM PROF. HUDSON TO A LITTLE GIRL.

The following letter was received by a little girl employed in the Scriptural Tract Repository, Boston, Mass. It was not intended for publication; but, as it contains information which may be welcome to the friends of Prof. Hudson, young and old, who have felt solicitous for his welfare and health, we give it to the readers of the Crisis. — E.

Danielsonville, Conn., Nov. 26, 1866.

Miss J—— B——:—

My Dear Young Friend:—Your letter of last Friday was handed to me yesterday morning by Mr. H., who came here on Saturday to preach for Mr. C. It is so kind in you to write to me, that I must reply to you before I begin any other letter, though I have two or three business letters, and some other letters, to write to-day.

I think you will be a little glad to hear me talk about business letters,—certainly if you think that I am really able to write them; I believe that I am. One reason is, this is so beautiful a morning that one can hardly afford to be sick, or to feel unwell. Another reason is, I have been gaining very steadily, so that yesterday, though it was quite cold, I rode to the village, a mile and a half, and attended meeting forenoon and afternoon, was only a little tired when I got home, rested nicely last night, and feel better than ever this morning. I think I can write business letters this morning without harm, though I intend to work very moderately. And for economy, since I have begun to tell you about my health, I will tell you all, and you may tell the rest, and that will save the trouble of writing to Mr. H. about it.

You may say, then, that ever since my last hemorrhage, two weeks ago, I have not thought best to lie on either side, but only on my back, because lying on my side seemed to make me breathe a little faster and not quite so easily, and that might set my lungs a bleeding again. But I now breathe longer and stronger than I have for six weeks; have spit hardly a speck of blood for ten days, and when I try, can lie on my side without breathing harder for it; so I may venture soon to get a little sleep in that position, and hope to wake up refreshed by it.

Then, again, I have hardly spoken a loud word since I left Cambridge, until yesterday. I have been sorry for this, because some of my friends have thought I could not speak aloud if I tried, and so have felt more sad than was needful. But I now think it will be safe for my lungs to talk loud a little, and perhaps it will help them some, by just giving them such exercise as they need, if they can bear it. Twelve days ago, when I rode to the depot in Worcester, in an easy carriage, I could not bear to have the horses go faster than a walk; and even then I had them stop once and stand still while I could take breath. But now I can let Mr. C——'s horse trot pretty fast when the road is smooth, and it does not trouble me at all. So I shall venture to get out of my whisperings a little, that my kind friends here, Mrs. S—— and her daughter Mrs. B——, my nurse, can get acquainted with me, as they have been afraid they should not.

So much for my health. If you do not understand all the hard words,—I hope you never will understand "hemorrhage" as I do,—H. or A. will explain them to you, or V. will tell you out of the dictionary, if need be. And as for the hand-writing, I am afraid I can read yours a great deal easier than you can read mine.

I must not waste the few lines I have left, so I will say, I do not know how I shall ever pay my friends for all their kindness to me, except by being good. And as you may have the same kind of debts that you cannot pay—and we all owe such to our parents, if to no others—I hope you will be good too. Keep on being kind, as I have always known you, to the friends where you are. Most of all, love Jesus, who is kinder and better than the best of us; and that will help you to be kind to all, even when persons sometimes grieve you, and even to your enemies, if you should have any. I shall be most glad to see you, if I come to Boston before next spring, and I may do so if I do not go to Philadelphia.

Yours very truly, C. F. Hudson.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

I would hereby acknowledge (what I intended to have done before), viz., the receipt of a subscription list, with sums of money at various times, amounting to over one hundred dollars, by the hand of Bro. I. C. Wellcome, given by the subscribers to help me out of my pecuniary embarrassment. Those dear brethren and sisters who have so freely assisted me, have my hearty thanks, and my prayer that it may be said unto them in that day, when Jesus shall sit upon the throne of his glory, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." C. Goud.

GO WORK TO-DAY.

Realize what God has given you to do today, and do not look beyond it. Strength is promised according to your day, but not according to your morrow. Every-day work requires every-day grace, and every-day grace requires every-day asking. Whatever your work is, take it first to God. Before you begin, kneel and implore his blessing. Ask him for a fresh, diligent spirit. Ask him for a spirit of patience and meekness in contending with all the little wearisome difficulties and annoyances connected with it. Ask him to enable you not only to bear the daily cross, but to "take it up," denying yourself and following the footsteps of the Lord Jesus. Then put your whole might to it—the might that you have borrowed from a mightier than yourself—for that is the secret of real work. Do it as if your Master were standing before you. Do not offer to God a spirit dreaming of the great things you could do, or may do at some other time, but offer to him your wakeful, rejoicing present energies. Only think of present duties, the moment's work. Our life is given to us in moments, and we shall have joys for each.

Is there nothing, however small, that you can do with your pen and your knowledge? Is there no little tract to be written; no simple volume which might reach some hearts, and find entrance into some homes? Try. See for yourselves what you can do. "She hath done what she could," is world-wide encouragement. Work for God and not for yourself. Your work will soon find its place in the vineyard of the Lord.—Friend of Virtue.

WORCESTER.

The Lord is doing a glorious work in Worcester. A few weeks since, Sr. Anna E. Smith spent a week with the church, and her labors were specially blest, and quite a number decided to serve the Lord in consequence of Sr. Smith's faithful labors. We spent Lord's day, Nov. 25th, with the church in W., and enjoyed a feast of heavenly things. Their pleasant and commodious chapel was much crowded with an audience that seemed anxious to hear the word of life. Eighteen came eighteen miles to attend the meeting and returned the same day. Many had to stand up for want of seats. Eighteen were baptized, and twelve came forward for prayers in the evening. We heard many heart-cheering testimonies in our love-feast, and in the evening, before and after preaching. We found it difficult to bring our meeting to a close, even after it had continued over three hours. The Spirit of the Lord is striving with many more, who we trust will give Jesus their hearts' affections, and be ready for his coming.

One who came forward for prayers, was the wife of one who had recently given his heart to the Lord. She felt unwilling to go further in the way to destruction. After she came forward for prayers, the Lord blest her. She then arose and said, "I have found Jesus," and hastened to her husband in another part of the house, and embraced him most fondly. It was a joyful scene. The prospect for Worcester is very encouraging.

END OF THE POPE'S TEMPORAL POWER.

It is now generally admitted that the temporal power of the Pope must soon come to an end. The Catholics themselves see no chance to avoid it. So long as the Pope has the control of matters at Rome, it cannot be truly said that his temporal power is at an end. When he is driven from there, or loses all power to dictate in the political affairs in the capital of the Roman kingdom, then it may be said his dominion is taken away. In all probability the temporal power of the Pope will end next year, 1867. We shall wait with great interest to see what will transpire next year. If Napoleon takes his troops away from Rome on the 15th of this December, the Italians will doubtless soon make preparations to take the city for the capital of Italy, instead of Florence. This is a very important object to be gained by the Italian revolutionists; but we think they will not be able to accomplish their object. A few months will give us light on this important subject.

THE CONDITION OF THE POPE.

We purpose to keep our readers posted in all matters of interest relating to the condition of the papal power. A critical hour is at hand for the "woman" on the "seven hills." That she is struck with death all must admit. We expect she will die a hard death. "The cup which she hath filled" is to be filled "to her double." Her days of sinful glory are among the things that were; and at last the cup of remorse and "sorrow" is at her lips, and must be taken.

An Italian correspondent, writing from Venice Oct. 3d, 1866, says:—

"The Roman question is claiming the attention of the world, and the approaching month of December, undoubtedly, will bring about a change in the position of the Pope towards all Christendom, whether Romanist, Greek or Protestant."

The Pope is said to be in a state of "despair." He is coming to his end, and there are none to help him.

NAPOLEON AND MEXICO.

Notwithstanding the many promises of Napoleon to withdraw his troops from Mexico, it seems they are still there, and that now he does not intend to take them away till next spring. This is causing some considerable feeling on the part of the United States government. It is now evident that the promises of Napoleon are not reliable; that he makes and breaks promises at his pleasure, and thus far other nations have allowed him to do it without daring to cross his track. It remains to be seen whether he will continue to "do according to his will."

STILL BOASTING.

Notwithstanding everything goes to show that the temporal power of the Pope must soon close, some of the zealous Catholics think the enemies of Rome "will be disappointed;" and that the Lord will in some way provide deliverance. They do not see that the Lord is the one who is bringing on her troubles, and is about to cast her down as a "millstone" thrown into the sea.

In The Catholic for Nov. 3d, 1866, we find an article from the London Universal News, in which the writer says, "Rome has been called the eternal city." Does she deserve the glorious title? Her past history is as illustrious as it is wonderful." He calls it "the capital of christendom, and says, "Her magnificent churches are peerless above all others."

He goes on to say:—

"Who can view the long and interminable line of the Roman Pontiffs without an involuntary feeling of awe and veneration? Behold its history. Beginning with St. Peter—appointed by our Savior himself—and continuing in one unbroken succession throughout every age of the Church, we find it existing to-day in undiminished lustre and vigor in the person of the Holy Father, Pius IX. What a record! The storms of eighteen centuries have beaten over it in vain. In vain have persecution and heresy alike endeavored to destroy it. The succession still goes on, and will cease only with time itself! Could an institution with a record like this be of mere human origin—the fruit only of man's skill and judgment? Reason and truth alike forbid such an unwarrantable and base assumption. Its very history—so venerable and wonderful—attest to its divine authority. Otherwise it would long since have succumbed to the destroying influences brought to bear against it—to weaken and destroy. Earth, hell and man, as it were, sought by every means within their power to break and obliterate the succession of the Roman Pontiffs. No mere human institution could long have withstood such tremendous opposition. God alone, through his Almighty power, could preserve the great headship of the church on earth from utter demolition and ruin at the hand of such rapacious foes and determined destroyers. The mere fact, then, we repeat, that the Pontificate still exists in all its original vigor and power is a sufficient and inexorable evidence of its original divine institution and continued divine protection." He then says:—"Rome is threatened to-day. Serious dangers environ her.' Her enemies are jubilant in anticipation of her speedy downfall. They will be disappointed. We would not pretend to make light of the danger that really threatens the Eternal City. We realize but too fully its extent. That the present situation of the Holy See is a most critical one, we would not for a moment attempt to conceal. It is far better that the existing state of facts, in all their length, breadth and depth, should be fully realized by all. Rome is menaced with the most serious danger. But we say, again, the enemies of Rome will fail."

As the time has come for the harlot woman to "drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation," it is evident the Lord will not fail in bringing her to judgment for her bloody work against the followers of Jesus. Soon her power in Rome must come to an everlasting end.

WE ARE GLAD TO SEE IT.

There is good evidence that people are beginning to be satisfied that the colored people really belong to the human race as well as the whites, and are competent to fill responsible stations. At a meeting in Chelsea, Mass., held Nov. 26th, to nominate a Mayor, Robert W. Morris, a colored man, received 242 votes, and the opposition candidate 336. Mr. Morris is a successful lawyer, doing business in Boston, and a very interesting man, whose society is particularly agreeable, in consequence of his gentlemanly appearance and behavior.

A Strange Title.—It is said a paper is about to be started in Florence, Italy, with the following strange title:—The Valley of Jehoshaphat; the Organ of the day of Judgment. We do not know the object of the paper, but hope to receive further information.

"Be Short."—We commend to our readers the article in another column, by Bro. Amos French, headed "Be short." Please give it a careful reading, and then observe his excellent advice.

Prof. Hudson. We are rejoiced to hear that Prof. C. F. Hudson is some better, though he is still feeble. He is now with Bro. H. F. Carpenter, at Danielsonville, Ct.

WE ARE SORRY TO SEE IT.

When men, who hold exalted positions in the religious world stoop to aid that which is opposed to a pure christianity, Satan has great cause for a jubilee, and the children of the Lord for a season of mourning, fasting and prayer.

We clipped the following from the Boston Journal of Nov. 27th:—

"It will be seen by the following correspondence that Mr. Bonner has engaged Henry Ward Beecher to write a story for the New York Ledger. It will be commenced early in the coming year:—

Ledger Office, 90 Beekman Street, New York, Nov. 12, 1866.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher:—Dear Sir,—Does the enclosed announcement of your Ledger story meet your views as to the time of commencing its publication? Please let me know at once, as I wish to make the announcement in the number of the Ledger which is now going to press.

Truly yours, Robert Bonner.

MR. BEECHER'S REPLY.

Brooklyn, Nov. 16, 1866.

Mr. Robert Bonner:—Dear Sir,—The announcement of which you send me a proof-copy, is correct. I hope to put enough manuscript in your hand to enable you to begin the story early in the year 1867.

THE FENIANS.

It is evident that the Fenians are now preparing for another attack upon England and her colonies. Several arrests of Fenians have recently been made in Europe, and weapons of war have also been seized. It is said Mr. Stephens, the noted Head Centre has returned to Ireland. When in this country he declared with much firmness that an attack on England should be made this year. It appears that the British government is somewhat awake to the danger of another Fenian movement, and will endeavor to be ready to give the Fenians a warm reception. A writer from Dublin, Ireland, Nov. 10th, says:—

"Among all classes the conviction grows and spreads that we are on the eve of startling and terrible events. That conviction is well founded. It is simply a fact that the Fenian organization in Dublin—and I dare say that the same holds true of its branches throughout the country—is at this moment in a high state of activity. Its committees, undismayed by the tremendous risk they run, meet regularly, discuss their plans of the "rising," issue orders, disburse money, receive reports, and get through all the other work pertaining to the desperate mission in which they are engaged. It would be folly to suppose for a moment that those men are not in earnest. They are terribly in earnest, and their plans and preparations are all shaped for a fierce and bloody struggle. Their preparations are necessarily different from those on which a military man would place reliance; he would think much of cannon and mortars, of grape and shrapnel, and would calculate a good deal on the service of his cavalry. They can bring neither artillery nor mounted troops into the field. Their tactics are to be sudden rushes on the soldiery and hand-to-hand fighting. And they expect to introduce into the strife certain novelties which they are confident will prove tremendously effective."

Since writing the foregoing, telegrams have been received from London, stating that "a serious outbreak" had already occurred, and that the English "national troops were urgently ordered to Ireland."

REVIVALS.

"The great practical and vital need of all our churches," writes Theodore Cuyler, "is revival." Truly and timely said. Revival is the impartation of new life. It is divinely vitalizing the faint and the dead. It is a drawing nearer to God. It is the regaining of lost faith, lost hope, lost love. It is the spiritual invigoration of all the christian graces. It is the awakening of the church's slumbering powers to the work for the accomplishment of which God keeps her in a world of evil, viz., the salvation of souls.

Revival is a three-fold work, and consists in the advancement of believers to a higher and holier walk and life, the reclamation of the totally backslidden, and the conversion of sinners to Christ. Will any one say these things are not needed among all the churches of the Advent believers? Union, love, and membership die out where there is no revival. Truth is trampled in the streets, and sin is bold and rampant. But when God by his mighty Spirit works, how the whole community is stirred as with a celestial tempest! how solemn is the very air about us! how blessed are the seasons of assembly and worship! how sweet is the union of believers! Petty quarrels and foolish differences, sectarian barriers, heart sins and heart hates, fall into the dust, and true charity and sacred zeal go hand in hand to victory. Men lift their drooping heads and are glad. And behind the curtains of the heavens the angels rejoice and the divine Master smiles. O for more of such seasons as these! Seasons of toil and tears, it is true, and yet remembered by all who love our Lord as the happiest seasons of their lives. For there are no tears that turn to diamonds and gems like the tears of penitence and of soul-anguish for lost men. And there is no witness of our acceptance with God so sweet and clear as the deep-felt, burthening agony with which the Spirit-wrapped heart pours out its prayers for their salvation.

And now that the usually expected revival season is here, and the evenings are long, and the people are generally serious and thoughtful, who will at once engage in this important work? Our scattered churches should awake to their needs, and our ministry should by direct efforts, by the plainest and most pointed appeals, and by strong faith and tears, put forth every lawful endeavor to arouse, alarm, invite, and urge sinners and dead saints to be reconciled to God, and seek an immediate preparation for the judgment and kingdom of Christ. There is no time to be wasted in preaching sermons as clear as light and yet as cold as a corpse.

The hours of labor for others are getting fewer, the times are very solemn, and soon the door of mercy will be shut, and the masses be left to perish. And if we are saved, how sweet the eternal remembrance of even one soul saved with us and by our means! Let us preach, pray, sing, talk, weep, believe, for instant and healthy revival. "O Lord, revive thy work." "Wilt thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in thee?"

D. T. T.

"NOT MANY NOBLE."

Among those in past centuries who looked for the Lord from heaven, and who seemed to delight in the prospect of his pre-milennial advent, was Christopher Columbus, the celebrated discoverer of this continent; Tycho Brahe and Sir Isaac Newton, the devout and world renowned astronomers; Milton, the great poet, and numerous others whose names are not to be despised. And still they were not of the ministry, though they deemed the prophecies worth looking into.

Of this class in America we also mention William Burnet, some time Governor of New York State and also of Connecticut and Massachusetts. And Joseph Dudley, one of the earlier Governors of Mass., was also of this opinion. Latterly, in England Henry Drummond, member of Parliament; George, the Duke of Manchester; Viscount Mandeville; Sir James Stephen; William Cunningham, Esq.; Hans Wood, Esq.; various officers high in rank in the army, and many other notables, deem it no dishonor to wait for Christ's near advent and tell a scoffing world their faith. And later still in America Prof. Haber of Middletown College, Ct., Hon. George Storer of Ohio, and various celebrated christian laymen, set their seal to this truth. The Italian Consul in New York was deeply interested in the prophetical lectures of Elder M. B. Czechowski, our present missionary in Europe, who, previous to his departure from this country, frequently lectured in the Consul's presence and house, by request.

Among our most tearful and attentive hearers a few Sundays ago, at C——, was Hon. Judge E. D. Culver, formerly member of Congress, and lately Foreign Minister at Caraccas, Venezuela, S. A. The sermons were on baptism and loving Christ's appearing,—a most radical, Advent discourse,—but the parting hand of the noble stranger was extended cordially, and with the hearty exclamation,—"Thank you for these two sermons to-day. These, too, are my sentiments." "Amen," was the vocal response from the unworthy preacher.

And why should any man of learning, talent, place, and power, count it a mean and disreputable business to love and serve the Savior who died to redeem him, and to wait joyfully for the last coming of Him who is the only Potentate, the Prince of the kings of the earth, the noblest of the noble, and the King of kings? And yet, alas! how few avail themselves of the unspeakable privilege and honor of so doing. Not many noble, indeed. Still, thank God, there are a few not ashamed of the blessed hope. Glorious coming One! we pray thee to enlighten their minds and add to their numbers, that the true christian, though wearing titles and the robe of power, may see and proclaim the impending consummation. D. T. T.

QUEBEC, L. C.

This ancient and out of the way, as well as Catholic and old-fashioned city, is having its stagnant, religious quiet a little disturbed. In Methodist, Baptist, and also in Episcopal circles, the doctrine of the near advent, and the question of man's mortality, are being discussed. Attention has been drawn to the prophecies by one Captain Montgomery, a British officer, who has written some pre-millennial works in his own country, and talked the view out among the churches of Quebec. A Methodist clergyman named Salmon, who is an appointed missionary among the seamen who throng this port, is announcing the Lord at hand. A French Protestant minister, whose name we could not learn, but who has charge of a large body of christians, lately declared that himself and all his brethren had in conference come to the conclusions on man's nature and destiny already arrived at by the author of "Christ our Life." And a number of the brethren of the churches above named propose establishing separate meetings, and procuring lecturers to advocate our general adventual doctrines. Bro. J. Hall of Keene, N. H., who is spending much of his time there on business, has by lay preaching and scattering tracts assisted to spread the light on these great themes. Indeed, Quebec offers a fine field for our efforts and for the spread of truth by means of tracts and preaching. D. T. T.

ROIZEDON.—2 Pet. 3: 10.—No. 1.

"The heavens shall pass away with a great noise."
"Shall pass away with a rushing sound."—Diaglott.
"The heavens will suddenly pass away."—Syriac.
"The heavens shall perish with a terrible noise."—Tyndale.
"Shall pass away in the manner of a tempest."—Geneva.
"Shall pass with great violence."—Rheims.
"The heavens with a crashing roar shall pass away."—Sept.
"Shall pass away with a rushing noise."—Bible Union.

All the lexicographers define roizedon to denote—a great noise; with a rushing sound; with a crash; to make a whizzing, or whistling noise; with a sound resembling that of a great storm. This reading of the (ouranos) heavens in the day of God corresponds also with the departure or rolling up of the same as a scroll (Rev. 6: 14), and with the "opening heavens," or "heavens opened," so often referred to in the Scriptures, which awful event is to be preceded by their "waxing old as a garment" (Heb. 1: 11), and consequent decay as expressed by the Savior's prediction that "the powers of the (ouranos) heavens shall be shaken" (Matt. 24: 29), which, says Paul, "signifies the removal of those things shaken" (Heb. 12: 27), and which would seem to be the epoch of the commencement of the "unshaken kingdom" (Diaglott) of God and of Christ.

It is well to observe that roizedon is not found elsewhere in the Greek N. T. save in Peter, and that this apostle appears to be the only sacred writer who expressly speaks of the "crashing roar" with which the heavens shall pass away. But an inspired passage needs no second announcement or reiteration to prove it true. And that the ouranos or heavens refers to the earth's atmosphere, and probably that alone, I need not here stop to argue. Peter, though by nature unlearned, and possessing no knowledge of meteorological science, yet being inspired, writes exactly in harmony with true science and all known laws and elements of the air and its composition. Wesley in his Notes declares the statement to be "surprisingly expressed by the very sound of the original words." We remark that no annihilation of the atmospheric heaven is taught in the whole chapter, much less in the text under consideration; but only an opening, rending, or rolling back, with a tremendous detonation, and perhaps a change and subsequent rearrangement of its elements or parts, constituting "a new heaven" described by Isaiah, Peter, and John.

We shall refer to roizedon again in a subsequent article. The subject is magnificent, and especially admonitory when viewed as being the next in the series of celestial signs after the falling stars. Rev. 6: 13, 14. For the rent heavens disclose the throne of judgment and the angry Lamb. Alas! who will then be able to stand? D. T. T.

For the World's Crisis.

DO WE REALIZE IT?

Realize what? Why, that the parted heavens are very soon to reveal the King in his beauty, and that our friends who are near and dear to us must soon be forever lost if they do not speedily make their peace with God. Does our demeanor towards them show that we realize this fact? Are we doing all in our power to induce them to turn from the error of their way? Are we faithfully warning them of the great danger that is just before them? Or do we neglect to do so because they scoff at and ridicule us when we mention this subject in their presence? If so, beware lest their blood be required at our hands.

Again, do we realize that we ourselves are not our own? that we have been bought with a price, even the precious blood of Jesus Christ? and that he who purchased us is to bring us to an account in a few short months? O God! grant that we may realize the importance of our lives, and rightly improve these last remaining moments of time.

For the World's Crisis.

"BE SHORT."

Some two years ago, more or less, a christian friend lent me a copy of the World's Crisis. In that paper was an article that interested me very much, it so well expressed my feelings. I seldom, if ever, attend a social meeting but I think of it. If I recollect aright, it was headed "Be Short." I believe, and ever have believed, that when christians meet for prayer and exhortation, it is duty, as a general thing, for all to take part, and the length of our remarks (unless something very special) should be governed by the number present and the time we have to spend together. We are often exhorted to speak when the spirit moves; but it seems to me that the spirit is at all times prompting to duty. The Spirit and the Word agree.

We read in Heb. 10: 25, "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." With this Scripture before us, it seems to me we need not be at a loss to determine what our duty is. If we allow ourselves to be actuated altogether by feeling, instead of a fixed principle, we are as likely to have a dull, uninteresting time as a good meeting. If we gain strength, and exert a salutary influence on those present, and friends become interested, we are quite sure to loose in the next, and the third or fourth meeting we see a great falling off. People are not interested enough to attend, and there seems to be but little progress and but little permanent good done.

It is not unfrequently the case, where meetings are small, a few that have self-esteem and language pretty well developed, get in the habit of doing the principal part of the talking, and are apt to make long remarks, which are sure to kill the life of any meeting. It seems to me it is far better to speak half a dozen times in one meeting, than to make one long exhortation. Frequently we see brethren occupy from five to ten minutes. Supposing a meeting is appointed to commence quarter before eight o'clock, to close at nine, and forty persons meet; thirty of this number enjoy religion; there is one hour and a quarter to be occupied in singing, praying and speaking. Supposing fifteen minutes of this time is consumed in singing and allowed to run to waste. There is sixty moments left, or two minutes for each to occupy. If a few strong ones occupy the time, those that have not much self-confidence are naturally of a retiring disposition (I sympathize with this class), and get in the habit of taking no part, consequently make but little progress, or none at all. But if this class of persons can be induced to say a word, it will be a great help to the meeting, and this diffidence may be overcome in a measure, but not entirely.

It seems to me we should have a fixed principle accompanied with the Spirit, and all move forward in quick succession; speak, pray, and sing, short and to the point; if we do, our meetings will become interesting, souls will be convicted and converted, backsliders reclaimed, we have accessions to our numbers, all be profited, the cause advanced, and God be honored. Yours truly,

Amos French.

BOOK NOTICE.

"Life and Death Eternal"; A Refutation of the Theory of Annihilation. By Samuel C. Bartlett, D. D., Professor in Chicago Theological Seminary. Published by the American Tract Society, Boston. For sale in Dover, N. H., by Lothrop & Co.

When Bro. Hudson's "Debt and Grace" first made its appearance, reviewers and critics of the opposite view declared that it had now become necessary to go over the whole ground of the doctrine of the future state of the wicked again. In a short time a volume was issued by the Methodist Book concern, written by R. W. Landis, an Episcopal clergyman. It was considered an able work; perhaps, advocating the theory of eternal conscious suffering as well as could be expected; but the writer failed to silence Bro. Hudson's battery and his "Immortality through Christ alone safe and salutary," and "Reviewers Reviewed," with works of other authors, such as Burnham, Blain, Grant, Hastings, and Storrs. And Dobney and other English writers have kept the advocates of the popular theory ill at ease, as though a formidable opponent not easily put to flight stood before them with a drawn sword to protect their favorite doctrine. Nothing however of any considerable account has offered until Mr. Bartlett's, which has recently been issued by the American Tract Society of Boston, and as it is of interest to our brethren to know what books are published on good authority, and with evident ability in the authorship, we thought best to notice this work. Mr. Bartlett tells us that he had written the book some two years before it was published, at the earnest solicitation of many persons who had so fall and satisfactory reply to the specious arguments of annihilationists, and this he intends as that much needed answer.

He tells us that the heresy has been "laboring to disseminate itself," that it is unlike Universalism, as that has never in this country made any considerable progress among devout persons; but he has been told that annihilationism has ensnared many devout persons; that "the chief plausibility of the argument lies upon the surface, and its greatest force is felt by those who have never analysed language enough to reflect upon the idioms that constantly flow from their lips.

He therefore comes to the rescue of both classes referred to,—those who cannot answer the "specious arguments," and "those who do not understand the idioms of their own language"; and his book is as readable as any of its class. He gives special attention personally to Brs. Hastings, Burnham, Blain, and Dobney, and makes a strong Samsonian effort to overturn them. Being a Theological Professor, he treats us to the cream of the thing, and we have the following as the titles of the chapters: "The Doctrine of Annihilation stated"; "The fundamental vice of the Scripture argument for Annihilation"; "The Scriptural arguments examined—'Death' and 'Life,' 'Destruction,' and other terms"; "Resurrection and Second Death"; "The rational argument examined—Belief among the Jews, heathen, etc." These subjects are so treated that one can notice plainly the fallacy of his views and misstatements; the latter owing, doubtless, to a misapprehension of the position of his opponents. We doubt whether a stronger argument can be written for his view than he has produced, yet the truth is not effected in the least, except that it shines more brightly than ever.

We thank him for his assistance in propagating truth. His chapter on the resurrection is excellent, and his citations of the idioms of the Hebrew language, literally translated, are valuable. We admit the truth of these idioms and figurative expressions. They only prove that the literal sense is the basis of all expressions in any language; hence there must be a literal before a spiritual, as some substance must be between the light and the wall to make a shadow, and some one must stand before a mirror to make a reflection in it.

Our brethren might be interested to procure this book, and after reading it thoroughly, we think they will be better satisfied with the truth than ever, and they will also become familiar with the last great effort of the advocates of the theory of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked.

Haskell, $1.00; Emma, of Avalanch, Wis., $2.00; New Britain church, $1.50; a sister in Worcester, looking for that blessed hope, $10.00; "Stewards" in Lawrence, $50.00; and H. and B., Clinton, Mass., $1.50.

May the blessing of the Lord rest upon these servants and friends of Jesus, who manifest so great an interest in our mission among the lowly of this city.

A multitude of cares are upon me at the present time, and I need the prayers of all who have an interest at the throne of grace. I hope to be able to write something about the Home this evening. Have been distributing money, clothing, etc., to-day.

Have received a barrel of clothing from Vergennes, Vt., one from Hartford, and three from Bristol, Conn. They were excellent. More hereafter. In haste, from your brother in Christ, F. H. Burbank.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

The ten days meeting at Bath, Me., was a blessing to that little persecuted church, mostly made up of women. They were active and good. The meeting gradually rose in numbers and interest, until the house was well filled, and many who had stood aloof became interested. Some arose for prayers who had fought God forty years; others less time, and some more. There are some of the meanest, low-lived opposition I ever knew; such as breaking crockery while their companion had gone to meeting, at different times, until nearly all was broken. How mean the devil's agents can act; yet this little church has held on until God has doubled their strength and courage, since the meeting began. The last Sabbath I had the privilege of baptizing nine in the morning, and of pouring out the truth to new hearers all day, which had good effect. Some three or four were willing to identify themselves with the church.

Next to Yarmouth, to see if Bro. York or Wellcome would take a kind of oversight of them, as they were not posted about the floating hobby-riders, whose business is to go from place to place and pick or kick doors open to cook a mess of pottage of wild gourds, or dragon soup, on neither of which can a young child grow, except to grow poor. How few there are that care for the weak of the flock. This little church wish to select and send for those they want to come to instruct them. They have learned, as many other churches have, that not all whose appointments are in the Crisis are sheep and lamb feeders, or that are gathering with Christ; and some of them have a separate interest, and a paper of their own. Such things speak for themselves, and are subjects for many questions, like these: if these are dissatisfied with the Crisis, and its doctrines and supporters, why use it for their appointments for their congregations? for the sake of soliciting funds to carry on an opposition, or another interest? Such a thing was never known before; i. e., to admit such as have got dissatisfied, and turned away from us, to have the free use of our campmeeting privileges and tables and chapels, and our paper, all free. But so it is, and the supporters of our present institutions need much grace to be patient much longer.

There are but few in Yarmouth, but they are good. This, like many other places, has had the offer of light and rejected it; and a cold, death sweat is now visible; pulse down to forty per minute, tongue coated, no appetite, except for picnics, or some other kinds of sociables.

There is one church that has concluded to try another remedy. They have invited Sister M. D. Wellcome to deliver them a course of lectures on the prophecies,—a thing she never did, but has consented, if they take the whole five pills. It will produce spasms in the body,

A LETTER FROM PROF. HUDSON TO A LITTLE GIRL.

The following letter was received by a little girl employed in the Scriptural Tract Repository, Boston, Mass. It was not intended for publication; but, as it contains information which may be welcome to the friends of Prof. Hudson, young and old, who have felt solicitous for his welfare and health, we give it to the readers of the Crisis. H.

Danielsonville, Conn., Nov. 26, 1866.

Miss J—— B——:—

My Dear Young Friend:—Your letter of last Friday was handed to me yesterday morning by Mr. H., who came here on Saturday to preach for Mr. C. It is so kind in you to write to me, that I must reply to you before I begin any other letter, though I have two or three business letters, and some other letters, to write to-day.

I think you will be a little glad to hear me talk about business letters,—certainly if you think that I am really able to write them; I believe that I am. One reason is, this is so beautiful a morning that one can hardly afford to be sick, or to feel unwell. Another reason is, I have been gaining very steadily, so that yesterday, though it was quite cold, I rode to the village, a mile and a half, and attended meeting forenoon and afternoon, was only a little tired when I got home, rested nicely last night, and feel better than ever this morning. I think I can write business letters this morning without harm, though I intend to work very moderately. And for economy, since I have begun to tell you about my health, I will tell you all, and you may tell the rest, and that will save the trouble of writing to Mr. H. about it.

You may say, then, that ever since my last hemorrhage, two weeks ago, I have not thought best to lie on either side, but only on my back, because lying on my side seemed to make me breathe a little faster and not quite so easily, and that might set my lungs a bleeding again. But I now breathe longer and stronger than I have for six weeks; have spit hardly a speck of blood for ten days, and when I try, can lie on my side without breathing harder for it; so I may venture soon to get a little sleep in that position, and hope to wake up refreshed by it.

Then, again, I have hardly spoken a loud word since I left Cambridge, until yesterday. I have been sorry for this, because some of my friends have thought I could not speak aloud if I tried, and so have felt more sad than was needful. But I now think it will be safe for my lungs to talk loud a little, and perhaps it will help them some, by just giving them such exercise as they need, if they can bear it. Twelve days ago, when I rode to the depot in Worcester, in an easy carriage, I could not bear to have the horses go faster than a walk; and even then I had them stop once and stand still while I could take breath. But now I can let Mr. C——'s horse trot pretty fast when the road is smooth, and it does not trouble me at all. So I shall venture to get out of my whisperings a little, that my kind friends here, Mrs. S—— and her daughter Mrs. B——, my nurse, can get acquainted with me, as they have been afraid they should not.

So much for my health. If you do not understand all the hard words,—I hope you never will understand "hemorrhage" as I do,—H. or A. will explain them to you, or V. will tell you out of the dictionary, if need be. And as for the hand-writing, I am afraid I can read yours a great deal easier than you can read mine.

I must not waste the few lines I have left, so I will say, I do not know how I shall ever pay my friends for all their kindness to me, except by being good. And as you may have the same kind of debts that you cannot pay—and we all owe such to our parents, if to no others—I hope you will be good too. Keep on being kind, as I have always known you, to the friends where you are. Most of all, love Jesus, who is kinder and better than the best of us; and that will help you to be kind to all, even when persons sometimes grieve you, and even to your enemies, if you should have any. I shall be most glad to see you, if I come to Boston before next spring, and I may do so if I do not go to Philadelphia.

Yours very truly, C. F. Hudson.

For the World's Crisis.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

I would hereby acknowledge (what I intended to have done before), viz., the receipt of a subscription list, with sums of money at various times, amounting to over one hundred dollars, by the hand of Bro. I. C. Wellcome, given by the subscribers to help me out of my pecuniary embarrassment. Those dear brethren and sisters who have so freely assisted me, have my hearty thanks, and my prayer that it may be said unto them in that day, when Jesus shall sit upon the throne of his glory, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." C. Goud.

GO WORK TO-DAY.

Realize what God has given you to do to-day, and do not look beyond it. Strength is promised according to your day, but not according to your morrow. Every-day work requires every-day grace, and every-day grace requires every-day asking. Whatever your work is, take it first to God. Before you begin, kneel and implore his blessing. Ask him for a fresh, diligent spirit. Ask him for a spirit of patience and meekness in contending with all the little wearisome difficulties and annoyances connected with it. Ask him to enable you not only to bear the daily cross, but to "take it up," denying yourself and following the footsteps of the Lord Jesus. Then put your whole might to it—the might that you have borrowed from a mightier than yourself—for that is the secret of real work. Do it as if your Master were standing before you. Do not offer to God a spirit dreaming of the great things you could do, or may do at some other time, but offer to him your wakeful, rejoicing present energies. Only think of present duties, the moment's work. Our life is given to us in moments, and we shall have joys for each.

Is there nothing, however small, that you can do with your pen and your knowledge? Is there no little tract to be written; no simple volume which might reach some hearts, and find entrance into some homes? Try. See for yourselves what you can do. "She hath done what she could," is world-wide encouragement. Work for God and not for yourself. Your work will soon find its place in the vineyard of the Lord.—Friend of Virtue.

WORCESTER.

The Lord is doing a glorious work in Worcester. A few weeks since, Sr. Anna E. Smith spent a week with the church, and her labors were specially blest, and quite a number decided to serve the Lord in consequence of Sr. Smith's faithful labors. We spent Lord's day, Nov. 25th, with the church in W., and enjoyed a feast of heavenly things. Their pleasant and commodious chapel was much crowded with an audience that seemed anxious to hear the word of life. Eighteen came eighteen miles to attend the meeting and returned the same day. Many had to stand up for want of seats. Eighteen were baptized, and twelve came forward for prayers in the evening. We heard many heart-cheering testimonies in our love-feast, and in the evening, before and after preaching. We found it difficult to bring our meeting to a close, even after it had continued over three hours. The Spirit of the Lord is striving with many more, who we trust will give Jesus their hearts' affections, and be ready for his coming.

One who came forward for prayers, was the wife of one who had recently given his heart to the Lord. She felt unwilling to go further in the way to destruction. After she came forward for prayers, the Lord blest her. She then arose and said, "I have found Jesus," and hastened to her husband in another part of the house, and embraced him most fondly. It was a joyful scene. The prospect for Worcester is very encouraging.

END OF THE POPE'S TEMPORAL POWER.

It is now generally admitted that the temporal power of the Pope must soon come to an end. The Catholics themselves see no chance to avoid it. So long as the Pope has the control of matters at Rome, it cannot be truly said that his temporal power is at an end. When he is driven from there, or loses all power to dictate in the political affairs in the capital of the Roman kingdom, then it may be said his dominion is taken away. In all probability the temporal power of the Pope will end next year, 1867. We shall wait with great interest to see what will transpire next year. If Napoleon takes his troops away from Rome on the 15th of this December, the Italians will doubtless soon make preparations to take the city for the capital of Italy, instead of Florence. This is a very important object to be gained by the Italian revolutionists; but we think they will not be able to accomplish their object. A few months will give us light on this important subject.

THE CONDITION OF THE POPE.

We purpose to keep our readers posted in all matters of interest relating to the condition of the papal power. A critical hour is at hand for the "woman" on the "seven hills." That she is struck with death all must admit. We expect she will die a hard death. "The cup which she hath filled" is to be filled "to her double." Her days of sinful glory are among the things that were, and at last the cup of remorse and "sorrow" is at her lips, and must be taken.

An Italian correspondent, writing from Venice Oct. 3d, 1866, says:—

"The Roman question is claiming the attention of the world, and the approaching month of December, undoubtedly, will bring about a change in the position of the Pope towards all Christendom, whether Romanist, Greek or Protestant."

The Pope is said to be in a state of "despair." He is coming to his end, and there are none to help him.

NAPOLEON AND MEXICO.

Notwithstanding the many promises of Napoleon to withdraw his troops from Mexico, it seems they are still there, and that now he does not intend to take them away till next spring. This is causing some considerable feeling on the part of the United States government. It is now evident that the promises of Napoleon are not reliable; that he makes and breaks promises at his pleasure, and thus far other nations have allowed him to do it without daring to cross his track. It remains to be seen whether he will continue to "do according to his will."

STILL BOASTING.

Notwithstanding everything goes to show that the temporal power of the Pope must soon close, some of the zealous Catholics think the enemies of Rome "will be disappointed;" and that the Lord will in some way provide deliverance. They do not see that the Lord is the one who is bringing on her troubles, and is about to cast her down as a "millstone" thrown into the sea.

In The Catholic for Nov. 3d, 1866, we find an article from the London Universal News, in which the writer says, "Rome has been called the eternal city." Does she deserve the glorious title? Her past history is as illustrious as it is wonderful." He calls it "the capital of christendom, and says, "Her magnificent churches are peerless above all others."

He goes on to say:—

"Who can view the long and interminable line of the Roman Pontiffs without an involuntary feeling of awe and veneration? Behold its history. Beginning with St. Peter—appointed by our Savior himself—and continuing in one unbroken succession throughout every age of the Church, we find it existing to-day in undiminished lustre and vigor in the person of the Holy Father, Pius IX. What a record! The storms of eighteen centuries have beaten over it in vain. In vain have persecution and heresy alike endeavored to destroy it. The succession still goes on, and will cease only with time itself! Could an institution with a record like this be of mere human origin—the fruit only of man's skill and judgment? Reason and truth alike forbid such an unwarrantable and base assumption. Its very history—so venerable and wonderful—attest to its divine authority. Otherwise it would long since have succumbed to the destroying influences brought to bear against it—to weaken and destroy. Earth, hell and man, as it were, sought by every means within their power to break and obliterate the succession of the Roman Pontiffs. No mere human institution could long have withstood such tremendous opposition. God alone, through his Almighty power, could preserve the great headship of the church on earth from utter demolition and ruin at the hand of such rapacious foes and determined destroyers. The mere fact, then, we repeat, that the Pontificate still exists in all its original vigor and power is a sufficient and inexorable evidence of its original divine institution and continued divine protection." He then says:—"Rome is threatened to-day. Serious dangers environ her.' Her enemies are jubilant in anticipation of her speedy downfall. They will be disappointed. We would not pretend to make light of the danger that really threatens the Eternal City. We realize but too fully its extent. That the present situation of the Holy See is a most critical one, we would not for a moment attempt to conceal. It is far better that the existing state of facts, in all their length, breadth and depth, should be fully realized by all. Rome is menaced with the most serious danger. But we say, again, the enemies of Rome will fail."

As the time has come for the harlot woman to "drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation," it is evident the Lord will not fail in bringing her to judgment for her bloody work against the followers of Jesus. Soon her power in Rome must come to an everlasting end.

WE ARE GLAD TO SEE IT.

There is good evidence that people are beginning to be satisfied that the colored people really belong to the human race as well as the whites, and are competent to fill responsible stations. At a meeting in Chelsea, Mass., held Nov. 26th, to nominate a Mayor, Robert W. Morris, a colored man, received 242 votes, and the opposition candidate 336. Mr. Morris is a successful lawyer, doing business in Boston, and a very interesting man, whose society is particularly agreeable, in consequence of his gentlemanly appearance and behavior.

A Strange Title.—It is said a paper is about to be started in Florence, Italy, with the following strange title:—The Valley of Jehoshaphat; the Organ of the day of Judgment. We do not know the object of the paper, but hope to receive further information.

"Be Short."—We commend to our readers the article in another column, by Bro. Amos French, headed "Be short." Please give it a careful reading, and then observe his excellent advice.

Prof. Hudson. We are rejoiced to hear that Prof. C. F. Hudson is some better, though he is still feeble. He is now with Bro. H. F. Carpenter, at Danielsonville, Ct.

WE ARE SORRY TO SEE IT.

When men, who hold exalted positions in the religious world stoop to aid that which is opposed to a pure christianity, Satan has great cause for a jubilee, and the children of the Lord for a season of mourning, fasting and prayer.

We clipped the following from the Boston Journal of Nov. 27th:—

"It will be seen by the following correspondence that Mr. Bonner has engaged Henry Ward Beecher to write a story for the New York Ledger. It will be commenced early in the coming year:—

Ledger Office, 90 Beekman Street, New York, Nov. 12, 1866.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher:—Dear Sir,—Does the enclosed announcement of your Ledger story meet your views as to the time of commencing its publication? Please let me know at once, as I wish to make the announcement in the number of the Ledger which is now going to press.

Truly yours, Robert Bonner.

MR. BEECHER'S REPLY.

Brooklyn, Nov. 16, 1866.

Mr. Robert Bonner:—Dear Sir,—The announcement of which you send me a proof-copy, is correct. I hope to put enough manuscript in your hand to enable you to begin the story early in the year 1867.

Henry Ward Beecher.

THE FENIANS.

It is evident that the Fenians are now preparing for another attack upon England and her colonies. Several arrests of Fenians have recently been made in Europe, and weapons of war have also been seized. It is said Mr. Stephens, the noted Head Centre has returned to Ireland. When in this country he declared with much firmness that an attack on England should be made this year. It appears that the British government is somewhat awake to the danger of another Fenian movement, and will endeavor to be ready to give the Fenians a warm reception. A writer from Dublin, Ireland, Nov. 10th, says:—

"Among all classes the conviction grows and spreads that we are on the eve of startling and terrible events. That conviction is well founded. It is simply a fact that the Fenian organization in Dublin—and I dare say that the same holds true of its branches throughout the country—is at this moment in a high state of activity. Its committees, undismayed by the tremendous risk they run, meet regularly, discuss their plans of the "rising," issue orders, disburse money, receive reports, and get through all the other work pertaining to the desperate mission in which they are engaged. It would be folly to suppose for a moment that those men are not in earnest. They are terribly in earnest, and their plans and preparations are all shaped for a fierce and bloody struggle. Their preparations are necessarily different from those on which a military man would place reliance; he would think much of cannon and mortars, of grape and shrapnel, and would calculate a good deal on the service of his cavalry. They can bring neither artillery nor mounted troops into the field. Their tactics are to be sudden rushes on the soldiery and hand-to-hand fighting. And they expect to introduce into the strife certain novelties which they are confident will prove tremendously effective."

Since writing the foregoing, telegrams have been received from London, stating that "a serious outbreak" had already occurred, and that the English "national troops were urgently ordered to Ireland."

REVIVALS.

"The great practical and vital need of all our churches," writes Theodore Cuyler, "is revival." Truly and timely said. Revival is the impartation of new life. It is divinely vitalizing the faint and the dead. It is a drawing nearer to God. It is the regaining of lost faith, lost hope, lost love. It is the spiritual invigoration of all the christian graces. It is the awakening of the church's slumbering powers to the work for the accomplishment of which God keeps her in a world of evil, viz., the salvation of souls.

Revival is a three-fold work, and consists in the advancement of believers to a higher and holier walk and life, the reclamation of the totally backslidden, and the conversion of sinners to Christ. Will any one say these things are not needed among all the churches of the Advent believers? Union, love, and membership die out where there is no revival. Truth is trampled in the streets, and sin is bold and rampant. But when God by his mighty Spirit works, how the whole community is stirred as with a celestial tempest! how solemn is the very air about us! how blessed are the seasons of assembly and worship! how sweet is the union of believers! Petty quarrels and foolish differences, sectarian barriers, heart sins and heart hates, fall into the dust, and true charity and sacred zeal go hand in hand to victory. Men lift their drooping heads and are glad. And behind the curtains of the heavens the angels rejoice and the divine Master smiles. O for more of such seasons as these! Seasons of toil and tears, it is true, and yet remembered by all who love our Lord as the happiest seasons of their lives. For there are no tears that turn to diamonds and gems like the tears of penitence and of soul-anguish for lost men. And there is no witness of our acceptance with God so sweet and clear as the deep-felt, burthening agony with which the Spirit-wrapped heart poure out its prayers for their salvation.

And now that the usually expected revival season is here, and the evenings are long, and the people are generally serious and thoughtful, who will at once engage in this important work? Our scattered churches should awake to their needs, and our ministry should by direct efforts, by the plainest and most pointed appeals, and by strong faith and tears, put forth every lawful endeavor to arouse, alarm, invite, and urge sinners and dead saints to be reconciled to God, and seek an immediate preparation for the judgment and kingdom of Christ. There is no time to be wasted in preaching sermons as clear as light and yet as cold as a corpse.

The hours of labor for others are getting fewer, the times are very solemn, and soon the door of mercy will be shut, and the masses be left to perish. And if we are saved, how sweet the eternal remembrance of even one soul saved with us and by our means! Let us preach, pray, sing, talk, weep, believe, for instant and healthy revival. "O Lord, revive thy work." "Wilt thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in thee?"

D. T. T.

"NOT MANY NOBLE."

Among those in past centuries who looked for the Lord from heaven, and who seemed to delight in the prospect of his pre-milennial advent, was Christopher Columbus, the celebrated discoverer of this continent; Tycho Brahe and Sir Isaac Newton, the devout and world renowned astronomers; Milton, the great poet, and numerous others whose names are not to be despised. And still they were not of the ministry, though they deemed the prophecies worth looking into.

Of this class in America we also mention William Burnet, some time Governor of New York State and also of Connecticut and Massachusetts. And Joseph Dudley, one of the earlier Governors of Mass., was also of this opinion. Latterly, in England Henry Drummond, member of Parliament; George, the Duke of Manchester; Viscount Mandeville; Sir James Stephen; William Cunningham, Esq.; Hans Wood, Esq.; various officers high in rank in the army, and many other notables, deem it no dishonor to wait for Christ's near advent and tell a scoffing world their faith. And later still in America Prof. Huber of Middletown College, Ct., Hon. George Storer of Ohio, and various celebrated christian laymen, set their seal to this truth. The Italian Consul in New York was deeply interested in the prophetical lectures of Elder M. B. Czechowski, our present missionary in Europe, who, previous to his departure from this country, frequently lectured in the Consul's presence and house, by request.

Among our most tearful and attentive hearers a few Sundays ago, at C——, was Hon. Judge E. D. Culver, formerly member of Congress, and lately Foreign Minister at Caraccas, Venezuela, S. A. The sermons were on baptism and loving Christ's appearing,—a most radical, Advent discourse,—but the parting hand of the noble stranger was extended cordially, and with the hearty exclamation,—"Thank you for these two sermons to-day. These, too, are my sentiments." "Amen," was the vocal response from the unworthy preacher.

And why should any man of learning, talent, place, and power, count it a mean and disreputable business to love and serve the Savior who died to redeem him, and to wait joyfully for the last coming of Him who is the only Potentate, the Prince of the kings of the earth, the noblest of the noble, and the King of kings? And yet, alas! how few avail themselves of the unspeakable privilege and honor of so doing. Not many noble, indeed. Still, thank God, there are a few not ashamed of the blessed hope. Glorious coming One! we pray thee to enlighten their minds and add to their numbers, that the true christian, though wearing titles and the robe of power, may see and proclaim the impending consummation. D. T. T.

QUEBEC, L. C.

This ancient and out of the way, as well as Catholic and old-fashioned city, is having its stagnant, religious quiet a little disturbed. In Methodist, Baptist, and also in Episcopal circles, the doctrine of the near advent, and the question of man's mortality, are being discussed. Attention has been drawn to the prophecies by one Captain Montgomery, a British officer, who has written some pre-millennial works in his own country, and talked the view out among the churches of Quebec. A Methodist clergyman named Salmon, who is an appointed missionary among the seamen who throng this port, is announcing the Lord at hand. A French Protestant minister, whose name we could not learn, but who has charge of a large body of christians, lately declared that himself and all his brethren had in conference come to the conclusions on man's nature and destiny already arrived at by the author of "Christ our Life." And a number of the brethren of the churches above named propose establishing separate meetings, and procuring lecturers to advocate our general adventual doctrines. Bro. J Hall of Keene, N H, who is spending much of his time there on business, has by lay preaching and scattering tracts assisted to spread the light on these great themes. Indeed, Quebec offers a fine field for our efforts and for the spread of truth by means of tracts and preaching. D. T. T.

ROIZEDON.—2 Pet. 3: 10.—No. 1.

"The heavens shall pass away with a great noise."
"Shall pass away with a rushing sound."—Diaglott.
"The heavens will suddenly pass away."—Syriac.
"The heavens shall perish with a terrible noise."—Tyndale.
"Shall pass away in the manner of a tempest."—Geneva.
"Shall pass with great violence."—Rheims.
"The heavens with a crashing roar shall pass away."—Sept.
"Shall pass away with a rushing noise."—Bible Union.

All the lexicographers define roizedon to denote—a great noise; with a rushing sound; with a crash; to make a whizzing, or whistling noise; with a sound resembling that of a great storm. This rending of the (ouranos) heavens in the day of God corresponds also with the departure or rolling up of the same as a scroll (Rev. 6: 14), and with the "opening heavens," or "heavens opened," so often referred to in the Scriptures, which awful event is to be preceded by their "waxing old as a garment" (Heb. 1: 11), and consequent decay as expressed by the Savior's prediction that "the powers of the (ouranos) heavens shall be shaken" (Matt. 24: 29), which, says Paul, "signifies the removal of those things shaken" (Heb. 12: 27), and which would seem to be the epoch of the commencement of the "unshaken kingdom" (Diaglott) of God and of Christ.

It is well to observe that roizedon is not found elsewhere in the Greek N. T. save in Peter, and that this apostle appears to be the only sacred writer who expressly speaks of the "crashing roar" with which the heavens shall pass away. But an inspired passage needs no second announcement or reiteration to prove it true. And that the ouranos or heavens refers to the earth's atmosphere, and probably that alone, I need not here stop to argue. Peter, though by nature unlearned, and possessing no knowledge of meteorological science, yet being inspired, writes exactly in harmony with true science and all known laws and elements of the air and its composition. Wesley in his Notes declares the statement to be "surprisingly expressed by the very sound of the original words." We remark that no annihilation of the atmospheric heaven is taught in the whole chapter, much less in the text under consideration; but only an opening, rending, or rolling back, with a tremendous detonation, and perhaps a change and subsequent rearrangement of its elements or parts, constituting "a new heaven" described by Isaiah, Peter, and John.

We shall refer to roizedon again in a subsequent article. The subject is magnificent, and especially admonitory when viewed as being the next in the series of celestial signs after the falling stars. Rev. 6: 13, 14. For the rent heavens disclose the throne of judgment and the angry Lamb. Alas! who will then be able to stand? D. T. T.

For the World's Crisis.

DO WE REALIZE IT?

Realize what? Why, that the parted heavens are very soon to reveal the King in his beauty, and that our friends who are near and dear to us must soon be forever lost if they do not speedily make their peace with God. Does our demeanor towards them show that we realize this fact? Are we doing all in our power to induce them to turn from the error of their way? Are we faithfully warning them of the great danger that is just before them? Or do we neglect to do so because they scoff at and ridicule us when we mention this subject in their presence? If so, beware lest their blood be required at our hands.

Again, do we realize that we ourselves are not our own? that we have been bought with a price, even the precious blood of Jesus Christ? and that he who purchased us is to bring us to an account in a few short months? O God! grant that we may realize the importance of our lives, and rightly improve these last remaining moments of time.

For the World's Crisis.

"BE SHORT."

Some two years ago, more or less, a christian friend lent me a copy of the World's Crisis. In that paper was an article that interested me very much, it so well expressed my feelings. I seldom, if ever, attend a social meeting but I think of it. If I recollect aright, it was headed "Be Short." I believe, and ever have believed, that when christians meet for prayer and exhortation, it is duty, as a general thing, for all to take part, and the length of our remarks (unless something very special) should be governed by the number present and the time we have to spend together. We are often exhorted to speak when the spirit moves; but it seems to me that the spirit is at all times prompting to duty. The Spirit and the Word agree.

We read in Heb. 10: 25, "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." With this Scripture before us, it seems to me we need not be at a loss to determine what our duty is. If we allow ourselves to be actuated altogether by feeling, instead of a fixed principle, we are as likely to have a dull, uninteresting time as a good meeting. If we gain strength, and exert a salutary influence on those present, and friends become interested, we are quite sure to loose in the next, and the third or fourth meeting we see a great falling off. People are not interested enough to attend, and there seems to be but little progress and but little permanent good done.

It is not unfrequently the case, where meetings are small, a few that have self-esteem and language pretty well developed, get in the habit of doing the principal part of the talking, and are apt to make long remarks, which are sure to kill the life of any meeting. It seems to me it is far better to speak half a dozen times in one meeting, than to make one long exhortation. Frequently we see brethren occupy from five to ten minutes. Supposing a meeting is appointed to commence quarter before eight o'clock, to close at nine, and forty persons meet; thirty of this number enjoy religion; there is one hour and a quarter to be occupied in singing, praying and speaking. Supposing fifteen minutes of this time is consumed in singing and allowed to run to waste. There is sixty moments left, or two minutes for each to occupy. If a few strong ones occupy the time, those that have not much self-confidence are naturally of a retiring disposition (I sympathize with this class), and get in the habit of taking no part, consequently make but little progress, or none at all. But if this class of persons can be induced to say a word, it will be a great help to the meeting, and this diffidence may be overcome in a measure, but not entirely.

It seems to me we should have a fixed principle accompanied with the Spirit, and all move forward in quick succession; speak, pray, and sing, short and to the point; if we do, our meetings will become interesting, souls will be convicted and converted, backsliders reclaimed, we have accessions to our numbers, all be profited, the cause advanced, and God be honored. Yours truly,

Amos French.

BOOK NOTICE.

"Life and Death Eternal"; A Refutation of the Theory of Annihilation. By Samuel C. Bartlett, D. D., Professor in Chicago Theological Seminary. Published by the American Tract Society, Boston. For sale in Dover, N. H., by Lothrop & Co.

When Bro. Hudson's "Debt and Grace" first made its appearance, reviewers and critics of the opposite view declared that it had now become necessary to go over the whole ground of the doctrine of the future state of the wicked again. In a short time a volume was issued by the Methodist Book concern, written by R. W. Landis, an Episcopal clergyman. It was considered an able work; perhaps, advocating the theory of eternal conscious suffering as well as could be expected; but the writer failed to silence Bro. Hudson's battery and his "Immortality through Christ alone safe and salutary," and "Reviewers Reviewed," with works of other authors, such as Burnham, Blain, Grant, Hastings, and Storrs. And Dobney and other English writers have kept the advocates of the popular theory ill at ease, as though a formidable opponent not easily put to flight stood before them with a drawn sword to protect their favorite doctrine. Nothing however of any considerable account has offered until Mr. Bartlett's, which has recently been issued by the American Tract Society of Boston, and as it is of interest to our brethren to know what books are published on good authority, and with evident ability in the authorship, we thought best to notice this work. Mr. Bartlett tells us that he had written the book some two years before it was published, at the earnest solicitations of many persons who had no full and satisfactory reply to the specious arguments of annihilationists, and this he intends as that much needed answer.

He tells us that the heresy has been "laboring to disseminate itself," that it is unlike Universalism, as that has never in this country made any considerable progress among devout persons; but he has been told that annihilationism has ensnared many devout persons; that "the chief plausibility of the argument lies upon the surface, and its greatest force is felt by those who have never analyzed language enough to reflect upon the idioms that constantly flow from their lips.

He therefore comes to the rescue of both classes referred to,—those who cannot answer the "specious arguments," and "those who do not understand the idioms of their own language"; and his book is as readable as any of its class. He gives special attention personally to Brn. Hastings, Burnham, Blain, and Dobney, and makes a strong Samsonian effort to overturn them. Being a Theological Professor, he treats us to the cream of the thing, and we have the following as the titles of the chapters: "The Doctrine of Annihilation stated"; "The fundamental vice of the Scripture argument for Annihilation"; "The Scriptural arguments examined—'Death' and 'Life,' 'Destruction,' and other terms"; "Resurrection and Second Death"; "The rational argument examined—Belief among the Jews, heathen, etc." These subjects are so treated that one can notice plainly the fallacy of his views and misstatements; the latter owing, doubtless, to a misapprehension of the position of his opponents. We doubt whether a stronger argument can be written for his view than he has produced, yet the truth is not effected in the least, except that it shines more brightly than ever.

We thank him for his assistance in propagating truth. His chapter on the resurrection is excellent, and his citations of the idioms of the Hebrew language, literally translated, are valuable. We admit the truth of these idioms and figurative expressions. They only prove that the literal sense is the basis of all expressions in any language; hence there must be a literal before a spiritual, as some substance must be between the light and the wall to make a shadow, and some one must stand before a mirror to make a reflection in it.

Our brethren might be interested to procure this book, and after reading it thoroughly, we think they will be better satisfied with the truth than ever, and they will also become familiar with the last great effort of the advocates of the theory of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked.

DORCAS MISSION.

In addition to sums already acknowledged by letter, we have received from Emily L. Marsn $10.00, T. D. Bailey, 75 cts; E. T. Haskell, $1.00; Emma, of Avalanch, Wis., $2.00; New Britain church, $1.50; a sister in Worcester, looking for that blessed hope, $10.00; "Stewards" in Lawrence, $50.00, and H. and B., Clinton, Mass., $1.50.

May the blessing of the Lord rest upon these servants and friends of Jesus, who manifest so great an interest in our mission among the lowly of this city.

A multitude of cares are upon me at the present time, and I need the prayers of all who have an interest at the throne of grace. I hope to be able to write something about the Home this evening. Have been distributing money, clothing, etc., to-day.

Have received a barrel of clothing from Vergennes, Vt., one from Hartford, and three from Bristol, Conn. They were excellent. More hereafter. In haste, from your brother in Christ, F. H. Burbank.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

The ten days meeting at Bath, Me., was a blessing to that little persecuted church, mostly made up of women. They were active and good. The meeting gradually rose in numbers and interest, until the house was well filled, and many who had stood aloof became interested. Some arose for prayers who had fought God forty years; others less time, and some more. There are some of the meanest, low-lived opposition I ever knew; such as breaking crockery while their companion had gone to meeting, at different times, until nearly all was broken. How mean the devil's agents can act; yet this little church has held on until God has doubled their strength and courage, since the meeting began. The last Sabbath I had the privilege of baptizing nine in the morning, and of pouring out the truth to new hearers all day, which had good effect. Some three or four were willing to identify themselves with the church.

Next to Yarmouth, to see if Bro. York or Wellcome would take a kind of oversight of them, as they were not posted about the floating hobby-riders, whose business is to go from place to place and pick or kick doors open to cook a mess of pottage of wild gourds, or dragon soup, on neither of which can a young child grow, except to grow poor. How few there are that care for the weak of the flock. This little church wish to select and send for those they want to come to instruct them. They have learned, as many other churches have, that not all whose appointments are in the Crisis are sheep and lamb feeders, or that are gathering with Christ; and some of them have a separate interest, and a paper of their own. Such things speak for themselves, and are subjects for many questions, like these: if these are dissatisfied with the Crisis, and its doctrines and supporters, why use it for their appointments for their congregations? for the sake of soliciting funds to carry on an opposition, or another interest? Such a thing was never known before; i. e., to admit such as have got dissatisfied, and turned away from us, to have the free use of our campmeeting privileges and tables and chapels, and our paper, all free. But so it is, and the supporters of our present institutions need much grace to be patient much longer.

There are but few in Yarmouth, but they are good. This, like many other places, has had the offer of light and rejected it; and a cold, death sweat is now visible; pulse down to forty per minute, tongue coated, no appetite, except for picnics, or some other kinds of sociables.

There is one church that has concluded to try another remedy. They have invited Sister M. D. Wellcome to deliver them a course of lectures on the prophecies,—a thing she never did, but has consented, if they take the whole five pills. It will produce spasms in the body, and their eyes will open or shut for ever. Bro. Wellcome's house is as it has been for twenty years,—a pilgrim's home and a good place for instruction.

The brethren failing to come from Windham Centre to Yarmouth after me, gave me a chance to speak the truth in a Baptist meeting Wednesday evening. As their preacher disappointed them, they requested me to occupy the desk, which I did, and had a good time. It appeared necessary to reduce their food about one half, as they were not used to our strong meat. Then some of them left. The rest seemed well pleased and enlightened. A few of our people present rejoiced at the providential opening to give them the truth.

Kennebunkport. The rain storm prevented my filling the appointment at Hollis, which would have cost me thirty-six miles travel, in the mud and storm, from where I was on the day of the meeting; which is my apology for not being there just for one evening. If I had gone to Windham Centre as I expected, I should have gone through Hollis on my way to Kennebunk, and saved the thirty-six miles stage route in a storm. I found the brethren, or some of them, drowsy on the time question. As they had been waked up once on time, they were a little skittish, but on seeing there must be two cries, and the little book eaten the second time, and the vision tarry while the Bridegroom tarried, and the sleeping time between the two cries fulfilled Jesus' words,—they were more reconciled to hear on time as presented by Paul's "perils" in the evening, and requested another meeting Monday evening.

Dover. Found them trying to rally again under the efforts of Bro. Preble. Then to Elliot, Me. Found them strong in the Lord. It was marvellous to see what God had done since we first went there to break ground, and some thought heads, but no heads were broken, some sectarian hearts were, and the seed took root, and one preacher raised up as the fruit of the first effort. We had three meetings well attended.

Portsmouth. Here I felt at home, and acquainted with the fortifications, cavalry and artillery, and found Bro. French, a new warrior, ready to charge bayonet on the enemy. When he struck the high figure, and jumped, he astonished the enemy, and started the nerves of some of the young soldiers; but the old ones understood it, and backed it up. We had three of the best meetings ever held in the old chapel. Full all day, and in the evening many stood up and listened to hear on the prophetic times and signs. Rapology was the strongest point dwelt upon. Many rappers were present, and behaved well while we showed up their character as drawn by the pencil of inspiration. This is the class to be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming, in the form of Antichrist. This application caused some sensation, but there was such a jam in the house none could well leave. The truth seemed to satisfy all of God's children present. The church stands well at Portsmouth.

Haverhill. Found Bro. Timothy Cole sick. He has been unable to preach for three months. Has fallen away some forty pounds, and in great pain at times. His heart disease has affected all his left side, from head to foot. He is resigned to his afflictions. Pray for one who has been one of the fathers in the Advent cause.

Lawrence. This is a living church, and is building a house of worship. I visited old Sister Hastings, H. L. H.'s mother. It reminded me of past days, when she waited upon the saints after a godly sort. She will not lose her reward.

At South Reading and Lynn. They are doing well at Lynn; some six or eight have started to serve God. This gave courage to those who rejoiced more over the return of sinners, than over some new idea presented without the spirit of Christ.

Old Plymouth Rock. Had a good time in presenting the same truth our forefathers sounded, but most of their doctrines have been swapped off for the fables of these last days, except with our people.

Next to Boston, Lowell street. This church stands well, not afraid of a good hearty Amen, or ashamed of the power of God in any form.

THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

CLOSE OF THE VOLUME.

With the December numbers will close the present volume of the Young Pilgrim, and also the paid subscriptions of a portion of its subscribers. We hope that we shall not be obliged to part company with any of them, but continue our pleasant visits the year to come, as we have the year past. If there are any to whom packages are addressed, who do not wish them continued, or who wish any alteration or addition made in the number of copies sent to them, or any change in the direction, they are earnestly entreated to give notice at once. Do not wait till after the commencement of the next volume, but do it now.

Also, let all who wish for the next volume take immediate measures to secure payment for it, so that it may be forwarded before the commencement of the new year.

Bills have been sent to the few who have not paid for the volume soon to close. It is hoped that all such will see that they are paid without delay.

PLEASE NOTICE.

According to newspaper law, every subscriber who does not order his paper stopped at the expiration of his paid subscription, is considered as wishing it continued. It will therefore be understood that the Young Pilgrim is sent to subscribers until an ORDER is received to stop it.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

It is a good time now, near the commencement of a new volume for the friends of the Young Pilgrim to make an effort to increase its number of subscribers. We hope, on our part, to be able to make it still more acceptable to its readers, and worthy of a larger circulation. A little exertion on the part of every one, would soon double its number of readers, and to the same extent increase its usefulness. Who will get one, two, five, ten, twenty, and so on?

Correspondence.

From Sr. Caroline Fuller.

BRO. GRANT:—I want to tell you how much I prize the Crisis. It comes to me laden with rich food for thought. I prize it as one of the means which God so mercifully gives to keep alive an abiding interest in the gospel of the kingdom. How good God is! He knows our frailty, all our surroundings, and in pity not only gives his Spirit and word, but creates lesser agencies also, to point to the goal, and link us in sympathy with kindred hearts. No small degree of pleasure do I derive from just reading the names of brethren and sisters with whom I have been associated in days gone by.

If those dear friends who have labored so faithfully for my spiritual enlightenment in Connecticut and other places, knew how much good it does me to read even their names, they would write often for the Crisis. I longed for the Wilbraham meeting, that I might greet some of them once more, and enjoy with them an occasion which used to seem a rich foretaste of Paradise restored. But what seems plainly to be my path of duty, is encompassed with cares, and occasions for self-denial; but I strive daily for patience and grace to overcome every besetment.

Best of all things below do I love the society of the good and the pure, and I greatly desire to be of that number who shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom. When tired and sick with every day's report of evil men and seducers, in both high and low places, how refreshing to think of that good time coming, when the people shall be all holy. No contending with hardened rebels then, for equality and justice, for justice and judgment shall be eternally established, and wrong and oppression forever cease, when the wicked shall be no more.

Vain and futile are the efforts of man to patch up the governments of earth, and make them the guardians of truth and right. When reformed at one point, a worse evil, perhaps, becomes apparent at another, so that an unceasing unrest has ever prevailed, and will till till He to whom all power belongs shall establish his own righteous government, and give peace and quiet to the groaning earth. Oh! who should not long for that day, and in view of it lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset? The world, the flesh, and the devil are all combined to impede the christian's progress. But greater is He that is for us than those who are against us, and if we perseveringly seek his grace, we shall surely conquer.

I want to say to my sisters in the mission work, that I deeply sympathize with them in their labors, and long to join them in the blessed effort of instructing the ignorant, raising the fallen, and pointing the stricken, sorrowing soul to the only true source of happiness. I long to go into the highways and hedges, such as Bro. Burbank describes, and would esteem it a greater joy to rescue one poor child from Satan's grasp, than wear a coronet. Never was there a time when earnest laborers for God and humanity were so greatly needed as at the present. May God abundantly bless the earnest workers.

MRS CAROLINE TULLER.

Townsend Station, O.

From Bro. John G. Hook.

BRO. GRANT:—Having finished my labors for the present in Nova Scotia, I left Yarmouth, Nov. 27th, for home. I had a pleasant passage over the bay, and arrived in safety, with health some improved. God blessed his own word, which we tried faithfully to preach. Many were comforted. Some started for the kingdom, others were reclaimed, and we had the pleasure of burying some in the liquid tomb by baptism; others wished to go forward as we were about to leave. We expect to return soon, and baptize many. The seed is sown, and we expect fruit. Glory to the God of Israel.

JOHN G. HOOK.

Boston, Mass., Dec. 3d, 1866.

From Bro. N. H. Reed.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to say a few words through the Crisis to my brethren and sisters scattered abroad. I claim to be a zealous laborer for truth in this part of the Lord's vineyard, though I am insufficient to accomplish much. I have been successful the past season in getting nearly two hundred subscribers for the Crisis, besides circulating a number of Bibles, tracts, books, etc. My motive in so doing is purely to direct mankind to see where they are, and what is coming on our world, and above all to be prepared for whatever emergency may come.

This country (N. S) I consider very much in the dark with regard to the near approaching of our blessed Lord, which seems so plainly revealed in God's blessed book. When I consider the excess of rioting and religious festivals that are encouraged and helped on by the so-called ministers of Christ's flock here, I cannot help but be persuaded that many are "blind leaders of the blind." How awful are the times in which we are living; iniquity abounding, the love of many waxing cold, and many of Christ's professed followers saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" and becoming "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God."

While speaking to some of the near approach of Christ, and of some noted divines who confirm the same, they will turn contemptuously away, and say, "That is all Yankeeism," as if the middle wall of partition was still in erection. For my part, I know no difference between nations, tribes, or people. I claim all those who love my Lord and his appearing to be my brethren and sisters in Christ. The name of church and society, as I understand, should have but little to do with our oneness in Christ.

Some who read the Crisis void of the Spirit of Christ, no doubt are saying in tones of pity, "What a mistaken and weak-minded people." To such ones let me say, consider the words of our Savior, "As the days of Noe and Lot were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." With what light did the world look on those worthies. Consider farther when Christ came to his own, did they receive him?

As this is probably the last time I shall have the privilege of speaking to some, let me say with all kindness and faith, do not delay in making your peace with Christ, for just so sure as Christ has said, "I will come again," and that in a time of prevailing iniquity, when they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. (2 Tim. 4: 4) "It will surely come; it will not tarry."

Let those who are leaning on friends for counsel and direction, read the words of the prophet, in Micah 7: 5. "Trust ye not in a friend, put ye not confidence in a guide; keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom."

May the Lord help each of us to say, from a full desire of our hearts, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." Your brother in Christ,

NELSON H. REED.

Obituaries.

PAUL. Died in Stoneham, Sept. 8th, 1866, of consumption, Ann Louisa, wife of Joseph Paul, aged fifty-six years, six months, and three days.

After a long season of protracted suffering, this dear mother now rests from her labors. Her last tear is shed, her last groan uttered. She loved the doctrines of the Bible, and was a believer in life only through Christ. She leaves one son and four daughters, with their companions, a large circle of relatives, to mourn the loss of one dearly beloved. She sleeps peacefully, awaiting the glorious morning of the resurrection, when death shall be banished, and the voice of Jesus will bid her arise. May the Lord comfort, strengthen and sustain her feeble companion, and all the friends that mourn.

There no weary midnight watching,
There no parting tears are shed;
There no sighs of bitter anguish
For the loved ones cold and dead.
No sad burial procession
Moves along that golden street,
And our grief will turn to gladness,
When our loved ones there we meet.

M. A. EVANS.

SEAVEY. Died in Bristol, Me., Nov. 13th, 1866, Deborah, wife of Wm. B. Seavey, aged fifty years and six months.

Sister Seavey was a member of the Methodist church. Last winter the Adventists went to that place to have some meetings. She opened her doors and invited them in. Her husband was at that time an unconverted man, but gave God his heart and went forward in baptism. Sister Seavey was not satisfied with her baptism, and went forward and was also buried with Christ.

Sister Seavey was a christian, and ever ready to give a reason of her hope.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable Dispatches.

London, Nov. 26. It is said that the Empress Eugenie and her son will spend Christmas at Rome.

Twelve thousand breech loading rifles are to be sent by the British Government to Ireland for the use of constables. Arrests of Fenians continue to be made in Ireland, and the troops are vigilant.

There has been renewed fighting in Candia. It is said that the Turks have been badly beaten and have suffered greatly, no less than 3000 having been killed and 2000 taken prisoners.

The Fenian troubles in Ireland have assumed considerable proportions, and there is no doubt that a serious outbreak has occurred. Two regiments of national troops were urgently ordered to Ireland yesterday afternoon, and transports were being prepared all night last night at Portsmouth. A large detachment of marines was also sent over to Queenstown from the war steamer Plymouth. A gunboat at Chatham was ordered to sail for Queenstown immediately. Much alarm was felt at Cork and throughout Ireland generally.

The London Times of this morning believes that Chief Organizer Stephens will soon arrive on the scene, if indeed, he has not already.

The Globe editorially hints that a more serious trouble with the United States is really at the bottom of the Fenian outbreak.

Nov. 29. It is said more troops are about leaving for Ireland, including a battalion of Guards.

The London Times of to-day says peace will soon be declared between Spain and Chili and Peru.

The Morning Herald referring to the condemned Fenians in Canada, says: "There should be no loop-hole of escape for future offenders."

Troops are being sent to Ireland and gunboats are sailing for Irish ports.

The Times says: "The rebellion must be stamped out as we stamped out the cattle plague."

The News says: "England must put down relentlessly the seditious movement which her misrule has stirred up."

The Telegraph declares that "measures must be taken which will render it certain that the very first symptoms of revolt shall be stamped out with an iron heel."

London, Dec. 1. There is a vague rumor that the Chief Organizer Stephens lately arrived in Paris and is secreted there.

Liverpool, Dec. 2. The steamship Palmyra, Capt. Brown, from New York, has arrived out.

Trieste, Dec. 1. Advices received from Miramer report that the case of the Empress Carlotta is said by her consulting physician to be hopeless.

Lieut. Maury, late Confederate naval commander, has arrived in London.

It is quite probable that troops will be sent to Liverpool and Glasgow, on account of the bad feeling that prevails among the Irish in those cities.

Many arrests of Fenians have been made by Government in Ireland.

London, Dec. 1. It is denied that the English militia will go to Ireland.

Martial law has been proclaimed in Limerick city and county, and arrests continue daily.

Preparations are being made here to receive the Emperor Maximilian, who is expected to arrive in an Austrian war vessel at an early date.

Liverpool, Dec. 2. There are indications of trouble here from the Irish population, and precautionary steps are being taken by Government with the view to its prompt suppression.

The countermanding of the order for volunteers to leave for Ireland was made in this connection, as their service may be required at home.

London, Dec. 2. Col. Meanery, a well known prominent Fenian, has been arrested by government officials here and placed in Blackwell prison under a strong guard.

Dublin, Dec. 2. There is great excitement here relative to the activity of English officials in making arrests of persons believed to be implicated in the Fenian movement. A great many arrests have been made all over the country, and they grow more numerous hourly.

A FRENCH SENSATION.—As Ireland and Mexico have their present sensations, France seems to have quite as good a right to one of her own. The following extract from a Paris letter describes it:

"An important rumor has been in circulation throughout Europe for some time, which has just seen light in the Paris correspondence of a journal published in Rhenish Prussia. On the successful closing of the great exhibition in Paris next year, the Emperor Napoleon, it is said, will announce his abdication from the throne. The Emperor, it appears, besides too ill to bear up any longer with the cares and responsibilities of state, is also a superstitious man, and fancies he sees in the recent checks which his diplomacy has received from Prussia, Italy and America, the forerunner of successive and serious disasters, and a hint that it is high time for him to retire from the scene if he wishes to retain the reputation of being the greatest man in Europe. Moreover, as a stroke of policy, he conceives it would be better for the interests of his dynasty to see his son firmly established on the throne during his own life-time, when he could support him by his counsels and by the advantage of his great living influence and reputation, rather than that at his death his son, unknown and unsupported, should have to struggle against the unbridled activity of the Republican and Bourbon parties. On the occasion of closing the great exhibition—a monument of the industry, prosperity, and superiority of the French nation—he would deliver a farewell oration, recalling the acts of his reign—the unity of Italy, from the Alps to the Adriatic; the pacification of Germany; the establishment of an empire in Mexico; but, above all, the results of that policy which, while maintaining France as the mistress of European nations, has been able to confer upon her, at the same time, the blessings of peace and ever-increasing prosperity. After his abdication, the Emperor would watch over the interests of his son, and would devote the remainder of his life to the compilation of a complete history of France during his reign."

DOMESTIC.

New York, Nov. 26. A special dispatch from Toronto, dated to-day, says Rev. J. A. Allen preached last evening in the Episcopal Cathedral at Kingston to a large audience in favor of annexation to the United States, and that a meeting has been called to meet in Montreal to discuss the benefits to be derived from annexation, which the people of the lower provinces greatly desire.

St. Louis, Nov. 30. Private dispatches from Omaha report a great fall of snow in that vicinity, blocking up all the roads, and causing serious distress on the plains. The prices of provisions in mining towns are at starvation rates.

New York, Nov. 30. The scanty intelligence furnished through the cable of the rumored rising in Ireland is causing great dissatisfaction among the Fenian portion of our inhabitants. It is believed the British Government has placed an embargo purposely on the cable, so that no news of an excitable nature may be transmitted here until the rebellion, if at all commenced is stamped out. The headquarters of James Stephens is kept in a state of continual bustle and excitement by the presence of the solid supporters of the C. O. I. R., many of whom called on Col. Kelley and Gen. Halpin today and tendered contributions to a very considerable amount. Concerts, balls, and all sorts of conceivable means are being used to raise money, and there is no doubt the war fund will be augmented at least fifty fold before the end of next week. Hundreds of young fellows, who have served with distinction in the Union and Confederate armies, called on Col. Kelley during the day, and offered their services in the coming struggle for liberty. It is supposed that several privateers are already being fitted out in the States to prey on British commerce the moment the Fenian war has commenced.

EFFECT OF THE POPE'S ALLOCUTION. "Malakoff," the Paris correspondent of the New York Times, thus describes the effect of the denunciatory documents recently sent forth from the Vatican:

"The last publications of the Pope and the high clergy have disgusted even the enlightened Catholic world and added many friends to the 'Rome capital' policy of the Italians. To see men whose mission it is to preach concord, peace and goodwill among men utter nothing but anathemas and curses against society and against political and social progress, is enough of itself, to turn against His Holiness and his blind Bishops the better part of his Church. In Venetia the priests in general, and here and there the Bishops, have taken sides with Victor Emmanuel, and in certain places even headed the processions going to the polls to vote union with the rest of Italy. For this the Catholic papers of Paris cry Anathema! Anathema! and go spreading their tears about like Jeremy weeping night and day over the ruins of Jerusalem. Everybody almost in France has got tired of the whining of the Pope, coupled as it is with the most outrageous and inexcusable attacks on society. There is less interest, therefore, as to whether he abandons Rome next month, and exactly because this diminished interest is shown, it is thought he will stay. In fact, the chances are more than even that he will stay where he is. The Emperor is determined to bring about a reconciliation between the Pope and Victor Emmanuel, and he has sent his right-hand man, Gen. Fleury, to see the King and urge the matter on. So that we are rather inclined, at present, to the belief that there will be a reconciliation."

RELIGIOUS TROUBLES IN CANADA.—A letter from Montreal says that the Catholics of Canada East are loud in denunciating the conduct of the Canadian government toward the Fenian prisoners. They claim that the trials were a farce, and that the Government had decided what men should be hung before they commenced. The bitter feeling formerly existing between Irishmen and Orangemen is beginning to show itself, and it is said, should McMahon and the others be hanged, it will result in riot, and eventually terminate in a religious war.—Journal.

NEW FOREIGN POSTAL TREATY.—A Washington dispatch says the Postmaster General has agreed upon a treaty with Great Britain, whereby postages to and from are to be reduced to twelve cents, to be prepaid. The postage is to be collected and kept by the Government where the letter is mailed, and each side is to keep what it gets.

☞ A monument has been erected at Knibley-Knoll, Gloucestershire, England, to William Tyndale, who in 1526, published the first printed translation of the New Testament in the English language, and who was strangled and burnt at Vilvorde in Flanders, in 1536. The monument, which is a stone cenotaph one hundred and eleven feet high, was inaugurated in the presence of a large assembly on Nov. 6. It cost £1550 ($7502.) Knibley is Tyndale's birthplace.

☞ In the fourteenth century a copy of the English translation of the New Testament, which could be obtained only in manuscript, was worth fifty pounds ($242.) In 1866 a printed copy can be obtained in England for two pence (four cents.)

☞ Twenty-six iron clad vessels are now being built in England for the British navy.

☞ Twelve hundred balls are announced for the winter in New York.

and their eyes will open or shut for ever. Bro. Wellcome's house is as it has been for twenty years,—a pilgrim's home and a good place for instruction.

The brethren failing to come from Windham Centre to Yarmouth after me, gave me a chance to speak the truth in a Baptist meeting Wednesday evening. As their preacher disappointed them, they requested me to occupy the desk, which I did, and had a good time. It appeared necessary to reduce their food about one half, as they were not used to our strong meat. Then some of them left. The rest seemed well pleased and enlightened. A few of our people present rejoiced at the providential opening to give them the truth.

Kennebunkport. The rain storm prevented my filling the appointment at Hollis, which would have cost me thirty-six miles travel, in the mud and storm, from where I was on the day of the meeting; which is my apology for not being there just for one evening. If I had gone to Windham Centre as I expected, I should have gone through Hollis on my way to Kennebunk, and saved the thirty-six miles stage route in a storm. I found the brethren, or some of them, drowsy on the time question. As they had been waked up once on time, they were a little skittish, but on seeing there must be two cries, and the little book eaten the second time, and the vision tarry while the Bridegroom tarried, and the sleeping time between the two cries fulfilled Jesus' words,—they were more reconciled to hear on time as presented by Paul's "perils" in the evening, and requested another meeting Monday evening.

Dover. Found them trying to rally again under the efforts of Bro. Preble. Then to Elliot, Me. Found them strong in the Lord. It was marvellous to see what God had done since we first went there to break ground, and some thought heads, but no heads were broken, some sectarian hearts were, and the seed took root, and one preacher raised up as the fruit of the first effort. We had three meetings well attended.

Portsmouth. Here I felt at home, and acquainted with the fortifications, cavalry and artillery, and found Bro. French, a new warrior, ready to charge bayonet on the enemy. When he struck the high figure, and jumped, he astonished the enemy, and started the nerves of some of the young soldiers; but the old ones understood it, and backed it up. We had three of the best meetings ever held in the old chapel. Full all day, and in the evening many stood up and listened to hear on the prophetic times and signs. Rapology was the strongest point dwelt upon. Many rappers were present, and behaved well while we showed up their character as drawn by the pencil of inspiration. This is the class to be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming, in the form of Antichrist. This application caused some sensation, but there was such a jam in the house none could well leave. The truth seemed to satisfy all of God's children present. The church stands well at Portsmouth.

Haverhill. Found Bro. Timothy Cole sick. He has been unable to preach for three months. Has fallen away some forty pounds, and in great pain at times. His heart disease has affected all his left side, from head to foot. He is resigned to his afflictions. Pray for one who has been one of the fathers in the Advent cause.

Lawrence. This is a living church, and is building a house of worship. I visited old Sister Hastings, H. L. H.'s mother. It reminded me of past days, when she waited upon the saints after a godly sort. She will not lose her reward.

At South Reading and Lynn. They are doing well at Lynn; some six or eight have started to serve God. This gave courage to those who rejoiced more over the return of sinners, than over some new idea presented without the spirit of Christ.

Old Plymouth Rock. Had a good time in presenting the same truth our forefathers sounded, but most of their doctrines have been swapped off for the fables of these last days, except with our people.

Next to Boston, Lowell street. This church stands well, not afraid of a good hearty Amen, or ashamed of the power of God in any form.

THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

CLOSE OF THE VOLUME.

With the December numbers will close the present volume of the Young Pilgrim, and also the paid subscriptions of a portion of its subscribers. We hope that we shall not be obliged to part company with any of them, but continue our pleasant visits the year to come, as we have the year past. If there are any to whom packages are addressed, who do not wish them continued, or who wish any alteration or addition made in the number of copies sent to them, or any change in the direction, they are earnestly entreated to give notice at once. Do not wait till after the commencement of the next volume, but do it now.

Also, let all who wish for the next volume take immediate measures to secure payment for it, so that it may be forwarded before the commencement of the new year.

Bills have been sent to the few who have not paid for the volume soon to close. It is hoped that all such will see that they are paid without delay.

PLEASE NOTICE.

According to newspaper law, every subscriber who does not order his paper stopped at the expiration of his paid subscription, is considered as wishing it continued. It will therefore be understood that the Young Pilgrim is sent to subscribers until an ORDER is received to stop it.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

It is a good time now, near the commencement of a new volume for the friends of the Young Pilgrim to make an effort to increase its number of subscribers. We hope, on our part, to be able to make it still more acceptable to its readers, and worthy of a larger circulation. A little exertion on the part of every one, would soon double its number of readers, and to the same extent increase its usefulness. Who will get one, two, five, ten, twenty, and so on?

Correspondence.

From Sr. Caroline Fuller.

BRO. GRANT:—I want to tell you how much I prize the Crisis. It comes to me laden with rich food for thought. I prize it as one of the means which God so mercifully gives to keep alive an abiding interest in the gospel of the kingdom. How good God is! He knows our frailty, all our surroundings, and in pity not only gives his Spirit and word, but creates lesser agencies also, to point to the goal, and link us in sympathy with kindred hearts. No small degree of pleasure do I derive from just reading the names of brethren and sisters with whom I have been associated in days gone by.

If those dear friends who have labored so faithfully for my spiritual enlightenment in Connecticut and other places, knew how much good it does me to read even their names, they would write often for the Crisis. I longed for the Wilbraham meeting, that I might greet some of them once more, and enjoy with them an occasion which used to seem a rich foretaste of Paradise restored. But what seems plainly to be my path of duty, is encompassed with cares, and occasions for self-denial; but I strive daily for patience and grace to overcome every besetment.

Best of all things below do I love the society of the good and the pure, and I greatly desire to be of that number who shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom. When tired and sick with every day's report of evil men and seducers, in both high and low places, how refreshing to think of that good time coming, when the people shall be all holy. No contending with hardened rebels then, for equality and justice, for justice and judgment shall be eternally established, and wrong and oppression forever cease, when the wicked shall be no more.

Vain and futile are the efforts of man to patch up the governments of earth, and make them the guardians of truth and right. When reformed at one point, a worse evil, perhaps, becomes apparent at another, so that an unceasing unrest has ever prevailed, and will till till He to whom all power belongs shall establish his own righteous government, and give peace and quiet to the groaning earth. Oh! who should not long for that day, and in view of it lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset? The world, the flesh, and the devil are all combined to impede the christian's progress. But greater is He that is for us than those who are against us, and if we perseveringly seek his grace, we shall surely conquer.

I want to say to my sisters in the mission work, that I deeply sympathize with them in their labors, and long to join them in the blessed effort of instructing the ignorant, raising the fallen, and pointing the stricken, sorrowing soul to the only true source of happiness. I long to go into the highways and hedges, such as Bro. Burbank describes, and would esteem it a greater joy to rescue one poor child from Satan's grasp, than wear a coronet. Never was there a time when earnest laborers for God and humanity were so greatly needed as at the present. May God abundantly bless the earnest workers.

MRS CAROLINE FULLER.

Townsend Station, O.

From Bro. John G. Hook.

BRO. GRANT:—Having finished my labors for the present in Nova Scotia, I left Yarmouth, Nov. 27th, for home. I had a pleasant passage over the bay, and arrived in safety, with health some improved. God blessed his own word, which we tried faithfully to preach. Many were comforted. Some started for the kingdom, others were reclaimed, and we had the pleasure of burying some in the liquid tomb by baptism; others wished to go forward as we were about to leave. We expect to return soon, and baptize many. The seed is sown, and we expect fruit. Glory to the God of Israel.

JOHN G. HOOK.

Boston, Mass., Dec. 3d, 1866.

From Bro. N. H. Reed.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to say a few words through the Crisis to my brethren and sisters scattered abroad. I claim to be a zealous laborer for truth in this part of the Lord's vineyard, though I am insufficient to accomplish much. I have been successful the past season in getting nearly two hundred subscribers for the Crisis, besides circulating a number of Bibles, tracts, books, etc. My motive in so doing is purely to direct mankind to see where they are, and what is coming on our world, and above all to be prepared for whatever emergency may come.

This country (N. S.) I consider very much in the dark with regard to the near approaching of our blessed Lord, which seems so plainly revealed in God's blessed book. When I consider the excess of rioting and religious festivals that are encouraged and helped on by the so-called ministers of Christ's flock here, I cannot help but be persuaded that many are "blind leaders of the blind." How awful are the times in which we are living; iniquity abounding, the love of many waxing cold, and many of Christ's professed followers saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" and becoming "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God."

While speaking to some of the near approach of Christ, and of some noted divines who confirm the same, they will turn contemptuously away, and say, "That is all Yankeeism," as if the middle wall of partition was still in erection. For my part, I know no difference between nations, tribes, or people. I claim all those who love my Lord and his appearing to be my brethren and sisters in Christ. The name of church and society, as I understand, should have but little to do with our oneness in Christ.

Some who read the Crisis void of the Spirit of Christ, no doubt are saying in tones of pity, "What a mistaken and weak-minded people." To such ones let me say, consider the words of our Savior, "As the days of Noe and Lot were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." With what light did the world look on those worthies. Consider further when Christ came to his own, did they receive him?

As this is probably the last time I shall have the privilege of speaking to some, let me say with all kindness and faith, do not delay in making your peace with Christ, for just so sure as Christ has said, "I will come again," and that in a time of prevailing iniquity, when they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables, (2 Tim. 4 : 4) "It will surely come; it will not tarry."

Let those who are leaning on friends for counsel and direction, read the words of the prophet, in Micah 7 : 5. "Trust ye not in a friend, put ye not confidence in a guide; keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom."

May the Lord help each of us to say, from a full desire of our hearts, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." Your brother in Christ,

Obituaries.

PAUL. Died in Stoneham, Sept. 8th, 1866, of consumption, Ann Louisa, wife of Joseph Paul, aged fifty-six years, six months, and three days.

After a long season of protracted suffering, this dear mother now rests from her labors. Her last tear is shed, her last groan uttered. She loved the doctrines of the Bible, and was a believer in life only through Christ. She leaves one son and four daughters, with their companions, a large circle of relatives, to mourn the loss of one dearly beloved. She sleeps peacefully, awaiting the glorious morning of the resurrection, when death shall be banished, and the voice of Jesus will bid her arise. May the Lord comfort, strengthen and sustain her feeble companion, and all the friends that mourn.

There no weary midnight watching,
There no parting tears are shed;
There no sighs of bitter anguish
For the loved ones cold and dead.
No sad burial procession
Moves along that golden street,
And our grief will turn to gladness,
When our loved ones there we meet.

M. A. EVANS.

SEAVEY. Died in Bristol, Me., Nov. 13th, 1866, Deborah, wife of Wm. B. Seavey, aged fifty years and six months.

Sister Seavey was a member of the Methodist church. Last winter the Adventists went to that place to have some meetings. She opened her doors and invited them in. Her husband was at that time an unconverted man, but gave God his heart and went forward in baptism. Sister Seavey was not satisfied with her baptism, and went forward and was also buried with Christ.

Sister Seavey was a christian, and ever ready to give a reason of her hope.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable Dispatches.

London, Nov. 26. It is said that the Empress Eugenie and her son will spend Christmas at Rome.

Twelve thousand breech loading rifles are to be sent by the British Government to Ireland for the use of constables. Arrests of Fenians continue to be made in Ireland, and the troops are vigilant.

There has been renewed fighting in Candia. It is said that the Turks have been badly beaten and have suffered greatly, no less than 3000 having been killed and 2000 taken prisoners.

The Fenian troubles in Ireland have assumed considerable proportions, and there is no doubt that a serious outbreak has occurred. Two regiments of national troops were urgently ordered to Ireland yesterday afternoon, and transports were being prepared all night last night at Portsmouth. A large detachment of marines was also sent over to Queenstown from the war steamer Plymouth. A gunboat at Chatham was ordered to sail for Queenstown immediately. Much alarm was felt at Cork and throughout Ireland generally.

The London Times of this morning believes that Chief Organizer Stephens will soon arrive on the scene, if indeed, he has not already.

The Globe editorially hints that a more serious trouble with the United States is really at the bottom of the Fenian outbreak.

Nov. 29. It is said more troops are about leaving for Ireland, including a battalion of Guards.

The London Times of to-day says peace will soon be declared between Spain and Chili and Peru.

The Morning Herald referring to the condemned Fenians in Canada, says. "There should be no loop-hole of escape for future offenders."

Troops are being sent to Ireland and gunboats are sailing for Irish ports.

The Times says: "The rebellion must be stamped out as we stamped out the cattle plague"

The News says "England must put down relentlessly the seditious movement which her misrule has stirred up."

The Telegraph declares that "measures must be taken which will render it certain that the very first symptoms of revolt shall be stamped out with an iron heel."

London, Dec. 1. There is a vague rumor that the Chief Organizer Stephens lately arrived in Paris and is secreted there.

Liverpool, Dec. 2. The steamship Palmyra, Capt. Brown, from New York, has arrived out.

Trieste, Dec. 1. Advices received from Miramer report that the case of the Empress Carlotta is said by her consulting physician to be hopeless.

Lieut. Maury, late Confederate naval commander, has arrived in London.

It is quite probable that troops will be sent to Liverpool and Glasgow, on account of the bad feeling that prevails among the Irish in those cities.

Many arrests of Fenians have been made by Government in Ireland.

London, Dec. 1. It is denied that the English militia will go to Ireland.

Martial law has been proclaimed in Limerick city and county, and arrests continue daily.

Preparations are being made here to receive the Emperor Maximilian, who is expected to arrive in an Austrian war vessel at an early date.

Liverpool, Dec. 2. There are indications of trouble here from the Irish population, and precautionary steps are being taken by Government with the view to its prompt suppression.

The countermanding of the order for volunteers to leave for Ireland was made in this connection, as their service may be required at home.

London, Dec. 2. Col. Meanery, a well known prominent Fenian, has been arrested by government officials here and placed in Blackwell prison under a strong guard.

Dublin, Dec. 2. There is great excitement here relative to the activity of English officials in making arrests of persons believed to be implicated in the Fenian movement. A great many arrests have been made all over the country, and they grow more numerous hourly.

A FRENCH SENSATION.—As Ireland and Mexico have their present sensations, France seems to have quite as good a right to one of her own. The following extract from a Paris letter describes it:

"An important rumor has been in circulation throughout Europe for some time, which has just seen light in the Paris correspondence of a journal published in Rhenish Prussia. On the successful closing of the great exhibition in Paris next year, the Emperor Napoleon, it is said, will announce his abdication from the throne. The Emperor, it appears, besides too ill to bear up any longer with the cares and responsibilities of state, is also a superstitious man, and fancies he sees in the recent checks which his diplomacy has received from Prussia, Italy and America, the forerunner of successive and serious disasters, and a hint that it is high time for him to retire from the scene if he wishes to retain the reputation of being the greatest man in Europe. Moreover, as a stroke of policy, he conceives it would be better for the interests of his dynasty to see his son firmly established on the throne during his own life-time, when he could support him by his counsels and by the advantage of his great living influence and reputation, rather than that at his death his son, unknown and unsupported, should have to struggle against the unbridled activity of the Republican and Bourbon parties. On the occasion of closing the great exhibition—a monument of the industry, prosperity, and superiority of the French nation—he would deliver a farewell oration, recalling the acts of his reign—the unity of Italy, from the Alps to the Adriatic; the pacification of Germany; the establishment of an empire in Mexico; but, above all, the results of that policy which, while maintaining France as the mistress of European nations, has been able to confer upon her, at the same time, the blessings of peace and ever-increasing prosperity. After his abdication, the Emperor would watch over the interests of his son, and would devote the remainder of his life to the compilation of a complete history of France during his reign."

DOMESTIC.

New York, Nov. 26. A special dispatch from Toronto, dated to-day, says Rev. J. A. Allen preached last evening in the Episcopal Cathedral at Kingston to a large audience in favor of annexation to the United States, also that a meeting has been called to meet in Montreal to discuss the benefits to be derived from annexation, which the people of the lower provinces greatly desire.

St. Louis, Nov. 30. Private dispatches from Omaha report a great fall of snow in that vicinity, blocking up all the roads, and causing serious distress on the plains. The prices of provisions in mining towns are at starvation rates.

New York, Nov. 30. The scanty intelligence furnished through the cable of the rumored rising in Ireland is causing great dissatisfaction among the Fenian portion of our inhabitants. It is believed the British Government has placed an embargo purposely on the cable, so that no news of an excitable nature may be transmitted here until the rebellion, if at all commenced is stamped out. The headquarters of James Stephens is kept in a state of continual bustle and excitement by the presence of the solid supporters of the C. O. I. R., many of whom called on Col. Kelley and Gen. Halpin today and tendered contributions to a very considerable amount. Concerts, balls, and all sorts of conceivable means are being used to raise money, and there is no doubt the war fund will be augmented at least fifty fold before the end of next week. Hundreds of young fellows, who have served with distinction in the Union and Confederate armies, called on Col. Kelley during the day, and offered their services in the coming struggle for liberty. It is supposed that several privateers are already being fitted out in the States to prey on British commerce the moment the Fenian war has commenced.

EFFECT OF THE POPE'S ALLOCUTION. "Malakoff," the Paris corredondent of the New York Times, thus describes the effect of the denunciatory documents recently sent forth from the Vatican:

"The last publications of the Pope and the high clergy have disgusted even the enlightened Catholic world and added many friends to the 'Rome capital' policy of the Italians. To see men whose mission it is to preach concord, peace and good-will among men utter nothing but anathemas and curses against society and against political and social progress, is enough of itself, to turn against His Holiness and his blind Bishops the better part of his Church. In Venetia the priests in general, and here and there the Bishops, have taken sides with Victor Emmanuel, and in certain places even headed the processions going to the polls to vote union with the rest of Italy. For this the Catholic papers of Paris cry Anathema! Anathema! and go spreading their tears about like Jeremy weeping night and day over the ruins of Jerusalem. Everybody almost in France has got tired of the whining of the Pope, coupled as it is with the most outrageous and inexcusable attacks on society. There is less interest, therefore, as to whether he abandons Rome next month, and exactly because this diminished interest is shown, it is thought he will stay. In fact, the chances are more than even that he will stay where he is. The Emperor is determined to bring about a reconciliation between the Pope and Victor Emmanuel, and he has sent his right-hand man, Gen. Fleury, to see the King and urge the matter on. So that we are rather inclined, at present, to the belief that there will be a reconciliation."

RELIGIOUS TROUBLES IN CANADA.—A letter from Montreal says that the Catholics of Canada East are loud in denunciating the conduct of the Canadian government toward the Fenian prisoners. They claim that the trials were a farce, and that the Government had decided what men should be hung before they commenced. The bitter feeling formerly existing between Irishmen and Orangemen is beginning to show itself, and it is said, should McMahon and the others be hanged, it will result in riot, and eventually terminate in a religious war.—Journal.

NEW FOREIGN POSTAL TREATY.—A Washington dispatch says the Postmaster General has agreed upon a treaty with Great Britain, whereby postages to and from are to be reduced to twelve cents, to be prepaid. The postage is to be collected and kept by the Government where the letter is mailed, and each side is to keep what it gets.

☞ A monument has been erected at Knibley-Knoll, Gloucestershire, England, to William Tyndale, who in 1526, published the first printed translation of the New Testament in the English language, and who was strangled and burnt at Vilvorde in Flanders, in 1536. The monument, which is a stone cenotaph one hundred and eleven feet high, was inaugurated in the presence of a large assembly on Nov. 6. It cost £1550 ($7502.) Knibley is Tyndale's birthplace.

☞ In the fourteenth century a copy of the English translation of the New Testament, which could be obtained only in manuscript, was worth fifty pounds ($242.) In 1866 a printed copy can be obtained in England for two pence (four cents.)

☞ Twenty-six iron clad vessels are now being built in England for the British navy.

☞ Twelve hundred balls are announced for the winter in New York.

☞ Riots have recently disturbed the tranquility of the peaceful Dutch at Amsterdam.

'TIS SWEET TO SUFFER WHEN CHRIST IS NEAR.

Few the days that are all sunshine,
Clouds arise and shadows fall;
Everywhere the darkness cometh—
Light and shade belong to all:
So with life—how few that find not
Shadows oft along the way;
Trials meet the high and honored,
Often with the lowly stay;
But, through all the shade and trial,
Faith in God removes each fear;
Then 'tis sweet, yea, sweet to suffer,
For we know that Christ is near.

Few the paths that have no danger,
Cares and pitfalls here and there;
Or to-day we may be breathing
Poison from the very air.
Turn to where the earth is brightest,
Search then for some calm retreat,
There, in that bright vision resting,
Pain and sorrow you may meet;
But to every lowly spirit
Jesus whispers, "dry each tear";
Then 'tis sweet—yes, sweet to suffer,
For they know that Christ is near.

Few the homes that know no sorrow—
Few unbroken circles here;
Few the joys that meet no blighting
Through a single fleeting year;
Few the hearts that know no sadness
In this changing world of ours;
Hopes must yield to disappointments,
Chilling oft life's fairest flowers;
But the christian hears a whisper—
"I am with you, do not fear."
Then 'tis sweet, yes, sweet to suffer,
For he knows that Christ is near.

But how saddening and how cheerless,
While the earthly hopes are riven,
Still to pass each painful conflict
Without sympathy from heaven!
Oh! I turn to thee, my Father,
Turn my heart and eyes alone,
Grateful that in each fierce trial
I may know that "God is love."
Let me hear the cheering promise—
"I am with you, do not fear";
Then 'tis sweet, yes, sweet to suffer,
For I know that Christ is near.

ALLOCUTION OF HIS HOLINESS, POPE PIUS IX.

READ IN SECRET CONSISTORY, OCT. 29, 1866.

Venerable Brethren.—More than once, O venerable brethren, while filling our apostolic office, we have deplored, as well in our published letters, as in divers allocutions, delivered in your most noble assembly, the affliction which has long weighed upon the affairs of our most holy religion in Italy, and the grave insults that we, and the apostolical see, have suffered from the sub-alpine government. You can therefore comprehend the grief that has taken possession of us to see this government, with a passion daily increasing, incessantly attack the Catholic church, her salutary laws, and all her holy ministers; when we see, alas! venerable bishops and clergy of the greatest integrity of different orders, as well as the most virtuous Catholic citizens, sent into exile by this government, without regard for religion, justice, or humanity, or thrown into prison, or condemned to a forced residence and molested in the most infamous manner; the dioceses deprived of their pastors to the great prejudice of souls; virgins, consecrated to God, expelled from their convents and reduced to beggary; the temples of God violated; the diocesan seminaries closed to the clergy; the Catholic youth removed from christian discipline and confided to teachers of error and iniquity, and the patrimony of the church usurped and sold.

This same government, to the scorn of the censured ecclesiastics, and without regard to our most just complaints, and those of our venerable brethren the bishops of Italy, has sanctioned the like laws, which are entirely contrary to the Catholic church, to her doctrine and her rights, and is by us condemned, and has not hesitated to promulgate a law touching civil marriage, as it is called—a law not only entirely contrary to Catholic doctrine, but also to the well-being of civil society. Such a law tramples under foot the dignity and the sanctity of marriage; it destroys the institution; it encourages a concubinage entirely shameful. In fact, there can be no such thing as marriage among the faithful, unless there is at the same time a sacrament. Thus the power to decree whatever concerns the sacrament of marriage, pertains entirely to the church.

Furthermore, this government, injuring in an evident manner the condition of public profession of religious vows, which has had and always will have force in the church of God; and regardless of the great benefits of the regular orders, that, founded by holy men and approved by the holy, apostolical see, have admirably merited of the christian, civil, and literary republic, by so many glorious fatigues and works of piety and usefulness; has not feared to sanction a law suppressing in all countries of his domain all religious corporations of both sexes, and to appropriate all their estates, and much other property of the church, and has ordained its distribution. Before entering into possession of the Venetian province, he did not hesitate to extend to that country the same laws, and prescribed, contrary to all law and all right, the entire destruction and abolition of the convention stipulated by us with our dear son in Jesus Christ, Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria.

We, therefore, faithful to the great duty of our apostolic ministry, raise our voice anew in your most noble assembly in favor of religion, of the church, of her holy laws, of the right to authority of this throne of St. Peter; and with might we deplore and reprove all and each of the things that, contrary to the church, her laws and rights, have been decreed, done and attempted by the sub-alpine government and by all other subordinate authority; and by our apostolic authority we abrogate and proclaim null and without effect, force, or value, all the said decrees, and all that pertains to them.

We compel thus their authors, who glory in the name of christian, to call to mind and consider seriously that they have unfortunately incurred the censures and spiritual penalty inflicted by the apostolic constitution and the decrees of the ecumenical councils against whoever attacks the rights of the church.

We know, venerable brethren, that certain astucious persons combat us, and interpret in their own sense our benediction upon Italy, when, without any personal merit, assuredly, but through the impenetrable grace of God, we pronounced words of pardon and peace by reason of our love for the population of the pontifical States. Indeed, full of solicitude for the happiness and felicity of the entire flock, demanding by our prayers to God the good of Italy, we have prayed with fervor and humility that he would deliver her from the evils that threaten her, and that the precious gift of the Catholic faith may be all-powerful in Italy, and that good morals, justice, and all the christian virtues may flourish more than ever. We still cease not to address the most fervent prayers to God, that in his mercy he would preserve the Catholic population of Italy from so many and so great calamities of all kinds that oppress and assail them, by the fault of the governors of Italy, and from a multiform persecution. But above all, we supplicate the merciful Savior to aid and fortify, by his heavenly assistance, the Italian people, that they may remain firm and unshaken in the divine faith and in their religion, and that with christian fortitude they may endure and support so many adversities and evils.

Nevertheless they are mad who infer, and who cease not to demand of us, already despoiled with the most manifest injustice of many provinces of our pontifical domain, that we renounce our civil sovereignty and that of the apostolic see. Surely every one can see that such a demand is unjust and prejudicial to the church.

By a strange volition of divine providence, as we have said once before, it has happened that the Roman empire having fallen and being divided into many kingdoms and into different States, the Roman Pontiff, in such a great variety of kingdoms, and in the actual state of human society, was invested with civil sovereignty, by means of which, never being subjected to any laical power, he exercises in all liberty the supreme authority of his jurisdiction upon the church divinely confessed by our Savior Jesus Christ. And the faithful, with tranquility of conscience, and in entire obedience to the decrees, admonitions and mandates of the pontiff, have abandoned themselves, unable to conceive that his acts would be subjected to the will and impulses of any sovereign or of any civil power.

We can not relinquish the civil power established by the divine wisdom of providence for the good of the church universal; on the contrary we ought to defend this government and protect the rights of this civil power; and we complain forcibly of the sacrilegious usurpation of the provinces of the holy see, as we have already done, and as we do now anew, we complain and protest according to the best of our ability.

All the world admit that the Catholic bishops have never ceased to combat with zeal, as well by voice as writing, in favor of our civil sovereignty and that of this holy see; and all have proclaimed that this sovereignty is absolutely necessary, especially in the present condition of affairs of the world, to establish and defend the full liberty of the Roman pontiff in feeding all the Catholic flock, a liberty closely connected with that of the whole church.

These same men fear not to cry everywhere that we ought to become reconciled with Italy, that is to say with the enemies of our religion, who boast of establishing Italy. But how can we, the champions and avengers of the most holy religion and the salutary doctrine of virtue and justice, who should watch over the safety of all, walk in harmony with those who, maintaining not sound doctrine, and refusing to bear the truth, withdraw from us—those who will not condescend to our desires, neither do justice as we demand, to the effect that the many dioceses of Italy, now deprived of consolation and pastoral care, may have their bishops restored to them?

Would to heaven that all those who so strongly combat the church, us, and the apostolic see, would turn their regard and their souls to truth and justice, become enlightened for once, returning to themselves, and, providing for the good of their souls, strive by salutary repentance to return to us!

Nothing would be more agreeable to us than to meet them according to the example of the Father in the Gospel, and embrace them, congratulating ourselves that his children were dead and are alive again, were lost and are found. It would then be seen that our august religion, the prolific mother and nurse of all virtue, and the scourge of all vice, leads as well to individual felicity as to the public good of all.

There, in fact, where religion and its salutary doctrine prevail, flourish, necessarily, good morals, integrity, peace, justice, charity, and all the virtues. There the people are not attacked by the grave evils that unfortunately crush them wherever religion and its doctrines are disregarded.

By these deplorable facts, recounted summarily and with sorrow, and by sad cotemporary events in Italy, the whole world can easily see and divine to what peril this apostolical see is exposed, and how it is a mark for the harsh menaces of rebellion, for the hatred of the unbelieving, and the wrath of the enemies of the cross of Christ.

From all parts resound continually furious voices, that infuriated enemies do not cease to echo, declaring that this city of Rome ought to participate in the baleful Italian perturbation and rebellion, and even become its chief seat. But God, rich in mercy, can render abortive the councils and impious desires of our enemies. He will never permit this noble city, so dear to us, where, by his great and peculiar benefaction he has placed the throne of St. Peter, the impregnable foundation of his faith and divine religion, to return to the unhappy condition so faithfully described by our holy predecessor, Leo the Great,* when for the first time the blessed prince of apostles entered this city, then mistress of the world.

As to ourselves, though deprived of nearly all human assistance, yet, faithful to our mission, and entirely confident of the assistance of the Almighty, we are ready to wrestle without fear, even to peril our life for the cause of the church, divinely confided to us by our Savior Jesus Christ, and, if need be, to remove wherever we can best exercise our supreme apostolic ministry.

And as, in such a horrible tempest, the best and only support should be prayer, we address all the venerable brethren and bishops of the whole catholic world, and all the children of the holy mother church, who have never ceased to lavish on us the clearest evidence of love and respect, and to come to our aid in our very grave trials and those of the holy see; and we implore them to offer more and more, unceasing and fervent prayers to God for the defeat of the enemies of the church, and their return to the path of salvation. For, to use the words of Chrysostom,† prayers are a powerful arm, a great security, a rich treasure, an excellent harbor, a sure asylum, provided that, attentive and vigilant, we present ourselves before the Savior with collected mind, and without leaving any access to the enemy of our salvation.

In the midst of the great suffering which we endure, we have strong consolation, knowing that God performs marvellous prodigies when his church has no human succor, which manifest most clearly his omnipotence and divine hand, confirming the truth that the gates of hell shall never prevail against the church, which shall always remain unmoved, triumphant over her enemies till the end of the world. But it is exceedingly grievous that it is not precisely decided that a nation should conserve always the precious treasure of our faith and our religion.

There are, indeed, many nations who have kept with fidelity the faith entrusted to them, and the discipline of morals. Alas! they are detached from this stone, upon which reposes the edifice of the church, and separate from him, to whom is given the power to confirm the brethren, and to feed the sheep and the lambs, having no understanding among themselves, and enveloped in the darkness of error, they are in great peril in regard to their situation.

And here we cannot abstain, by reason of our mission, from adjuring warmly, in the name of the Savior, all sovereigns and other rulers of the nations to examine for once, and consider well their grave obligation to endeavor to increase among the nations love and respect for religion, and to use all their power to prevent the flambeau of the faith from being extinguished among the people.

Woe then to those rulers, who, forgetting that they are the ministers of God for good, shall forget to aid this worship whenever they can and ought. It is for them to fear and tremble when, by their own special work, they destroy the precious treasure of the catholic faith, without which it is impossible to please God. When they appear, called to a severe judgment, before the tribunal of Christ, they will see what a terrible thing it is to bear the displeasure of the living God, and experience his stern justice.

In the end, we cannot doubt, venerable brethren, witnesses and associates of our labors, appreciating as we do your excellent religion, your piety, and your intense love for Catholicism, that you will unite your fervent prayers with ours, and those of all the church, and implore continually the Father of mercies, through the merits of his only Son, our Savior, Jesus Christ, that he will have pity on Italy, on all Europe, and on the whole world, and that by his divine omnipotence he will cause that, after the destruction of all error, and the cessation of bitterness and perturbation, the holy church may enjoy perfect liberty and peace; that human society may be delivered from the many evils that it is experiencing, and that all nations may coalesce in the unity of the faith, and the recognition of his Son, and walk in the way of the Lord, manifesting their faith by all good works.

BRO. GRANT:—Time will not permit me to comment on the Allocution I send you. I suppose it is unnecessary, the document is so full of madness, in itself such a striking accomplishment of prophecy. None can fail to see by it that his temporal power is at an end.

"BIND THE SACRIFICE WITH CORDS."

The apostle exhorts us to present our bodies a living sacrifice. "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Heb. 12: 1.

If the sacrifice were not a living one, it would not need to be bound, as it could not move from where it was placed. But many can testify from experience, that after having laid all on the altar, and obtained assurance that the sacrifice was accepted, they have lost that assurance, and with it the "perfect peace" which those enjoy whose minds are stayed on God. Isa. 26: 3.

If any who read this desire to obtain or regain that perfect peace, please turn to the twelfth chapter of Hebrews, and read, and ponder, and dwell upon the chosen words of inspiration, the words of life, and peace, and truth. And as you read, obey. And when you are satisfied that you have laid all on the altar, turn to the 118th Psalm, and read that attentively. In the 27th verse you will read, "God is the LORD, which hath showed us light: bind the sacrifice with cords, even unto the horns of the altar." It may be a profitable study for you, to learn how the sacrifice is to be bound, and who is to do that work. If you can discover any way by which you can do it, go on and do the work. But if you cannot find any way by which you can bind the sacrifice, use these words as a prayer, and say, Lord, "bind the sacrifice with cords, even unto the horns of the altar."

When all is done, you may not feel just as you want to, or just as you expected to. But if you heartily love every body, even your worst enemy, or the most disagreeable person your know of, you have good grounds for assurance. To love the Lord with all the heart, and our neighbor as ourself, is to be perfect in love. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

SHOWING HOW A CHRISTIAN MAY MAKE HIS LIFE COMFORTABLE.

It shows how a christian may come to lead a comfortable life, even a heaven upon earth, be the times what they will; viz., by christian contentment. Prov. 15: 8. The comforts of life do not stand in having much. It is Christ's maxim,—"Man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things which he doth possess" (Luke 12: 15), but it is in being contented. Is not the bee as well contented with the feeding on the dew or sucking from a flower, as the ox that grazeth on the mountains? Contentment lies within a man, in the heart; and the way to be comfortable is, not by having our barns filled, but our minds quiet. "The contented man," saith Seneca, "is the happy man." Discontent is a fretting humor, which dries the brains, wastes the spirits, corrodes and eats out the comfort of life. Discontent makes a man that he doth not enjoy what he doth possess. A drop or two of vinegar will sour a whole glass of wine. Let a man have the affluence and confluence of worldly comforts, a drop or two of discontent will embitter and poison all. Comfort depends upon contentment. Jacob went halting, when the sinew upon the hollow of his thigh shrank; so when the sinew of contentment begins to shrink, we go halting in our comforts.

Contentment is as necessary to keep the life comfortable, as oil is necessary to keep the lamp burning; the clouds of discontent do often drop the showers of tears. Would we have comfort in our lives, be content. Why dost thou complain of thy troubles? It is not trouble that troubles, but discontent; it is not the water without the ship, but the water that gets within the leak, which drowns it. It is not outward affliction that can make the life of a christian sad; a contented mind would sail above these waters: but when there's a leak of discontent open, and trouble gets into the heart, then it is disquieted, and sinks.

"THY WILL BE DONE."

My God, my Father, while I stray
Far from thy home on life's rough way,
Oh, teach me from my heart to say,
"Thy will be done!"

What though in lonely grief I sigh
For friends beloved no longer nigh!
Submissive still would I reply—
"Thy will be done!"

If thou shouldst call me to resign
What most I prize,—it ne'er was mine;
I only yield thee what is thine:
"Thy will be done!"

If but my fainting heart be blest
With thy sweet spirit for its guest,
My God, to thee I leave the rest:
"Thy will be done!"

Renew my will from day to day;
Blend it with thine, and take away
Whatever makes it hard to say,
"Thy will be done!"

Then when on earth I breathe no more
The prayer oft mixed with tears before,
I'll sing upon a happier shore:
"Thy will be done!"

FAITHFUL.

God lets me see so much comprehended in this one word, that it moves my entire being into intense desire to be numbered with the hosts that, bearing this character, shall stand at last before the throne.

In a revival, the testimony of the converts almost invariably closes with—"Pray for me, that I may hold out faithful." Well they may! Alas! that so few should feel the importance of their request. I am constrained to ask God to make this cry a real, earnest one of the Spirit in each heart; for some use the word because it is customary.

All know, but do not realize, that faithful in this war, means unto the end. The command is, "Be thou faithful unto death." Soldiers of the cross can have no honorable discharge, except by death; all who leave the ranks otherwise do so by desertion.

We are continually to commit our souls unto God, as unto a faithful Creator; for we have a live devil to combat with, full of energy and all subtlety; and although we are not ignorant of his devices, who of us shall dare live without great watching unto prayer?

The path of the faithful lies through deep tribulation; the landmarks that guide the pilgrim are the footsteps of the King of saints, leading through the wilderness, the parched desert, into the Gethsemane of suffering, to the judgment hall and to the cross. As we suffer with him, being crucified to the world and the flesh, we share in his glorious resurrection, being quickened together with him: this is our portion; a direct inheritance from Him who was "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief"; who "was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities."

Before us goes the prince of the power of darkness, endeavoring to obstruct our passage; but as we pass along, we find .... that the thorns have no power to tear the flesh; the lions, though they may leap at us and gnash their teeth, if we but hold fast the shield of faith, have no power to overcome us. ...

Cheer up then, pilgrims. Hath he hid his face from thee for a moment? Know, then, that with everlasting kindness he will have mercy on thee, and will gather thee with all the redeemed.—Earnest Christian.

For the World's Crisis.

LOVING THE TRUTH.

Every honest person loves the truth, wherever found; and when we come into religious things, those who love the truth most will sacrifice most for it.

With this beginning, I wish to offer a few thoughts concerning loving Christ's appearing. In a late paper, Bro. Munger said, "We are a separate people, and must be till the Lord comes." Not till within a few months have I been aware of this fact.

Belief and unbelief, truth and error, cannot be permanently united. We may flatter ourselves that nominal professors love the appearing of the Lord; but soon their actions belie this. Show me a man that has "this gospel of the kingdom," and of the speedy coming of Christ all through him, so that he speaks it, sings it, prays it in all places, whether at Advent campmeetings or Methodist class meetings, at home or abroad, from Sunday morning till Saturday night, and I'll show you a man who cannot remain in the congregations of popular churches.

Again. To those who have suffered reproach for the truths of the Bible, the society of fellow-sufferers is sweeter than any other. This cannot be denied. All who have talked the truth, and plainly confessed Christ and his gospel before men, and consequently been mocked and scoffed, will remember how it used to strengthen their souls to get into some good brother's kitchen, and join with the waiting ones in singing about and praying for the coming of the Just One. O how sweet did that old hymn sound:

"Our bondage it will end, by and by."

Especially this verse:

"Though our enemies are strong,
We'll go on, we'll go on;
Though our hearts do sometimes fear,
Lo! Israel's God is near,
And the fiery pillar moves,
We'll go on, we'll go on."

And the strengthenings of the Holy Spirit received in these meetings, helped them to "go on," through disappointed hopes and various trials, still trusting in and waiting for the Savior.

But now there be some that say they sincerely love this hope, who can be satisfied with the sympathy of those that oppose the truth. I cannot believe they love truth as I love it. What! keep me away from these little gatherings of "two or three," who meet to "comfort one another with these words!" I "forsake the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is"? No, no; not while I see that day approaching; not till I get so cold, or hypocritical, that I can consent to error by my presence, influence and money; not till I learn the foolish and dishonest art of living in darkness, with a light hid under a bushel; not till I am willingly ashamed of Christ and his "words." O may God keep me from thus falling away.

And now another word. The time has come in many places when there are but two classes of professed christians: those who are waiting for the Lord, and those who oppose his coming. In many places a new line has been drawn, straight and plain, and some find themselves very unexpectedly on the wrong side of it. It is nothing for us to say we love the coming of the Lord, love those that are waiting for it, meet with them at their large and most popular meetings,—especially when at home we can mingle with popular churches, because there are no other meetings to attend. But when a few of Christ's little ones establish meetings according to the commands of the Scripture, ah! here comes the test! It always will come, the test will, to try us. Is it not blessed to have a way of knowing whether we are "in the faith" or not? Yea, blessed.

The test comes; then those who love truth less than popularity, the multitude with its error, more than the "little flock" with its last messages of truth, are made manifest. Bless you, it is not the establishment of these meetings that has driven them either way; this has only proved what was in their hearts before, and given them a fair chance for acting it out. That's all.

It is our duty to lend our influence on the side of truth. If I believe God is the only true God, I should hold this truth in unrighteousness were I to support idolators and infidels. It is common honesty and the natural result of natural laws, to mingle with and love things that harmonize with each other. If in us there is a love for music, when we hear the sweet songs of singers, that love is met. And people will go most where they love to go best. If in us there is an inborn love for truth, our souls can never sit and feast and fatten where truth is denounced and error honored. This is absolutely impossible. But you preach this, or write it, and guilty ones and fearful will hate and faint.

Well, God's way is straight, but it leads directly to glory. A few love the narrowness of the thorny path, and bless God for the trials that show them their true conditions. If we would avoid thorns and stumbling stones, let us keep our lamps trimmed and burning, and let us "watch the way."

In a little while we shall get to the end of this drearisome journey, then throwing aside our dusty, toilworn garments, we shall be clothed upon with immortality, and the white robe of Christ's righteousness. O how glad I am for this blessed hope. I love it. It cheers me. It sustains me. I will declare it. I will not be ashamed of it. I will not join hands with those that willfully shut their eyes to it, and oppose. For so doing I should prove ungrateful to the loving Savior that revealed the truth to me.

May God help us to be like those that walk in the daytime. Amen.

THE BIBLE! THE BIBLE! THE BIBLE FOREVER!!

Its Antiquity—Extensive Circulation—Salutary influence on the minds and hearts of individuals, communities and nations—Its open door to civilization, freedom, and religious liberty—The futile attempts of wicked men or devils incarnate to destroy it—The curse that surely follows its rejection, etc.

"Say, would'st thou live? this hallowed book shall tell
Where life's best joys and purest pleasures dwell.
Say, would'st thou die? Consult this sacred lore,
And soar to worlds where sin can harm no more.
Living or dying, this shall soothe each pain,
Whispering, 'To live is Christ, to die is gain.'"

The Bible! what a volume of thought does it suggest! It is by many centuries the oldest book in the world. More than three thousand years ago, the first word of it was written in the desert of Arabia; more than seventeen hundred, the last word was written on the rocky isle of Pathmos. It has been read by more people than all the other books in the world put together. More of it is remembered by men than of all the books that were ever written. It treats of questions of the highest moment to all men; and proposes to reveal that for which the wisest of all ages have sought in vain—the secret of true happiness. The language in which, originally, the larger portion was written, is the oldest in the world. These very letters that pass under my eye are the same as those traced by the finger of God on the tables of stone, amid the thunders and lightning of Mt. Sinai. The language in which the New Testament was written, is the same in which Solon, Plato, and Demosthenes wrote and spoke.

This book has survived the revolutions and changes of three thousand years. It has seen Nineveh, Babylon, Memphis, Thebes, Tyre, Sidon, Carthage, Rome, Athens, and a thousand other cities, rise, flourish, and fall. It has lived amid wars the most bloody; amid desolations the most complete; amid tyranny the most grinding; amid darkness the most profound; amid superstitions the most degrading; amid idolatry the most repulsive; amid blasphemy the most heaven-daring—and has been against all these, the great witness for God.

This book has outlived all the efforts made to shake the faith of man in its revelations, and to banish it from the world. Celsus, Porphyry, Julian, and a host of others, fiercely attacked it in the first ages of the church, but still it lived. Hume, Hobbes, Voltaire, Paine, and many others of the rabble rout of infidelity, in modern times, but still it lives, while its enemies sleep in dishonored graves. This book has laid hold of all classes. The warrior has carried it next his heart in the storm of battle; and often has the bullet aimed at his life, buried itself in the leaves of his Bible. It has been laid upon the throne of the monarch as his safest guide-book in the administration of justice. It has been exalted by the priest in the cathedral, amid solemn chants and penitential confessions of sin. It has been sought by the world's sick for its healing balm; by the hermit in his cell for its consolations; by the poor man for its promise of more than earthly riches; by the homeless wanderer for its promise of a "home in heaven;" by the guilty for its assurance of pardon; by the living for its guiding principles of truth; by the dying for its pass-word into the "heavenly places."

This book has been given to the world in all its babbling tongues. In more than two hundred languages and dialects is it read by a sinful race. It has long been unchained from the high altars of gray old temples, and sent out to all the tribes, nations, and peoples of the world. And yet it can not be supplied fast enough, though a Bible is printed for every minute in the day.

This book has marched at the head of civilization in all ages. It went with the Jews into Palestine, it invaded Greece, Rome, and all the states of the ancient world under the preaching of the first heralds of the truth. Its principles have been at the base of all revolutions that have pushed forward the human race. It was so in Germany, in England, in France, in Scotland, and in our own country. The pilgrims fled to American wilds that they might enjoy the blessings of Bible truth and Bible teachings unmolested and unoppressed by the laws of tyrants.

It was devotedly recognized as a book especially needful for a people struggling for freedom by the fathers of our republic. In the darkest and stormiest hour of the Revolution, when money could hardly be found to pay the starving, naked, and bleeding soldiers of liberty, Congress, in 1777, appointed a committee to confer with the printer, with the view of striking off 30,000 Bibles at the expense of Congress; but it being difficult to obtain paper and type, the committee of commerce were ordered to import at the expense of Congress, 20,000 from Holland, Scotland, and elsewhere. They gave as the reason that its use is so universal and its importance so great. In 1780 Congress appointed a committee to attend to printing an edition of the Bible in Philadelphia, and voted that they highly approved the pious and laudable undertaking as subservient to the interests of religion, and recommend this edition of the Bible to the people of the United States. In eight successive years Congress voted and kept sixteen national feasts and thanksgivings. On the committees which reports these bills, were such men as Gov. Livingstone, of New York, Sherman, of Conn.; Elias Boudinot, and James Madison. Some of these signed the Declaration of Independence, and most of them were engaged in procuring the Constitution, and knew its true spirit.

Thus was the Bible honored by these apostles of freedom. When these children, who enjoy the fruits of their labors, shall cease to cherish it as the palladium of civil and religious liberty—that moment will the nation begin its downward march to ruin. Departing from this blessed book, has been the downfall, the ruin, in all ages.

"We love the book which lighted
The glow of patriot fires,
When freedom was benighted
In the bosom of our sires.
They shed their blood to save us,
And gained our liberty;
But the greatest boon they gave us—
The Bible was made free!"

"This is for your health."—Paul.

MIND AND BODY.

The influence which the mind has in causing, aggravating, and protracting disease, is too often lost sight of by all classes of physicians. Everybody recommends exercise as a means of preserving and regaining health. But to ride a certain length of time, or to walk a specified distance, "for the health," merely for the sake of the health, is almost useless, and is a penance; but if there is the accompaniment of an agreeable associate, or an exhilarating motive, one which lifts up the mind, and absorbs it for the time being, so as to make it wholly forgetful of the bodily condition, as the radical object of the exercise, this is health giving; its effects are always magical, on mind, body, and blood.

Dwelling on trouble; remorse for lost opportunities; the hugging of sharp-pointed memories; moping over slights of friends; feeding on exaggerations or the hardness of our lot; and grieving vainly for unrequited love; all these are known, the world over, as being capable of bringing on slow, painful, and fatal diseases. But it is not so well understood, that great mental emotion sometimes causes maladies which prove fatal in a few days; such maladies as are induced by great physical exposures. It was recently announced that a distinguished French advocate was so excited and exhausted by one of his professional efforts, as to superinduce an attack of pneumonia, (lung fever, or inflammation of the lungs,) of which he died in a few days. Three young ladies were riding in a carriage in St. Louis; the horses ran away; two of the riders escaped from the vehicle, while the third sat still, as composedly as if nothing unusual had taken place; all were astonished at her presence of mind. After she reached her home, she informed her friends that she remained still because the shock, the feeling of horror, was such, that she was, per force, as immoveable as marble; the reaction was such as to cause an inflamation of the bowels, which nothing could remove, and of which she died in a few days.

These facts, with thousands of others like them, prove beyond all cavil, that the mind may be a cause of disease; and the inference is clear, that the state of the mind should be watched. We should guard against cherishing depressing feelings; and with much care, should habituate ourselves to self-control; to the habit of looking at everything of a stirring or harrowing character, with a calm courage; we should strive at all times for that valuable characteristic, "presence of mind," under all circumstances; for we are every day in great need of it; it is, in many cases, a literal "life preserver."—Hall's Journal of Health.

TAKING COLD.

A "cold" is not necessarily the result of low or high temperature. A person may go directly from a hot bath into a cold one, or into snow even, and not take cold. On the contrary, he may take cold by pouring a couple of tablespoonfuls of water upon some part of his dress, or by standing in a door, or before a stove, or sitting near a window or other opening, where one part of the body is colder than another. Let it be kept in mind that uniformity of temperature over the whole body is the first thing to be looked after. It is the unequal heat upon different parts of the body that produces colds, by disturbing the uniform circulation of the blood, which in turn induces congestion of some part. If you must keep a partially wet garment on, it would be as well perhaps to wet the whole of it uniformly. The feet are a great source of colds on account of the variable temperature they are subjected to. Keep these always dry and warm, and avoid draughts of air, hot or cold, wet spots on the garments, and other direct causes of unequal temperature, and keep the system braced up by plenty of sleep, and the eschewing of debilitating foods and drinks, and you will be proof against a cold and its results.—Scientific American.

A TALK WITH WOMEN.

Deformity meets the eye in the persons of our mothers and daughters everywhere. There must be a cause. Nature has formed the body perfect. Wrong education and practice in dress, of course has brought it about. Upon observation it will be noticed that the greater part of women, young ladies especially, fill the upper part of the lungs with air, while the lower lungs are not expanded and filled with air often enough to keep them in a healthy condition.

The lungs alone do not suffer, the heart and abdomen are pressed, and other organs weakened in consequence. What a state of things is thus brought about! Yes, alarming, if considered in the light of truth. The young lady may say, in order to fill the lower lungs with air, my corset must be loosened and dresses made larger. Well this is easily done. But I shall get vulgarly large. Let the body enlarge, and your mind and intellect will become ennobled, when such reasons will make you ashamed.

There are dahlias in the yard, some have large round flowers upon the stalk, others come out imperfectly; any person would not be long deciding which of the flowers were the most beautiful to look upon. Thus it is with the human form; in its perfect development it presents beauty to the intelligent eye and mind, while the contracted body is anything but beautiful to the eye of one who understands the fearful consequences.

The time has come when we need not be ignorant of these things—if ignorant it will be a willful ignorance, as light upon this very point has been given for some time by noble minds; and yet how insensible and unmoved the mass of our women remain upon a subject which so much concerns the life, health, and happiness of the present and future life, as we are accountable to our Creator for the manner in which we treat the body.—Health Reformer.

CLEANLINESS.

Cleanliness is akin to godliness," it is said. It is not less closely related to gentility. First of all, then, keep yourself scrupulously clean—not your hands and face merely, but your whole person, from the crown of your head to the sole of your foot. Silk stockings may hide dirty feet and ankles from the eye, but they often reveal themselves to another sense, when the possessor little dreams of such an exposure. It is far better to dress coarsely and out of fashion, and be strictly clean, than to cover a dirty skin with the finest and richest clothing. A coarse shirt, or a calico dress, is not necessarily vulgar, but dirt is essentially so. We do not here refer, of course, to one's condition while engaged in his or her industrial occupation. Soiled hands, and even a begrimed face, are badges of honor in the field, the work-shop, or the kitchen, but in a country in which soap and water abound, there is no excuse for carrying them into the parlor or the dining-room.

A clean skin is as essential to health, beauty, and personal comfort, as it is to decency, and without health, and that perfect freedom from physical disquiet which comes only from the normal action of all the functions of the bodily organs, your behavior can never be satisfactory to yourself or agreeable to others—Selected.

BREATHING THRO' THE MOUTH.

Any person, with a little practice, can breathe as slow through the nose as through the mouth, but no one should occupy more than from five to ten seconds in inhaling. They can expand the lungs to as great an extent in that time as they can if they are from one to two minutes in doing it, and if a person only breathes once in two or three minutes, as some do not while practicing, the lungs can not receive a sufficient quantity of air to purify the blood, and the individual must suffer. In striving to cultivate the lungs by breathing exercises, endeavor to fill them to their utmost capacity, but do not try to see how long you can be in doing it, or how long you can hold your breath. Remember that you must breathe while cultivating the lungs, as as well as other times.—Herald of Health.

NERVOUS HEADACHES.

One of the principal causes, is the use of tea, coffee, spirituous liquors and tobacco. Undue mental exertion, loss of sleep, constipation of the bowels, torpidity of the liver, skin, etc., are prominent among the causes of this disease. The remedy consists in removing the cause, whatever it may be. If habituated to the use of tea, coffee, alcohol or tobacco, quit them at once. Avoid much mental exertion, take an abundance of outdoor exercise, bathe frequently but not in very cold water, eat temperately of plain, healthful food, avoiding spices, condiments, rich cake, pastry, etc., and obey all the laws of health.—Ibid.

MORNING WALKS.

About the middle of the forenoon is the best time for walking or exercise of any kind. The system is then in its best condition. A short walk or other moderate exercise before breakfast is beneficial, but it is not the best time for severe exertion. The distance which persons in moderate health should walk depends upon their strength, endurance and other bodily conditions. It should never be continued so as to produce pain, soreness of the muscles, or fatigue from which the system cannot fully recover by an hour's rest.—Ibid.

MAN'S BEST DRINK.—Water, pure and unmixed, is, beyond all question, the best and only natural drink of man, as it is the only drink of every other living being. It should be drank only when nature calls for it by the feeling of thirst, and then slowly and temperately, until the thirst is quenched. Follow the example of the animal creation, and do not stop eating to wash the food down with water. If man would live entirely upon fruits, which make the purest and best food, he would feel no thirst, and need no drink. The juices of the fruits would supply a sufficient quantity of water in its purest possible form.—Ibid.

LIGHT.—Light is a great purifier of the air, and causes life and vitality to spring up anew. Thus light also works on you. It makes you more active and more healthy.

'TIS SWEET TO SUFFER WHEN CHRIST IS NEAR.

Few the days that are all sunshine,
Clouds arise and shadows fall;
Everywhere the darkness cometh—
Light and shade belong to all;
So with life—how few that find not
Shadows oft along the way;
Trials meet the high and honored,
Often with the lowly stay;
But, through all the shade and trial,
Faith in God removes each fear;
Then 'tis sweet, yes, sweet to suffer,
For we know that Christ is near.

Few the paths that have no danger,
Cares and pitfalls here and there;
Or to-day we may be breathing
Poison from the very air.
Turn to where the earth is brightest,
Search there for some calm retreat,
There, in that bright vision resting,
Pain and sorrow you may meet;
But to every lowly spirit
Jesus whispers, "dry each tear";
Then 'tis sweet—yes, sweet to suffer,
For they know that Christ is near.

Few the homes that know no sorrow—
Few unbroken circles here;
Few the joys that meet no blighting
Through a single fleeting year;
Few the hearts that know no sadness
In this changing world of ours;
Hopes must yield to disappointments,
Chilling oft life's fairest flowers;
But the christian hears a whisper—
"I am with you, do not fear."
Then 'tis sweet, yes, sweet to suffer,
For he knows that Christ is near.

But how saddening and how cheerless,
While the earthly hopes are riven,
Still to pass each painful conflict
Without sympathy from heaven!
Oh! I turn to thee, my Father,
Turn my heart and eyes alone,
Grateful that in each fierce trial
I may know that "God is love."
Let me hear the cheering promise—
"I am with you, do not fear";
Then 'tis sweet, yes, sweet to suffer,
For I know that Christ is near.

ALLOCUTION OF HIS HOLINESS, POPE PIUS IX.

READ IN SECRET CONSISTORY, OCT. 29, 1866.

Venerable Brethren.—More than once, O venerable brethren, while filling our apostolic office, we have deplored, as well in our published letters, as in divers allocutions, delivered in your most noble assembly, the affliction which has long weighed upon the affairs of our most holy religion in Italy, and the grave insults that we, and the apostolical see, have suffered from the sub-alpine government. You can therefore comprehend the grief that has taken possession of us to see this government, with a passion daily increasing, incessantly attack the Catholic church, her salutary laws, and all her holy ministers; when we see, alas! venerable bishops and clergy of the greatest integrity of different orders, as well as the most virtuous Catholic citizens, sent into exile by this government, without regard for religion, justice, or humanity, or thrown into prison, or condemned to a forced residence and molested in the most infamous manner; the dioceses deprived of their pastors to the great prejudice of souls; virgins, consecrated to God, expelled from their convents and reduced to beggary; the temples of God violated; the diocesan seminaries closed to the clergy; the Catholic youth removed from christian discipline and confided to teachers of error and iniquity, and the patrimony of the church usurped and sold.

This same government, to the scorn of the censured ecclesiastics, and without regard to our most just complaints, and those of our venerable brethren the bishops of Italy, has sanctioned the like laws, which are entirely contrary to the Catholic church, to her doctrine and her rights, and is by us condemned, and has not hesitated to promulgate a law touching civil marriage, as it is called—a law not only entirely contrary to Catholic doctrine, but also to the well-being of civil society. Such a law tramples under foot the dignity and the sanctity of marriage; it destroys the institution; it encourages a concubinage entirely shameful. In fact, there can be no such thing as marriage among the faithful, unless there is at the same time a sacrament. Thus the power to decree whatever concerns the sacrament of marriage, pertains entirely to the church.

Furthermore, this government, injuring in an evident manner the condition of public profession of religious vows, which has had and always will have force in the church of God; and regardless of the great benefits of the regular orders, that, founded by holy men and approved by the holy, apostolical see, have admirably merited of the christian, civil, and literary republic, by so many glorious fatigues and works of piety and usefulness; has not feared to sanction a law suppressing in all countries of his domain all religious corporations of both sexes, and to appropriate all their estates, and much other property of the church, and has ordained its distribution. Before entering into possession of the Venetian province, he did not hesitate to extend to that country the same laws, and prescribed, contrary to all law and all right, the entire destruction and abolition of the convention stipulated by us with our dear son in Jesus Christ, Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria.

We, therefore, faithful to the great duty of our apostolic ministry, raise our voice anew in your most noble assembly in favor of religion, of the church, of her holy laws, of the right to authority of this throne of St. Peter; and with might we deplore and reprove all and each of the things that, contrary to the church, her laws and rights, have been decreed, done and attempted by the sub-alpine government and by all other subordinate authority; and by our apostolic authority we abrogate and proclaim null and without effect, force, or value, all the said decrees, and all that pertains to them.

We compel thus their authors, who glory in the name of christian, to call to mind and consider seriously that they have unfortunately incurred the censures and spiritual penalty inflicted by the apostolic constitution and the decrees of the ecumenical councils against whoever attacks the rights of the church.

We know, venerable brethren, that certain astucious persons combat us, and interpret in their own sense our benediction upon Italy, when, without any personal merit, assuredly, but through the impenetrable grace of God, we pronounced words of pardon and peace by reason of our love for the population of the pontifical States. Indeed, full of solicitude for the happiness and felicity of the entire flock, demanding by our prayers to God the good of Italy, we have prayed with fervor and humility that he would deliver her from the evils that threaten her, and that the precious gift of the Catholic faith may be all-powerful in Italy, and that good morals, justice, and all the christian virtues may flourish more than ever. We still cease not to address the most fervent prayers to God, that in his mercy he would preserve the Catholic population of Italy from so many and so great calamities of all kinds that oppress and assail them, by the fault of the governors of Italy, and from a multiform persecution. But above all, we supplicate the merciful Savior to aid and fortify, by his heavenly assistance, the Italian people, that they may remain firm and unshaken in the divine faith and in their religion, and that with christian fortitude they may endure and support so many adversities and evils.

Nevertheless they are mad who infer, and who cease not to demand of us, already despoiled with the most manifest injustice of many provinces of our pontifical domain, that we renounce our civil sovereignty and that of the apostolic see. Surely every one can see that such a demand is unjust and prejudicial to the church.

By a strange volition of divine providence, as we have said once before, it has happened that the Roman empire having fallen and being divided into many kingdoms and into different States, the Roman Pontiff, in such a great variety of kingdoms, and in the actual state of human society, was invested with civil sovereignty, by means of which, never being subjected to any laical power, he exercises in all liberty the supreme authority of his jurisdiction upon the church divinely confessed by our Savior Jesus Christ. And the faithful, with tranquility of conscience, and in entire obedience to the decrees, admonitions and mandates of the pontiff, have abandoned themselves, unable to conceive that his acts would be subjected to the will and impulses of any sovereign or of any civil power.

We can not relinquish the civil power established by the divine wisdom of providence for the good of the church universal; on the contrary we ought to defend this government and protect the rights of this civil power; and we complain forcibly of the sacrilegious usurpation of the provinces of the holy see, as we have already done, and as we do now anew, we complain and protest according to the best of our ability.

All the world admit that the Catholic bishops have never ceased to combat with zeal, as well by voice as writing, in favor of our civil sovereignty and that of this holy see; and all have proclaimed that this sovereignty is absolutely necessary, especially in the present condition of affairs of the world, to establish and defend the full liberty of the Roman pontiff in feeding all the Catholic flock, a liberty closely connected with that of the whole church.

These same men fear not to cry everywhere that we ought to become reconciled with Italy, that is to say with the enemies of our religion, who boast of establishing Italy. But how can we, the champions and avengers of the most holy religion and the salutary doctrine of virtue and justice, who should watch over the safety of all, walk in harmony with those who, maintaining not sound doctrine, and refusing to bear the truth, withdraw from us—those who will not condescend to our desires, neither do justice as we demand, to the effect that the many dioceses of Italy, now deprived of consolation and pastoral care, may have their bishops restored to them?

Would to heaven that all those who so strongly combat the church, us, and the apostolic see, would turn their regard and their souls to truth and justice, become enlightened for once, returning to themselves, and, providing for the good of their souls, strive by salutary repentance to return to us!

Nothing would be more agreeable to us than to meet them according to the example of the Father in the Gospel, and embrace them, congratulating ourselves that his children were dead and are alive again, were lost and are found. It would then be seen that our august religion, the prolific mother and nurse of all virtue, and the scourge of all vice, leads as well to individual felicity as to the public good of all.

There, in fact, where religion and its salutary doctrine prevail, flourish, necessarily, good morals, integrity, peace, justice, charity, and all the virtues. There the people are not attacked by the grave evils that unfortunately crush them wherever religion and its doctrines are disregarded.

By these deplorable facts, recounted summarily and with sorrow, and by sad cotemporary events in Italy, the whole world can easily see and divine to what peril this apostolical see is exposed, and how it is a mark for the harsh menaces of rebellion, for the hatred of the unbelieving, and the wrath of the enemies of the cross of Christ.

From all parts resound continually furious voices, that infuriated enemies do not cease to echo, declaring that this city of Rome ought to participate in the baleful Italian perturbation and rebellion, and even become its chief seat. But God, rich in mercy, can render abortive the councils and impious desires of our enemies. He will never permit this noble city, so dear to us, where, by his great and peculiar benefaction he has placed the throne of St. Peter, the impregnable foundation of his faith and divine religion, to return to the unhappy condition so faithfully described by our holy predecessor, Leo the Great,* when for the first time the blessed prince of apostles entered this city, then mistress of the world.

As to ourselves, though deprived of nearly all human assistance, yet, faithful to our mission, and entirely confident of the assistance of the Almighty, we are ready to wrestle without fear, even to peril our life for the cause of the church, divinely confided to us by our Savior Jesus Christ, and, if need be, to remove wherever we can best exercise our supreme apostolic ministry.

And as, in such a horrible tempest, the best and only support should be prayer, we address all the venerable brethren and bishops of the whole catholic world, and all the children of the holy mother church, who have never ceased to lavish on us the clearest evidence of love and respect, and to come to our aid in our very grave trials and those of the holy see; and we implore them to offer more and more, unceasing and fervent prayers to God for the defeat of the enemies of the church, and their return to the path of salvation. For, to use the words of Chrysostom,† prayers are a powerful arm, a great security, a rich treasure, an excellent harbor, a sure asylum, provided that, attentive and vigilant, we present ourselves before the Savior with collected mind, and without leaving any access to the enemy of our salvation.

In the midst of the great suffering which we endure, we have strong consolation, knowing that God performs marvellous prodigies when his church has no human succor, which manifest most clearly his omnipotence and divine hand, confirming the truth that the gates of hell shall never prevail against the church, which shall always remain unmoved, triumphant over her enemies till the end of the world. But it is exceedingly grievous that it is not precisely decided that a nation should conserve always the precious treasure of our faith and our religion.

There are, indeed, many nations who have kept with fidelity the faith entrusted to them, and the discipline of morals. Alas! they are detached from this stone, upon which reposes the edifice of the church, and separate from him, to whom is given the power to confirm the brethren, and to feed the sheep and the lambs, having no understanding among themselves, and enveloped in the darkness of error, they are in great peril in regard to their situation.

And here we cannot abstain, by reason of our mission, from adjuring warmly, in the name of the Savior, all sovereigns and other rulers of the nations to examine for once, and consider well their grave obligation to endeavor to increase among the nations love and respect for religion, and to use all their power to prevent the flambeau of the faith from being extinguished among the people.

Woe then to those rulers, who, forgetting that they are the ministers of God for good, shall forget to aid this worship whenever they can and ought. It is for them to fear and tremble when, by their own special work, they destroy the precious treasure of the catholic faith, without which it is impossible to please God. When they appear, called to a severe judgment, before the tribunal of Christ, they will see what a terrible thing it is to bear the displeasure of the living God, and experience his stern justice.

In the end, we cannot doubt, venerable brethren, witnesses and associates of our labors, appreciating as we do your excellent religion, your piety, and your intense love for Catholicism, that you will unite your fervent prayers with ours, and those of all the church, and implore continually the Father of mercies, through the merits of his only Son, our Savior, Jesus Christ, that he will have pity on Italy, on all Europe, and on the whole world, and that by his divine omnipotence he will cause that, after the destruction of all error, and the cessation of bitterness and perturbation, the holy church may enjoy perfect liberty and peace; that human society may be delivered from the many evils that it is experiencing, and that all nations may coalesce in the unity of the faith, and the recognition of his Son, and walk in the way of the Lord, manifesting their faith by all good works.

BRO. GRANT:—Time will not permit me to comment on the Allocution I send you. I suppose it is unnecessary, the document is so full of madness, in itself such a striking accomplishment of prophecy. None can fail to see by it that his temporal power is at an end.

"BIND THE SACRIFICE WITH CORDS."

The apostle exhorts us to present our bodies a living sacrifice. "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Heb. 12: 1.

If the sacrifice were not a living one, it would not need to be bound, as it could not move from where it was placed. But many can testify from experience, that after having laid all on the altar, and obtained assurance that the sacrifice was accepted, they have lost that assurance, and with it the "perfect peace" which those enjoy whose minds are stayed on God. Isa. 26: 3.

If any who read this desire to obtain or regain that perfect peace, please turn to the twelfth chapter of Hebrews, and read, and ponder, and dwell upon the chosen words of inspiration, the words of life, and peace, and truth. And as you read, obey. And when you are satisfied that you have laid all on the altar, turn to the 118th Psalm, and read that attentively. In the 27th verse you will read, "God is the LORD, which hath showed us light: bind the sacrifice with cords, even unto the horns of the altar." It may be a profitable study for you, to learn how the sacrifice is to be bound, and who is to do that work. If you can discover any way by which you can do it, go on and do the work. But if you cannot find any way by which you can bind the sacrifice, use these words as a prayer, and say, Lord, "bind the sacrifice with cords, even unto the horns of the altar."

When all is done, you may not feel just as you want to, or just as you expected to. But if you heartily love every body, even your worst enemy, or the most disagreeable person your know of, you have good grounds for assurance. To love the Lord with all the heart, and our neighbor as ourself, is to be perfect in love. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

SHOWING HOW A CHRISTIAN MAY MAKE HIS LIFE COMFORTABLE.

It shows how a christian may come to lead a comfortable life, even a heaven upon earth, be the times what they will; viz., by christian contentment. Prov. 15: 3. The comforts of life do not stand in having much. It is Christ's maxim,—"Man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things which he doth possess" (Luke 12: 15), but it is in being contented. Is not the bee as well contented with the feeding on the dew, or sucking from a flower, as the ox that grazeth on the mountains? Contentment lies within a man, in the heart; and the way to be comfortable is, not by having our barns filled, but our minds quiet. "The contented man," saith Seneca, "is the happy man." Discontent is a fretting humor, which dries the brains, wastes the spirits, corrodes and eats out the comfort of life. Discontent makes a man that he doth not enjoy what he doth possess. A drop or two of vinegar will sour a whole glass of wine. Let a man have the affluence and confluence of worldly comforts, a drop or two of discontent will embitter and poison all. Comfort depends upon contentment. Jacob went halting, when the sinew upon the hollow of his thigh shrank; so when the sinew of contentment begins to shrink, we go halting in our comforts.

Contentment is as necessary to keep the life comfortable, as oil is necessary to keep the lamp burning; the clouds of discontent do often drop the showers of tears. Would we have comfort in our lives, be content. Why dost thou complain of thy troubles? It is not trouble that troubles, but discontent; it is not the water without the ship, but the water that gets within the leak, which drowns it. It is not outward affliction that can make the life of a christian sad; a contented mind would sail above these waters: but when there's a leak of discontent open, and trouble gets into the heart, then it is disquieted, and sinks.

"THY WILL BE DONE."

My God, my Father, while I stray
Far from thy home on life's rough way,
Oh, teach me from my heart to say,
"Thy will be done!"

What though in lonely grief I sigh
For friends beloved no longer nigh?
Submissive still would I reply—
"Thy will be done!"

If thou shouldst call me to resign
What most I prize,—it ne'er was mine;
I only yield thee what is thine:
"Thy will be done!"

If but my fainting heart be blest
With thy sweet spirit for its guest,
My God, to thee I leave the rest:
"Thy will be done!"

Renew my will from day to day;
Blend it with thine, and take away
Whatever makes it hard to say,
"Thy will be done!"

Then when on earth I breathe no more
The prayer oft mixed with tears before,
I'll sing upon a happier shore:
"Thy will be done!"

FAITHFUL.

God lets me see so much comprehended in this one word, that it moves my entire being into intense desire to be numbered with the hosts that, bearing this character, shall stand at last before the throne.

In a revival, the testimony of the converts almost invariably closes with—"Pray for me, that I may hold out faithful." Well they may! Alas! that so few should feel the importance of their request. I am constrained to ask God to make this cry a real, earnest one of the Spirit in each heart; for some use the word because it is customary.

All know, but do not realize, that faithful in this war, means unto the end. The command is, "Be thou faithful unto death." Soldiers of the cross can have no honorable discharge, except by death; all who leave the ranks otherwise do so by desertion.

We are continually to commit our souls unto God, as unto a faithful Creator; for we have a live devil to combat with, full of energy and all subtlety; and although we are not ignorant of his devices, who of us shall dare live without great watching unto prayer?

The path of the faithful lies through deep tribulation; the landmarks that guide the pilgrim are the footsteps of the King of saints, leading through the wilderness, the parched desert, into the Gethsemane of suffering, to the judgment hall and to the cross. As we suffer with him, being crucified to the world and the flesh, we share in his glorious resurrection, being quickened together with him: this is our portion; a direct inheritance from Him who was "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief"; who "was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities."

Before us goes the prince of the power of darkness, endeavoring to obstruct our passage; but as we pass along, we find .... that the thorns have no power to tear the flesh; the lions, though they may leap at us and gnash their teeth, if we but hold fast the shield of faith, have no power to overcome us....

Cheer up then, pilgrims. Hath he hid his face from thee for a moment? Know, then, that with everlasting kindness he will have mercy on thee, and will gather thee with all the redeemed.—Earnest Christian.

For the World's Crisis.

LOVING THE TRUTH.

Every honest person loves the truth, wherever found; and when we come into religious things, those who love the truth most will sacrifice most for it.

With this beginning, I wish to offer a few thoughts concerning loving Christ's appearing. In a late paper, Bro. Munger said, "We are a separate people, and must be till the Lord comes." Not till within a few months have I been aware of this fact.

Belief and unbelief, truth and error, cannot be permanently united. We may flatter ourselves that nominal professors love the appearing of the Lord; but soon their actions belie this. Show me a man that has "this gospel of the kingdom," and of the speedy coming of Christ all through him, so that he speaks it, sings it, prays it in all places, whether at Advent campmeetings or Methodist class meetings, at home or abroad, from Sunday morning till Saturday night, and I'll show you a man who cannot remain in the congregations of popular churches.

Again. To those who have suffered reproach for the truths of the Bible, the society of fellow-sufferers is sweeter than any other. This cannot be denied. All who have talked the truth, and plainly confessed Christ and his gospel before men, and consequently been mocked and scoffed, will remember how it used to strengthen their souls to get into some good brother's kitchen, and join with the waiting ones in singing about and praying for the coming of the Just One. O how sweet did that old hymn sound:

"Our bondage it will end, by and by."

Especially this verse:

"Though our enemies are strong,
We'll go on, we'll go on;
Though our hearts do sometimes fear,
Lo! Israel's God is near,
And the fiery pillar moves,
We'll go on, we'll go on."

And the strengthenings of the Holy Spirit received in these meetings, helped them to "go on," through disappointed hopes and various trials, still trusting in and waiting for the Savior.

But now there be some that say they sincerely love this hope, who can be satisfied with the sympathy of those that oppose the truth. I cannot believe they love truth as I love it. What! keep me away from these little gatherings of "two or three," who meet to "comfort one another with these words"? I "forsake the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is"? No, no; not while I see that day approaching; not till I get so cold, or hypocritical, that I can assent to error by my presence, influence and money; not till I learn the foolish and dishonest art of living in darkness, with a light hid under a bushel; not till I am willingly ashamed of Christ and his "words." O may God keep me from thus falling away.

And now another word. The time has come in many places when there are but two classes of professed christians: those who are waiting for the Lord, and those who oppose his coming. In many places a new line has been drawn, straight and plain, and some find themselves very unexpectedly on the wrong side of it. It is nothing for us to say we love the coming of the Lord, love those that are waiting for it, meet with them at their large and most popular meetings,—especially when at home we can mingle with popular churches, because there are no other meetings to attend. But when a few of Christ's little ones establish meetings according to the commands of the Scriptures, ah! here comes the test! It always will come, the test will, to try us. Is it not blessed to have a way of knowing whether we are "in the faith" or not? Yes, blessed.

The test comes; then those who love truth less than popularity, the multitude with its error, more than the "little flock" with its last messages of truth, are made manifest. Bless you, it is not the establishment of these meetings that has driven them either way; this has only proved what was in their hearts before, and given them a fair chance for acting it out. That's all.

It is our duty to lend our influence on the side of truth. If I believe God is the only true God, I should hold this truth in unrighteousness were I to support idolators and infidels. It is common honesty and the natural result of natural laws, to mingle with and love things that harmonize with each other. If in us there is a love for music, when we hear the sweet songs of singers, that love is met. And people will go most where they love to go best. If in us there is an inborn love for truth, our souls can never sit and feast and fatten where truth is denounced and error honored. This is absolutely impossible. But you preach this, or write it, and guilty ones and fearful will hate and faint.

Well, God's way is straight, but it leads directly to glory. A few love the narrowness of the thorny path, and bless God for the trials that show them their true conditions. If we would avoid thorns and stumbling stones, let us keep our lamps trimmed and burning, and let us "watch the way."

In a little while we shall get to the end of this drearisome journey, then throwing aside our dusty, toilworn garments, we shall be clothed upon with immortality, and the white robe of Christ's righteousness. O how glad I am for this blessed hope. I love it. It cheers me. It sustains me. I will declare it. I will not be ashamed of it. I will not join hands with those that willfully shut their eyes to it, and oppose. For so doing I should prove ungrateful to the loving Savior that revealed the truth to me.

May God help us to be like those that walk in the daytime. Amen.

THE BIBLE! THE BIBLE! THE BIBLE FOREVER!!

Its Antiquity—Extensive Circulation—Salutary influence on the minds and hearts of individuals, communities and nations—Its open door to civilization, freedom, and religious liberty—The futile attempts of wicked men or devils incarnate to destroy it—The curse that surely follows its rejection, etc.

"Say, would'st thou live? this hallowed book shall tell
Where life's best joys and purest pleasures dwell.
Say, would'st thou die? Consult this sacred lore,
And soar to worlds where sin can harm no more.
Living or dying, this shall soothe each pain,
Whispering, "To live is Christ, to die is gain."

The Bible! what a volume of thought does it suggest! It is by many centuries the oldest book in the world. More than three thousand years ago, the first word of it was written in the desert of Arabia; more than seventeen hundred, the last word was written on the rocky isle of Patmos. It has been read by more people than all the other books in the world put together. More of it is remembered by men than of all the books that were ever written. It treats of questions of the highest moment to all men; and proposes to reveal that for which the wisest of all ages have sought in vain—the secret of true happiness. The language in which, originally, the larger portion was written, is the oldest in the world. These very letters that pass under my eye are the same as those traced by the finger of God on the tables of stone, amid the thunders and lightning of Mt. Sinai. The language in which the New Testament was written, is the same in which Solon, Plato, and Demosthenes wrote and spoke.

This book has survived the revolutions and changes of three thousand years. It has seen Nineveh, Babylon, Memphis, Thebes, Tyre, Sidon, Carthage, Rome, Athens, and a thousand other cities, rise, flourish, and fall. It has lived amid wars the most bloody; amid desolations the most complete; amid tyranny the most grinding; amid darkness the most profound; amid superstitions the most degrading; amid idolatry the most repulsive; amid blasphemy the most heaven-daring—and has been against all these, the great witness for God.

This book has outlived all the efforts made to shake the faith of man in its revelations, and to banish it from the world. Celsus, Porphyry, Julian, and a host of others, fiercely attacked it in the first ages of the church, but still it lived. Hume, Hobbes, Voltaire, Paine, and many others of the rabble rout of infidelity, in modern times, but still it lives, while its enemies sleep in dishonored graves. This book has laid hold of all classes. The warrior has carried it next his heart in the storm of battle; and often has the bullet aimed at his life, buried itself in the leaves of his Bible. It has been laid upon the throne of the monarch as his safest guide-book in the administration of justice. It has been exalted by the priest in the cathedral, amid solemn chants and penitential confessions of sin. It has been sought by the world's sick for its healing balm; by the hermit in his cell for its consolations; by the poor man for its promise of more than earthly riches; by the homeless wanderer for its promise of a "home in heaven;" by the guilty for its assurance of pardon; by the living for its guiding principles of truth; by the dying for its pass-word into the "heavenly places."

This book has been given to the world in all its babbling tongues. In more than two hundred languages and dialects is it read by a sinful race. It has long been unchained from the high altars of gray old temples, and sent out to all the tribes, nations, and peoples of the world. And yet it can not be supplied fast enough, though a Bible is printed for every minute in the day.

This book has marched at the head of civilization in all ages. It went with the Jews into Palestine, it invaded Greece, Rome, and all the states of the ancient world under the preaching of the first heralds of the truth. Its principles have been at the base of all revelations that have pushed forward the human race. It was so in Germany, in England, in France, in Scotland, and in our own country. The pilgrims fled to American wilds that they might enjoy the blessings of Bible truth and Bible teachings unmolested and unoppressed by the laws of tyrants.

It was devotedly recognized as a book especially needful for a people struggling for freedom by the fathers of our republic. In the darkest and stormiest hour of the Revolution, when money could hardly be found to pay the starving, naked, and bleeding soldiers of liberty, Congress, in 1777, appointed a committee to confer with the printer, with the view of striking off 30,000 Bibles at the expense of Congress; but it being difficult to obtain paper and type, the committee of commerce were ordered to import at the expense of Congress, 20,000 from Holland, Scotland, and elsewhere. They gave as the reason that its use is so universal and its importance so great. In 1780 Congress appointed a committee to attend to printing an edition of the Bible in Philadelphia, and voted that they highly approved the pious and laudable undertaking as subservient to the interests of religion, and recommend this edition of the Bible to the people of the United States. In eight successive years Congress voted and kept sixteen national feasts and thanksgivings. On the committees which reports these bills, were such men as Gov. Livingstone, of New York, Sherman, of Conn.; Elias Boudinot, and James Madison. Some of these signed the Declaration of Independence, and most of them were engaged in procuring the Constitution, and knew its true spirit.

Thus was the Bible honored by these apostles of freedom. When these children, who enjoy the fruits of their labors, shall cease to cherish it as the palladium of civil and religious liberty—that moment will the nation begin its downward march to ruin. Departing from this blessed book, has been the downfall, the ruin, in all ages.

"We love the book which lighted
The glow of patriot fires,
When freedom was benighted
In the bosom of our sires.
They shed their blood to save us,
And gained our liberty,
But the greatest boon they gave us—
The Bible was made free!"

"This is for your health."—Paul.

MIND AND BODY.

The influence which the mind has in causing, aggravating, and protracting disease, is too often lost sight of by all classes of physicians. Everybody recommends exercise as a means of preserving and regaining health. But to ride a certain length of time, or to walk a specified distance, "for the health," merely for the sake of the health, is almost useless, and is a penance; but if there is the accompaniment of an agreeable associate, or an exhilarating motive, one which lifts up the mind, and absorbs it for the time being, so as to make it wholly forgetful of the bodily condition, as the radical object of the exercise, this is health giving; its effects are always magical, on mind, body, and blood.

Dwelling on trouble; remorse for lost opportunities; the hugging of sharp-pointed memories; moping over slights of friends; feeding on exaggerations or the hardness of our lot; and grieving vainly for unrequited love; all these are known, the world over, as being capable of bringing on slow, painful, and fatal diseases. But it is not so well understood, that great mental emotion sometimes causes maladies which prove fatal in a few days; such maladies as are induced by great physical exposures. It was recently announced that a distinguished French advocate was so excited and exhausted by one of his professional efforts, as to superinduce an attack of pneumonia, (lung fever, or inflammation of the lungs,) of which he died in a few days. Three young ladies were riding in a carriage in St. Louis; the horses ran away; two of the riders escaped from the vehicle, while the third sat still, as composedly as if nothing unusual had taken place; all were astonished at her presence of mind. After she reached her home, she informed her friends that she remained still because the shock, the feeling of horror, was such, that she was, per force, as immoveable as marble; the reaction was such as to cause an inflamation of the bowels, which nothing could remove, and of which she died in a few days.

These facts, with thousands of others like them, prove beyond all cavil, that the mind may be a cause of disease; and the inference is clear, that the state of the mind should be watched. We should guard against cherishing depressing feelings; and with much care, should habituate ourselves to self-control; to the habit of looking at everything of a stirring or harrowing character, with a calm courage; we should strive at all times for that valuable characteristic, "presence of mind," under all circumstances; for we are every day in great need of it; it is, in many cases, a literal "life preserver."—Hall's Journal of Health.

TAKING COLD.

A "cold" is not necessarily the result of low or high temperature. A person may go directly from a hot bath into a cold one, or into snow even, and not take cold. On the contrary, he may take cold by pouring a couple of tablespoonfuls of water upon some part of his dress, or by standing in a door, or before a stove, or sitting near a window or other opening, where one part of the body is colder than another. Let it be kept in mind that uniformity of temperature over the whole body is the first thing to be looked after. It is the unequal heat upon different parts of the body that produces colds, by disturbing the uniform circulation of the blood, which in turn induces congestion of some part. If you must keep a partially wet garment on, it would be as well perhaps to wet the whole of it uniformly. The feet are a great source of colds on account of the variable temperature they are subjected to. Keep these always dry and warm, and avoid draughts of air, hot or cold, wet spots on the garments, and other direct causes of unequal temperature, and keep the system braced up by plenty of sleep, and the eschewing of debilitating foods and drinks, and you will be proof against a cold and its results.—Scientific American.

A TALK WITH WOMEN.

Deformity meets the eye in the persons of our mothers and daughters everywhere. There must be a cause. Nature has formed the body perfect. Wrong education and practice in dress, of course has brought it about. Upon observation it will be noticed that the greater part of women, young ladies especially, fill the upper part of the lungs with air, while the lower lungs are not expanded and filled with air often enough to keep them in a healthy condition.

The lungs alone do not suffer, the heart and abdomen are pressed, and other organs weakened in consequence. What a state of things is thus brought about! Yes, alarming, if considered in the light of truth. The young lady may say, in order to fill the lower lungs with air, my corset must be loosened and dresses made larger. Well this is easily done. But I shall get vulgarly large. Let the body enlarge, and your mind and intellect will become ennobled, when such reasons will make you ashamed.

There are dahlias in the yard, some have large round flowers upon the stalk, others come out imperfectly; any person would not be long deciding which of the flowers were the most beautiful to look upon. Thus it is with the human form; in its perfect development it presents beauty to the intelligent eye and mind, while the contracted body is anything but beautiful to the eye of one who understands the fearful consequences.

The time has come when we need not be ignorant of these things—if ignorant it will be a willful ignorance, as light upon this very point has been given for some time by noble minds; and yet how insensible and unmoved the mass of our women remain upon a subject which so much concerns the life, health, and happiness of the present and future life, as we are accountable to our Creator for the manner in which we treat the body.—Health Reformer.

CLEANLINESS.

"Cleanliness is akin to godliness," it is said. It is not less closely related to gentility. First of all, then, keep yourself scrupulously clean—not your hands and face merely, but your whole person, from the crown of your head to the sole of your foot. Silk stockings may hide dirty feet and ankles from the eye, but they often reveal themselves to another sense, when the possessor little dreams of such an exposure. It is far better to dress coarsely and out of fashion, and be strictly clean, than to cover a dirty skin with the finest and richest clothing. A coarse shirt, or a calico dress, is not necessarily vulgar, but dirt is essentially so. We do not here refer, of course, to one's condition while engaged in his or her industrial occupation. Soiled hands, and even a begrimed face, are badges of honor in the field, the work-shop, or the kitchen; but in a country in which soap and water abound, there is no excuse for carrying them into the parlor or the dining-room.

A clean skin is as essential to health, beauty, and personal comfort, as it is to decency; and without health, and that perfect freedom from physical disquiet which comes only from the normal action of all the functions of the bodily organs, your behavior can never be satisfactory to yourself or agreeable to others.—Selected.

BREATHING THRO' THE MOUTH.

Any person, with a little practice, can breathe as slow through the nose as through the mouth, but no one should occupy more than from five to ten seconds in inhaling. They can expand the lungs to as great an extent in that time as they can if they are from one to two minutes in doing it, and if a person only breathes once in two or three minutes, as some do while practicing, the lungs can not receive a sufficient quantity of air to purify the blood, and the individual must suffer. In striving to cultivate the lungs by breathing exercises, endeavor to fill them to their utmost capacity, but do not try to see how long you can be in doing it, or how long you can hold your breath. Remember that you must breathe while cultivating the lungs, as well as other times.—Herald of Health.

NERVOUS HEADACHES.

One of the principal causes, is the use of tea, coffee, spirituous liquors and tobacco. Undue mental exertion, loss of sleep, constipation of the bowels, torpidity of the liver, skin, etc., are prominent among the causes of this disease. The remedy consists in removing the cause, whatever it may be. If habituated to the use of tea, coffee, alcohol or tobacco, quit them at once. Avoid much mental exertion, take an abundance of out-door exercise, bathe frequently but not in very cold water, eat temperately of plain, healthful food, avoiding spices, condiments, rich cake, pastry, etc., and obey all the laws of health.—Ibid.

MORNING WALKS.

About the middle of the forenoon is the best time for walking or exercise of any kind. The system is then in its best condition. A short walk or other moderate exercise before breakfast is beneficial, but it is not the best time for severe exertion. The distance which persons in moderate health should walk depends upon their strength, endurance and other bodily conditions. It should never be continued so as to produce pain, soreness of the muscles, or fatigue from which the system cannot fully recover by an hour's rest.—Ibid.

MAN'S BEST DRINK.—Water, pure and unmixed, is, beyond all question, the best and only natural drink of man, as it is the only drink of every other living being. It should be drank only when nature calls for it by the feeling of thirst, and then slowly and temperately, until the thirst is quenched. Follow the example of the animal creation, and do not stop eating to wash the food down with water. If man would live entirely upon fruits, which make the purest and best food, he would feel no thirst, and need no drink. The juices of the fruits would supply a sufficient quantity of water in its purest possible form.—Ibid.

LIGHT.—Light is a great purifier of the air, and causes life and vitality to spring up anew. Thus light also works on you. It makes you more active and more healthy.

'TWILL ALL BE OVER SOON.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

What though the tears are in our eyes,
And grief lies heavy on the heart;
What though we gaze on dark'ning skies,
And palms are crossed to part;
What though we tread the dangerous ground,
That sloping leads from life's high noon,
And lean towards the tomb profound,—
'T will all be over soon.

O for the strength of soul to rise
Above earth's direst, darkest ill;
With eyes fixed on the matchless prize,
Press on with mighty will
The sun may leave the vale below,
Yet kiss the hills in softest light,
God's wisdom which we all may know,
Will lead us through the night.

There is no room for deeds unkind,
O fellow traveler to the tomb!
Then clasp thy brother's hand in thine,
And walk in love towards home.
God knows what's best for him and thee,
Let's thank him for the precious boon;
Pass calmly towards eternity,—
'T will all be over soon.

THE LEAVEN OF THE PHARISEES AND SADDUCEES.

"Then Jesus said unto them, Take heed, and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.—Matt. 16 : 6.

These words were spoken to the disciples when they had forgotten to take bread; and they supposed that he referred to this lack on their part. But he corrected their misapprehension, and said unto them, "How is it that ye do not understand, that I spake it not concerning bread, that ye should beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees? Then understood they how that he bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees."—Verses 11, 12.

This warning to beware of the doctrine of the Pharisees and Sadducees could not refer to all of their teachings, because they held to some things which were true. It must, therefore, have referred to that peculiarity of doctrine wherein they were distinguished apart. Two distinct kinds of leaven would make different kinds of bread, although the same flour was used. The Pharisees and Sadducees were all Jews, but different from each other in respect to certain doctrines, represented by the Savior as leaven. To find that peculiarity which distinguished them apart is to find that doctrine, or leaven, which the disciples were taught to beware of. This we find from Acts 23 : 8, where it is said, "The Sadducees say there is no resurrection, neither angel or spirit; but the Pharisees confess both."

Now since that which was denied by the Sadducees was confessed to by the Pharisees; and as the latter are sustained by the New Testament writers, in this particular, it is clear that there was some other doctrine in which the Pharisees differed from the Sadducees, which Christ condemned as the leaven of the Pharisees; seeing that the leaven of the Sadducees consisted in denying the resurrection, angel and spirit. And it is clear that the Sadducees did not believe in the consciousness of the dead, for that would be confessing a belief in a spirit existence, which they denied. But the Pharisaic belief in the existence of spirit life argues that they were not prevented from believing in the conscious existence of departed human spirits, by any sympathy with materialistic views. That they did believe in the consciousness of the human soul in death is testified to in Josephus. That this doctrine was condemned by Christ as untrue, is clear from his argument with the Sadducees, when he declared, what the Sadducees could not deny, that God was not the God of the dead. But he would be the God of the dead if the dead were conscious; therefore the dead are unconscious; hence the Pharisaic doctrine of the immortality of the soul is not true. And since those other differences were not the leaven of the Pharisees, this must be it.

Let us, then, who have renounced this leaven of the Pharisees, take heed and beware also of the leaven of the Sadducees, and cherish no belief that will sustain their claim that there is no resurrection of the dead. For if we admit that a part will not be raised, we virtually admit that none will be. For the resurrection of the dead was foreordained from the time sin entered into the world through the transgression of Adam. For we read, "Known unto God are all his works from the foundation of the world." The resurrection of the dead was the work of God; therefore that was known, and so foreordained. And it must have been either conditionally or unconditionally foreordained. But since God was, and is, and ever will be holy, he could not have allowed sin in the conditions, and so if foreordained on conditions, none could attain unto the resurrection; for we read, "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God." Hence if we deny the resurrection of a part, on account of sin, we make the resurrection conditional, which would exclude all from the resurrection, and so establish Sadduceeism.

Adam Clarke, in his Commentary on Acts 2 : 23, has a very able argument on the foreknowledge of God, and he argues therein that God foreordained some things as absolutely certain; some things he has foreordained as contingent; these he foreknows as contingent. And "contingent" he explains as that which is just as liable to happen the one way as the other. Now death came into the world on account of sin, and sin was one of those things which was foreknown as contingent. Hence the resurrection of man must have been foreordained as contingent on their coming under the dominion of death, through Adamic transgression. And once having fallen under the dominion of death, nothing but sheer mercy on the part of God could rescue them therefrom. And that mercy being unconditional, from its very nature, it would exclude none, but rather include all in the resurrection plan. For to exclude any would have been to prejudge the case of such as were excluded, and thereby deprive them of any power to attain eternal life. Hence the resurrection being unconditionally foreordained, through the mercy of God, is not optional with man, while eternal life is optional with man. For eternal life begins with a perfect sinless condition; whereas, if the resurrection was foreordained to take place when man should attain to a sinless condition, it never could take place. Hence the resurrection must have been unconditionally foreordained, in order that all men might be placed on an equality before God, by having it in their own power to choose or refuse that eternal life which can not begin until the resurrection.

The leaven of the Sadducees is that peculiarity which leads to a denial of the resurrection; and it is a peculiarity of leaven that "a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." If, then, we would not be wholly leavened with Sadduceeism, let us purge out the old leaven, whether there be little or much; and to this end let us examine Christ's argument against Sadduceeism in Luke 20 : 27–36.

"Then came to him certain of the Sadducees, which deny that there is any resurrection; and they asked him, saying, Master, Moses wrote unto us, If any man's brother die, having a wife, and he die without children, that his brother should take his wife and raise up seed unto his brother. There were therefore seven brethren; and the first took a wife, and died without children. And the second took her to wife, and he died childless. And the third took her; and in like manner the seven also; and they left no children and died. Last of all the woman died also. Therefore in the resurrection whose wife of them is she? for seven had her to wife. And Jesus answering said unto them, The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage; but they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he called the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto him."

Any one would think that this argument of Christ was a sufficient refutation of Sadduceeism. But there are those who contend that the leaven of Sadduceeism was only partially refuted by this argument, because it is thought that the resurrection of the just only is the subject of dispute. But it should be remembered that the argument is introduced by stating that the Sadducees denied that there is any resurrection; hence they attempted to show its impossibility on philosophical, and not on moral principles; as though the resurrection of the dead would revive relations pertaining to this life. Their objection, then, applied to the resurrection in general, and not to a part only. Were they disposed to question the resurrection of a few, they might have referred to the sinful condition of all men as evidence that none could be raised on account of their unrighteousness. But the objection, such as it was, was removed by the declaration of Christ that they which are accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more; for they are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection.

There is not the least opportunity to discover a bit of the leaven of Sadduceeism in this reply of Christ; notwithstanding certain sharp-eyed persons think they discover therein evidence that the righteous only will live again. They refer to the words, "neither can they die any more; for they are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection," as though all who are subjects of the resurrection can not die any more. But there are two qualifications here specified, which do not apply to those who are to come forth to the resurrection of condemnation. They must be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead. But the wicked are not accounted worthy to obtain that world, because they are to be destroyed out of it; neither are they the children of the resurrection; for they are illegitimate, because they do not fulfill the object for which the resurrection was foreordained, which was that the subjects thereof might obtain eternal life by a voluntary renunciation of sin. Failure to do this makes their resurrection one of condemnation, because what was intended as a blessing to all, and each in particular, they change, so far as they themselves are concerned, into a curse.

That all the dead are to be raised, there is evidence in this argument with the Sadducees. Said Christ, That the dead are raised, God showed Moses at the bush. He did not say a part of the dead, or the righteous dead, but "the dead"; which denotes all of the dead, unless specially limited by the connection to a particular class of the dead, which is not in this case. "That the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto him."

This argument was to prove a future resurrection (for that is the doctrine of the Bible), although some infer, from the use of the present tense instead of the future, that it teaches a resurrection at death. But such forget that the Bible writers frequently use the present tense for the future. Besides, if they were raised when they died, Christ could not have said God is not the God of the dead; because he would be if the dead were conscious; therefore they are unconscious. This part of Christ's argument was a part which the Sadducees were not disposed to question. They could see its force better than those can who are infected with the leaven of the Pharisees. Its force as an argument was self-evident to them, who believed the dead were utterly dead. And on this, which they acknowledged, and Christ endorsed as a truism, he proceeded further to prove the resurrection of the dead God is not the God of the dead; but he called himself the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, when they are dead; therefore, since he could not have been their God while dead, he must have referred to their future revival from the dead. And since he called himself their God, with reference to the future resurrection life, it is clear that they were thus spoken of in distinction from others who were to be raised from the dead, of whom he would not be their God. For they are to die the "second death," as they come forth to the resurrection of condemnation; and God not being the God of the dead, will not be the God of any who are resurrected to die "the second death." MISSIONARY WORK.

"Keep the gospel trumpet sounding,
Always give a CERTAIN sound,
Lo, temptations are abounding;
WATCH and PRAY—your help is found."

Reader, are you a missionary? what band? where do you missionate? when? how often? A missionary of the cross is one sent of God. Christ came from heaven. What for? to missionate? Yes, to missionate,—go about doing good, healing the sick, raising the dead, casting out devils. "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound."—Isa. 61 : 1–3. Have you this same missionary spirit of Christ? "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man had not where to lay his head."

Missionary friend, is your conversation, your daily walk, such as becometh the gospel of Christ? Have you come out from the world, separated yourself entirely from its follies and fashions, and presented your body "a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service?" Is your adorning that "of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price," instead of plaiting the hair, wearing of gold, pearls, or costly array? Does your personal appearance correspond with gospel purity and simplicity?—commend itself to every man's conscience in the sight of God? The beloved Judson was a devoted missionary to Burmah. "Though dead, he yet speaks."

In his appeal to the sisters of America, on the subject of conforming to the world in dress or fashionable costume, he says:

"Dear sisters, let me appeal to conscience, and inquire, what is the real motive for wearing ornamental and costly apparel? Is it not the desire of setting off one's person to the best advantage, and of exciting the admiration of others? Is not such dress calculated to gratify self-love, and cherish sentiments of vanity and pride? And is it not the nature of those sentiments to acquire strength from indulgence? Do such motives and sentiments comport with the meek, humble, and self-denying religion of Jesus Christ? I would here respectfully suggest that these questions will not be answered so faithfully in the midst of company, as when quite alone, kneeling before God."

Consider the words of the apostle (1 Tim. 2 : 9): "I will also that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety, not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array." (Also, 1 Pet. 3 : 3.

Surely you can hold out no longer. Can you rise from your knees in your present attire? Methinks I see you taking off your necklaces and ear-rings, tearing away your ribbons and ruffles, and superfluities of head-dress, and I hear you exclaim, what shall we do next?—an important question, deserving serious consideration. The ornaments you are removing, though useless and worse than useless in their present state, can be so disposed of as to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, relieve the sick, enlighten the dark-minded, disseminate the Holy Scriptures, spread glorious gospel throughout the world."

"To tents of woe, to beds of pain,
Your cheerful feet repair;
And with the gifts your hands bestow
Relieve the miseries there."

No one is duly prepared for missionary labor abroad, either in a foreign or domestic field, unless he is first a missionary at home, in his own house and out of it. The first thing for a missionary to do, is to set his own house in order, gospelize it, see that every soul under his roof is on the way to eternal glory. ("For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?") Then, when light, life, and salvation are imparted to his own household, let him branch off, go into thoroughfares, lanes, alleys, by-ways and high-ways; into cellars, garrets; visit the abodes of the degraded poor, the destitute, the perishing,—pour in the oil and wine of consolation, cause "the widow's heart to sing for joy."

Job was a true missionary; so was Paul; he went from house to house with his soul on fire, reproving, rebuking, exhorting with all long suffering and doctrine, enduring hardness as a good soldier of the Cross. Isaiah was not duly prepared to be a missionary,—to go forward with holy boldness till the live coal from God's altar was applied to his lips, and his iniquity thoroughly purged. Then, when the call was made for special service, Isaiah said, "Here am I, send me." See Isa. 6 : 8.

So also with the early disciples; the apostles were not fully prepared for missionary service till after pentecostal day, till they had received the tongue of fire. Christ commanded them to tarry at Jerusalem till they received power from on High. Then, when full of the Holy Spirit and of power, they went forth, "every where preaching the word, not counting their lives dear," salvation streamed! Satan fell as lightning from heaven. Missionaries, before being appointed to any missionary field, should be tried by fire—the gospel fire!

"The love of God flows just as much
As that of ebbing self subsides;
Our hearts (the scantiness is such)
Bear not the conflict of two rival tides."

Friend, why not begin at home to missionate? in your own house, your parlor, your kitchen, with your next neighbor, and so on? Let your missionary spirit be seen here, before you talk about missionating abroad.—Persons who have no heart to do good and communicate, pull sinners out of the fires of hell in their own vicinity, are not the ones to go to the heathen abroad. Christian men, christian women, so called, without souls on fire, baptized pentecostally, full of faith and the Holy Spirit, are not the ones to save the perishing heathen.

What sad, awful mistakes are made by missionary boards, in sending out mere skeletons of piety, gay, fashionable, worldly minded, having a name to live while dead. What an immense amount of outfittings have been expended on unworthy objects—worse than lost widow's mites, likewise, of hard earnings, that better have been cast into the depths of the sea. Is it not an imposition, a burning shame, to send forth to the poor heathen mere nominals—those professing godliness who have not learned the a b c, or first principles of gospel salvation?—meanwhile, denying the power thereof by their ungodly walk and conversation. "Woe unto the world because of offences, for it must be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh."

Let those offering themselves as missionaries to foreign fields, first be proved at home. Are they active in the divine life, consecratedly? given up wholly, unreservedly to God's service? constrained by God's love? with right hand's severed? right eyes plucked?

"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

"What wants the age? Heart-earnest men
To spread the truth, the truth defend;
Such on the earth we need again
As God in ancient times did send;
Men reckless of wealth or fame,
Of ignominy, scorn, or shame,
The stake, the faggot, or the flame,
Their only object God; and truth their only aim."

THANKSGIVING REFLECTIONS.

"Oh give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good; for his mercy endureth forever."—Psalms 136 : 1.

To-day is an appointed day, by the head of our nation, for thanksgiving. Though every day is a day for giving thanks to my Creator, yet to-day my heart is more than usually thankful. In reflecting upon the past, I see so much to be thankful for that I hardly know where to begin. Surely his mercy endureth for ever. The whole of David's psalm of thanksgiving finds a responsive voice in my heart.

In looking back but two years, I find myself, led by the holy Spirit, pondering over the great and blessed truths that have so often since thrilled my heart with joy. Alone among sectarians, who opposed me on all sides, with the Holy Spirit for my teacher, I found the blessed hope which now lights up my pathway with joy, and reveals to me the glorious morning of my salvation. All these things I feel thankful for. I thank my all-wise Preserver, that in his mercy he led me into this radiant pathway, illuminated by the rays of coming redemption. Since the Holy Spirit led me into this highway of his promises, I have had blessed seasons with the Lord. He has blessed me with his approving smile, and cheered me with the Comforter. O how can I thank him enough. Language fails, and the cold pen-lines are but a mockery. O "sing praises unto his name, for it is pleasant." Surely, his ways are ways of pleasantness.

But in turning my eyes to the way marks in the wilderness, I behold more special grounds for thanksgiving. I feel thankful that he has not left us in darkness concerning the coming of that great day of our promised redemption. His mercy endureth forever. He has shown his enduring mercy to this people. He knew their pathway would lead through a gloomy wilderness, darkened by the clouds of sin, and beset with the snares of the devil. But, praise the Lord, he left us not in this darkness to grope our way along in uncertainty. He set up our way marks all along our journey, exhibiting on each the lamp of his love, to cheer and light up our pathway. These signs, showing our nearness to the "promised land," have all been passed. And now we stand upon its borders, ready to enter in. Like Abraham, we can see the land of promise; and the last sign will soon appear that will marshal us on its plains. "And a highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called, The way of Holiness." "Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped."

This people have much to be thankful for. My heart is full of thanksgiving and praise. Soon my blessed Jesus shall appear, to change this vile, corruptible clay, and fashion it like unto his own glorious body. Soon "the wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad . . . and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as a rose." "And the Lord God will wipe away all tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall be taken away." In that day we can say, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us; this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."

TRIBULATION.

"And there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book."—Dan. 12 : 1.

"For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be."—Matt. 24 : 21.

The great question in the minds of many is, whether this time of trouble in Daniel, and great tribulation of Matthew, are one and the same trouble? Daniel says, "such as there never was since there was a nation"; and Matthew says, "such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be"; from which some judge that each being the greatest tribulation, they must necessarily be the same. But we shall attempt to reconcile the matter, showing them to be different troubles.

First, the times of these troubles are different. Our Savior says in Matthew, "When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place." This locates the time of trouble mentioned by Matthew. And when did the abomination of desolation stand in the holy place? We answer, it began with the war on the saints in A. D. 532. Then if you follow down to the 29th verse, our Savior says again, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven." Now, where shall we locate this time? We find them all occurring in the space of a generation, ending with the last in the order, the fall of the stars in 1833. From this we conclude it is evident that the tribulation of Matthew was during the war upon the saints, in which they suffered such cruel persecutions as were never known since "the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." For it was true what is written in the 9th verse, "Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you; and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake. And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another. . . . And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold"; which all came to pass in the days of the persecutions upon the saints.

Secondly, let us notice the time of trouble named by Daniel the prophet. "At that time shall Michael stand up." Who is this Michael? He is generally understood to be Jesus the Christ; if so, the time of trouble is the "time of the end," the day of the Lord's preparation. But if there be any doubt who this Michael is, the next verse settles the question, for it speaks of the resurrection; so the time of trouble must of necessity just precede that; but if any think otherwise, they can only make it at, or after the first resurrection. Wherefore, we see it is not the same time named by our Lord in Matthew.

Thirdly, we inquire, How shall we reconcile the fact that each is to be the greatest tribulation? Daniel says, "A time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation"; while our Lord, in Matthew, speaks particularly of the persecutions of the church. True, he names in the seventh verse nations and kingdoms at variance, and the other troubles; but only to show that these are to be passed over lightly; that they are not the substance matter of which he is speaking; but that the burthen is the suffering of his people.

We conclude, then, that the tribulation named in Matthew was upon the church, and is passed; that the time of trouble of Daniel is national, and is to come; and that "at that time thy people (the spiritual Israel) shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

A CHECK TO THE DISCONTENTED CHRISTIAN.

Here is a just reproof to such as are discontented with their condition. This disease is almost epidemical. Some, not content with their callings which God hath set them in, must be a step higher, from the plough to the throne; who, like the spider in the Proverbs, will take hold with their hands, and be in king's palaces. Prov. 30 : 28. Others exalt themselves to the ministry, without thinking on the importance of the work, or duly considering the necessity of divine influence, and by thus manifesting the pride of the human heart, they take to themselves that honor which belongs to God only; and some there be who, without regard to future consequences, waste their time and ruin their souls by seeking that honor which comes from man. These do secretly tax the wisdom of God, that he hath not screwed them up in their condition a peg higher.

Every man is complaining that his estate is no better, though he seldom complains that his heart is no better. One man commends this kind of life, another commends that; one man thinks a country life best, another a city life. The soldier thinks it best to be a merchant, and the merchant to be a soldier. Men can be content to be any thing but what God will have them. How is it that no man is contented? Very few christians have learned St. Paul's lesson: neither poor nor rich know how to be content; they can learn any thing but this.

I. If men are poor, they learn to be,—1. Envious. They malign those that are above them; another's prosperity is an eye-sore. When God's candle shines upon their neighbor's tabernacle, this light offends them; in the midst of wants, men can [illegible] abound; viz., in envy and malice. "An evil eye is an evil eye. 2. They learn to be querulous, still complaining, as if God had dealt hardly with them: they are ever telling of their wants; they want this or that comfort; whereas their greatest want is a contented spirit. Those that are well enough content with their sins, yet are not content with their condition.

II. If men are rich, they learn to be covetous, thirsting insatiably after the world; and, by unjust means, scraping it together. Their right hand is full of bribes, as the Psalmist expresses it, Psa. 26 : 10. Put a good cause in one scale, and a piece of gold in the other, and the gold weighs heaviest. "There are," saith Solomon, "four things that say, It is not enough." Prov. 30 : 15 I may add a fifth, viz., the heart of a covetous man: so that neither poor nor rich know how to be content.

Never, certainly, since the creation, did this sin of discontent reign, or rather rage, more than in our times; never was God more dishonored. You can hardly speak with any, but the passion of his tongue betrays the discontent of his heart; every one lisps out his trouble, and here even the stammering tongue speaks too free and fluently. If we have not what we desire, God shall not have a good look from us; but presently we are sick of discontent, and ready to die out of humor. If God will not give the people of Israel for their lusts, they bid him take their lives; they must have quails to their manna. Ahab, though a king—and one would think his crown lands had been sufficient for him—yet is sullen and discontented for want of Naboth's vineyard. Jonah, though a good man and a prophet, yet ready to die in a pet (Jonah 4 : 8); and because God killed his gourd—Kill me too, said de. Rachel said, Give me children, or I die. She had many blessings, if she could have seen them, but wanted this blessing of contentment. God will supply our wants, but must he satisfy our lusts, too?

Many are discontented for a very trifle; another has a better dress, a richer jewel, a newer fashion. Nero, not content with his empire, was troubled that the musicians had more skill in playing than he. How fantastic are some, that pine away in discontent for the want of those things which, if they had, would but render them more ridiculous!

For the World's Crisis.

JESUS IS NOT THERE.

Where is not my dear Savior there? No, indeed, he is not there. But what kind of a place is it, if Jesus is not there? We answer, it is down in that moral dungeon, where you will see a lot of rowdies smoking, drinking, chewing tobacco, and taking the name of God in vain; where they keep lots of cigars, and rum, and Satan's traps (gambling cards), and all sorts of things to entice people to sin against their lovely Creator. We cannot for a moment think that Jesus would be down there in that polluted place. No indeed.

Let us go on a little further, and look into that bar-room in yonder tavern, and what do we find there? Hark! hear that loud talking. Let us go on a little nearer. They are fighting! Only hear them swear! O how wickedly they talk! But what is the matter? O they have got a little rum down. But did I say a little? I think they must have drank too much, for it has driven all the good sense out of their brains, if they ever had any there. But we will venture up to the door and look in. And what do we see? Men staggering around the room, smoking cigars, and using wicked language. O what a wicked place! But my Savior was not there.

And now let us go on till we arrive at that large mansion, where they say they are having a ball, in that large and splendid hall. We approach the building. Hark! hear the music and dancing. Let us go up to the hall and look in. We move on till we arrive at the hall door. But stop, we have no ticket, and cannot enter.

"But, Mr. Door-keeper, will you let us look in?"

"No, sir, unless you have a ticket."

"But, sir, will you tell us if there is a person in the ball-room by the name of Jesus Christ?"

"No, sir, we do not admit him into the ball-room at all; for he would disturb our enjoyment and break up the ball."

"Very well, sir; we do not wish for a ticket to go into any place where they will not have our dear Savior among them, or suffer him to enter the room."

Now, kind reader, let us go on a little further, for I understand there is to be a donation party at Elder A.'s to-day, and I want to see if Jesus is going to be there. We passed on to Elder A.'s house, and sure enough, a large number of young and old were in the house and outside, very lively and jolly, and in conversation about worldly affairs. We went up to the table and looked in, and saw a very nice, fashionable table, all furnished in fashionable style, and a lot of young women in lively conversation; and they seemed to be happy in each other's company. Here we gazed upon the company, and saw a number of wicked young men and young ladies carrying on very lively. But where is my dear Jesus? He is not there; he seems to be excluded from that lively and jolly company. But how came those drunkards in the company, we ask. O, says a by-stander, they all have tickets of admittance to the donation party. And as they were about to sit down to the feast, we saw the Elder, as he sat at the head of the table, as lively as the rest of the company. Ah, said I, I am afraid my Savior is not there; for the rich and popular are there, but the poor, and lame, and blind, are not there. Surely, the minister and church members are eating and drinking with the drunken, and it must be a sign of the last days. I shall not go in and join that company, for my Savior forbids my taking part with them. 2 Thess. 3 : 22, [illegible] Prov. 4 : 14, [illegible] We kept our proper distance, and were careful not to mingle with that company where Jesus took no part in the performance. We beheld till they began the closing scene of singing and dancing, and we became so disgusted that we came away.

Now we will walk over to yonder village, where, we understand, there is to be a church festival. It is only two or three miles to the meeting-house. What a lot of people we found in and around the house. We looked in and saw a fine, long table, finely ornamented, and well filled with very nice food, amidst a grove of green bushes, or boughs, set around in the pews. We stood in the doorway and gazed upon the finery, but saw no dear Jesus there. We asked a by-stander if he would tell us the meaning of all this great gathering, and what was going to be done? He said, this is a church festival, got up to raise money to help pay the minister, and to ornament the pulpit, and carpet the meeting-house floor. But how do they raise the money? O, says the by-stander, there are a number of loaves of very nice cake, containing a number of gold rings in each loaf; and each loaf is cut into a number of pieces; and every one who buys a ticket, and pays fifty cents, or a dollar, can step up and take a piece; and if he is lucky enough to draw a gold ring worth two dollars, he has the name of drawing a prize; and if no gold ring is in the piece of cake, then the church gets the money paid for the ticket just for a piece of cake worth four or six cents.

But look here, dear reader, is not this a kind of gambling lottery? We think it is, and my dear Savior does not go into such company, nor command us to do evil that good may come. In closing this letter, I would say to young converts, and all the saints, avoid all places where Jesus will not go; and especially those where many spend their time reading novels. Jesus is not there.

For the World's Crisis.

MY MOTHER IS DEAD TOO.

While reading Sister Sarah Ingraham's piece in the Crisis, I could but shed tears of sympathy with her, for I know the deep and heart-felt love that all children have for a dear parent. I too have stood by the dying bedside of a dear and beloved mother, and heard her last dying words of love and tender affection; her last dying prayer, and the last parental kiss, and with a heart filled with bitter grief, and tears streaming in torrents from my eyes, I saw her breathe her last. Never, no never, shall I forget that sad and mournful day.

Sickness, from early childhood, had laid its heavy and blighting hand upon me, and, in hours, days, weeks and months of severe sickness, my dear mother had so tenderly, so lovingly and affectionately watched over me, that it seemed as if I could not give her up. Never shall I forget that dying prayer. All that were there were melted to tears. O how earnestly she entreated each child to be faithful to God, and meet her in the new earth, where sickness and death can never come. Never shall I forget the awful agony of that day. How hard it was for our dear father to give our dear mother up. I wished that I could die and be buried with her. I stood by her dying bedside, as if I had been riveted to the spot. Kind friends tried in vain to take me away. I had no power to move. She had breathed her last, and we knew she was gone. A flood of grief rushed upon us. Our dear mother was dead. She could never more soothe our aching heads, or smooth our pillows when sickness laid us upon our beds. O the deep anguish of that sad day, I never shall forget.

I left her bedside and went away alone, and on bended knees, with bitter weeping, I asked God to be more to me than I could wish or think in my deep affliction. I wept with uncontrollable grief. Never shall I forget that sad day. I went from room to room, but, alas! no fond mother was there. I sought her bedside again. There she lay, robed for the grave. A calm, sweet smile lit up her marble face. I bent over her and kissed her marble lips. No sweet kiss was returned. I took her cold, lifeless hand in mine, but no pressure of her dear hand did I feel. O what grief, what bitter weeping. Must I give her up to be put in her coffin? I feared to think of it; and worst of all, could I see her laid away beneath the cold, cold ground? I felt as if it was more than my feeble being could bear. But the day came when she must be borne to her last resting-place, until time shall be no more.

She had previous to her death selected the text for her funeral. Bro. H. Pratt was sent for and came. Never shall I forget how good Bro. H. talked, and tried to comfort us; but, alas! words seemed powerless. Our grief was too deep to be assuaged. My dear father was nearly insane, but tried to bear all without a murmur.

The time came for us to take leave of our almost idolized mother. We went to look upon her calm, mild face, beautiful even in death. I never shall forget the feelings that I had as I stood by her coffin. I could not move. I felt like a piece of lead. They spoke to me, and said I was making them wait, for they must close the coffin. I moved not; I could not move. I was seemingly unconscious of what was passing around me. I had wept until weak nature was about to give up. Kind friends came and took me away from the coffin. I had no power to resist. They bore my dear mother away to the dark prison house, and laid her away to sleep in Jesus till he shall bid the sleepers rise. Never did I feel as if life was of so little worth as at that time. O how I did pray that I might die and be laid away with her.

Should these lines meet the eye of Bro. H. Pratt, he will doubtless remember what he said, "that he never officiated at a funeral before, where grief seemed to be so deep and uncontrollable, as it did there, excepting at his own dear mother's. It has been almost fourteen years since that sad and gloomy day, and I can but weep now at the remembrance of that day. Since then, my dearly beloved father has been laid by my dear mother's side. In tears and bitter weeping we can but sigh to have Jesus come and raise our sleeping ones, and make the earth bloom in Eden-like beauty, when we shall meet our dear and loved parents, to part no more for ever.

Dear ones, who have never been called to pass through this awful scene, I can say from the heart that I hope you never will. And those who are weeping the loss of loved ones, remember my heart's deepest sympathies are enlisted for you. I weep with them that weep. This is the night of bitter weeping, but the morn of glory will soon dawn. Praise Jesus. I long to be there. Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly. We are weary of staying, and long to rest with all the dear ones. Signs seem now to speak the coming of Jesus very near. Let us keep ready, and by and by we shall meet our loved ones, never to part again. Amen. LUTHERA B. WEAVER.

DORCAS MISSION.

We have thus far received this autumn a barrel of clothing from Hartford, and a check for $38.50 from the "young folks"; a barrel from Vergennes, Vt., and three barrels from Bristol, Conn., and $15.00. Also a box of shoes from J. R., of Haverbill (Mass., or N. H.?). From a sister in Worcester we have received a trunk full of bonnets. Her friends furnished the trimmings.

On last Saturday, our grand holiday for Christ took place. The school-room of the "Home" was thronged with men, women, and children. Four of us were kept hard at work. We had not the power of multiplying the articles sent, so many had to go away disappointed. We clothed the most needy, and the dancing eyes, and the white teeth, and the antics of the children, showed how successful our friends were. Some of the children nestled their heads under our arms, and one little one said she "could squeeze us into a jelly." So I think that her heart must have been full. All these barrels contained clothing for men, women, and children; hats, caps, shoes, socks, stockings, hoods, and quilts. In some were apples, buttons, thread, silk, scissors, etc., etc. I wished that the friends who sent these heavenly God-bless-yous were present to see the real solid comfort these things afforded. You would have felt well paid for your exertions in the behalf of the worthy poor of our mission. The bonnets have been given to poor saints, and their prayers ascend to the Lord in thanksgiving for raising up such friends for them during these hard times.

We need dresses for girls. But few have been sent, but I do not complain, for there are not many amongst our people, who have girls, who do not have to make every thing wear in their own families as long as possible. But I think of purchasing a lot of remnants cheap, and then we are to have a sewing-machine, and thus have a lot made soon.

Most of our help comes from Adventists. The fact that I am an Adventist is well known throughout our mission field. "Jesus and the Resurrection," and his speedy coming, are held up to the people. We do not have smooth sailing all the way. There are jealous missionaries, who use their influence to injure our christian character and our work. They leave no stone unturned. At times we are troubled on every side. I have ever sailed under my true colors, and not moved around as a Baptist or a Methodist, but as an Adventist and a christian. Before the Friends gave me the lease of the "Home for Little Wanderers," I told them that I was an Adventist. Other denominations here "will have none of me," because they believe that I am an infidel. They work against us, but glory to God, "no weapon that is formed against' us has prospered. Enough of these things. You have troubles enough of your own, without being burdened with mine. This is a part of the legacy,—"If we suffer, we shall also reign with him."

Pray for me, that I may be "stedfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." The Lord gives me sweet peace of mind, but the world gives tribulation. The latter drives us to Christ, and the former preserves us. Be faithful to Christ. "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him."

DORCAS MISSION RECEIPTS.

Received from a sister in Worcester, who loves the appearing of Christ, $10.00; from "Stewards" of Lawrence, Ms., $50.00; Emily Marsh, $10.00; T. D. Bailey, 75c.; E. T. Haskell, $1.00; Emma, of Avalanch, $2.00; New Britain church, Conn., $1.50; L. G., of Illinois, $8.00; J., $5.00; and from Peru, Wis., the following sums: W. C. Peck, $5.00; his wife, $1.00; Andrew Sherburne, $10.00; Sayles Sherburne, $2.00; Adebert Sherburne, $1.00; Ole Lawson, Geo. Rogers, W. S. Grover, Prof. Knapp, and J. D. Simonds, $1.00 each.

May the blessing of the Lord rest upon these friends of the poor. The Lord has raised them up in our time of need. At present I rent two dwelling houses and two halls, at the rate in all of $300.00 per annum. Now I have the "Little Wanderers' Home," and shall have not less than sixty children to feed through the winter. Then the matron and her assistant will be paid $20.00 per month for their services, and many other expenses to pay. Then the families of the poor, the sick, and the needy, must be helped. God has taken care of the work, and he will take care of it. Children are to be clothed, garments to be made. I want still the prayers of God's children. He will open the hearts to give. Yours, etc., in hope of eternal life,

HAMPTON.

Our meetings at the Town Hall, in Hampton, N. H., commencing Nov. 27th, have been owned and blessed by the Lord, and have resulted, we trust, in much good. A deep interest has been awakened in many minds, some have been converted, and others are seeking the Lord. We found much prejudice in the way, but it has yielded like winter before the approach of summer. Before we got through, the hall was crowded with a very attentive audience. Since we left, we have received very glad tidings from there, showing that the truth is working like leaven hid in meal. Praise the Lord for his goodness to the children of men.

WHICH?

Sometimes we receive money from the husband for the Crisis, and sometimes from the wife, and we do not know how to credit it. For instance, this week we received $3 from Mrs. D. A. Bean, Sutton, N. H. We turn to our subscription book, and find Jacob Bean and Phineas Bean in Sutton. N. H. Now how shall we tell whether Mrs. D. A. Bean is the wife of Jacob or Phineas Bean?

When you send money to be credited for the Crisis, always give us the name of the person to whom the paper is directed. Please remember this. One thing more, always give the STATE, as well as the name of the post office.

CHEERING WORDS.

We receive many kind and cheering words from those who write for "our paper." As we have before said, these kind words are to us as cool water to a thirsty soul. When we have been away holding meetings in some new place, and been called all kinds of hard names, it is a source of much comfort to come home and read the cheering words from our dear Brn. and Srs. It is a great privilege to be associated with such noble souls, who love the appearing of Jesus and are ever ready to aid in sounding the last notes of warning to this wicked world.

One of the heaviest crosses of an editor of a religious paper is to be obliged to leave out a communication from a dear Bro. and Sister in Christ, because he knows there is danger that they may be grieved and refuse to write again; yet he is satisfied that another article in its place would do the readers more good. But this cross is often made very light by kind words like the following:—

"DEAR BRO. GRANT:—If you think this is worthy of your notice, you may publish it; if not, pass it by."

"BRO. GRANT:—The above is sent you for the Crisis, but, as I have before said, you can lay it in the 'dark drawer' if not wished for to put in print. I am trying to fill my little niche in the Lord's vineyard, and if I do any thing which by his servants may be thought not called for, I am ready to receive it as a kindness, when they in the Spirit refuse to accept it."

"BRO. GRANT:—Cut and trim my communications as you see fit, or withhold, as you judge best. My object is God's glory."

"BRO. GRANT:—Add, or take from, or leave out, just as will best help the cause."

"DEAR BRO. GRANT:—In regard to what I have written, you are at liberty to add to, take from, or leave out altogether."

A TENT.

At a late meeting of the Missionary Board, it was proposed to purchase a large tent, to be used as a portable meeting-house the coming year, in the northern states, and elsewhere as the door may open. It is to be called the American Advent Missionary Tent. It is thought best to have one capable of seating two thousand persons.

There are strong reasons for procuring such a tent. 1. Meetings in the tent would be less expensive than in halls. Halls in villages and cities, of a size necessary to hold what would come to a tent meeting, would cost from ten to fifty dollars a day.

2. We could go with the tent to places where there were no halls, or where there were none to be obtained. It often happens that we cannot get halls when we want them, because they have been previously engaged. We recollect that when in Philadelphia, we hired Concert Hall, for one Sabbath, Oct. 29th, and paid $40; but it was then engaged for every Sabbath till the next February. Thus we often find halls engaged for months ahead, so that we cannot get them when desired.

3. A meeting in a tent will call out a much larger audience than would go to a hall or a meeting-house.

4. Another reason why we need a tent is the marked increase of interest in the minds of the people to hear on the subjects for which we as a people are distinguished from other churches. This fact calls for more earnest effort on the part of those who see the light and truth.

5. In many places, where meetings are needed, there are but few if any to entertain those who wish to come from adjoining towns; but when we have a tent, it becomes a house to sleep in nights, and for meetings during the day,—a campmeeting in one tent instead of many.

It is estimated that the tent and fixtures will not cost less than five hundred dollars. Now comes the question, who will aid in getting it up? Let us take hold of this in earnest, and make a grand effort for the cause of truth, and do what we can for the salvation of those around us. A heavy responsibility is resting upon us as a people. Let us not try to shake it off, but cheerfully bear the burdens and crosses, if we expect to hear the Savior say, "Well done." If we have the tent, we can go into new places, where we could not otherwise be accommodated, and thus be instrumental of reaching thousands of people who might never hear, if it were not for the tent.

Shall we have the tent? Who will take stock in this important enterprise? Here is an excellent opportunity to invest money to use for the glory of the Lord. Our work is a short one; let us be bravely in earnest; The Macedonian cry is sounding from all quarters. Help us to push the battle. We are anxious to get this tent made as soon as possible, as there is no time to spare, if we have it ready by the opening of the spring. Come, ye noble hearted ones, give a big lift now, and let us purchase the cloth and have it making immediately. Brn., shall we have the tent?

REPORTS OF LABORS.

We would say to those at work in the vineyard of the Lord, tell us the good news of your success. It is cheering to the pilgrims. When a member of a loving family is away from home, all those at home are anxious to hear from him, and learn of his success; this illustrates the feeling in the church of Christ, when the members love each other as Jesus would have them. We know Satan will whisper in the ear,—it looks like boasting to publish the happy results of the labors of the faithful watchman; but we do not accuse the apostles of boasting, when they relate what the Lord accomplished by their labors; neither could any one truly accuse George Muller of boasting, when he publishes from year to year what the Lord is doing by him in supporting a thousand orphan children. By publishing these facts to the world, great good has been accomplished in arousing others to go to work in the vineyard of the Lord with more zeal. Because some may have been guilty of boasting, that is not a sufficient reason for withholding good news from the household of faith. Therefore, we say, tell us what the Lord is doing in the North, South, East and West. It may be necessary for each to be short, so that all may speak; but let us hear from those who have good news to tell.

THE FENIAN FEELING.

The following. which is a part of the proclamation by Gen. Sweeney, "Major General Commanding the Armies of Ireland," shows what those may expect who stand opposed to the Fenian movement:—

"All who raise an arm to defend her [England], to frustrate or defeat us, belong to the common enemy, and as such will be dealt with. As we know how to recognize the services of our friends, so also do we know how to punish the depredations of our foes."

It is very evident that the Catholics are laying plans to get the control of this country.

WORTH REMEMBERING.

The following rule should be observed by every one who wishes to live a christian life, and be a peacemaker in society. Please remember and observe it. It will produce happy results, and add no sorrow:

"Believe nothing against another but upon good authority; nor report what may hurt another, unless it may be a greater hurt to others to conceal it."

FASHION.—We commend to our readers the article on "Fashion," by Bro. Percival. We fully agree with his remarks. The subject demands the serious attention of all christians. The professed disciples of Jesus have already followed the fashions of a wicked world quite too far. May the Lord give the faint-hearted courage to adorn themselves in "modest apparel."

THE WOODSTOCK DISCUSSION.—We have just received the published report of our late discussion with Eld. J. Rowe, in Woodstock, N. B. It makes a pamphlet of 53 pp. Price 25 cts. Postage two cents.

A NEW WORK.

"The state of the Church and the World at the final outbreak of evil, and revelation of antichrist, his destruction at the second coming of Christ and the ushering in of the Millennium," with an Appendix by Mrs. A. P. Jolliffe.

This work, with the exception of the appendix, is a reprint of a London work. Although we might differ from some positions of the author, yet it is a work calculated to awaken a new interest in the great truth of the speedy coming of Christ, and other important points revealed in the Scriptures.

The work contains 256 pp., and may be had for $1.25, by addressing Sr. A. P. Jolliffe, Box 1199, Philadelphia, Pa.

We purpose to make some extracts from the work. The following is from pp. 9–11.

"We are told, on every side, that we are living in remarkable times. We read of it in the newspapers; we hear it in our daily conversation; and we feel it to be true. There is, undoubtedly, a rumbling of some extraordinary earthquake, which, growing more and more distinct, forewarns the thoughtful that a crisis of no slight importance is not far in our advance. We see, indeed, the christian, the unbeliever, the philanthropist, and the politician, all agreeing in the expectation of some gigantic outburst. We find the hearts of men of judgment 'failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth.' The eyes of many turn with anxious gaze towards the observers of the times, the learned, the statesmen, the merchants, and the ministers of the gospel, with the inquiry—'Watchman, what of the night?' But who among the sons of men can satisfy the inquiry? Opinions, various enough, come forth. A rush of many voices gives reply. But who is to be trusted? The only safe response which any man can give, is this —'It is not for you to know the times and the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power.' Yet, for all this, there is a ray of light, feeble certainly, but not to be neglected, for it comes down directly from that Father's hand of love, and sheds its gentle beam upon this wondrous period in which we live. By this one beam, those men who have the spirit of the Lord can read a word of warning, which diffuses joyful expectation through their willing hearts. That word is, 'Watch and pray, for the coming of the Lord draws near.' This ray of light illuminates, moreover, a few signs and portents, and exhorts, 'When these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh.' Now for this gleam let those of us who know the Savior render praise; and while we read, and watch, and pray, be humble, looking to the Lord submissively, with patient, waiting hearts; behaving ourselves always circumspectly; being well prepared to leave this bondage whenever our Redeemer's voice shall call us to arise and meet him.

I know that there are christians, not a few, who will agree with me that these are times which ought to lead God's people to be much upon the watch-tower, forasmuch as many things betoken clearly that the coming of the Lord is near. And, doubtless, there are others who, although, perhaps, they will not go with me so far as this, will yet agree that these are days when things around forebode a crisis which has scarcely known a precedent. I, therefore, confidently ask for the attention of my brethren in Christ, to the heart-stirring and important subject of those prophecies which concern the future of our world, and cast a special light upon the second advent of our Lord and Savior.

Now, inasmuch as these prophecies have been, till lately, studied by so very few, even among really christian people, I ought, perhaps, before I speak directly upon the subject, to note carefully the duty which unquestionably lies upon every one of us, to give them an attention just as close as that we should to any other part of the Holy Scripture.

To this duty our text plainly calls attention. Let us observe its language. The 'word of prophecy' of which it speaks (as we are informed by the twentieth verse) is contained in 'the Scriptures.' It is called a 'sure word of prophecy;' more sure (as the context also shows us,) than the word which the apostles spoke when they 'made known the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; though they had been eye-witnesses of his Majesty.' Again, it is compared to 'a light that shineth in a dark place;' wherefore also the Lord's people are expressly told that they 'do well,' that they 'take heed' to it. And this, not just occasionally, but 'until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in their hearts.'"

COMMON POLITENESS.

The above is the title of a new book that everybody should read. We have seen many works on politeness, but consider this the best of them all. It does not propose to give rules for the silly artificial politeness, that kisses you when you come, and backbites you when you are gone; but is a work founded on common sense, and christian principles. It is a valuable present to make to the "young folks," —just the thing for a holiday present.

It is published by D. C. Colesworthy, the author. He is an amiable gentleman, who keeps an "antique book store at No. 66 Cornhill, Boston. We have often remarked that we consider him the best man we know in Boston with whom to trade in books. You are always sure of kind treatment, and low prices. Give him a call.

"Common Politeness" contains 96 12mo. pp. Price 75 cts., postage 8 cts. For sale at this office.

WOMAN'S APPAREL.

"Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold (chains), or of putting on of (gorgeous) apparel."

This is Dr. Whitby's paraphrase of 1 Pet. 3: 3. The word emplokee, rendered "plaiting," is not found elsewhere in the Greek New Testament. It means to plait, to braid, to twist, to crimp, or to fold the hair. The Greek plegma, in 1 Tim. 2: 9, rendered "broidered," has about the same meaning, and, like the first named, it is used but once in the N. T. It appears, from these passages, that the first christians forbade all such adornment and embroidering and braiding of the hair of the female converts in the church; but nothing is more common in the nineteenth century than for professedly christian women to utterly disregard the apostolic teaching, and, instead of wearing the hair in plainness and simplicity, to braid, twist, crimp, and torture it into every imaginable shape, much to the disfigurement of the head, and often to the injury of the health, and also to load it down with pins, combs, ribbons, bands, beads, clasps, coils, tufts, volubilis, chignons, coiffeurs, Mary Stuarts, and other Parisian unnameable tinsel and fixings. Sensible people need not to be told that real beauty of face, head, or form, needs no extra adornment. As well might one attempt to adorn sun-light with gas, as to improve true beauty with gaudy tinsel. And where good looks are lacking, no amount of gewgaws or finery can make it up. And yet, our women put on these squaw-like trappings to be in style, and to appear beautiful! I do not mock.

It may seem harsh in us to say it, but the truth demands that our women be told again that all this gaudy and gorgeous adornment, now in use, is represented in the sacred Scriptures as being the attire of harlots. Isa. 3: 18–24, and Rev. 17: 1–4. Both profane and sacred history confirm this severe statement. Commenting on the "outward adornmen" forbidden by the apostle in our leading text, Dr. Whitby says:—"These, in the words of Clement of Alexandria, are 'the ornaments of whores,' and such as demonstrate their arrogance, softness, and lasciviousness. The plaiting of the hair was, (saith he) 'a sign of corrupt women; and they that use them,' Clement continues, 'were attired like whores.' And in his third book and fourth chapter he says: 'The women that wear gold, plait their hair, and paint their faces, have not the image of God in the inward man, but, in lieu of it, a fornicating and adulterous soul.' The Apostolic Constitutions also forbid women to wear 'exquisite garments, or garments fitted to deceive, or gold rings upon their fingers, because all these things are signs of whoredom.' And as for the wearing of gold, Jamblicus says, that 'no free woman wore gold, but whores only.' The precious apparel is the thing which all the comedians mention as the attire which such women sought after and gloried in. These things, therefore, when they are used as such marks of distinction, are absolutely forbidden chaste women."—Whitby's Annotations.

As to those women who are wedded to their theatrical costumes and finery, and whose little, vain life consists in following the fashions, there is no hope for them. But we really pity the sensible and modest female, who is subjected by the iron rule of society and the perverted taste of our times to adopt styles and modes repugnant to her enlightened judgment and conscience, and yet whose social surroundings seem to compel her to wear the chains of slavery to fashion. But can we expect anything better so long as the Bible is ignored, and good taste and common sense are set aside for the gospel according to Leslie, Godey, and Demorest, and the country obtains its styles, modes and fashions from New York, and New York obtains them from Roman Catholic and infidel Paris, and Paris obtains them from her gaudy and beautiful but corrupt and utterly godless courtezans? We advise all who look for the Lord to trample this tyranny under foot, and with meek and quiet spirits attire themselves as those who shall give account to the Coming One. [Amen.—Editor.] D. T. ROIZEDON.—2 Pet. 3: 10.—No. 2.

"The heavens shall pass away with a great noise."
"Shall pass away with a rushing sound."—Diaglott.
"The heavens will suddenly pass away."—Syriac.
"The heavens shall perish with a terrible noise."—Tyndale.
"Shall pass away in the manner of a tempest."—Geneva.
"Shall pass with great violence."—Rheims.
"The heavens with a crashing roar shall pass away."—Sept.
"Shall pass away with a rushing noise."—Bible Union.

We have shown, in a previous article, that the sudden revelation of Christ to judgment is to be accompanied with the opening of the heavenly doors with a loud crash. The rattle of a thousand railroad cars, the screams of a thousand steam pipes, the roar of ten thousand monstrous gongs, the explosion of a million tons of nitro-glycerine, the rattle and crash of all the gathered thunders, all combined in one terrible sound, would scarcely equal the noise of this appa'ling catastrophe, which shall shake the world, roll up the curtains of the skies, and disclose to the affrighted inhabitants of the earth the great white throne and its awful occupant. The subject commands our attention, for the day is at hand when our ears shall be saluted by the awful roizedon, and the reverberations of the accompanying trump of God.

The science of the atmosphere, and the various inflammable gases, discloses the methods by which this solemn event may be easily brought about. Almighty power, that created and arranged the properties of the elastic and circumambient air that with a depth of forty-five miles surrounds the entire globe, could in a moment so separate the same into its constitutional gases of oxygen and nitrogen, or destroy the equilibrium of these main gases, as to produce this result. Or by actively developing and compressing the latent caloric existing in all the air, it could be done. Or by creating large quantities of hydrogen and setting it on fire, an awful explosive report would follow, deranging all the aerial heavens. Or by generating immense quantities of carbureted hydrogen, or perhaps by using the stores of this inflammable substance, supposed to be already accumulated in the upper regions of the air, which, when mingled with oxygen and set on fire, explodes violently and with a loud report.

We may rest assured that He who formed and arranged the subtile elements all about us, will not be at all at a loss, when his time comes, to discover instantaneous ways of separating, deranging, and changing them to suit his divinely announced ends; and the stupendous crashing shall be as when "the Lord shall roar from on high," or speak in his loudest thunders. This may be the work of the angel of Rev. 14: 18, "which had power over fire," and who seems commissioned to do his solemn specific work at the harvest, or end of the world. And we read that the final answer to the prayers of all the saints (Rev. 8: 3–5) is with "voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake." The result of all is, that the atmospheric "heavens, being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." I shall come again to a consideration of the last signs of the final dissolution, as exhibited in the shaking of the powers of heaven. Meanwhile, Christ is our only sure refuge, now and for ever. D. THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

This excellent child's paper should receive all due attention from the Sunday school pupils and parents, who are interested in its prosperity at this time. This is the month when subscriptions expire, and new clubs are formed, and remittances of money should be promptly made. The best way to get up a club of five, ten, fifteen, or more subscribers in your neighborhood, or to induce your old clubs to renew, is to take the time and spend a day in personally visiting the people and soliciting subscriptions and money. You need not fear, and will not fail. A great many will take the paper and pay you for it, if you will only ask or tease them about it. If you are in cash, and it is only wearing out your portmonie, just invest it in gifts of this little paper to the poor, whose children can read, and who, perhaps, taking no other paper, will be delighted with it. Or, a good way is in getting subscribers, to offer to pay one-third, or one-half yourself, or to pay the postage on a bundle for a year. This is a great inducement to the poor, who thus share your bounty and get it cheaply. I know these methods work well, by experience and trial of them. Do wake up out of your sleep, brother and sister, and see if you can't get new subscribers and the pay for our good Crisis and Pilgrim. D. T. T.

PALESTINE.—Return of the Jews to their Land. —An association has been formed, styled the International Society of the Orient, the chief object of which is the return of the Jews to their own land. The Rothschilds and Sir Moses Montefiore are said to be engaged in it, and Napoleon and several other sovereigns have given it countenance. The Sultan has virtually parted with his sovereign rights over Palestine. All Christendom watches this movement with the most intense interest.

$500 FOR MAINE.

Who wants a share of it? Who is ready to have it divided among as many as will take an interest in it? Probably a large number would readily speak for a little of it, seeing it is free. But hold a bit. I remember that one who knew all the workings of nature, and the best course to obtain blessings, has said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Let us then take counsel of the Master of the household, and secure the more blessings by it.

Some of you will remember that it was voted at the last "Advent Annual State Conference" to raise $500 the coming year, to be expended in publishing the gospel of the kingdom in new and destitute fields in Maine. And by another vote, it was made incumbent upon me to write you an address upon the subject. Dear brethren, sisters, and friends, we purpose to raise the $500 by our and your free-will offerings, and then give it to the starving, famished ones, in the shape of the gospel of Christ—the good news of salvation —eternal life—the soon coming and reign of our Lord from heaven. Do you want a share in this work in this way? We come to ask you about this very thing.

Is it a good work? You will say, "Yes." Can it be done so as to advance the cause of Christ? You will say, "It can." Well, shall it be done? What say you to this question? In former days, we have put forth our efforts in this form. Again, we have raised regular mission funds and sent out selected men. Then we have raised money for tracts and distributed them. God has signally blessed all these means, and some of the fruits are clearly manifested. Many sinners have been brought to Christ, many saints brought into the gospel faith. Our numbers have doubled and tripled within a few years, with great opposition all the way. There is a wide door of usefulness opened to us. Many towns have been visited, and the truth introduced; hundreds of interesting places are open for our labors; a portion of the people in nearly all places wish to hear on the great theme of Jesus' coming, and other truths we teach. Shall we be alive to supply these calls? Sinners may be saved, believers be rescued from the fatal errors now leading so many to destruction. Time is short. Jesus is soon coming. There are those among us who could give $100, others $50, $25, $10, $5, $1, or down to "two mites." All our ministers will act as agents in collecting. Bro. R. R. York, Yarmouth, is Treasurer. A faithful Board will see it properly expended.

LETTER FROM ANNA E. SMITH.

DEAR CRISIS:—On my arrival home, I found several letters asking what I needed to help me in my mission work. It seems as though the Lord had heard prayer, and is waking up the people to their last work; and as it will be impossible for me to answer those letters, only through the Crisis, I would say here, that all may know, that I need every thing, from a pair of shoes to a hat, from a little child to the old man and woman; especially the infant clothing. We have to be doctor, nurse, child's nurse, and every thing else; and often cannot find a stitch of clothing to put on the little stranger. So don't forget the baby clothes.

We now need things for our Sunday school scholars, from little children to men and women, and night clothes, etc., for our sick; quilts, blankets, etc.; in fact, every thing that you don't need. At this time, we have more old people sick than usual. Is there any farmer who has a barrel of apples he would like divided among God's poor sick? If so, send them on, and we will take them to them, and sit and scrape them, and feed them to them, while they lie on their sick beds, and God will pay you.

Direct all letters and barrels to Anna E. Smith, Providence Mission Rooms, No. 112 West 33d street, New York city.

It is best to prepay the express, as they always charge 50 or 75 cents more if it is paid on this end. They told me at Worcester three barrels would be $1.50; but when they got here they were $2.00. So it saves something to pay at the other end. Don't forget the place. Yours in the highways and hedges,

ANNA E. SMITH.

PLYMOUTH ROCK.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been to that sacred spot about which so many pens have written, the place of the landing of the pilgrim fathers, —Plymouth, Mass. "Plymouth Rock" is the spot that all eyes desire to gaze upon. It carries the mind back to 1620, when the Mayflower landed her precious crew, after a long and tedious voyage in search of a place to enjoy Bible freedom and liberty. I stood upon the rock, thinking of the past, present, and future; then went to my work, joyfully urging all to run to Christ, our Rock,—a refuge from the storm,—a hiding place,—a shelter, power, strong hold, into which all can run and be safe. I labored nine days with the few whose feet are on this living foundation, looking for eternal life. We had interesting meetings almost every day, and it was blessed to be with them, and see the interest manifested in seeking first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness. The brethren seem to be well united in effort to get all they can saved, before it is too late.

It was with great pleasure I spent the time with them. The interest was increasing. The word of God was having free course with a corresponding zeal, consequently the meetings were well attended. This is the time for all to be at the specific work of converting and saving men, while mercy lingers.

Brethren, gird yourselves, the conflict rages. We must make an aggressive movement. All depends on the few months' warfare. The strong arm of the Lord is with us,—nothing to fear. Glory to God, victory will turn on Zion's side soon. Amen. L. BOUTELL.

THANKSGIVING WEEK.

BRO. GRANT:—It is my duty to make a public acknowledgment of the many favors received during the last week in November, and also for some weeks previous. May the Lord bless every one of those who have ministered to us in our low estate. I have hesitated about publishing the names of those who have given, as many of them might object to having their names published. And as some who have sent the smallest amount have done more in proportion to their ability than the wealthy, I have concluded to state the whole amount received, without specifying the amount from each person. And, as I have acknowledged to each by letter, it is not necessary to [illegible] here. I append the names in the order of time, as they were received.

Amount contained in above letters, $139.05, of which $50.06 was received in response to Bro. F. Corker's appeal,—"Men of Israel, help!"

Kind friends, I truly feel to-day like a "reed shaken by the wind." I am quite overcome by your great and unmerited kindness. Do not fail to pray for me, for at times I feel so weak (I do not refer to bodily weakness) that it seems that there is but a step between me and death. I am more than ever convinced that in me, "that is in my flesh," dwelleth no good thing.

THE CAUSE IN NEW BRITAIN, CT.

BRO. GRANT:—The interest in Christ's immediate appearing, which has been known here for the last twenty years, seems to be in a very healthy state, and on the increase. The brethren are well united, and upon the doctrines, which are usually preached in connection with the Advent faith, there is no quarrel; although different views are sometimes in a temperate manner presented.

The meeting is an old one. It has seen days of depression. It has lived through the stormy trials of past years. Now the attendance is good. The people wish to know the reasons of our hope. On Sunday, Nov. 18th, I baptized three good, substantial converts to the faith of the kingdom of God. It was good, indeed, to meet so many at the chapel on Arch street, and to meet by the water side to profess our faith in Christ. Two more would have gone forward but for sickness, they wait a favorable opportunity.

I am especially pleased that in this church, which I have so well known for many years, there is now no clashing; and the same is true (to the praise of God and the good sense of brethren of diverse views be it said), of other churches in this part of the State. A good and healthy influence is exerted by the meeting, while hope is renewedly inspired in the hearts of the faithful.

There are some suggestions here that would lead some of the older brethren to look back over the time of their experience, and the Lord's guidance for the years during which we have stood looking for that "blessed hope," to observe the perils past, with the dangers which have threatened the ship, the fear of mutiny, as well as wreck, now happily past.

Here the friends met, when I first knew them, in a school-house; then at Father Allen's, and finally built the chapel, which, with all the conflict of the seasons which have since lapsed, remains as a monument of the truth in this proud and populer place; a monument of the faith of a few who love to wait his appearing. Yours truly,

New Britain, Ct. W. S. CAMPBELL.

GLOUCESTER, R. I.

Eld. J. J. Northup and myself commenced a protracted meeting at this place Nov. 19th, which is still in progress. The Lord has blessed us greatly. Sunday, Dec. 2nd, six were buried into Christ by baptism, and eight were received into the church. There are some five or six others who will go forward soon. I never saw converts stronger. They have come out under the plain preaching of the present truth, and can give a reason for the hope that is in them. Among them are several old, grey-headed men, who have been serving sin and Satan for many years; but they say they have obtained through tickets for the kingdom of God, and I believe it. Pray for us. C. H. SWEET.

shall, for they must close the coffin. I moved not; I could not move. I was seemingly unconscious of what was passing around me. I had wept until weak nature was about to give up. Kind friends came and took me away from the coffin. I had no power to resist. They bore my dear mother away to the dark prison house, and laid her away to sleep in Jesus till he shall bid the sleepers rise. Never did I feel as if life was of so little worth as at that time. O how I did pray that I might die and be laid away with her.

Should these lines meet the eye of Bro. H. Pratt, he will doubtless remember what he said, "that he never officiated at a funeral before, where grief seemed to be so deep and uncontrollable, as it did there, excepting at his own dear mother's. It has been almost fourteen years since that sad and gloomy day, and I can but weep now at the remembrance of that day. Since then, my dearly beloved father has been laid by my dear mother's side. In tears and bitter weeping we can but sigh to have Jesus come and raise our sleeping ones, and make the earth bloom in Eden-like beauty, when we shall meet our dear and loved parents, to part no more for ever.

Dear ones, who have never been called to pass through this awful scene, I can say from the heart that I hope you never will. And those who are weeping the loss of loved ones, remember my heart's deepest sympathies are enlisted for you. I weep with them that weep. This is the night of bitter weeping, but the morn of glory will soon dawn. Praise Jesus. I long to be there. Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly. We are weary of staying, and long to rest with all the dear ones. Signs seem now to speak the coming of Jesus very near. Let us keep ready, and by and by we shall meet our loved ones, never to part again. Amen. LUTHERA B. WEAVER.

DORCAS MISSION.

We have thus far received this autumn a barrel of clothing from Hartford, and a check for $38.50 from the "young folks"; a barrel from Vergennes, Vt., and three barrels from Bristol, Conn., and $15.00. Also a box of shoes from J. R., of Haverhill (Mass., or N. H.?). From a sister in Worcester we have received a trunk full of bonnets. Her friends furnished the trimmings.

On last Saturday, our grand holiday for Christ took place. The school-room of the "Home" was thronged with men, women, and children. Four of us were kept hard at work. We had not the power of multiplying the articles sent, so many had to go away disappointed. We clothed the most needy, and the dancing eyes, and the white teeth, and the antics of the children, showed how successful our friends were. Some of the children nestled their heads under our arms, and one little one said she "could squeeze us into a jelly." So I think that her heart must have been full. All these barrels contained clothing for men, women, and children; hats, caps, shoes, socks, stockings, hoods, and quilts. In some were apples, buttons, thread, silk, scissors, etc., etc. I wished that the friends who sent these heavenly God-bless-yous were present to see the real solid comfort these things afforded. You would have felt well paid for your exertions in the behalf of the worthy poor of our mission. The bonnets have been given to poor saints, and their prayers ascend to the Lord in thanksgiving for raising up such friends for them during these hard times.

We need dresses for girls. But few have been sent, but I do not complain, for there are not many amongst our people, who have girls, who do not have to make every thing wear in their own families as long as possible. But I think of purchasing a lot of remnants cheap, and then we are to have a sewing-machine, and thus have a lot made soon.

Most of our help comes from Adventists. The fact that I am an Adventist is well known throughout our mission field. "Jesus and the Resurrection," and his speedy coming, are held up to the people. We do not have smooth sailing all the way. There are jealous missionaries, who use their influence to injure our christian character and our work. They leave no stone unturned. At times we are troubled on every side. I have ever sailed under my true colors, and not moved around as a Baptist or a Methodist, but as an Adventist and a christian. Before the Friends gave me the lease of the "Home for Little Wanderers," I told them that I was an Adventist. Other denominations here "will have none of me," because they believe that I am an infidel. They work against us, but glory to God, "no weapon that is formed against us has prospered. Enough of these things. You have troubles enough of your own, without being burdened with mine. This is a part of the legacy,—"If we suffer, we shall also reign with him."

Pray for me, that I may be "stedfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." The Lord gives me sweet peace of mind, but the world gives tribulation. The latter drives us to Christ, and the former preserves us. Be faithful to Christ. "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him."

DORCAS MISSION RECEIPTS.

Received from a sister in Worcester, who loves the appearing of Christ, $10.00; from "Stewards" of Lawrence, Ms., $50.00; Emily Marsh, $10.00; T. D. Bailey, 75c.; E. T. Haskell, $1.00; Emma, of Avalanch, $2.00; New Britain church, Conn., $1.50; L. G., of Illinois, $8.00; J., $5.00; and from Peru, Wis., the following sums: W. C. Peck, $5.00; his wife, $1.00; Andrew Sherburne, $10.00; Sayles Sherburne, $2.00; Adebert Sherburne, $1.00; Ole Lawson, Geo. Rogers, W. S. Grover, Prof. Knapp, and J. D. Simonds, $1.00 each.

May the blessing of the Lord rest upon these friends of the poor. The Lord has raised them up in our time of need. At present I rent two dwelling houses and two halls, at the rate in all of $300.00 per annum. Now I have the "Little Wanderers' Home," and shall have not less than sixty children to feed through the winter. Then the matron and her assistant will be paid $20.00 per month for their services, and many other expenses to pay. Then the families of the poor, the sick, and the needy, must be helped. God has taken care of the work, and he will take care of it. Children are to be clothed, garments to be made. I want still the prayers of God's children. He will open the hearts to give. Yours, etc., in hope of eternal life,

Phila., Dec. 4th. F. H. BURBANK.

HAMPTON.

Our meetings at the Town Hall, in Hampton, N. H., commencing Nov. 27th, have been owned and blessed by the Lord, and have resulted, we trust, in much good. A deep interest has been awakened in many minds, some have been converted, and others are seeking the Lord. We found much prejudice in the way, but it has yielded like winter before the approach of summer. Before we got through, the hall was crowded with a very attentive audience. Since we left, we have received very glad tidings from there, showing that the truth is working like leaven hid in meal. Praise the Lord for his goodness to the children of men.

WHICH?

Sometimes we receive money from the husband for the Crisis, and sometimes from the wife, and we do not know how to credit it. For instance, this week we received $3 from Mrs. D. A. Bean, Sutton, N. H. We turn to our subscription book, and find Jacob Bean and Phineas Bean in Sutton, N. H. Now how shall we tell whether Mrs. D. A. Bean is the wife of Jacob or Phineas Bean?

When you send money to be credited for the Crisis, always give us the name of the person to whom the paper is directed. Please remember this. One thing more, always give the STATE, as well as the name of the post office.

CHEERING WORDS.

We receive many kind and cheering words from those who write for "our paper." As we have before said, these kind words are to us as cool water to a thirsty soul. When we have been away holding meetings in some new place, and been called all kinds of hard names, it is a source of much comfort to come home and read the cheering words from our dear Brn. and Srs. It is a great privilege to be associated with such noble souls, who love the appearing of Jesus and are ever ready to aid in sounding the last notes of warning to this wicked world.

One of the heaviest crosses of an editor of a religious paper is to be obliged to leave out a communication from a dear Bro. and Sister in Christ, because he knows there is danger that they may be grieved and refuse to write again; yet he is satisfied that another article in its place would do the readers more good. But this cross is often made very light by kind words like the following:—

"DEAR BRO. GRANT:—If you think this is worthy of your notice, you may publish it, if not, pass it by."

"BRO. GRANT.—The above is sent you for the Crisis, but, as I have before said, you can lay it in the 'dark drawer' if not wished for to put in print. I am trying to fill my little niche in the Lord's vineyard, and if I do any thing which by his servants may be thought not called for, I am ready to receive it as a kindness, when they in the Spirit refuse to accept it."

"BRO. GRANT.—Cut and trim my communications as you see fit, or withhold, as you judge best. My object is God's glory."

"BRO. GRANT.—Add, or take from, or leave out, just as will best help the cause."

"DEAR BRO. GRANT.—In regard to what I have written, you are at liberty to add to, take from, or leave out altogether."

A TENT.

At a late meeting of the Missionary Board, it was proposed to purchase a large tent, to be used as a portable meeting-house the coming year, in the northern states, and elsewhere as the door may open. It is to be called the American Advent Missionary Tent. It is thought best to have one capable of seating two thousand persons.

There are strong reasons for procuring such a tent. 1. Meetings in the tent would be less expensive than in halls. Halls in villages and cities, of a size necessary to hold what would come to a tent meeting, would cost from ten to fifty dollars a day.

2. We could go with the tent to places where there were no halls, or where there were none to be obtained. It often happens that we cannot get halls when we want them, because they have been previously engaged. We recollect that when in Philadelphia, we hired Concert Hall, for one Sabbath, Oct. 29th, and paid $40; but it was then engaged for every Sabbath till the next February. Thus we often find halls engaged for months ahead, so that we cannot get them when desired.

3. A meeting in a tent will call out a much larger audience than would go to a hall or a meeting-house.

4. Another reason why we need a tent is the marked increase of interest in the minds of the people to hear on the subjects for which we as a people are distinguished from other churches. This fact calls for more earnest effort on the part of those who see the light and truth.

5. In many places, where meetings are needed, there are but few if any to entertain those who wish to come from adjoining towns; but when we have a tent, it becomes a house to sleep in nights, and for meetings during the day,—a campmeeting in one tent instead of many.

It is estimated that the tent and fixtures will not cost less than five hundred dollars. Now comes the question, who will aid in getting it up? Let us take hold of this in earnest, and make a grand effort for the cause of truth, and do what we can for the salvation of those around us. A heavy responsibility is resting upon us as a people. Let us not try to shake it off, but cheerfully bear the burdens and crosses, if we expect to hear the Savior say, "Well done." If we have the tent, we can go into new places, where we could not otherwise be accommodated, and thus be instrumental of reaching thousands of people who might never hear, if it were not for the tent.

Shall we have the tent? Who will take stock in this important enterprise? Here is an excellent opportunity to invest money to use for the glory of the Lord. Our work is a short one; let us be bravely in earnest; The Macedonian cry is sounding from all quarters. Help us to push the battle. We are anxious to get this tent made as soon as possible, as there is no time to spare, if we have it ready by the opening of the spring. Come, ye noble hearted ones, give a big lift now, and let us purchase the cloth and have it making immediately. Brn., shall we have the tent?

REPORTS OF LABORS.

We would say to those at work in the vineyard of the Lord, tell us the good news of your success. It is cheering to the pilgrims. When a member of a loving family is away from home, all those at home are anxious to hear from him, and learn of his success; this illustrates the feeling in the church of Christ, when the members love each other as Jesus would have them. We know Satan will whisper in the ear,—it looks like boasting to publish the happy results of the labors of the faithful watchman; but we do not accuse the apostles of boasting, when they relate what the Lord accomplished by their labors; neither could any one truly accuse George Muller of boasting, when he publishes from year to year what the Lord is doing by him in supporting a thousand orphan children. By publishing these facts to the world, great good has been accomplished in arousing others to go to work in the vineyard of the Lord with more zeal. Because some may have been guilty of boasting, that is not a sufficient reason for withholding good news from the household of faith. Therefore, we say, tell us what the Lord is doing in the North, South, East and West. It may be necessary for each to be short, so that all may speak; but let us hear from those who have good news to tell.

THE FENIAN FEELING.

The following, which is a part of the proclamation by Gen. Sweeney, "Major General Commanding the Armies of Ireland," shows what those may expect who stand opposed to the Fenian movement:—

"All who raise an arm to defend her [England], to frustrate or defeat us, belong to the common enemy, and as such will be dealt with. As we know how to recognize the services of our friends, so also do we know how to punish the depredations of our foes."

It is very evident that the Catholics are laying plans to get the control of this country.

WORTH REMEMBERING

The following rule should be observed by every one who wishes to live a christian life, and be a peacemaker in society. Please remember and observe it. It will produce happy results, and add no sorrow:

"Believe nothing against another but upon good authority; nor report what may hurt another, unless it may be a greater hurt to others to conceal it."

FASHION.—We commend to our readers the article on "Fashion," by Bro. Percival. We fully agree with his remarks. The subject demands the serious attention of all christians. The professed disciples of Jesus have already followed the fashions of a wicked world quite too far. May the Lord give the faint-hearted courage to adorn themselves in "modest apparel."

THE WOODSTOCK DISCUSSION.—We have just received the published report of our late discussion with Eld. J. Rowe, in Woodstock, N. B. It makes a pamphlet of 53 pp. Price 25 cts. Postage two cents.

A NEW WORK.

"The state of the Church and the World at the final outbreak of evil, and revelation of antichrist, his destruction at the second coming of Christ and the ushering in of the Millennium," with an Appendix by Mrs. A. P. Jolliffe

This work, with the exception of the appendix, is a reprint of a London work. Although we might differ from some positions of the author, yet it is a work calculated to awaken a new interest in the great truth of the speedy coming of Christ, and other important points revealed in the Scriptures.

The work contains 256 pp., and may be had for $1.25, by addressing Sr. A. P. Jolliffe, Box 1199, Philadelphia, Pa.

We purpose to make some extracts from the work. The following is from pp. 9–11.

"We are told, on every side, that we are living in remarkable times. We read of it in the newspapers; we hear it in our daily conversation; and we feel it to be true. There is, undoubtedly, a rumbling of some extraordinary earthquake, which, growing more and more distinct, forewarns the thoughtful that a crisis of no slight importance is not far in our advance. We see, indeed, the christian, the unbeliever, the philanthropist, and the politician, all agreeing in the expectation of some gigantic outburst. We find the hearts of men of judgment 'failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth.' The eyes of many turn with anxious gaze towards the observers of the times, the learned, the statesmen, the merchants, and the ministers of the gospel, with the inquiry—'Watchman, what of the night?' But who among the sons of men can satisfy the inquiry? Opinions, various enough, come forth. A rush of many voices gives reply. But who is to be trusted? The only safe response which any man can give, is this—'It is not for you to know the times and the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power.' Yet, for all this, there is a ray of light, feeble certainly, but not to be neglected, for it comes down directly from that Father's hand of love, and sheds its gentle beam upon this wondrous period in which we live. By this one beam, those men who have the spirit of the Lord can read a word of warning, which diffuses joyful expectation through their willing hearts. That word is, 'Watch and pray, for the coming of the Lord draws near.' This ray of light illuminates, moreover, a few signs and portents, and exhorts, 'When these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh.' Now for this gleam let those of us who know the Savior render praise; and while we read, and watch, and pray, be humble, looking to the Lord submissively, with patient, waiting hearts; behaving ourselves always circumspectly; being well prepared to leave this bondage whensoever our Redeemer's voice shall call us to arise and meet him.

I know that there are christians, not a few, who will agree with me that these are times which ought to lead God's people to be much upon the watch-tower, forasmuch as many things betoken clearly that the coming of the Lord is near. And, doubtless, there are others who, although, perhaps, they will not go with me so far as this, will yet agree that these are days when things around forebode a crisis which has scarcely known a precedent. I, therefore, confidently ask for the attention of my brethren in Christ, to the heart-stirring and important subject of those prophecies which concern the future of our world, and cast a special light upon the second advent of our Lord and Savior.

Now, inasmuch as these prophecies have been, till lately, studied by so very few, even among really christian people, I ought, perhaps, before I speak directly upon the subject, to note carefully the duty which unquestionably lies upon every one of us, to give them an attention just as close as that we should to any other part of the Holy Scripture.

To this duty our text plainly calls attention. Let us observe its language. The 'word of prophecy' of which it speaks (as we are informed by the twentieth verse) is contained in 'the Scriptures.' It is called a 'sure word of prophecy;' more sure (as the context also shows us,) than the word which the apostles spoke when they 'made known the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; though they had been eye-witnesses of his Majesty.' Again, it is compared to 'a light that shineth in a dark place;' wherefore also the Lord's people are expressly told that they 'do well,' that they 'take heed' to it. And this, not just occasionally, but 'until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in their hearts.'"

COMMON POLITENESS.

The above is the title of a new book that everybody should read. We have seen many works on politeness, but consider this the best of them all. It does not propose to give rules for the silly artificial politeness, that kisses you when you come, and backbites you when you are gone; but is a work founded on common sense, and christian principles. It is a valuable present to make to the "young folks,"—just the thing for a holiday present.

It is published by D. C. Colesworthy, the author. He is an amiable gentleman, who keeps an "antique book store at No. 66 Cornhill, Boston. We have often remarked that we consider him the best man we know in Boston with whom to trade in books. You are always sure of kind treatment, and low prices. Give him a call.

"Common Politeness" contains 96 12mo. pp. Price 75 cts., postage 8 cts. For sale at this office.

WOMAN'S APPAREL.

"Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold (chains), or of putting on of (gorgeous) apparel."

This is Dr. Whitby's paraphrase of 1 Pet. 3:3. The word emplokee, rendered "plaiting," is not found elsewhere in the Greek New Testament. It means to plait, to braid, to twist, to crimp, or to fold the hair. The Greek plegma, in 1 Tim. 2:9, rendered "broidered," has about the same meaning, and, like the first named, it is used but once in the N. T. It appears, from these passages, that the first christians forbade all such adornment and embroidering and braiding of the hair of the female converts in the church; but nothing is more common in the nineteenth century than for professedly christian women to utterly disregard the apostolic teaching, and, instead of wearing the hair in plainness and simplicity, to braid, twist, crimp, and torture it into every imaginable shape, much to the disfigurement of the head, and often to the injury of the health, and also to load it down with pins, combs, ribbons, bands, beads, clasps, coils, tufts, volubilis, chignons, coiffeurs, Mary Stuarts, and other Parisian unnameable tinsel and fixings. Sensible people need not to be told that real beauty of face, head, or form, needs no extra adornment. As well might one attempt to adorn sun-light with gas, as to improve true beauty with gaudy tinsel. And where good looks are lacking, no amount of gewgaws or finery can make it up. And yet, our women put on these squaw-like trappings to be in style, and to appear beautiful! I do not mock.

It may seem harsh in us to say it, but the truth demands that our women be told again that all this gaudy and gorgeous adornment, now in use, is represented in the sacred Scriptures as being the attire of harlots. Isa. 3:16–24, and Rev. 17:1–4. Both profane and sacred history confirm this severe statement. Commenting on the "outward adornment" forbidden by the apostle in our leading text, Dr. Whitby says:—"These, in the words of Clement of Alexandria, are 'the ornaments of whores,' and such as demonstrate their arrogance, softness, and lasciviousness. The plaiting of the hair was, (saith he) 'a sign of corrupt women; and they that use them,' Clement continues, 'were attired like whores.' And in his third book and fourth chapter he says: 'The women that wear gold, plait their hair, and paint their faces, have not the image of God in the inward man, but, in lieu of it, a fornicating and adulterous soul.' The Apostolic Constitutions also forbid women to wear 'exquisite garments, or garments fitted to deceive, or gold rings upon their fingers, because all these things are signs of whoredom.' And as for the wearing of gold, Jamblicus says, that 'no free woman wore gold, but whores only.' The precious apparel is the thing which all the comedians mention as the attire which such women sought after and gloried in. These things, therefore, when they are used as such marks of distinction, are absolutely forbidden chaste women."—Whitby's Annotations.

As to those women who are wedded to their theatrical costumes and finery, and whose little, vain life consists in following the fashions, there is no hope for them. But we really pity the sensible and modest female, who is subjected by the iron rule of society and the perverted taste of our times to adopt styles and modes repugnant to her enlightened judgment and conscience, and yet whose social surroundings seem to compel her to wear the chains of slavery to fashion. But can we expect anything better so long as the Bible is ignored, and good taste and common sense are set aside for the gospel according to Leslie, Godey, and Demorest, and the country obtains its styles, modes and fashions from New York, and New York obtains them from Roman Catholic and infidel Paris, and Paris obtains them from her gaudy and beautiful but corrupt and utterly godless courtezans? We advise all who look for the Lord to trample this tyranny under foot, and with meek and quiet spirits attire themselves as those who shall give account to the Coming One. [Amen.—Editor.] D. T. ROIZEDON.—2 Pet. 3: 10.—No. 2.

"The heavens shall pass away with a great noise."
"Shall pass away with a rushing sound."—Diaglott.
"The heavens will suddenly pass away."—Syriac.
"The heavens shall perish with a terrible noise."—Tyndale.
"Shall pass away in the manner of a tempest."—Geneva.
"Shall pass with great violence."—Rheims.
"The heavens with a crashing roar shall pass away."—Sept.
"Shall pass away with a rushing noise."—Bible Union.

We have shown, in a previous article, that the sudden revelation of Christ to judgment is to be accompanied with the opening of the heavenly doors with a loud crash. The rattle of a thousand railroad cars, the screams of a thousand steam pipes, the roar of ten thousand monstrous gongs, the explosion of a million tons of nitro-glycerine, the rattle and crash of all the gathered thunders, all combined in one terrible sound, would scarcely equal the noise of this appalling catastrophe, which shall shake the world, roll up the curtains of the skies, and disclose to the affrighted inhabitants of the earth the great white throne and its awful occupant. The subject commands our attention, for the day is at hand when our ears shall be saluted by the awful roizedon, and the reverberations of the accompanying trump of God.

The science of the atmosphere, and the various inflammable gases, discloses the methods by which this solemn event may be easily brought about. Almighty power, that created and arranged the properties of the elastic and circumambient air that with a depth of forty-five miles surrounds the entire globe, could in a moment so separate the same into its constitutional gases of oxygen and nitrogen, or destroy the equilibrium of these main gases, as to produce this result. Or by actively developing and compressing the latent caloric existing in all the air, it could be done. Or by creating large quantities of hydrogen and setting it on fire, an awful explosive report would follow, deranging all the aerial heavens. Or by generating immense quantities of carbureted hydrogen, or perhaps by using the stores of this inflammable substance, supposed to be already accumulated in the upper regions of the air, which, when mingled with oxygen and set on fire, explodes violently and with a loud report.

We may rest assured that He who formed and arranged the subtile elements all about us, will not be at all at a loss, when his time comes, to discover instantaneous ways of separating, deranging, and changing them to suit his divinely announced ends; and the stupendous crashing shall be as when "the Lord shall roar from on high," or speak in his loudest thunders. This may be the work of the angel of Rev. 14:18, "which had power over fire," and who seems commissioned to do his solemn specific work at the harvest, or end of the world. And we read that the final answer to the prayers of all the saints (Rev. 8:3–5) is with "voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake." The result of all is, that the atmospheric "heavens, being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." I shall come again to a consideration of the last signs of the final dissolution, as exhibited in the shaking of the powers of heaven. Meanwhile, Christ is our only sure refuge, now and for ever. D. THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

This excellent child's paper should receive all due attention from the Sunday school pupils and parents, who are interested in its prosperity at this time. This is the month when subscriptions expire, and new clubs are formed, and remittances of money should be promptly made. The best way to get up a club of five, ten, fifteen, or more subscribers in your neighborhood, or to induce your old clubs to renew, is to take the time and spend a day in personally visiting the people and soliciting subscriptions and money. You need not fear, and will not fail. A great many will take the paper and pay you for it, if you will only ask or tease them about it. If you are in cash, and it is only wearing out your portmonie, just invest it in gifts of this little paper to the poor, whose children can read, and who, perhaps, taking no other paper, will be delighted with it. Or, a good way is in getting subscribers, to offer to pay one-third, or one-half yourself, or to pay the postage on a bundle for a year. This is a great inducement to the poor, who thus share your bounty and get it cheaply. I know these methods work well, by experience and trial of them. Do wake up out of your sleep, brother and sister, and see if you can't get new subscribers and the pay for our good Crisis and Pilgrim. D. T. T.

PALESTINE.—Return of the Jews to their Land.—An association has been formed, styled the International Society of the Orient, the chief object of which is the return of the Jews to their own land. The Rothschilds and Sir Moses Montefiore are said to be engaged in it, and Napoleon and several other sovereigns have given it countenance. The Sultan has virtually parted with his sovereign rights over Palestine. All Christendom watches this movement with the most intense interest.

$500 FOR MAINE.

Who wants a share of it? Who is ready to have it divided among as many as will take an interest in it? Probably a large number would readily speak for a little of it, seeing it is free. But hold a bit. I remember that one who knew all the workings of nature, and the best course to obtain blessings, has said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Let us then take counsel of the Master of the household, and secure the more blessings by it.

Some of you will remember that it was voted at the last "Advent Annual State Conference" to raise $500 the coming year, to be expended in publishing the gospel of the kingdom in new and destitute fields in Maine. And by another vote, it was made incumbent upon me to write you an address upon the subject. Dear brethren, sisters, and friends, we purpose to raise the $500 by our and your free-will offerings, and then give it to the starving, famished ones, in the shape of the gospel of Christ—the good news of salvation—eternal life—the soon coming and reign of our Lord from heaven. Do you want a share in this work in this way? We come to ask you about this very thing.

Is it a good work? You will say, "Yes." Can it be done so as to advance the cause of Christ? You will say, "It can." Well, shall it be done? What say you to this question? In former days, we have put forth our efforts in this form. Again, we have raised regular mission funds and sent out selected men. Then we have raised money for tracts and distributed them. God has signally blessed all these means, and some of the fruits are clearly manifested. Many sinners have been brought to Christ, many saints brought into the gospel faith. Our numbers have doubled and tripled within a few years, with great opposition all the way. There is a wide door of usefulness opened to us. Many towns have been visited, and the truth introduced; hundreds of interesting places are open for our labors; a portion of the people in nearly all places wish to hear on the great theme of Jesus' coming, and other truths we teach. Shall we be alive to supply these calls? Sinners may be saved, believers be rescued from the fatal errors now leading so many to destruction. Time is short. Jesus is soon coming. There are those among us who could give $100, others $50, $25, $10, $5, $1, or down to "two mites." All our ministers will act as agents in collecting. Bro. R. R. York, Yarmouth, is Treasurer. A faithful Board will see it properly expended.

LETTER FROM ANNA E. SMITH.

DEAR CRISIS:—On my arrival home, I found several letters asking what I needed to help me in my mission work. It seems as though the Lord had heard prayer, and is waking up the people to their last work; and as it will be impossible for me to answer those letters, only through the Crisis, I would say here, that all may know, that I need every thing, from a pair of shoes to a hat, from a little child to the old man and woman; especially the infant clothing. We have to be doctor, nurse, child's nurse, and every thing else; and often cannot find a stitch of clothing to put on the little stranger. So don't forget the baby clothes.

We now need things for our Sunday school scholars, from little children to men and women, and night clothes, etc., for our sick; quilts, blankets, etc.; in fact, every thing that you don't need. At this time, we have more old people sick than usual. Is there any farmer who has a barrel of apples he would like divided among God's poor sick? If so, send them on, and we will take them to them, and sit and scrape them, and feed them to them, while they lie on their sick beds, and God will pay you.

Direct all letters and barrels to Anna E. Smith, Providence Mission Rooms, No. 112 West 33d street, New York city.

It is best to prepay the express, as they always charge 50 or 75 cents more if it is paid on this end. They told me at Worcester three barrels would be $1.50; but when they got here they were $2.00. So it saves something to pay at the other end. Don't forget the place. Yours in the highways and hedges,

ANNA E. SMITH.

PLYMOUTH ROCK.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been to that sacred spot about which so many pens have written, the place of the landing of the pilgrim fathers,—Plymouth, Mass. "Plymouth Rock" is the spot that all eyes desire to gaze upon. It carries the mind back to 1620, when the Mayflower landed her precious crew, after a long and tedious voyage in search of a place to enjoy Bible freedom and liberty. I stood upon the rock, thinking of the past, present, and future; then went to my work, joyfully urging all to run to Christ, our Rock,—a refuge from the storm,—a hiding place,—a shelter, power, strong hold, into which all can run and be safe. I labored nine days with the few whose feet are on this living foundation, looking for eternal life. We had interesting meetings almost every day, and it was blessed to be with them, and see the interest manifested in seeking first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness. The brethren seem to be well united in effort to get all they can saved, before it is too late.

It was with great pleasure I spent the time with them. The interest was increasing. The word of God was having free course with a corresponding zeal, consequently the meetings were well attended. This is the time for all to be at the specific work of converting and saving men, while mercy lingers.

Brethren, gird yourselves, the conflict rages. We must make an aggressive movement. All depends on the few months' warfare. The strong arm of the Lord is with us,—nothing to fear. Glory to God, victory will turn on Zion's side soon. Amen. L. BOUTELL.

THANKSGIVING WEEK.

BRO. GRANT:—It is my duty to make a public acknowledgment of the many favors received during the last week in November, and also for some weeks previous. May the Lord bless every one of those who have ministered to us in our low estate. I have hesitated about publishing the names of those who have given, as many of them might object to having their names published. And as some who have sent the smallest amount have done more in proportion to their ability than the wealthy, I have concluded to state the whole amount received, without specifying the amount from each person. And, as I have acknowledged to each by letter, it is not necessary to do it here. I append the names in the order of time, as they were received.

Kind friends, I truly feel to-day like a "reed shaken by the wind." I am quite overcome by your great and unmerited kindness. Do not fail to pray for me, for at times I feel so weak (I do not refer to bodily weakness) that it seems that there is but a step between me and death. I am more than ever convinced that in me, "that is in my flesh," dwelleth no good thing.

For the World's Crisis.

THE CAUSE IN NEW BRITAIN, CT.

BRO. GRANT:—The interest in Christ's immediate appearing, which has been known here for the last twenty years, seems to be in a very healthy state, and on the increase. The brethren are well united, and upon the doctrines, which are usually preached in connection with the Advent faith, there is no quarrel; although different views are sometimes in a temperate manner presented.

The meeting is an old one. It has seen days of depression. It has lived through the stormy trials of past years. Now the attendance is good. The people wish to know the reasons of our hope. On Sunday, Nov. 18th, I baptized three good, substantial converts to the faith of the kingdom of God. It was good, indeed, to meet so many at the chapel on Arch street, and to meet by the water side to profess our faith in Christ. Two more would have gone forward but for sickness, they wait a favorable opportunity.

I am especially pleased that in this church, which I have so well known for many years, there is now no clashing; and the same is true (to the praise of God and the good sense of brethren of diverse views be it said), of other churches in this part of the State. A good and healthy influence is exerted by the meeting, while hope is renewedly inspired in the hearts of the faithful.

There are some suggestions here that would lead some of the older brethren to look back over the time of their experience, and the Lord's guidance for the years during which we have stood looking for that "blessed hope," to observe the perils past, with the dangers which have threatened the ship, the fear of mutiny, as well as wreck, now happily past.

Here the friends met, when I first knew them, in a school-house; then at Father Allen's, and finally built the chapel, which, with all the conflict of the seasons which have since lapsed, remains as a monument of the truth in this proud and popular place; a monument of the faith of a few who love to wait his appearing. Yours truly,

New Britain, Ct. W. S. CAMPBELL.

GLOUCESTER, R. I.

Eld. J. J. Northup and myself commenced a protracted meeting at this place Nov. 19th, which is still in progress. The Lord has blessed us greatly. Sunday, Dec. 2nd, six were buried into Christ by baptism, and eight were received into the church. There are some five or six others who will go forward soon. I never saw converts stronger. They have come out under the plain preaching of the present truth, and can give a reason for the hope that is in them. Among them are several old, grey-headed men, who have been serving sin and Satan for many years; but they say they have obtained through tickets for the kingdom of God, and I believe it. Pray for us. THE LITTLE WANDERER'S HOME.

Grace, mercy, and peace to the saints, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. It is with a heart filled with praise and thanksgiving to him who loves us, that I am enabled to communicate to you the following record of the Lord's dealings with me. Truly he chooses the weak things of this world wherein to glorify himself. My heart can hardly conceive why he should select me for such a work, for I am the weakest of the weak; the most unworthy of the unworthy; a great sinner saved by grace through faith.

Last spring, a house was offered for sale at a very low price, and I wrote about it, requesting your aid in prayer in our behalf. The lady who owned it kept it from the others to give us a chance to purchase. But money came in very slowly, and we had to give up the idea of buying. Though my faith was tried, yet I felt assured that the Lord had called me to engage in the work of saving children from poverty and crime, and that he would yet give me a house to gather them into

Finally, all praise to his name, the house has been furnished me. The first one was denied, but God had something better in store for me. The one I now have was built for the express purpose for which I wish to use it. A number of the "Society of Friends" built the house nine years ago, and have used it as a home for destitute colored children since that time. It was vacant last spring, and learning who the treasurer was, I called at her residence, and then learned that it was to be occupied again. So my idea of hiring it vanished.

Three months ago, the house was vacant again, and my daily prayer was, then, "Lord, if it be thy will that we should have that house, open the hearts of the Friends, for Jesus' sake." And the Lord heard and answered prayer. Four weeks ago I received a note from the treasurer, whom I had seen but twice in my life, requesting me to call at her residence. I called, just four weeks ago this morning, the time appointed in the note. Time and space forbid my entering into the minutiæ of our conversation, but I found that the Friends had been talking over the matter of putting the house into my hands, for three weeks. O, how my poor heart rejoiced. I could not refrain from telling her how I had asked the Lord for the house, and that they had been moved upon by the Spirit of the Lord, and for three weeks, without my having any knowledge of it, they had been talking the matter over, and felt inclined to put the building under my care for the purpose I have mentioned.

At the request of the treasurer, I wrote a communication, giving a full statement of my plans, etc., which was read to their board of managers. They approved of them, and the next Saturday night I received a note from the treasurer, stating the fact, and that by my complying with certain conditions, I might take the place on trial for six months. The papers are now drawn up by the Trustees, which they and I are to sign. The conditions of the agreement between us are as follows:

I am to have a lease of the house for six months, and to pay no rent. The house to be kept in repair by me. None but colored children to be cared for in it. A day school to be kept there. Their managers to have the privilege of visiting us. They are to have the privilege of putting not more than half a dozen destitute colored children under our care. And once in a while, perhaps not more than three or four times in a year, give a night's lodging to twelve or fifteen orphan children, who will stop for rest on their way from Richmond, Va., to West Philadelphia, or Burlington, N. J., where they have similar institutions.

These are the conditions, which I readily accept, and shall endeavor by the grace of God to act in such a manner that these generous-hearted Friends and lovers of Jesus may never have reason to regret having exercised such great confidence in and generosity toward me. They have done, and are still doing, much for the alleviation of the wants and sorrows of the poor colored people of this and other cities.

The house is situated on the edge of our mission field, and just where it is needed for our work. It is built of brick, three stories in height, twenty feet wide, and with the L is fifty-eight feet long. The main building is thirty-two feet long and twenty feet wide. The L is twenty-six feet long by fourteen feet wide. Both are three stories in height.—There is a fine dry cellar under the entire house, in which I have built a coal-bin about eleven feet square, into which I have put thirteen tons of good stove coal, costing seven dollars per ton. We shall also have potato bins, etc., etc. On the first floor of the house is a school-room, 19 by 30 ft. The Friends have given us the use of a fine large stove and a lot of school furniture for this room. In the L is a dining-room, 13 by 15 ft. This is supplied with a small range, which heats the water for the bath-room, etc. In the rear of, and connected with the L, is a wooden building, one story in height, and 9 by 14 ft., which will be used as a cooking-room, and for a wash-room also. It is supplied with a good sized stove, left to us by the Friends. Two or three dollars will put it in good order.

On the second floor, there are two rooms in the main building. The front one 15 by 17½ ft., which will be used as a sleeping apartment for eight children. The other room will be occupied by the matron and her assistant. It is 13 by 15 ft. In the L is the reception room, which is 13 feet square. There your unworthy writer will be domiciled over night, in a bed thirty inches wide.

On the third floor are five rooms: three in the main building and two in the L. The rooms in the main building are 8 by 12 feet, 9½ by 15 feet, and 13 by 15 feet, which will be occupied by two, four and six children. In the L is the bath-room, which is four by nine feet, having a large bathing-tub, which is furnished with both hot and cold water; and the nursery 12 feet square. All these rooms are furnished with large closets, with hooks, shelves, etc. There are fifteen of them. I have had the house cleaned and white-washed throughout, and have put in fifteen iron bedsteads and mattresses. Twelve of these are for the children. They are thirty-six inches wide, and will hold two each. The mattresses are filled with husks. Over them we shall place old quilts, sheets, etc. All these bedsteads and mattresses were bought by me at nearly the first cost. The sheets, four feet wide and two yards and a half long, cost me seventy-five cents apiece. They are nearly new. The Lord raised up the friends for me. Bless his name.

We have $43.00 worth of plain white crockery, bought very reasonably. This sum includes also two dozen large iron spoons for soup, and three dozen iron spoons for the sups. There are one hundred and seventy-five pieces of crockery in all, cups, saucers, soup-plates, dinner-plates, which will also be used for breakfast and supper plates, and potato, meat, soup, and other kinds of dishes, large and small, picthers, etc., etc.

There will be three classes of children in the Home. 1st. Friendless and orphan children, for whom we shall get homes as the way may be opened. 2d. Those whom we rescue from the awful dens around us, who are not already ruined, or of bad dispositions and habits. 3d. Night lodgers. Our home will accommodate twenty-five children permanently.

We shall have a day school for the Home children and poor children in the neighborhood who do not attend school. There will also be an evening school three nights in the week for poor colored men and women, and a Bible class one night in the week. The school-room will be used for night lodgers also. It will accommodate twenty-five comfortably. We shall gather in these half-naked and freezing children during the cold winter nights, and give them supper, a comfortable bed on the floor, and a breakfast in the morning. Thus we shall do by the help of the Lord. Children freeze every winter in this city, and some have died in that way. I have seen the poor little ones shivering with cold, their feet and hands blistered, and my heart has almost been broken. Now, my blessed Father has granted my heart's desire, "we'll gather them in."

We are hard at work. A thousand cares press upon us. The adversary is at work against us in many forms; but so long as we trust in the Lord, so long "no weapon that is formed against us shall prosper." Many encouraging letters are received. I am glad to receive them. My answers have to be brief. Nevertheless, I can answer them, and I hope that good may be accomplished, even in that manner.

Sister Rebecca Reeves, of this city, will be the matron of the Home, the Lord willing. We have had many letters from those who would like to help us, but we have as many as the means and accommodations demand at present. It is blessed to find so many willing hearts and hands. At present, there will be but three persons to take charge of the children. We shall have also the co-operation of Sr. Helginson a considerable portion of the time. Her help is invaluable. The children will have plain breakfasts and suppers, and meat in some form at dinner time. By and by our bill of fare will be sent along for your perusal.

Our other mission work will be carried on as heretofore. We still, by the blessing of God, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the widow and the fatherless, administer to the sick, point sinners to Christ, warn the unruly, and comfort the feeble-minded. Our Sunday school is in a flourishing condition. It has been gathered from streets, courts, and alleys; cellars, garrets, sheds, shanties, and tenement houses. We love the work, and have plenty of it to do, and a plenty of trials and hardships, and an abundance of joy, peace, and comfort in Christ also.

I employ Sr. Helginson as a missionary for Christ. She is a faithful servant of Christ. She does not have much, if any, of the "I" about her, and requests me never to put her name in the Crisis. But here it is. I think that a newspaper notice will not cause her to forsake Christ. Her husband is a believer with her and us in the soon coming of Christ and his kingdom.

Due notice will be given of the opening of the Home. Pray for us. - Yours at work for Christ, FRANCIS H. BURBANK.

INFORMATION.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to say a word respecting a remark in Bro. Munger's "Notes by the Way," respecting myself. As it reads, it does me injustice, as well as the church referred to, though Bro. M. did not so intend. I was requested to give some lectures, and when the pastor of said church learned the fact, he very kindly offered me the house for that purpose. But there was nothing conditional in the matter, as there remarked; nothing said about "if they would take the whole five," nor about "five" at all. I did not know how many I should give, nor the subjects I should present, with the exception of the first three. It was not until the week I was to give the fourth, that I knew what my subject would be. I have given five to an interested audience, and I do not think they have produced the effect Bro. M. suggests; but I do believe that a deeper interest has been awakened in the study of the prophetic word. Several of the Baptist church were much interested. The pastor who invited me treated me throughout with the most christian courtesy, and publicly expressed his interest in the lectures. I deeply regret the remark of Bro. M., for it will awaken unpleasant feelings in those who have treated me so generously. This much is due to them and myself. M. D. W.

THE CAUSE IN WEST NEW YORK.

It is now two years since I came into this section. The former elements of distraction are dead, or lulled to sleep, and the onward march of truth at present is astonishing. The increase of interest manifested in the numerous calls for preaching, and the candid attention given to the word dispensed, shows to the observer that God is with his servants, with his right hand, helping them in this glorious and yet awful work of warning men of a soon coming judgment. It is glorious in its application to the faithful servant, in view of his crown of righteousness, "which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give him at that day"; and it is awful in its application to the rejector of truth, who in that day shall mourn and weep.

The reluctance on the part of eastern preachers to come into this field has been counterbalanced by the Lord in calling to the work of preaching several in our own midst; whereas, two years ago, the cause was mainly in the hands of Brn. C. B. Turner, F. Burr, J. D. Brown, C. F. Sweet, and C. W. Low. We now have, in addition to the above brethren, M. R. Miles, B. P. Stevens, C. H. Williams, J. W. Taylor, D. Cogswell, Bros. Allen, Newel, and Brown, who have recently been ordained; all of whom bid fair to be men of strength in the hand of God, and who are worthy the sympathy and support of the church. Then there are others with whom we had conversation, whom I pray God to lead in the path of duty. They are needed. God bless them. Yes, just such men as Brn. Barron, Marlat, Stroud, Thomas, Moore, and others. These are young men, and some of them educated men. Thank God they begin to feel the woe.

With the help of God, let us push the conquests still further into new fields, which is the only correct way to gain strength, and subdue the enemy. Then on with the march; advance the lines; fortify grounds already conquered; and may God help us all to be found at our posts when the Master comes.

Paris, Dec. 4. One regiment of French troops left the city of Rome yesterday.

Berne, Dec. 4. The Swiss Assembly had opened. In view of the state of affairs in Europe the President urged an immediate arming.

Florence, Dec. 5. It is asserted that the Pope has agreed to receive the Envoy of the Italian Government for purposes of negotiation.

Dublin, Dec. 5. The police and military are still active in search for Fenians. Seven supposed Head Centres were seized to-day, and confined in prison under a strong guard.

Rome, Dec. 5 Gen Montebello, commander of the French forces in this city, embarked to-day on a French iron-clad. He was accompanied by his staff. Preparations are making for the departure of the French troops on the 15 inst.

London, Dec. 6. Two more regiments of troops and a company of engineers have been ordered to leave immediately for Ireland. The Board of Admiralty has ordered three iron-clads of the home fleet to sail for the Irish coast.

Dublin, Thursday. Frequent arrests of Fenians continue to be made by the government officers, who are unceasing in their vigilance and prompt in taking action in all suspected cases.

The Governor of the City Prison here has telegraphed to London asking to have a military guard assigned him.

Paris, Dec. 6. Representatives of the United States Government have commenced legal actions in the Civil Courts against several parties in France, who furnished ships and material of war to the Southern Confederacy during the late war in the United States.

Dublin, Dec. 7. The purposes and proceedings of the Fenians in this island monopolize the attention of the Irish government. The grand Lodge of Orangemen have held a meeting and issued an earnest call for all the members of their order to support the government in their endeavors to keep the peace.

Liverpool, Dec. 7. All the depots of arms in this city have been placed under armed guards. The excited state of feeling among the Irish population render these precautions necessary.

Paris, Dec. 7. The large fleet of French war vessels and transports is now ready to sail for Mexico.

London, Dec. 8. The Fenian troubles in Ireland are evidently assuming still more alarming proportions, and it is reported here to-day, in addition to troops already dispatched to that island, two cavalry regiments have been ordered to leave immediately for the scene of disturbance.

Rome, Dec. 9. Another one of the French regiments left this city yesterday on its return to France.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 9. An imperial ukase has been issued declaring all the relations of Russia with the Pope of Rome abrogated, and annulling all special laws of the empire which have heretofore been made in accordance with said relations.

The London Times of the 26th, in an editorial on the Eastern question, says: "The settlement of the Eastern question involves a grave general European catastrophe. The question admits of no pacific or diplomatic solution. It will have to be referred to the ultima ratio."

Rome, Dec. 10. Some of the French troops are still here and will remain until the end of December.

DOMESTIC.

IMPEACHMENT OF THE PRESIDENT.—While a decided majority of the Republican Congress regard it as injudicious to attempt to impeach Andrew Johnson on any of the charges which have been made, there are a few earnest Representatives who are determined not to relinquish the idea. They have secured the appointment of several special committees of investigation, one of which will visit New Orleans, as they confidently expect to secure such evidence as will form ground for impeachment, and will insure conviction and deposition from office.

☞ At the war office in Paris everything is being got ready for the evacuation of Rome. On the 15th of December Gen. Monticello will leave Rome with his staff, but Gen. Polhes will remain in the Castle of St Angelo with half a brigade up to the 16th, on which day the French flag will be taken from the castle, after a salute of one hundred guns, and replaced by the Papal flag, which will also receive a salute. Gen. Polhes will then give up the keys of the castle to the Papal General Kurten, and the Roman Legion will take the place of the French troops.

☞ The Southwestern (England) Railway Company possesses a monstrous engine, named the "Colossus." It has been built to draw a train of eighty loaded wagons eighty miles in three hours, each loaded wagon weighing about ten tons. It can drag nearly one thousand tons from London to Southampton with almost the speed of a bird flying.

☞ France has declared war against the government of Corea, in Eastern Asia. The territory is tributary both to China and Japan. A number of French missionaries have been murdered there lately.

ITEMS.

☞ The cholera has appeared in the oil regions of West Virginia, and in some places is raging with unusual fatality. At Eaton's Tunnel, a small station on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, fifteen miles from Parkersburg, there have been fifteen deaths in four days, in a population of not more than one hundred persons.

☞ John Shultz of Pleasant Mills, N. J., is one hundred and seventeen years old. He has been blind seventeen years, but is otherwise unimpaired in his mental and physical faculties. He constantly attends the Methodist church, of which he has been a member almost a century.

☞ An offer has been made by the priests to purchase the Parliament buildings in Ottawa, and it was alleged that the offer had reference to the eventuality of the Pope establishing his See in Canada.

☞ At a recent meeting in London, Mr. Spurgeon stated that his church now numbers 3,600, and that by the assistance of his elders and deacons, he was able to maintain a thorough pastoral supervision over it.

☞ The engines of the large ocean steamers make about 200,000 turns in crossing the Atlantic between Liverpool and New York.

☞ Of the eight churches burnt in the Portland fire, only one is rebuilt, and that is Catholic.

☞ All the young princes of the Imperial family of Russia are to make a tour of the United States.

☞ During the late German war a pontoon bridge was thrown across the Rhine in twelve minutes.

☞ Strauss paid $300,000 for the right to give monster concerts in the exhibition building in Paris.

☞ Alderman Gabriel has been elected Lord Mayor of London.

☞ There are 200,000 poets in Great Britain.

Dedication at Concord, N. H.

Providence permitting, the new chapel lately erected on Washington street will be dedicated to the worship of God on Wednesday, December 19th, meeting to commence at 1½ o'clock, and continue through the week, and over the following Sabbath. Brn. H. L. Hastings and H. Pratt, with others, are to attend. Preaching brethren, are cordially invited, also brethren and sisters in the vicinity and elsewhere.

In connection with the above notice, we would say, that our place of worship is free for all the called of the Lord to come and clear their skirts from the blood of souls, by declaring "all the counsel of God." We offer free seats, and invite all, especially the poor, to come and hear the gospel, without money and without price. In this move, we have no disposition to sever, either in heart or in hand, from those who think differently, or build up a separate interest; but, as the earnest prayer of our Savior was that his people might be one, so we desire to be united with all who love him in sincerity. We hope, by the wisdom and grace which may be given us, to conduct this meeting upon gospel principles.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 584. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness, if less than 26 weeks, charge five cents; if more than 26 weeks, six cents. From the product (which will be a fraction over the actual indebtedness) deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

For the World's Crisis.

THE LITTLE WANDERER'S HOME.

Grace, mercy, and peace to the saints, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. It is with a heart filled with praise and thanksgiving to him who loves us, that I am enabled to communicate to you the following record of the Lord's dealings with me. Truly he chooses the weak things of this world wherein to glorify himself. My heart can hardly conceive why he should select me for such a work, for I am the weakest of the weak; the most unworthy of the unworthy; a great sinner saved by grace through faith.

Last spring, a house was offered for sale at a very low price, and I wrote about it, requesting your aid in prayer in our behalf. The lady who owned it kept it from the others to give us a chance to purchase. But money came in very slowly, and we had to give up the idea of buying. Though my faith was tried, yet I felt assured that the Lord had called me to engage in the work of saving children from poverty and crime, and that he would yet give me a house to gather them into.

Finally, all praise to his name, the house has been furnished me. The first one was denied, but God had something better in store for me. The one I now have was built for the express purpose for which I wish to use it. A number of the "Society of Friends" built the house nine years ago, and have used it as a home for destitute colored children since that time. It was vacant last spring, and learning who the treasurer was, I called at her residence, and then learned that it was to be occupied again. So my idea of hiring it vanished.

Three months ago, the house was vacant again, and my daily prayer was, then, "Lord, if it be thy will that we should have that house, open the hearts of the Friends, for Jesus' sake." And the Lord heard and answered prayer. Four weeks ago I received a note from the treasurer, whom I had seen but twice in my life, requesting me to call at her residence. I called, just four weeks ago this morning, the time appointed in the note. Time and space forbid my entering into the minutiæ of our conversation, but I found that the Friends had been talking over the matter of putting the house into my hands, for three weeks. O, how my poor heart rejoiced. I could not refrain from telling her how I had asked the Lord for the house, and that they had been moved upon by the Spirit of the Lord, and for three weeks, without my having any knowledge of it, they had been talking the matter over, and felt inclined to put the building under my care for the purpose I have mentioned.

At the request of the treasurer, I wrote a communication, giving a full statement of my plans, etc., which was read to their board of managers. They approved of them, and the next Saturday night I received a note from the treasurer, stating the fact, and that by my complying with certain conditions, I might take the place on trial for six months. The papers are now drawn up by the Trustees, which they and I are to sign. The conditions of the agreement between us are as follows:

I am to have a lease of the house for six months, and to pay no rent. The house to be kept in repair by me. None but colored children to be cared for in it. A day school to be kept there. Their managers to have the privilege of visiting us. They are to have the privilege of putting not more than half a dozen destitute colored children under our care. And once in a while, perhaps not more than three or four times in a year, give a night's lodging to twelve or fifteen orphan children, who will stop for rest on their way from Richmond, Va., to West Philadelphia, or Burlington, N. J., where they have similar institutions.

These are the conditions, which I readily accept, and shall endeavor by the grace of God to act in such a manner that these generous-hearted Friends and lovers of Jesus may never have reason to regret having exercised such great confidence in and generosity toward me. They have done, and are still doing, much for the alleviation of the wants and sorrows of the poor colored people of this and other cities.

The house is situated on the edge of our mission field, and just where it is needed for our work. It is built of brick, three stories in height, twenty feet wide, and with the L is fifty-eight feet long. The main building is thirty-two feet long and twenty feet wide. The L is twenty-six feet long by fourteen feet wide. Both are three stories in height.—There is a fine dry cellar under the entire house, in which I have built a coal-bin about eleven feet square, into which I have put thirteen tons of good stove coal, costing seven dollars per ton. We shall also have potato bins, etc., etc. On the first floor of the house is a school-room, 19 by 30 ft. The Friends have given us the use of a fine large stove and a lot of school furniture for this room. In the L is a dining-room, 13 by 15 ft. This is supplied with a small range, which heats the water for the bath-room, etc. In the rear of, and connected with the L, is a wooden building, one story in height, and 9 by 14 ft., which will be used as a cooking-room, and for a wash-room also. It is supplied with a good sized stove, left to us by the Friends. Two or three dollars will put it in good order.

On the second floor, there are two rooms in the main building. The front one 15 by 17½ ft., which will be used as a sleeping apartment for eight children. The other room will be occupied by the matron and her assistant. It is 13 by 15 ft. In the L is the reception room, which is 13 feet square. There your unworthy writer will be domiciled over night, in a bed thirty inches wide.

On the third floor are five rooms: three in the main building and two in the L. The rooms in the main building are 8 by 12 feet, 9½ by 15 feet, and 13 by 15 feet, which will be occupied by two, four and six children. In the L is the bath-room, which is four by nine feet, having a large bathing-tub, which is furnished with both hot and cold water; and the nursery 12 feet square. All these rooms are furnished with large closets, with hooks, shelves, etc. There are fifteen of them. I have had the house cleaned and white-washed throughout, and have put in fifteen iron bedsteads and mattresses. Twelve of these are for the children. They are thirty-six inches wide, and will hold two each. The mattresses are filled with husks. Over them we shall place old quilts, sheets, etc. All these bedsteads and mattresses were bought by me at nearly the first cost. The sheets, four feet wide and two yards and a half long, cost me seventy-five cents apiece. They are nearly new. The Lord raised up the friends for me. Bless his name.

We have $43.00 worth of plain white crockery, bought very reasonably. This sum includes also two dozen large iron spoons for soup, and three dozen iron spoons for the cups. There are one hundred and seventy-five pieces of crockery in all, cups, saucers, soup-plates, dinner-plates, which will also be used for breakfast and supper plates, and potato, meat, soup, and other kinds of dishes, large and small, pitchers, etc., etc.

There will be three classes of children in the Home. 1st. Friendless and orphan children, for whom we shall get homes as the way may be opened. 2d. Those whom we rescue from the awful dens around us, who are not already ruined, or of bad dispositions and habits. 3d. Night lodgers. Our home will accommodate twenty-five children permanently.

We shall have a day school for the Home children and poor children in the neighborhood who do not attend school. There will also be an evening school three nights in the week for poor colored men and women, and a Bible class one night in the week. The school-room will be used for night lodgers also. It will accommodate twenty-five comfortably. We shall gather in these half-naked and freezing children during the cold winter nights, and give them supper, a comfortable bed on the floor, and a breakfast in the morning. Thus we shall do by the help of the Lord. Children freeze every winter in this city, and some have died in that way. I have seen the poor little ones shivering with cold, their feet and hands blistered, and my heart has almost been broken. Now, my blessed Father has granted my heart's desire, "we'll gather them in."

We are hard at work. A thousand cares press upon us. The adversary is at work against us in many forms; but so long as we trust in the Lord, so long "no weapon that is formed against us shall prosper." Many encouraging letters are received. I am glad to receive them. My answers have to be brief. Nevertheless, I can answer them, and I hope that good may be accomplished, even in that manner.

Sister Rebecca Reeves, of this city, will be the matron of the Home, the Lord willing. We have had many letters from those who would like to help us, but we have as many as the means and accommodations demand at present. It is blessed to find so many willing hearts and hands. At present, there will be but three persons to take charge of the children. We shall have also the co-operation of Sr. Helginson a considerable portion of the time. Her help is invaluable. The children will have plain breakfasts and suppers, and meat in some form at dinner time. By and by our bill of fare will be sent along for your perusal.

Our other mission work will be carried on as heretofore. We still, by the blessing of God, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the widow and the fatherless, administer to the sick, point sinners to Christ, warn the unruly, and comfort the feeble-minded. Our Sunday school is in a flourishing condition. It has been gathered from streets, courts, and alleys; cellars, garrets, sheds, shanties, and tenement houses. We love the work, and have plenty of it to do, and a plenty of trials and hardships, and an abundance of joy, peace, and comfort in Christ also.

I employ Sr. Helginson as a missionary for Christ. She is a faithful servant of Christ. She does not have much, if any, of the "I" about her, and requests me never to put her name in the Crisis. But here it is. I think that a newspaper notice will not cause her to forsake Christ. Her husband is a believer with her and us in the soon coming of Christ and his kingdom.

Due notice will be given of the opening of the Home. Pray for us. - Yours at work for Christ, FRANCIS H. BURBANK.

INFORMATION.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to say a word respecting a remark in Bro. Munger's "Notes by the Way," respecting myself. As it reads, it does me injustice, as well as the church referred to, though Bro. M. did not so intend. I was requested to give some lectures, and when the pastor of said church learned the fact, he very kindly offered me the house for that purpose. But there was nothing conditional in the matter, as there remarked; nothing said about "if they would take the whole five," nor about "five" at all. I did not know how many I should give, nor the subjects I should present, with the exception of the first three. It was not until the week I was to give the fourth, that I knew what my subject would be. I have given five to an interested audience, and I do not think they have produced the effect Bro. M. suggests; but I do believe that a deeper interest has been awakened in the study of the prophetic word. Several of the Baptist church were much interested. The pastor who invited me treated me throughout with the most christian courtesy, and publicly expressed his interest in the lectures. I deeply regret the remark of Bro. M., for it will awaken unpleasant feelings in those who have treated me so generously. This much is due to them and myself. M. D. W.

THE CAUSE IN WEST. NEW YORK.

It is now two years since I came into this section. The former elements of distraction are dead, or lulled to sleep, and the onward march of truth at present is astonishing. The increase of interest manifested in the numerous calls for preaching, and the candid attention given to the word dispensed, shows to the observer that God is with his servants, with his right hand, helping them in this glorious and yet awful work of warning man of a soon coming judgment. It is glorious in its application to the faithful servant, in view of his crown of righteousness, "which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give him at that day"; and it is awful in its application to the rejector of truth, who in that day shall mourn and weep.

The reluctance on the part of eastern preachers to come into this field has been counterbalanced by the Lord in calling to the work of preaching several in our own midst; whereas, two years ago, the cause was mainly in the hands of Brn. C. B. Turner, F. Burr, J. D. Brown, C. F. Sweet, and C. W. Low. We now have, in addition to the above brethren, M. R. Miles, B. P. Stevens, C. H. Williams, J. W. Taylor, D. Cogswell, Bros. Allen, Howel, and Brown, who have recently been ordained; all of whom bid fair to be men of strength in the hand of God, and who are worthy the sympathy and support of the church. Then there are others with whom we had conversation, whom I pray God to lead in the path of duty. They are needed. God bless them. Yes, just such men as Brn. Barron, Marlat, Stroud, Thomas, Moore, and others. These are young men, and some of them educated men. Thank God they begin to feel the woe.

With the help of God, let us push the conquests still further into new fields, which is the only correct way to gain strength, and subdue the enemy. Then on with the march; advance the lines; fortify grounds already conquered; and may God help us all to be found at our posts when the Master comes. WM. A. FERN.

DOMESTIC.

IMPEACHMENT OF THE PRESIDENT.—While a decided majority of the Republican Congress regard it as injudicious to attempt to impeach Andrew Johnson on any of the charges which have been made, there are a few earnest Representatives who are determined not to relinquish the idea. They have secured the appointment of several special committees of investigation, one of which will visit New Orleans, as they confidently expect to secure such evidence as will form ground for impeachment, and will insure conviction and deposition from office.

☞ At the war office in Paris everything is being got ready for the evacuation of Rome. On the 15th of December Gen. Monticello will leave Rome with his staff, but Gen. Polhes will remain in the Castle of St Angelo with half a brigade up to the 16th, on which day the French flag will be taken from the castle, after a salute of one hundred guns, and replaced by the Papal flag, which will also receive a salute. Gen. Polhes will then give up the keys of the castle to the Papal General Kurteu, and the Roman Legion will take the place of the French troops.

☞ The Southwestern (England) Railway Company possesses a monstrous engine, named the "Colossus." It can drag nearly one thousand tons from London to Southampton with almost the speed of a bird flying.

☞ France has declared war against the government of Corea, in Eastern Asia. The territory is tributary both to China and Japan. A number of French missionaries have been murdered there lately.

☞ John Shultz of Pleasant Mills, N. J., is one hundred and seventeen years old. He has been blind seventeen years, but is otherwise unimpaired in his mental and physical faculties. He constantly attends the Methodist church, of which he has been a member almost a century.

☞ An offer has been made by the priests to purchase the Parliament buildings in Ottawa, and it was alleged that the offer had reference to the eventuality of the Pope establishing his See in Canada.

☞ At a recent meeting in London, Mr. Spurgeon stated that his church now numbers 3,500, and that by the assistance of his elders and deacons, he was able to maintain a thorough pastoral supervision over it.

Dedication at Concord, N. H.

Providence permitting, the new chapel lately erected on Washington street will be dedicated to the worship of God on Wednesday, December 19th, meeting to commence at 1½ o'clock, and continue through the week, and over the following Sabbath. Brn. H. L. Hastings and H. Pratt, with others, are to attend. Preaching brethren, are cordially invited, also brethren and sisters in the vicinity and elsewhere.

In connection with the above notice, we would say, that our place of worship is free for all the called of the Lord to come and clear their skirts from the blood of souls, by declaring "all the counsel of God." We offer free seats, and invite all, especially the poor, to come and hear the gospel, without money and without price. In this move, we have no disposition to sever, either in heart or in hand, from those who think differently, or build up a separate interest; but, as the earnest prayer of our Savior was that his people might be one, so we desire to be united with all who love him in sincerity. We hope, by the wisdom and grace which may be given us, to conduct this meeting upon gospel principles.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 584. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness, if less than 26 weeks, charge five cents; if more than 26 weeks, six cents. From the product (which will be a fraction over the actual indebtedness) deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

THEY WERE GLAD.

"Then were the disciples glad, when they saw the Lord."—John 20: 20.

It is now the third day since the Lord's crucifixion,
The doors are shut close in the place where at eve
His assembled disciples in heavy affliction
Now mourn for the Master they trusted and loved.
All gone is the hope they so fondly had cherished
That this was their nation's Restorer and King.
His people's expected Redeemer had perished,
Had died on a cross and had left them alone.

They remember their first blessed call from the Master,
His lessons of wisdom, his voice and his look;
He had called them his friends and the sheep of his pasture,
But the Shepherd is smitten, and scattered the flock.
They remember the garden where Judas betrayed him,
The trial, the scoffers, the thorns and the tree,
The earthquake, the darkness, the place where they laid him,
But forget how he said, "I will rise the third day."

They have heard, it is true, of the Lord's resurrection,
But they say in their hearts that it cannot be he;
Though now more than ever they need his direction,
Yet his face they believe they will never more see.
But right in their midst lo! who should appear to them
But Jesus himself—yet with wondering eyes,
In the same blessed presence, which once was so dear to them,
His friends are beholding with fear and surprise;

Till the same gracious voice which had fallen in blessing
So often upon them in seasons gone by,
Now breaks on their ears, all their terror suppressing,
While they hear his sweet "Peace to you"—"See—it is I."
While round him they stand in amazement beholding
The prints in his feet, and his hands and his side,
While he to their minds is the Scripture unfolding,
The believing disciples rejoice and are glad.

Blessed also are they who have never seen Jesus,
And yet have believed in the truth of his word;
How amazing the love that so graciously frees us
From sin and its wages, through faith in his blood;
Which avails in the place where he's entered his glory,
Where beyond the great vail into heaven he's gone,
Whence all who have read the New Testament story,
Remember his promise of coming again.

O then, as God liveth, for once and forever,
Intercession will end—and, it may be, so soon!
Since he cometh not yet, shall we therefore say "never"?
Each seeming delay only hastens him on.
Who then will dare wait till too late for repentance?
Who'll be glad to behold him? Who'll cover his face
When justice shall utter her terrible sentence,
And the friendship of Jesus be proved above price!

THE BLESSINGS OF FAITH.

We often think it a difficult task to hold faith in our possession, and by thus thinking lose many blessings which our heavenly Father would bestow upon us would we trust him. God, through his servants, has denominated the various attributes of a christian, and perhaps among the many qualities requisite to a christian character, none are so important as faith. This leads the train of all the christian graces. Without it, we are weak—nothing; with it, we are strong—even safe; safe in a Father's care. He will gently lead us, and though the night be never so dark, he will lighten our pathway, and we can walk as he directs, till morn shall throw around its gleam of light, and we rejoice in our safety.

"With thee will I establish my covenant," were the words which God spake to Noah, who, seeing the wickedness of the world which then was, prepared 'midst the scoffing of a sin-cursed world, for the saving of himself and family, an ark of gopher wood. And though the world frowned, and pointed the finger of scorn at him, as being a deluded man, he shrank not at the work appointed him, but diligently employed himself in the service of his Master. When the ark was complete, he, with a clear sun shining above, no clouds in the horizon to warn him of danger, entered it, and God shut him in; while the waters from above descended in torrents, and the mighty deep was broken up, the people seeking refuge from the wrathful flood; till the awful truth that Noah's predictions were being realized came with a force that was appalling. One after another of earth's inhabitants yielded themselves victims to the angry waters, till the last vestige of them was swept away, and all submerged beneath one vast ocean. The little ark, the only shelter of the only family of an entire world, floated safely over the mighty waters. The blessings of heaven were being realized; faith had won for him life, security from all harm, and permitted him to again till the earth and receive of her abundance.

By faith, Moses chose to suffer affliction with his people, and refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter. When God commanded he obeyed, trusting the result with him. After several fruitless attempts to lead his people from Egyptian bondage, he was again commanded to lead them forth. Prompt to obey, he took them with him and led them safely for a distance, when lo! the host of an infuriated king pursued him. The waters of the Red Sea rolled before them. The people murmured, and began saying, "It had been better for us to serve the Egyptians." With meekness, he replied, "Fear ye not; stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord"; then stretching forth his hand he bade the waters cease to roll on. They obeyed, separated, and stood as a wall of defence on either hand, while he with his people passed over safely on dry land. When he commanded, the waters again rolled together, burying beneath their mighty foam Pharaoh's host. Faith won for Moses the victory, separating him from his cruel enemies for ever.

When Elijah fled to the river Cherith, he trusted God for support. Faith brought daily food by the ravens morning and evening. It preserved the widow's meal and cruse of oil, that it wasted not; it brought fire from heaven to consume his sacrifice, though drenched with water; it enabled him with firmness to go before a king who hated him, and pronounce the decrees of an offended God, and then, unmolested, retire from one who had vainly sought his life. By his faith he found favor with God, who exempted him from tasting death, and was rewarded by translation. Such a faith had the three worthies, who refused to worship the golden image of Nebuchadnezzar, and declared that their God would deliver them from his persecution; and when the angry, hissing flames of a furnace heated one seven times more than it was wont to be heated, seethingly opened to receive their victims, they, with trust resting upon their countenances, submitted to enter those flames, that the power of God might be shown to an unbelieving people. Their faith won an unparalleled victory; for as the king watched to see them devoured by the flames, fear came upon him, for the form of the fourth was plainly seen. That form held the elements of fire, that it harmed them not, and they came forth without the smell of fire upon their garments.

Faith preserved Daniel, in a fearful night, from being devoured by ravenous lions, and released him unharmed, while his persecutors suffered the punishment they designed him to meet. This faith healed the sick, opened the eyes of the blind, unstopped the ears of the deaf, loosed the tongues of the dumb, and made the lame to leap. Can such a faith as these possessed suffer us to be harmed? No, verily not. It buoys us above the surging waves of time, bears us safely over the foaming billows, giving us present happiness, a calm and holy joy, with peace like a river, and will land us on the evergreen shores of paradise restored. By it we look forward to the time when the Adamic curse will be removed, and the earth shall come forth from the hands of its Creator with more than its Edenic beauty; when it shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea; to a land where, instead of the thorn, shall come up the fir-tree; and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree; where the mountains and hills shall break forth into singing; a land where the wolf shall dwell with the Lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together, and a little child shall lead them; a land where the tree of life shall be unguarded, and the inhabitants shall eat of its fruit and live forever. Immortality shall be given. A land where the river of life shall course its crystal waters from the throne of God eternally. A land where there will be no night, for the Lord giveth them light, and his people shall reign for ever and ever.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

"Thus saith the Lord; Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord."—Jer. 17: 5.

Here we have the word of the Lord in relation to our putting our trust in man. Let us take heed unto it, and be very careful lest we lean on the arm of flesh for support; and especially should we avoid uniting or entangling ourselves with any secret society, of whatever name, as they are one of the perils of these last days, to weaken and withdraw our confidence in God, as sure as we place ourselves within their influence. The world is full of secret societies, some having professedly one object in view, and some another; but you will find none, no matter how high a moral object they claim to have in view, whose chief end is to serve and obey God and glorify him. All serve to draw the heart and affections from God and place them on some worldly object. In many of these societies and lodges, the members are bound with an oath to aid each other out of whatever difficulty they may chance to fall. Now this surely is putting trust in the arm of flesh, instead of in the arm of God. But the man whose whole trust is in the Lord knows that his God in whom he trusts is able to deliver him, when all the mighty men, great men, princes, chief captains, and all the secret societies combined, would not be able to accomplish aught in his behalf. What, for instance, could the "Good Templars" or "The Grand Army of the Republic" (or any other secret society) have done to have saved Daniel from being destroyed by the hungry lions, when he was by the king's decree thrown into their den? or what could they have done to have saved the three Hebrew children, when they were cast into the fiery furnace? Nothing, nothing at all; and every person, who joins one of these secret societies, casts away his confidence in God by doing so, thus bringing the curse of God upon him.

Remember, the day is soon coming when all secrets shall be revealed, and every man's work shall be made manifest. Then we shall want our trust in that God who alone is able to save. Life and accident insurance companies are another mark of trusting in man; and if you would be wholly the Lord's, do not take out a policy in any company of the kind, but take God's holy word as your guide; submit yourself wholly to his will; love him supremely, and he will insure you through Jesus Christ the Life-giver, which will be an insurance worth having. If any feel as though they were wholly the Lord's, and still desire to do something in secret, let them do this: "Enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly." That is the best secret society I know of,—the private outgushings of gratitude of the humble, child-like follower of Christ to his Maker, and the inpourings into his own being from the divine fountain of a Father's approbation, peace and love. Blessed be his name! How rich the blessing! Words cannot express it. Would you have it? Then "cast not away your confidence" in God.

FASHION.

BRO. GRANT:—Your remarks in a late number of the Crisis, under the head of "Fashion," are worthy of the serious attention of every lover of truth and righteousness. Every thoughtful person knows that the prevailing mode of dress at the present time, is not only indecent, shamefully so, but exceedingly uncomely, without a bit of artistic merit; besides being distressingly inconvenient, ruinously expensive, and terribly unhealthy. Instead of being adapted to the wants of woman's nature, it is a perfect violation of every one of them, moral and physical. But what shall be done? It will not do to push this matter aside. It presses upon us. It calls for attention. It is no trifling thing. It has a place in the book of God. It is not beneath the notice of the prophets and apostles of Christ. It has very much to do with the great business of life. It has very much to do with forming character, and representing character, too. A man, or woman, is known nearly, or quite as much by their dress as by their company.

A few years ago, a reform, a cheering, genuine reform, was started in the matter of female dress, and many of our leading brethren and sisters engaged in it, and gave their pens and voices and example in its favor. But where are they now? They talked loudly, bravely, and truthfully, and their arguments in its favor were perfectly unanswerable. What does it mean, that now, and for a good while past, not a word has been heard from one of them? And, I blush to say it, every one of them, as far as I know, have returned to the very course which they so loudly and justly condemned,—turned their backs upon that which they so justly and ably advocated. O, it is to me sad to see any thing so good as that reform was, and is, so shamefully abandoned. Thank God, I know a few noble souls who have, while saying very little, and making no display, stood firmly at their post, amid all the difficulties and discouragements of the way. Forsaken by all who started with them in the good cause; sneered at, spit upon, insulted, and abused in the street, the store, and the church, they still show by their dress, as in other ways, that they are not of the world, even as He is not of the world, but are adorning themselves with "modest apparel," shunning the paltry gew-gaws and silly trumpery of a God-forgetting world, and endeavoring, whether they "eat or drink," or dress, or whatever they do, to "do all to the glory of God."

Brethren and sisters of the "Crisis," "Voice," "Herald of Life," what say you to these things? Am I mistaken? Is this a matter of no consequence? Is it not time to begin to examine this question, with others? Are we "a peculiar people"? And shall man have no power to distinguish us from a proud, gay world, unless they have a chance to hear us speak? You know perfectly that the popular system of dress is wrong, totally and radically WRONG. Now what is right? Is the so-called "American costume" any better? Is it more suitable for a christian woman? If not, what is? Brethren and sisters, speak. I feel before God that it is high time for us to take decided action on this question.

Brn. Grant, Himes, White, Hastings, and many others, what think you? Srs. Taylor, Henry, Weaver, Mansfield, what say you? Why did you change in these things, and why change the second time? Your influence is felt, keenly so. Don't think me hard, or uncharitable, or insolent. I love you. God knows I do, and I love his cause, and his gospel, every word of it, too. I love to see the church of Christ walking in light, and letting the light shine; adorning the doctrine of God, our Savior in all things; and it is the deep and earnest conviction of my soul, that in no one thing can they do this so effectually, or so really act out the spirit of that command, "Come out from among them and be ye separate," as by the speedy and uniform adoption of a plain, modest, simple, convenient, and healthful style of dress.

Truly yours in the love of Christ,

GATHERED FRAGMENTS.—No. 3.

BY M. D. W.

A few days since, I read to Frankie the "Heart Song," from the pen of Arthur Coxe, and it perfectly delighted the child; and now he wants me to read it to him several times a day. "Mamma," he says, "read Frankie about the Savior's knocking at the door."

THE HEART-SONG.

In the silent midnight watches
List thy bosom door!
How it knocketh, knocketh, knocketh,
Knocketh evermore!
Say not 'tis thy pulses beating,
'Tis thy heart of sin;
'Tis thy Savior knocks and crieth,
"Rise and let me in!"

Death comes down with reckless footstep
To the hall and hut;
Think you death will stand a-knocking
Where the door is shut?
Jesus waiteth, waiteth, waiteth,
But the door is fast!
Grieved away the Savior goeth,
Death breaks in at last!

Then 'tis time to stand entreating
Christ to let thee in—
At the gate of heaven beating,
Waiting for thy sin.
Nay, alas! thou foolish virgin,
Hast thou then forgot
Jesus waited long to know thee,
But he knows thee not!

There is the ring of true heart poetry in that song! We do not wonder that even a child should love it.

"ACCEPTED IN THE BELOVED."

"For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will, in all wisdom and spiritual understanding; that ye might walk worthy of the Lord with all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God; . . . who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son; in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins."—Col. 1: 9–14.

Blessed words! "Accepted in the Beloved." Our sins washed away by his precious blood, we are accepted through him, or rather in him, and we know that we cannot be accepted or saved in any other way. And he that would be saved in any other way, "the same is a thief and a robber."

Truly "the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." The man who is esteemed wise by the world, is striving to build a great name for himself here; but when the great storm comes, and "every man's work shall be made manifest," he will find his foundation swept away and his house destroyed. But those who are "accepted in the Beloved" build their house upon the eternal Rock, and the storm will never move them, or their works; for they are wrought in Christ. Out of him, or without him, we are poor and miserable and blind and naked, and in need of all things; and God could never receive us in and of ourselves. "Not by works of righteousness which we have done," but on account of what Christ has done, we are "accepted in the Beloved." And notwithstanding our weakness, our infirmities, or our unworthiness, we are forgiven, received, and saved, for his sake.

Are any who read this tried, tempted, buffeted by the storms of this tempestuous world? Trust in Jesus. Hold fast your faith and confidence in God, and believe that you are always "accepted in the Beloved."

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to express a few thoughts on the signs of the coming of Jesus. Dear brethren, who are "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ," permit me to ask the question, where are we in the history of those signs, as given by the Savior in Matthew, Mark and Luke? Is it not our privilege to put our finger on the passage showing just where we are? We do think it is. Then let us go back to the commencement of this generation, which was not to pass away till all these things be fulfilled.

The first sign was in the sun, on May 19th, 1780; and the second in the moon, at the same time; then in fifty-three years after, the third sign was fulfilled in the falling of the stars, in 1833.

In Luke 21, after giving those signs referred to in Matt. 24, the Savior says, "And upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring. Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Now it seems very clear that the events since 1846 have produced a state of affairs among the nations which causes the statesman's, the great and mighty men's hearts to fail them for fear of what is coming on the earth.

Behold the Bridegroom cometh. Go ye forth to meet him. God commissioned his watchman to go forth and proclaim this message, to wake up a slumbering church, and to proclaim to the world the near approach of the judgment. "Now learn a parable of the fig-tree; when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh. So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the door." O, glory to God for the Bible, and the present truth.

Now, from the above language, we believe the church will see and acknowledge all these things in probation.

THE GREAT STAR SHOWER IN EUROPE.

The foreign mails received on the 27th ultimo by the steamer Scotia brought full accounts of the great star shower observed in Europe on the night and morning of the 13th and 14th of Nov. last. These accounts prove the correctness of the cable despatch from Greenwich of the 15th, and the mistake of Professor Loomis of Yale College in pronouncing it a fabrication. This star shower was seen in all parts of England, Scotland, and Ireland, in France and Spain, and perhaps all over the continent; and though not so grand in Great Britain as those of 1799 and 1833 in America, it was yet very magnificent, and never to be forgotten by those who were so fortunate as to witness it.

The extracts which we condense below from the extended accounts in the foreign journals, confirm the previously published predictions on this subject, so far as Europe is concerned, and establish beyond a doubt the periodicity of the November star showers; and they add another convincing evidence to the already numerous signs of the approaching end.

THE STAR SHOWER IN ENGLAND.—The following account of this grand meteoric display as seen in London, is from the London Times of Nov. 15th:—

"The fiery shower foretold by the science of America and Europe for the night of the 13th–14th of November in this year was seen in full splendor yesterday morning between the hours of 12 and 2. From about 11 o'clock occasional meteors might be seen gliding along the sky from east to west, but these were only the avant couriers of the great legion that followed at a later hour. The numbers increased after twelve o'clock with great rapidity." "As the constellation Leo rose over the houses north of Paddington Green, and moved some points to the south; first one meteor then another shot across the sky in various regions and with various directions, but plainly from that one quarter. The spectator had soon counted half-a-dozen; then he felt sure he had seen thirty; then six or seven in a minute; then they appeared faster than he could count them. Then there came two or three together; then not less than a dozen of all kinds. Some shot across the heavens, leaving long, bright, and lingering trains, the star itself seeming to explode and instantly disappear. Some darted as quickly and as bright, but without trains. Some struck the sight, like sparks from a forge, everywhere at once. Some seemed to fall over trees or houses, bright to the last, but with the ruddy hues of a lower atmosphere. Look where we would it was the same; in the far west, and throughout the entire north, there was either the bright glancing speck of light, or the long train, or what seemed an actual ball of light, that illuminated the country, and was slow to die away. As the night advanced these meteors chased one another across the sky, following in one another's track, or running side by side. The heavens seemed alive with this unwonted host. There were times when it seemed as if a mighty wind had caught the old stars, loosed them from their holdings, and swept them across the firmament. . . . It was a spectacle which cannot be imagined or forgotten. Few who saw it had ever seen the like, and few could expect ever to see it again."

The London Morning Post of the same date says:—

"Half London was awake till a late hour on Tuesday night for the purpose of viewing the shower of stars or meteors which the astronomers had predicted, and those who had sacrificed a few hours of sleep were amply repaid, for the atmosphere was unusually clear, and thus the grand phenomenon was seen under the most favorable circumstances. The wondrous sight began soon after midnight, and from that period until after five o'clock it was witnessed with but few intervals of time. . . . So near did some of the meteors appear that their resemblance to rockets occurred to every one, and we almost seemed to listen for the rush through the air. During the transit of the meteors the light of the other stars was scarcely to be noticed. The effect produced during the simultaneous passage of meteors in the various parts of the heavens was inexpressibly impressive. The noiseless course gave a thrill that no artificial splendors could ever produce."

In Liverpool the showers were frequent, and on a scale of much magnificence. Says the Liverpool correspondent of the London News:—

"Some of the meteors illuminated the whole sky with a glare like that of the aurora borealis in its grandest phases. Some were like balls of light. Others expanded from a small nucleus to a large volume of light, which darted across the heavens with the speed of thought, and was then lost in the obscurity of the west. Some of the meteors had all the appearance of sky rockets, shedding as they pursued their course trails of fire."

A correspondent of the London Times gives the following description of their appearance in Dover:—

"About ten o'clock many single aerolites were seen darting from the horizon to the eastward, then continued, without much variation as far as regards number, until a little after midnight, when they increased in size, brilliancy and velocity until the maximum was reached about one o'clock. The sight then was exceedingly startling; hundreds of blazing meteors darting at the same moment from a point in the heavens in the constellation Leo, which was the great centre whence they started in all directions."

The meteors, it will be seen, proceeded, in this star shower, from the same point in the heavens as in that of 1833,—the constellation Leo, near the star gamma Leonis. From this point, at times, they shot up into the sky as from a fountain of never failing stars, dropping to the north and to the south, or exploding like rockets, or like sparks of molten iron under the blows of a blacksmith's hammer, and flying across the firmament in all directions. Such was their appearance in Leicester, and in other places.

IN SCOTLAND. The Edinburg Scotsman of November 15th says:—

"Standing on the Carlton Hill, and looking westward, with the observatory shutting out the lights of Princes street, it was easy for the eye to delude the imagination into fancying some distant enemy bombarding Edinburg Castle from long range; and the occasional cessation of the shower for a few seconds, only to break out again with more numerous and more brilliant drops of fire, served to countenance this fancy."

From the statement of Professor Grant, of the Glasgow Observatory, as published in the Glasgow Herald, we take the following:—

"Shortly after one o'clock we had the good fortune to obtain a magnificent and uninterrupted view of the phenomenon. At 1h. 15m. the heavens had assumed an extremely imposing aspect. Multitudes of beautiful meteors were now everywhere visible, but especially in the eastern region of the heavens, where the constellation Leo was to be seen as he gradually ascended in his course towards the meridian. Hundreds of the meteors far surpassed in brilliancy the stars of the first magnitude. In multitudes of instances they were brighter than Jupiter, and some of them even equalled Venus when she is at her greatest brilliancy. Their prevailing color was white, but some had a yellowish tinge of light, while others had a bluish tinge. In every instance they were accompanied by a straight, narrow train of well-defined light of a beautiful emerald green color. At 1 hour 18 minutes a whole group of brilliant meteors were seen to burst out and diverge like a fan from the radiant point in Leo. At 1 hour twenty minutes I counted the number of meteors visible in one minute, and I found them to amount to 57; but this in all probability did not exceed one third of the number really visible in every part of the heavens."

"At 1h. 42m. the most remarkable meteoric phenomenon presented itself to us in the constellation Ursa Major, but unfortunately none of us caught the commencement of it. The blaze of light which this meteor emitted at the time of vanishing was extraordinary. It left behind it a curved residue of faint light, having the form of a horseshoe. As it gradually grew fainter, it expanded its dimensions, until it vanished. The singular phenomenon continued visible in the heavens for twenty minutes after it first attracted our attention."

IN IRELAND. A Dublin correspondent of the London Morning Post writes (Nov. 14:)—

"The showers of meteors or shooting stars made their appearance at a little before twelve midnight, and from that hour until about a quarter after one A. M., the dark sky was illuminated by countless numbers of these luminous bodies, darting almost unintermittingly from east to west. Some of them were of most dazzling brilliancy, and left behind them a long trail of light, which was visible for some minutes after the head or nucleus had vanished. Many of them were seen to explode in the air, and some persons assert that on these occasions a faint sulphurous odor was perceptible."

IN SPAIN. An observer at Saragossa, in a letter to the London Times, says:—

"My attention was first directed to the falling stars at about twelve o'clock at night by observing groups of people in the narrow streets of Saragossa, conversing together with a certain degree of excitement. "Mira Usted es como si fue en el tiempo del sitio" (Look, it is just as if it were in the time of the siege,") was the reply to my question as to what was the matter, and on looking up the appearance certainly was as if the city was being shelled. Showers of meteors seemed to be pouring into the place, a score or more at a time, exploding with a brilliant flame at different points, and leaving long luminous trains behind them, some of which lasted as streaks in the sky several instants after the explosion of the meteors."

"The meteors seemed to be most abundant towards the north and northwest, and I noticed a particular stream of them not far from the constellation of the Great Bear. Some idea may be formed of their number and brilliancy from the fact that when I went to bed, though the field of sky visible through my window as I lay was very small, it was being continually crossed by the meteors, and a looking-glass which hung on the wall was every moment brilliantly lit up with the reflection of the explosions which occurred. During the short time I observed them many hundreds of meteors fell, and, as there was no perceptible diminution in their number, I have no doubt during the night the number must have been tens of thousands."

IN FRANCE. The Independence Belge, of Nov. 16th, gives the following description of the meteoric shower as it appeared in France:—

"At first but a few stars were noticeable, darting off with great rapidity through space. Then they shot off in pairs, then in groups, flying in all directions; until, at length, it became impossible to count them. The majority of them left behind them a luminous trail, and exploded immediately before disappearing. In their rapid courses through the heavens they appeared to chase one another. The whole firmament was nothing but a brilliant race course. This remarkable sight lasted from two to three hours, during which time one might have counted several millions of these celestial visitors."

NUMBER, SIZE, AND COLOR OF THE METEORS.

Great numbers of the meteors are described as larger in apparent size and more brilliant in splendor than stars of the first magnitude. One very splendid one, of a bright purple color, was seen over Cardiff, whose apparent size was three times that of Jupiter; its train, which was at first straight, took the form of a serpent, then of an egg, and was visible twelve minutes. The very brilliant one, in the shape of a horse-shoe, which was visible twenty minutes, has been already described. Some were as large as a cricket ball, and "some could only be compared to the moon for magnitude." One of immense dimensions, which flashed across the sky from east to west, was colored red, blue, green, orange and amber. Herschel, the astronomer, describes one seen by himself in Glasgow, whose trail assumed the form of "an imposing ring of flame, three or four degrees in width; it remained visible for fourteen minutes, gradually expanding itself into a heart-shaped loop, until it enclosed the chief stars of Ursa Major in a wide fantastic wreath before it disappeared." "One or two," says the Liverpool Journal, "were so magnificent as to illumine the whole heavens, and could only be compared, in brilliancy and splendor, to the most gorgeous of the Northern Light phenomena witnessed in this latitude."

The general color of the meteors was a vivid pale blue, varying in some cases to purple. Some shone with a yellowish light, others with a deep red. Some were of an orange hue, and others seemed to be balls of copper-colored fire. The trains were of a brilliant emerald or pea-green color. To see the dark heavens flashing, blazing and exploding with fire-balls and stars of various colors and sizes, and in countless numbers, must have been indeed a grand and beautiful sight.

According to observations made at Greenwich Observatory, near London, as given in the London Herald, the period of greatest splendor was between one and two o'clock; and in that one hour five thousand meteors were counted. The shower had reached its maximum at 1.20; at which time the stars were darting forth from the constellation Leo like an incessant shower of rockets, at the rate of one hundred and twenty-three a minute. The whole number counted at Greenwich, with the naked eye, according to the Herald, was 8.485. Other statements say as many as 12.000. But so rapid was the discharge of meteors during the period of greatest frequency, that no eye could observe them all, and the actual number visible is admitted to have been much larger than the number counted.

An observer in the Isle of Wight, after counting fifteen hundred, says, in the Times, that at 1.13 "the falls became so incessant that it was impossible to count numbers fast enough." And Prof. Hind, the celebrated astronomer, states that after counting, from Bishop's Observatory, Twickenham, 1120 fallings, in the hour from midnight to one o'clock, and 500 in the next seven minutes, there was then a great and sudden increase, to an extent "which rendered it impossible to count the number. At this time the appearance of the whole heavens was very beautiful, not to say magnificent." And Prof. Talmage, of Barclay's Observatory, describes the sight as one "never to be forgotten, and greatly resembling that shower which was observed in North America on the 12th and 13th of November, 1833;" and a member of the Liverpool Historic Society, who states that the period of greatest display over that place was at three o'clock in the morning, thinks "it must have been quite as numerous there at that hour as it was in Boston in 1833."

The showers which passed over France and Spain seem to have been more numerous than those observed in Great Britain. The observer in Saragossa estimating them by tens of thousands, and the Independence Belge by millions. Further accounts from Southern and Eastern Europe may yet tell us of other displays of celestial fireworks on a grander scale than those seen at the north. In the meantime, let us all lift up our heads and rejoice, for the signs of our dear Lord's return are multiplying, and the day of our redemption is drawing nigh. God speed the day.

NAMES FOR TRY COMPANY.

Augusta A. Dow,	George Farnum,
Nancy E. Brown,	Sarah Brown.

A WORD FROM THE EDITOR.

We wish to express thanks to our young friends who have remembered our request some weeks ago, when we asked them to write for "our paper." Let us hear from many more. It makes our corner for the "young folks" much more interesting. Will you write? Say yes, and begin at once. Do not let another week pass before sending us a few words for the paper. If you can't write, tell your parents what you wish to say, and let them write it for you.

TRY COMPANY.

We are glad that some more are willing to sign the pledge of the TRY COMPANY. Come, let us have a long string of names of the noble youth who wish to be good, and keep out of the snares of Satan. Only think of it, —if all the youth of the land would sign and keep the pledge of the Try Company, none of them would ever become drunkards nor tobacco chewers or smokers. Come, send in your name for the PLEDGE. Will you?

CHILDREN'S LETTERS.

FROM NANCY.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I am a little girl ten years old, and trying to serve the Lord. I and my sister Sarah wish to join the Cold Water Army, that we may be better prepared to serve the Lord more faithfully than ever. We hope to get others to join also. I want to be one of God's little humble children, and try to do something for my Master's cause. Oh, how many little girls there will be lost when the Lord comes! I will try to get some one to join the army and go with me to the kingdom.

"God is my friend, I need not fear,
For he is good and always near,
And he will keep me by his power
From day to day, from hour to hour.
There is one thing that I must dread,
And that is sin, for God has said
That those whom he protects from ill,
Must love to do his holy will.
His holy book will guide us right,
And keep our heaven too in sight,
And lead by his right hand away,
Until we see the perfect day."

East Walpole, Mass. NANCY E. BROWN.

That is right, my dear little christian friend, "try to do something for" our "Master's cause." That will please him, and then he will bless you. Get others to join the Try Company, and ask them too to go with you to the new earth.—EDITOR.

FROM AUGUSTA.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I have read the Crisis for some time, and I like it very much. I have read a great many pieces about boys and girls joining the "Try Company," and I have concluded to join it too. There is no "Try Company" here. It is a very wicked place; but, by the grace of God, I will try to get as many as I can to join it. I am trying to serve the Lord, and will try to be faithful.

Seabrook, N. H. AUGUSTA A. DOW.

May the Lord bless you, Augusta. We are glad you have concluded to join the "Try Company." We are sure you will never be sorry, if you always keep the pledge. Your editor has not used any tea, coffee, tobacco, or intoxicating liquors, for more than twenty years, and he is certain he feels better without them. We welcome you heartily to the Try Company.—EDITOR.

FROM GEORGE.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I have read much about the coming of the Lord. I should like to be found ready when he comes, and, by the help of God, I mean to try, and I hope that I may be able to succeed. I should like to sign my name to the Try Company, and be a good boy.

Yours truly, GEORGE FARNUM.

Seabrook, N. H.

Well done, George, we are glad to hear from you, and learn that you wish to be ready to meet Jesus when he comes. If you would be ready, obey your parents, and try to please them in all things; and do not speak any unkind words to any of your associates, nor get out of patience; but pray much, and read the Bible every day.—EDITOR.

FROM SR. L. M. PIPER.

Dear Bro. Grant:—A few weeks ago I read in the Crisis a letter from the editor, saying he wanted to hear from those of the Try Company. Although I never joined that company, who have left off the use of tea, coffee and tobacco, etc. etc., yet I have joined that pilgrim band, and am trying to live a christian life, that I may have a home in that better world which is to come. My health is poor, and has been for over a year, but I do believe if I ever die, I shall live again, if I prove faithful unto the end. I do hope that ere long my Master will come, for I want to be in that place where pain and sickness will not be known.

O I do love Jesus; I love his cause; I love the christian's ways better than that of the world. I wish I could tell every body my hope, and often thought if I could get to the top of a high mountain, I would halloo—"I am trying to be a christian." Two years ago last June, I went up to the Town Hall to meeting, to hear Bro. Hook, and there I made up my mind I would try and be a christian, and the last day of July I was baptized by Bro. J. W. White. I have had no desire to turn back into the old paths since I first started. My parents are of the same faith, and the most of my friends. We have meetings here and around here about half the time. Bro. White is with us now.

Now, dear Bro., I do not write this note to show you how I can compose, but because I feel it a duty which I owe to my heavenly Father, and have ever felt it duty since I first saw that letter in the Crisis, but could not get confidence to write until now. I desire you to pray for me, and for the people round about. I trust we shall all live so we shall all meet in that happy world to come.

Your young Sister, waiting, hoping, and trusting in the Lord. L. M. PIPER.

Bradford, N. H.

Praise the Lord, Sr. Piper, for what he has done for you, and that you have had courage to write and tell us about your experience. Try to persuade some more to be christians. It will please Jesus. May he help you to be very good.—EDITOR.

A LITTLE SUNBEAM.

A little sunbeam in the sky
Said to itself one day,
"I'm very small, but why should I
Do nothing else but play?
I'll go down to the earth and see
If there is any use for me."

The violet beds were wet with dew,
Which filled each heavy cup;
The little sunbeam darted through,
And raised their blue heads up.
They smiled to see it, and they lent
The morning breeze their sweetest scent.

A mother 'neath a shady tree,
Had left her babe asleep;
It woke and cried, but when it spied
The little sunbeam peep
So slyly in, with glance so bright,
It laughed and chuckled with delight.

On, on it went, it might not stay,
Now through a window small
It poured its glad but tiny ray,
And danced upon the wall.
A pale young face looked up to meet
The sunbeam she had watched to greet.

And now away beyond the sea
The merry sunbeam went;
A ship was on the waters free,
From home and country sent;
But sparkling in the sunbeam's play,
The blue waves curled around her way.

But there was one who watched them there
Whose heart was full of pain;
She gazed and half forgot her care,
And hope came back again;
She said, "The waves are full of glee,
There may yet be joy for me!"

And so it traveled to and fro,
And glanced and danced about,
And not a door was shut, I know,
To keep that sunbeam out;
But ever as it touched the earth,
It woke up happiness and mirth.

I may not tell the history
Of all that it could do;
But I tell this, that you may try
To be a sunbeam too.
"A sunbeam too!" perhaps you say.
Yes, I am very sure you may.

For loving words, like sunbeams, will
Dry up a falling tear,
And loving deeds will often help
A broken heart to cheer.
So loving and so living, you
Will be a little sunbeam too.

POWDER-MILL PIETY.

Said a little girl, who had just been reading the newspaper account of an explosion, "Ma, don't you think that people who work in powder mills ought to be pious?" There was a great deal of human nature in that question. The world, like that little girl, thinks that all who are especially exposed, ought to be prepared for sudden death. But is not the whole world a vast powder mill? Is it not filled everywhere with the elements of destruction? The air we breathe may become poisonous and slay us. The water we drink may contain some deadly ingredient, which neither sight nor taste can detect. We are encompassed ever by unseen dangers. We are never certain of to-morrow.

Then should we not be prepared, whether old or young, or whatever our business, or our locality, for sudden death? And should we not also be prepared for the great day when "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up? Powder-mill piety will not save you then. Are you ready for the great event? ANNA.

CARRYING BADNESS TO JESUS.

A little boy asked his mother, "How am I to be saved, mother?" "By coming to Jesus." "But I have heard that I must be good, or else God will not save me," rejoined the boy. "My boy, Jesus died to save the bad, not the good. It is your badness, not you goodness, you must carry to Jesus." "That is good news," cried the boy. "How cruel it was to tell me God would have nothing to do with me unless I was good." "Yes, it was. You can't be good until you carry your badness to Jesus." Then the little boy carried his badness to Jesus, and was made good through Jesus' blood.

THE DEAD IN CHRIST.

They shall live, they shall live,
Where the breezes soft are blowing,
Where the crystal streams are flowing,
Where the healing trees are growing,—
They shall live, they shall live.

They shall live, they shall live,
Where the storm-clouds come, O never,
Where is light and joy forever,
Close beside the great Life-giver,—
They shall live, they shall live.

They shall live, they shall live,
Where the ransomed all are singing,
Alleluiahs loud are ringing,
Heaven's hidden treasures bringing,—
They shall live, they shall live.

They shall live, they shall live,
Where is heard no voice of crying,
Heard no plaintive moan, or sighing,
Heard no farewell of the dying,—
They shall live, they shall live.

They shall live, they shall live,
When the chain of death is broken,
The life-giving word is spoken;
Wait we now th' expected token,—
They shall live, they shall live.

They shall live, they shall live,
When Messiah, absent long,
Gathers th' unnumbered throng,
And is heard the victor's song,—
They shall live, they shall live.

They shall live, they shall live,
When the dead on land and sea
Wake to join the jubilee,
Wake to immortality,—
They shall live, they shall live.

THE TWO WITNESSES.—REV. XI.

BY J. A. WHITE.

It is claimed that the Bible, the Old and New Testaments, are these two witnesses. "I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days clothed in sack-cloth." Some understand these days to represent years, and that they commenced in 532, and ended in 1792. These witnesses were to prophesy a definite time, limited to 1460 days. No intimation that they prophesied when John wrote, or that they would, until these days should begin, nor that they should ever prophesy after these days should end. Did not the Bible prophesy before A. D. 532? and has it not prophesied since 1792? Being clothed in sack-cloth, is claimed to be putting the Bible in a language, or keeping it in one, that the people could not understand. But what took place in 532 that placed the Bible in a relation to the people that it did not have before? History is cited to show that under the papal rule the common people did not have the Bible so fully as they had it before, and as they have had it since. This may be true. But this did not take place in 532, nor anywhere near that time. The text is very definite. The witnesses were to be clothed in sack-cloth 1260 days. Again, what took place in 1792 that unclothed the Bible, in any sense, that it was not before? Wickliffe translated the Bible into the English language 408 years, the Bishop's Bible was published 224 years, and King James' 181 years before 1792. Were these Bibles in sack-cloth at the time it is claimed the Bible came out of sack-cloth?

"And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them." When they shall have finished their testimony they are to be killed. Will they prophesy after they have finished their testimony? No intimation that they would ever prophesy again; while the facts show the contrary. At the end of the days they were to cease, and be killed. It is said that killing the witnesses, was burning some Bibles in France by the infidels about 1792. They did burn some of the Bibles held by the Roman Bishops and priests. But was this killing the Bible in any sense whatever? If they had burned all the Bibles in France, the Bible would not have been killed. That abideth forever. How did the burning of a few Roman Catholic Bibles kill the Bible? How were the Greek and Hebrew Bibles, read by the Jews and Greeks, affected by what was done in France in 1792? How did their act affect the several English translations, and the Bible in this country? In no way whatever. The first act of the infidels in 1792 was an act of free toleration to all religions. This certainly was not against the Bible, nor its adherents. The Romanists opposed this. Then they passed an act requiring the priests to submit or leave the country. This they refused to do. Then the infidels imprisoned some of the Bishops and priests, killing others and burning their Bibles. I have seen no evidence that a protestant was killed. If there was, it would be no evidence that the Bible was killed. If burning the Bible was killing the witnesses, as bringing them to life again must be the opposite, then to bring them to life must be to bring them back from their ashes. Or, if killing the readers of the Bible was killing the witnesses, then the Roman priests were God's witnesses. If reversing the edict by the infidels, was bringing the witnesses to life, then the infidels brought them to life. But it is said that the Spirit of God brought them to life. "And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified." Not where our Lord was spiritually crucified, but where he was crucified. Our Lord was crucified in Jerusalem, which is spiritually called Sodom and Egypt. In Isa. 1: 10, Jerusalem is called Sodom and Gomorrah. Why? Because they possessed the character of Sodom.

"And they of the people and nations, and kindred and tongues, shall see their dead bodies three days and a half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves." Thus it appears, that the enemies of the witnesses would not suffer them to be buried. This shows that somebody wanted them put in graves. If their enemies would not let them be put in graves, it follows that their friends wanted them put into the ground. Then, if the witnesses were the Bible, after their enemies had killed them, the friends wanted the Bible buried! Find a greater absurdity who can.

"And after three days and a half the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw them. And they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, come up hither. And they ascended up in a cloud, and their enemies beheld them." The Spirit of God, then, brings them to life. Their enemies had nothing to do with this. God will do it all. Here it is evident that the witnesses never prophesy to the world after they are killed, or after the 1260 days end. When they come to life they leave the place where they had been, and ascend to heaven. "The same hour was there a great earthquake." The same hour of what? The same hour the witnesses ascend to heaven. "And the tenth part of the city fell." This is claimed to be France, one of the ten kingdoms into which western Rome was divided. That it fell by the acts of the infidels in the French revolution. Now, if, as some tell us, the three days and a half, mean three years and a half, where in this time will they put this hour in which the city falls! If they make a day stand for a year, then they should make the hour stand for fifteen days. Now where do the days belong in 1792, where they say France fell, or three years and a half after that time, when, as they say, the witnesses came to life? When they ascend to heaven it is said, "the second woe is passed; and behold, the third woe cometh quickly." Then the seventh angel sounded, when these witnesses go up to heaven, then comes the time for the resurrection of all the saints, to receive their reward. Amen.—Herald of Life.

For the World's Crisis.

BE YE READY.

It seems to me there was never a more solemn warning uttered by our Savior. He knew the awful fate of those who should not be prepared when he comes. He told us in the parable of the ten virgins that the foolish virgins would come, saying, "Lord, Lord, open unto us." They were not ready. They came unprepared for the marriage supper. And he said unto them, "I know you not." This warning was especially for this generation. Be ye also ready. These words are freighted with meaning that should lodge like fire in every heart. The grand and momentous scenes of eternity are before this generation. The cry has already gone forth," "Behold the Bridegroom cometh." The virgins (this people) have gone out to meet him. If there is one without oil in his lamp, I warn him to be wise in time. It was the procrastination, or waste of time by the foolish virgins, that excluded them from the marriage supper. If they had got their oil before he came, they might have entered in. Oh, what a warning!

Reader, lose not a moment in getting your lamp supplied. Every moment is precious. The great Giver is ready to supply you without money and without price, if you come to him now.

Careless sinner, I have a word for you. Heed the warning, and be ye ready. The world is a delusive panorama, passing before your eyes. Resolve now you will cut loose from its devil-conforming, polluting influences, and, Jesus helping you, you will be ready to meet him. Then you can say,

"Now I can call my Jesus mine,
Now, I can all my love resign;
Can tread the world beneath my feet,
And all that earth calls good and great."

Rochester, N. Y. Wm. H. Spencer.

ROOTED AND GROUNDED IN LOVE.

These words express the idea of stedfastness; as though love had penetrated our hearts as the roots of a tree penetrate the earth. As we read in Ephesians 3: 16, 17, "That he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, that passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God."

We do desire to be thus fully established, thus firmly settled in love, that we may not be moved from the hope of our calling, but grow in grace, and in the knowledge of the Lord; that the seed sown in our hearts may bring forth fruit to the glory of God. "Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God and knoweth God. He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love." Let us strive and pray that we may have this great blessing of perfect love.

"THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD."

The following extract is from "The Church and the World," by J. G. Gregory, London, with an appendix by Sr. A. P. Jolliffe, Philadelphia. The work can be obtained for $1.25 of Sr. Jolliffe, Box 1199, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Watch and pray, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

"We have, also, a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts."—2 Peter 1. 19.

With our text, then, for a witness, let us behold the prophecies of Scripture as "a sure word," on which we may repose our confidence; not as they are deemed by some, a word to be laid by at once, as highly figurative and incomprehensibly mysterious; unfit, therefore, for profitable study. Let us view them as a LIGHT sent for the illumination of the sincere inquirer, to be used as a continual guide by the Lord's earnest servants while they sojourn in the "dark place" of this life's pilgrimage; and let us avail ourselves unceasingly of prophecy's much-needed beams, until the night which is "far spent" shall pass away, and the great "day" of light and life, so long foretold, shall "dawn."

But now I well could think I hear already the objection—"Is it not unduly inquisitive, and therefore wrong, to search out the momentous matters which are yet before us in the future?" Does not the Lord intend rather that the prophecies should be studied after the events which they predict have transpired, so that his truth may be confirmed, and his faithfulness made known? This is an objection which lays firm hold upon the minds of not a few; so that we continually hear it said that while fulfilled prophecy is of great utility, proving beyond controversy the foreknowledge, power, judgment, mercy, and deity of God, unfulfilled prophecy had far better be passed over for the present, lest we be found sinfully prying into those secret things which belong only to the Lord.

Now in reply to this, we may again refer to the plain language of our text. The light of prophecy there spoken of, and to which it is said we "do well that we take heed," is not certainly a light prepared by God to cast its beams upon the path in which a man has trodden hitherto; for, mark the language:—"Whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn." This surely speaks with plainness. It is a light which shines as from a guiding lamp, to show the traveler where he is, and what is before him.

But let me give you Bishop Newton's words upon our text. He says:—"St. Peter is asserting and establishing the truth of Christ's second coming in power and great glory. 'For we have not followed cunningly-devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty.' One illustrious proof of his coming in power and glory was his appearing in glory and majesty at his transfiguration. 'For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased: and this voice, which came from heaven, we heard when we were with him in the holy mount.' His appearing once in power and great glory, is a good argument that he may appear again in like manner; and that he not only may, but WILL, we have the further assurance of prophecy: 'We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed.'"

With the testimony of a scholar and divine so able, we might well rest satisfied, even were the connection in which the passage stands less plain, and be confident that the "sure word of prophecy" before us is a word which has its great concern with an important future; even with that day of wonders when the great "Redeemer shall return and come to Zion" to be glorified of all. But it is not only our text, with its surrounding context, which gives evidence that we "do well that we take heed" to the "sure word of prophecy" with reference to things to come. We may take notice also of our Lord's own words. What could he mean but to advise his people thus, when he said, "There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth. . . . When these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh!"—Luke 21: 25-28. What could our Savior mean when he spoke these words but to warn his disciples, then and now, and to teach them to look forward, marking well the signs of the times, that they might perceive when they are drawing near that glorious period to which he taught them to look forward. It could not be that they might profit thereby after the event, —after the Lord's coming,—after they should have received the inheritance. It must have been that they might be in readiness, with their loins girt about, and their lamps burning, and they themselves like servants watching for their Lord.

I have read somewhere much as follows: If the use of unfulfilled prophecy be after the event which it foretells has come to pass, it must be either to the Lord's people, or to wicked people, that it is found useful. Now it cannot be of any use to the wicked. It must needs be too late to be of use to them, when its predictions have received accomplishment in their destruction. The flood proved the truth of the Lord's word which Noah delivered; but it certainly was too late to be of any use to the wicked people to whom Noah preached; and the Lord's servants had no need of such a proof as the fulfillment of prophecy afforded, for they were well aware beforetime that God spoke in faithfulness and truth. Moreover the wicked perished in the flood "because they did not believe the prophecy before its accomplishment, and the family of Noah were only saved because they did believe it."

Surely then, as the inspired John declares concerning the Apocalypse, so we may assert respecting every other prophecy which the word of God brings forward, "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein."—Rev. 1 - 3. So reading and so hearing, we shall not fall under the condemnation of the Jews of old,—"Ye hypocrites! ye can discern the face of the sky and of the earth; but how is it that ye do not discern this time?"—Luke 12: 56. The objection then that many have advanced upon the ground of an undue inquisitiveness is idle.

For the World's Crisis.

THE TIME IS SHORT.

As if we were traveling on a journey of one hundred miles, and had already passed over ninety-nine miles of the way, the remainder might be called a very short distance; so with us in regard to our journey through the wilderness of this world. The whole life of man in this mortal state, is but a moment, when compared with the unending age to come. How few realize the extreme shortness of the time that now remains.

We do not expect the world's people to change their course until they change their views, and have a new heart, and become children of God. But to see those who profess to belong to Christ, laboring so hard to acquire the gold that perisheth, and building for themselves houses of hewn stone, as though they were to live here thousands of years, when the fact is that "there shall not one stone be left upon another that shall not be thrown down," to see professors pursuing such a course, leads us to doubt the sincerity of their professions. Is this the way for pilgrims and strangers, who can tarry but a night? No. The wilderness is not the place for us to erect mansions. "We look for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

In that blessed land of promise, we expect to see our glorious "inheritance, incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away." And the day is near and hasteth greatly, that shall bring us into the possession and enjoyment of this inheritance.

My brother, do you realize this? The time is short! If you have trials and sorrows, let this truth console you. This "light affliction . . . is but for a moment," and then comes the "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." F. H. Chamberlain.

TO THE WATCHMAN.

Ye watchman of God, how stands the matter with you? Have you the standard raised high? Do you fully realize the responsibility resting upon you? How many are looking to you. We ask again, how is it with you? We are aware that some of your fellow watchmen have turned a cold shoulder to the cause, and have left the walls. We expect that is grieving to you, and causes you to feel sad. We believe also you meet with trials, as you journey along; but 'mid it all keep patient, and keep the standard high. Do not fail to declare the whole counsel of God. My prayer is, that you that have been trying to proclaim the kingdom near, will not be among that class who will hear the sad saying, "Howl, ye shepherds, and cry, . . . ye principal of the flock. . . . Ye shall fall like a pleasant vessel."

When I think of the straitness of the way, I fear there will be a howling among some. Look at the old prophets; see what they had to meet. No matter if it was to meet false prophets, one, two, or four hundred of them; they obeyed God, and what were the consequences? imprisonments, sawn asunder, and in many ways they had to meet death. Then I cast my eye back to Jesus and the apostles. First I see Jesus going about despised, called hard names, rejected, set at naught, betrayed, tried, spit upon, forsaken by his friends, a crown of thorns placed upon his head, scourged, mocked, led from place to place, and denied by one that was chosen to follow him. Is that all? No; he was condemned, and compelled to take his cross and start for the place of execution. Did they stop there? No, the nails must be driven through his hands, the spear must pierce his side; he must die. What is all this for? We answer, for declaring the counsel of God. Could you stand that, if you were called upon to do it?

Now we will look for a few moments to the apostles, and see what they had to meet. How many escaped with their lives? Perhaps not but one permitted to die a natural death. How they were despised by this wicked world. What for? Because they were dishonest? No, it was for preaching the plain gospel of Jesus Christ. They were looked down upon, and despised. They were not among the nobility of earth.

Excepting DEATH, I am inclined to think those down here, that preach the pure word, will not get off much cheaper. But look over the world. Take the servants as a body. How sad the contrast! How many are conforming to the world. How powerless their preaching. It is sad to write it, but it is so. May God help, is my prayer.

In conclusion, I will say, if there was any way I could encourage you, I would do it. I could direct your minds to the golden city—that would be no news. I could tell you of the crown—that you know all about. Perhaps I should fail to encourage you in that way. I will pray God to help you to cut loose from this world, and make up your minds you have only one to please, then try with all your might to please him, and all will be well. Soon the glorious day will come. I will close by begging you not to lower the standard. If you knew how badly it looked, perhaps you would not; but let us have it just as it is. How I love it. May God help you to preach the word. J. T. Kimball.

DEVILISM!

Bro. Grant:—I think the articles on the subject of modern Spiritualism should be headed, "Devilism;" for that is the most appropriate name for it. It is one of the most corrupt systems that ever arose in opposition to our dear Savior and his cause. I know from what I have seen, and heard from their own lips, and from their writings, that every one of their articles of faith, or doctrinal points, are in direct opposition to the Bible and the lovely gospel of Christ. Their works show that they fulfill the prophecy of the apostle Peter, in 2 Peter, 2d chapter, and the prophecy of St. Paul, in 1 Tim. 4: 12, where it is declared that in the last days "some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy;" and also in the fourth verse of Jude, where he says of them, "ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ."

Brother Grant, if the wicked and corrupt system of modern Spiritualism, or Devilism, does not fit the moulds here brought to view by Paul and Peter and Jude, then I cannot understand language. In words and actions they have denied God and the Bible, and also denied Christ, and have despised and trampled under foot the lovely religion of the dear Savior; and I know it to be a fact, that the modern Spiritualists have led hundreds and thousands to forsake the pure religion of Christ and turn against the Bible. If that is not Devilism, what is? It is my humble prayer to my heavenly Father, that I may never be brought under the influence of such a corrupt system.

Please read Deut. 18: 10, 11; Isa. 8: 19-22; Lev. 20: 6, and 1 Chron. 10: 13. Saul was put to death for consulting a witch. Lev. 19: 31, Isa. 29: 4, and 1 Sam. 28: 7, where Saul consulted the witch of Endor, and was afterwards put to death for it. Look also at 1 John 4: 1-6. Look out for the spirits of devils, which are filling the whole world with wickedness and desolation, and trying every method to destroy the saints of God, by leading many of them to forsake the Lord, and deny the Bible, and to embrace Spiritual wifeism, and free-loveism. If that is not devilism, what is? Let us call it by its right name,—"Devilism."

MISSIONARY WORK.—No. 2.

Missionaries at home—missionaries abroad. No one is duly prepared to go on a mission abroad, who is not in heart and action a missionary at home.

Come look o'er the nations in darkness who mourn,
Beyond where the light of the gospel has gone.
Yes, lift up your eyes, and behold each ripe field,
All white for the harvest, their increase to yield.
Then haste to the heathen, and gladly proclaim
The news of salvation, in Jesus' name.

Cannot be a missionary? Certainly you can, beloved reader, if you will. If your soul is alive and on fire, you cannot help being a missionary of the cross. The missionary spirit is in your hearts, like fire in your bones. You will be full of matter; the spirit within you will constrain you, as new wine which hath no vent, ready to burst like new bottles.—Job 32: 18, 19. Woe to you if you speak not. You will speak, that you may be refreshed. . . . .

Every nerve will be stretched heavenward. Your voice will be heard like a trumpet, crying aloud and sparing not. The thunders of Sinai will crash! the lightnings flash! The good news of salvation will flow from your lips in strains sweeter than angels use.

If you cannot be a missionary on distant heathen ground, where millions sit in darkness and the shades of death, you will gladly take the domestic field, going north, south, east, or west,—any where—sounding the gospel trumpet long and loud.

"Blow ye the trumpet, blow,
The gladly solemn sound."

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters." Begin the good work at home, in your own house, at your fireside, in the domestic circle. Are your children (if any you have) walking in newness of life, obedient, gentle, lamb-like, "in subjection with all gravity?"

Are there none in your household save those in the straight and narrow path, leading to life eternal, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless? full of faith and the Holy Spirit? Is there one unconverted soul sitting at your table—one at your right, or at your left, out of the ark of safety? one, even one, great or small, son or daughter, man servant or maid servant, on the road to death? . . . What now? anything in the missionary line? Is there a backslider within sound of your voice?—a cold or lukewarm professor having a name to live while dead? Any missionary work at hand? How with your neighbor? and the next? Anything to do in lifting the warning voice, or pointing to the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world?

Need any one be at a loss for missionary work a single moment, so long as one sinner is found out of Christ, lifting the arm of rebellion against the Most High? Need any one naming the name of Christ remain idle in God's vineyard, so long as there is one Achan in the camp, one Agag to be hewn to pieces?

The soul on fire pentecostally, will find something to do momentarily, in saving a world of rebel sinners lost!

"What do we live for?
To sow by all waters
Fruit-bearing seeds of deeds for all years.
What do we life for?
We live not to rust out,
Slothful by standing aloof from the strife.
A thousand times better,
More noble, to wear out,
Battered and burned in the hot forge of life."

We know personally a beloved disciple of the Lord Jesus, a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word, constantly on the wing of love and mercy. He preaches all the time, daily, nightly, by precept, by holy example, by the silent messengers of truth, by his pen, and by the living voice. He first sets his own house in order, preaches full salvation to all under his roof, from the least to the greatest. Then from house to house, with tracts, books, and periodicals, breathing the spirit of the Bible, pouring into the poor and the afflicted ones the oil and the wine of gospel purity and consolation. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble."—Psa. 41: 1-3. He preaches first at one house, then at another, to one soul, or ten, or a hundred; none is left as opportunity offers. Whenever or wherever he can gain a hearing, then and there he commences his missionary labors.

Another bright example of missionary spirit we witnessed a few months since in passing down the majestic Hudson. A christian gentleman on the steamboat Isaac Newton, preached six or eight little sermons early in the morning. His first sermon was addressed to two ladies, as they stood gazing at the majestic scenery on the banks of the river. These ladies were sinners, without hope. This good brother spoke of God's goodness, of the gift of his Son, warned them of their danger, and exhorted them to flee the wrath to come. His next short sermon was to a little boy on deck, —then to a man lying in his berth. After this, he met several ladies promenading, to whom he dropped a word of kind admonition, presenting each with a tract. Thence to the bar, where his next little sermon was to the man dealing out distilled damnation. Turning from thence, he saw a man puffing a cigar, smoking away God's money to gratify a depraved appetite, injuring mind, body and soul! To each of them he delivered his message and passed on.

He then retired to the lower cabin, and delivered one of his little sermons to some eight or ten passengers, meanwhile opening the precious volume of inspiration, and reading several passages to some who doubtless had not heard God speak from his word for years. Reader, was not this a good beginning?

These few little sermons were merely the commencement of his ministerial labors for the day. He went on opening his lips for Jesus, preaching by word of mouth and the silent messengers of truth in the form of tracts, as the Lord opened the way and gave him utterance.

Now, beloved reader, supposing every one naming the name of Christ were thus faithful in opening his lips for Jesus, pointing sinners to the lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world; rebuking, exhorting with all long-suffering and doctrine? How long would it be ere the earth blossomed as the rose? This is the way. Let no opportunity slip of doing good. Be diligent in season, out of season; preach the word, sound it out, let it ring.

"Scatter the germs of the beautiful,
By the wayside let them fall."

SHALL THEY SUFFER?

Who? The faithful veterans who have served long and faithfully in the army of the Lord. Shall those who have borne the burden in the heat of the day, who have spent the vigor of youth and the strength of middle age laboring for others, and trying to snatch a few brands from the burning, be left to suffer want and lack the comforts of life in their old age? Should any of God's faithful watchmen, who leave home and friends to warn a wicked world of a judgment soon to come, be left to struggle with poverty? No, they should not;—but they are! God help them, and open the hearts and purses of their rich brethren. How it makes my heart ache to hear of those who have been out sounding the alarm, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom to a careless world and slumbering church, but are now worn out, sick, and in poverty.

If a great general should go through the country, who had been in all the wars for the last twenty years, the people would all be awake. Banners would fly, drums beat, and money would flow freely. But if a battle-scarred hero, who has been out for twenty years fighting the battles of the Lord, and facing the whole battery of the world, the church, and the devil, comes along, with broken down constitution and feeble, tottering steps, we are too apt to think they are worth but little, and turn them out to die. A soldier goes to fight for his country, and take men's lives. He has his bounty and wages, food and clothing, and a pension for life. But men go out to fight against sin and to save lives, by persuading poor mortals to seek for the life to come; and they may suffer poverty and want, and in their old age shiver over a scanty fire and visit an empty cupboard. O "tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon," for the Philistines may well scoff at us, and expect a victory over us, if they learn that we cheat our best soldiers out of their wages and give them scanty rations. I am glad that God is a better paymaster than his church. He will see that they have their bounty, and their pension at the end of the war; but he expects the church to furnish them with food and raiment, and the comforts of life; especially when they are old and feeble, and unable with their own hands to minister to their necessities. He could feed them with manna, or send the ravens to supply them with bread and meat; but he has chosen to give that privilege, to his people, that they may thereby win a reward.

Bro. Dixon does not want the preachers to complain. Well, perhaps they had better not; but it is time somebody spoke loud, for the judgment is about to set, and the church has got something to answer for. "Where are the sick ones?" I will tell you of one. Up in New Hampshire there is a brother—an old veteran of 1843—nearly seventy years old, sick and a cripple. Now I respect these old '43 laborers. There is something sublime in their faith, which has held on to the blessed hope through all the darkness and disappointments of the tarrying time. He was in the campaigns of 1843 and 1854, and now believes the Lord is coming in 1868.

Timeists, here is a case for you. One of like precious faith with yourselves, rejoicing in the same hope, and waiting patiently for the Lord. But he needs something to eat and drink, to enable him to live until the consummation of his hope. Probably, he lived out his faith in former days, and helped the distressed as far as he was able. Now he is feeble, and has nothing for himself. Who will help him? There were many at camp-meeting, who said they believed the Lord would come in 1867 or 1868. I could not judge of their faith by their works, for I do not live near them. If they do not reach out a helping hand, and bestow a mite to relieve the wants of that aged brother, who is clinging with them to the same hope, I may say to myself, I am afraid those people don't really believe what they talked.

I know there are many calls, and many ways to do good. Well, attend to all the calls you can. Send out missionaries to carry the light into dark places. Help the freedmen, help the tract-makers to send out tracts and scatter them like leaves of autumn; do good unto all, but especially to the household of faith. Don't let the faithful old warriors suffer. And now, before you forget it, sit down and write a few words of consolation, and enclose twenty-five or fifty cents, or more if you can spare it, and send it to B. P. Manning, Goffstown, N. H. He is a stranger to me. I don't know whether he is a giant in the army, or a dwarf; whether he belongs to the heavy artillery, or fights with a stone and sling. No matter; he has been, and still is, fighting for the King, and, no doubt, gets a portion of meat from the King's table. But he needs a little bread and butter to go with it. A man may live spiritually by faith, but I never heard of one who could live temporally on faith alone. Send him your mite, and then look around and see if there are not others who need your help. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." These are Christ's words; remember them—act upon them, that it may be said unto you, "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Dec. 19, 1866.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

APPOINTMENTS.

We shall be obliged to have the Crisis printed one day earlier next week, because Christmas day comes on Tuesday this year, which is the day our paper is usually sent to press; for this reason the appointments should be in by Monday morning for next week. Printers do not work Christmas day.

NO NAME.

A writer sends an article, and says, "I withhold my name." For this reason we think it best to withhold the article. Do not be ashamed of your name. You would not like to be introduced in company as the nameless one. Always give your name, if you wish to see your articles in the paper.

PORTSMOUTH.

We spent Lord's day, Dec. 9th, with the church in Portsmouth, N. H., and found it in a prosperous condition. Their congregations are large and attentive. In all places we find the people anxious to hear preaching from those who are looking for the speedy coming of Christ. There is almost a famine in the land,—"not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord."—Amos 8 : 11. Many in the churches are becoming more and more interested in the subject of the Lord's coming, the sleep and resurrection of the dead, the destruction of the wicked, and the saints' inheritance. We expect to see this interest increase among good men and women in all churches.

At the close of the morning sermon, we had fifty-one short exhortations that were really heart-cheering. All felt that it was good to be there. It was a religious feast, such as is not often enjoyed.

A FAST AGE.

It is astonishing to see the rapidity with which events are hastening to the final depot. All is hurry—HURRY. Every body is anxious to be on the express train. All are for a "rush"—a dash, and soon comes the "smash up" in confusion confounded. But those who escape alive, are more anxious for another fast train with lightning speed. They can't stop to see to the dead, wounded and dying. Take off the breaks, put on the steam, and make up the lost time. They seem to be driven by Satanic fury. Truly, it is "a fast age." What next?

AFFAIRS AT ROME.

The French troops left Rome on Tuesday, Dec. 11th, and the Papal flag was run up upon the Castle of St. Angelo. It remains to be seen how long it will float in the Italian breeze before it falls to rise no more. Things look very squally for Pope Pius IX. He is now at Civita Vecchia, the principal seaport of the Pontifical States, thirty-eight miles from Rome. In case of an outbreak at Rome, he could embark at once for some more genial clime. His condition is becoming very critical. As soon as the Italians, under Victor Emanuel, wish for Rome or their capital, the Pope will find himself as described by Bunyan in his "Pilgrim's Progress:"—"Though he be yet alive, he is, by reason of age, and also of the many shrewd brushes that he met with in his younger days, grown so crazy and stiff in his joints, that he can now do little more than sit in his cave's mouth, grinning at pilgrims as they go by, and biting his nails because he can not come at them."

His dominion is about departing. His political power will soon be among the things that were. A telegram from Rome, Dec. 12th, says:—"The French Minister, Count Montbello, has informed the Pope that if he withdraws from Rome the French troops hereafter will give him no support." There is no other Catholic nation that can help him, if it would; nor any Protestant nation that would help him if it could. Thus he is sinking to rise no more. Soon we may expect the time will come for the martyrs to rise and witness the destruction of the "little horn" that gloated over their sufferings.

A late intelligent writer says:—

The downfall of the temporal power is regarded as certain by friends and foes of the Papacy alike, the only difference in their appreciation of the circumstances being that the enemies of the Pope believe that the rising will be calm, that the resistance will be merely nominal, and that a municipal government having been installed, it will proceed at once to vote the annexation of the Papal States to Italy. The Pope's friends believe, on the contrary, that there will be bloodshed, anarchy, and the fear of private vengeance. Under those circumstances, the Italian government is preparing for whatever may fall out. It desires that the Roman people may do as they please without coercion either way, and troops have therefore been placed so that, if serious disturbances arise the French army could be immediately replaced by Italian soldiers. They would go there, however, not to restore the authority of the Pope, but to quell disturbances and place the supreme power in the hands of the municipality, who would have to consult the country before the union with Italy could be accomplished."

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you permit me, through the Crisis, to ask for the following information: I have noticed in the Crisis by different writers, upon different subjects, certain Bible phrases, on which the people, as a mass, need some information; and among them are the following: The Bible weights and measures expressed in our English language. I often hear the remark, I should like to know the amount contained in a shekel, or homer, ephah, talent, omer, and such like Bible weights and measures; therefore, if any one feels like giving them, I, with others, would feel thankful for the favor.

EVENTS IN THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

BRO. GRANT:—Can it be shown, from authentic and reliable sources, when the Catholic religion was abolished in France, and the worship of reason and philosophy substituted in its stead? Also by what tribunal was it effected? Yours in search of truth,

JOHN P. BELT.

The points referred to in the foregoing questions are very clearly stated in the history of the French Revolution. In the "History of the Revolutions in Europe," "from the French of Christopher W. Koch," when speaking of the political crimes in the revolution in France, he says:—

"The revolutionists did not stop here. To their political crimes they added acts of impiety. They began by abolishing the Gregorian Calendar, and substituted in its place the era of the Republic; to commence on the 22nd of September 1793. In a short time, Herbert and Chaumette, two chiefs of the commune got the convention to decree the abolition of the christian religion (Nov. 10.) The worship of Reason was substituted in its place; and the church of Notre Dame at Paris was profaned, by being converted into a temple of atheism. . . . Plunder and sacrilege of all kinds were committed in the Catholic churches."—Koch, p. 431.

In the valuable and reliable "History of the French Revolution," by F. A. Mignet, member of the Institute of France, when speaking of the events which took place "from the 2nd of June 1793, to April 1794," he says:—

"By an unprecedented revolution they established an entirely new era; they changed the divisions of the year, the names of the months and days; they substituted a republican for the christian calender, the decade for the week, and fixed the day of rest not on the Sabbath, but on the tenth day. . . . The constitution of 1793 led to the establishment of the republican calendar to the abolition of the christian worship. . . .

Herbert's faction . . . made terrible progress. It compelled the bishop of Paris and his vicars to abjure christianity at the bar of the convention, and forced the convention to decree that the worship of Reason should be substituted for the Catholic religion."—Mignet, pp. 233–4.

MARVELOUS!

It is wonderful to see with what speed news is now communicated through the world. Our fathers could not have been made to believe that people could read news in the evening papers in New York and Boston, which left Rome in Italy at noon of the same day, but such is the fact.

The following appeared in the evening papers of Friday, Dec. 7th:—

Rome, Dec. 7—Noon. "The French officers who have so long been on duty in this city took a farewell leave of the Pope this morning."

GOOD RESOLUTIONS.

In the report of the Susquehanna Annual Conference of the Free Methodist Church, held at Rose Valley, N. Y., Oct. 5th and 6th, 1866, we find the following resolutions:—

"Resolved, That if any of the preachers of this Conference are known to indulge in the use of tobacco, either by chewing or smoking, during the coming year, they shall at the next session of the Conference be discontinued from the traveling connexion."

We are glad to see the churches waking up on this important subject. It is high time we begin to think about being cleansed "from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." But few are aware of the evils arising from the use of tobacco.

Here is another important item in their report that also demands immediate attention, if we wish to be Bible christians, and be ready for the coming of the Son of man:—

"Whereas, We believe the rule of our discipline requiring all our members to pledge themselves to forever lay aside all superfluous ornaments is founded on the express teachings of scripture.

Whereas, We believe this rule to prohibit the wearing of all parts of dress put on for ornament only. Therefore,

Resolved, That we regret the growing tendency to worldly conformity among our members, exhibited in the putting on of those parts of dress worn under the name of trimmings, such as lace, fringes, embroidery, buttons, ribbons, braid, strips of velvet, etc.

2. That we affectionately admonish our people that such a practice conflicts with the solemn vow, taken by them on entering the church.

3. That we require all our preachers, lovingly, but faithfully to enforce our discipline in reference to this practice.

4. We hold that christian parents are bound to refrain from putting ornaments on the dress of their children, as much as on their own."

So far as we can learn, these Free Methodists are a body of earnest christians, very much like the early Methodists.

THE EARNEST CHRISTIAN" is a valuable monthly, published by this body of people. We commend it to all who wish a good monthly. That the reader may have some idea of its character, we will give a portion of their prospectus, as follows:—

"It will as heretofore endeavor to hold up the Bible standard of religion; to lead the unsaved to the cross; and to encourage believers to claim all the grace Christ died to purchase for them. Sin in all its popular forms will be discountenanced, and men pointed to Him who came to save his people from their sins. Do you believe in a thorough work of God? a holiness that does not, by silence, give countenance to secret societies, conformity to the world, religious festivals, selling the right to worship God in sanctuaries dedicated to his service? Help spread it by extending the circulation of the EARNEST CHRISTIAN AND GOLDEN RULE. Begin at once. If ever such a periodical was needed, it is now. You cannot afford to do without it another year. Get your friends to subscribe. We ask, beloved, your assistance in the name of Jesus.

Terms, $1.25 per annum, in advance. To any one sending us five new subscribers, we will send a sixth number gratis, if they signify their desire to have us do so. The postage on this Magazine is three cents a quarter, in advance—to be paid at the office where received.

THE HERALD OF HEALTH AND JOURNAL OF PHYSICAL CULTURE.—The New York Tribune thus speaks of this monthly:—

"The Herald of Health presents an agreeable and instructive miscellany of popular reading, in addition to the lucid exposition of Hygiene, to which it is specially devoted. It aims to accomplish the work that is usually neglected by the schoolmaster. Without maintaining any ultra system of abstinence, it makes war on alcohol, tobacco and unclean social habits which arise from their use, and earnestly sets forth the importance of purity of mind. The value of frequent bathing, regular exercise, wholesome cooking, and other ordinances of muscular christianity, is insisted on with apostolic zeal, and the best methods of turning them to practical account are fully explained and illustrated. The arrangement of the matter evinces not a little editorial experience and skill, insuring a family journal which deserves a kindly welcome as an efficient aid to the progress of popular education."

If there is an invalid in the land, a mother with a feeble child, or a parent desirous of rearing beautiful children, they should subscribe. It has recently been enlarged and greatly improved. Terms—$2 per year, 20 cents per number.

EPISCOPACY AND ADVENTISM.

The Protestant Episcopal church, both in Great Britain and the United States, dwell much on the general doctrines of the first and second advent. The Sundays before and after the Epiphany are devoted to series of discourses on Christ's appearing in the world, past and future. Easter Sunday near the festival of the resurrection of Christ, as also Ascension Day and Advent Sunday near Christmas, are specially named and noted and made seasons when the Lord's coming is considered. In the Book of Common Prayer, in use every where in all the churches, there is a large amount of scripture quoted bearing on the advent, the judgment, and the resurrection, and kingdom. In the Te Deum Laudamus they say, "We believe that thou shalt come to be our judge." In the Apostle's Creed, which is repeated as almost a constant part of the Sunday service, we read, "He (Christ) ascended into heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almighty; from thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead. I believe in . . . the resurrection of the body, and the life everlasting." And in the Nicene Creed, repeated and subscribed to by every Episcopalian, we have,—"And he (Christ) shall come again with glory to judge both the quick and the dead; whose kingdom shall have no end." And again we have in this Creed the emphatic and strikingly expressed faith, as follows: "And I look for the resurrection of the dead, and the life of the world to come," a phrase very indicative of pre-millennialism. And again in the Prayer of St. Chrysostom, we have—"granting us in this world knowledge of thy truth, and in the world to come life everlasting." All the foregoing are found in the order of morning prayer. In the evening service, our Lord's prayer with its "Thy kingdom come" is repeated by both minister and people. Then again comes the Apostle's and Nicene Creeds, and the Prayer of St. Chrysostom, containing the millennial allusion to the world to come, which prayer is also found in the Litany. In the General Prayers there is mention made of "the end of the world," and to "the breaking down of the kingdom of Sin, Satan, and Death."

In the Collect for the first Sunday in Advent is the prayer, "that in the last day, when he (Christ) shall come again in his glorious majesty to judge both the quick and the dead, we may rise to the life immortal," etc. Then at the second Sunday in Advent, the splendid adventual prediction in Luke 21 : 25–33 is quoted and read at length. At the third Sunday in Advent is this Collect: "O Lord Jesus Christ, who at thy first coming didst send thy messenger to prepare thy way before thee; grant that the ministers and stewards of thy mysteries may likewise so prepare and make ready, by turning the hearts of the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, that at thy second coming to judge the world, we may be found an acceptable people in thy sight," etc. We should suppose from this prayer that the whole Episcopal body would regard itself as a second Elijah, whose special work and mission is to proclaim and make ready a people for the Redeemer's coming. In the Collect for the sixth Sunday after the Epiphany, they pray that "when he shall appear again with power and great glory, we may be made like him in his eternal and glorious kingdom," etc. Then Matt. 24 : 23–30 is fully quoted,—a very apt and significant allusion. On Ash Wednesday, "the world to come" is again designated as being the time and place where the saved shall live with Christ. Did the church ever carefully and critically consider the import of this scripture (and evident millennial) phrase?

At Easter season, the Resurrection is animadverted upon. Believers pray to be made "partakers of Christ's resurrection"; also that "through the grave and gate of death we may pass to our joyful resurrection, for his merits who died," etc.; and both Christ's resurrection and the re-living of the just are set forth in appropriate scriptures. At the Communion, the Lord's Prayer, the Apostle's and Nicene Creeds, are again repeated, and the "mighty resurrection and glorious ascension" of the Lord are made mention of; as also is "the everlasting kingdom of God," to which the reference is very frequent. And no child is baptized without the minister's demanding to know of its sponsor if he "believes in the resurrection of the body"; the answer required and given is, "I do." So too is this belief required to be expressed by adults at their baptism in a challenged faith in the Apostle's creed that teaches it. And again, before confirmation, this firm faith in the Creed, which so expressly teaches the re-living of the body of flesh, is also to be again confessed. How can any doubt it? And even in the marriage ceremony, "the dreadful day of judgment" is solemnly appealed to by the officiating clergyman. The sick and dying are told also by the minister that they shall "rise again from death," and give "account to the righteous Judge" in the "fearful judgment." Such references are perpetual.

The order for the burial of the dead is full of glowing resurrection scriptures, and is particularly impressive. The minister marches into the church grave-yard before the corpse, solemnly repeating John 11 : 25, 26, and Job 19 : 25–27, and when the earth is cast upon the coffin says, "We commit this body to the ground; earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust; looking for the general resurrection in the last day, and the life of the world to come, through our Lord Jesus Christ; at whose second coming in glorious majesty to judge the world, the earth and the sea shall give up their dead; and the corruptible bodies of those who sleep in him shall be changed, and made like unto his own glorious body," etc. Then Rev. 14 : 13; then the Lord's prayer again; then a closing prayer in which "the general resurrection in the last day," and the grand reception of "the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" find a place. Surely a "general resurrection" does not mean or imply a simultaneous one, and the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the (kosmos) world (Matt. 25 : 34) can mean nothing else but the restored, redeemed earth. In the Burial at Sea, too, the dead are committed to the deep "looking for the resurrection of the body, when the sea shall give up her dead," and the endless life is again as before said to be "in the world to come." Prisoners are exhorted to repentance in view of "that terrible day" that is coming; and persons under sentence of death are also referred to "the dreadful day of judgment." And in the Morning Prayer to be used in families, "that great day" and "the Judge of quick and dead" are brought to the mind of the suppliant. And the Evening Prayer is, "that so we may be preserved pure and blameless unto the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." Of the Articles of Religion, the fourth one expressly teaches Christ's second personal coming to judgment at the last day. And when a deacon is made or ordained, Luke 12 : 35–38 is read to him,—emphatic and pertinent. At the ordaining of a bishop, it is not forgotten to set before him the "never fading crown of glory," to be obtained only "when the Chief Shepherd shall appear." Then the Communion is declared to be celebrated "until his coming again."

Such are the doctrines and creeds of the Protestant Episcopal church, as related to the last things. In a subsequent article, I shall show how widely her own founders, standards, and manuals have tended to lay the foundation for the reception of the pre-millennial and speedy advent of the Savior, as a cardinal truth of revelation; and also proceed to inquire how extensively these views are promulgated by her, and whether she is living up to all the light in which she professes to walk. "The priest's lips should keep knowledge." D. T. T.

GEMS FROM RUTHERFORD.—No. 5.

SOLEMN WARNINGS.

Build your nest upon no tree here, for ye see God hath sold the forest to death, and every tree whereupon we would rest is ready to be cut down, to the end that we might fly and mount up, and build upon the Rock.

There is something keeping for you which is worth the having. All that is here is condemned to die, to pass away like a snow-ball before a summer sun; and since death took possession of yours, it is daily creeping nearer and nearer to yourself, howbeit with no noise of feet.

O, if there were a free market for salvation proclaimed in that day when the trumpet of God shall awake the dead, how many buyers would be there!

End your journey ere the night come upon you; have all in readiness against the time that ye must sail through that black and impetuous Jordan,—and Jesus, Jesus, who knoweth both those depths and the rocks, and all the coasts, be your Pilot. The last tide will not wait for you one moment: if ye forget any thing, when your sea is full, and your foot in that ship, there is no returning again to fetch it. No man sinneth twice in dying ill; as we die but once, so we die but ill or well once. We take nothing to the grave with us but a good or evil conscience. When the day of visitation cometh, and your old idols come weeping about you, ye will have much ado not to break your heart. It is best to give up in time with them, so as ye could at a call quit your part of this world for a drink of water, or a thing of nothing. Verily I have seen the best of this world, a moth-eaten, or a threadbare coat. I purpose to lay it aside, being now old and full of holes. O for my house above, not made with hands!

When the time shall come that your eye-strings shall break, your face wax pale, your breath grow cold, and this house of clay shall totter, and your one foot shall be over the boundary in eternity, it will be your comfort and joy that ye gave your name to Christ. The greatest part of the world think heaven at the next door, and that Christianity is an easy task; but they will be beguiled.

I entreat you, sir, to consider the times which ye live in, and that your soul is more worth to you than the whole world, which in the day of the blowing of the last trumpet shall lie in white ashes as an old castle burnt to nothing; and remember that judgment and eternity is before you. My dear and worthy friend, let me entreat you in Christ's name, and by the salvation of your soul, and by your appearance before the dreadful and sin-revenging Judge of the world, to make your accounts ready.

O then see that there be not a loose pin in the work of your salvation, for ye will not believe how quickly the Judge will come. Many think they believe, but never tremble,—the devils are farther on than these. Haste, haste, for the tide will not stay! To feel the smoke of hell's fire in the throat for half an hour, to stand before a river of fire and brimstone broader than the earth, and to think to be bound hand and foot and cast into the midst of it quick, and then to have God locking the prison-door, never to be opened! O how it will shake a conscience that hath any life in it!

Fire will fly over the earth and all that is in it; even destruction from the Almighty. Fye, fye, upon that hope that shall be dried up by the root. Fye upon the drunken night bargains, and the drunken and mad covenants that sinners make with death and hell after cups; and when men's souls are mad and drunken with the love of this lawless life. They think to make a nest for their hopes, and take quarters and conditions of hell and death, that they shall have ease, long life, peace; and in the morning, when the last trumpet shall awake them, then they rue the bargain.

O, what hire, and how many worlds would many then give to have a favorable sentence of the Judge! Or, what money would they not give to buy a mountain to be a grave above both soul and body, to hide them from the awful looks of an angry Lord and Judge!

THE A. A. MISSIONARY TENT.

In last week's Crisis, we published a call for funds to procure a tent in which to hold meetings, to publish the Lord's speedy coming. A sister residing in Worcester, believing the Lord's coming right upon us, and that what we do must be done quickly, comes forward and pledges the full amount mentioned, $500.00. The Lord bless our sister, and may her example stir up others who have the means, to do just as the Master would have them, with that which he has entrusted to their stewardship.

J. B. COOK TO D. T. T.

Your notice of Bro. C. F. Hudson and his works pleased me much. He is worthy for whom you say so much, by way of encouragement, and to do something towards raising a proper sentiment on the subject of which he treats in his invaluable books. He is blessed in having such light from the word of the Lord; such signal ability to confess it; and such a character, all over manly and christian, to confirm his good confession before many witnesses. My admiration of his comprehensive christian knowledge, embodied in his books; of the service he has performed to the church, and to me in particular, and of the position he has attained by such knowledge and service, has steadily grown stronger through many years, hence I thank you for your notice, so long and so richly merited, of one of the worthiest of the worthies of this or any other age; one of the ablest and yet most modest of our able men.

Yours, J. B. COOK.

AN APPEAL.

DEAR BRETHREN:—You have likely seen an appeal in the Crisis from Sister A. E. Smith, of New York, in behalf of her Hackensack mission. Now I appeal to you all in behalf of that mission. It is a worthy cause. Sister Smith needs help just at this time. You all can help a little, and some of you can help more than others. I will suggest a plan: Let some brother in every society appeal to every brother and sister. Many can pay a little, yet they would not think of writing to her. Some would pay $5, perhaps some more, and thus you may do good and help the cause. You can send the money by the money order system through the post office; or if you get fifty or seventy dollars, send it by express to her address, as you find it in the Crisis.

Now let us lay up treasure in heaven, and remember it is more blessed to give than to receive. God has given us all we have. Let us make a good use of it. Freely ye have received, freely give, and may the Lord help us. Yours in behalf of the down-trodden.

DORCAS MISSION.

A barrel of clothing, quilts, etc., etc., have been received from "Martha," of Dinsmore Hill, Vt. Many thanks to her and the friends for these substantial tokens of interest in our mission. May grace, mercy, and peace abide with them.

$4.00 have been received from the Square Pond Adventist church in Conn., through Bro. P. S. Butler; $2.00, and a bundle of tracts, papers, etc., have been received from H. W. Norville, Thomaston. (State not known, but think it is Conn. The letter was post-marked Canaan, Conn.

We now need a lot more of quilts, and expect that the Lord will send them in due time. Our quilts need to be five feet wide, and six feet long for the children's beds. Larger sizes will be used for the temporary night lodgers.

By a mistake I gave credit twice to some parties in the Crisis for monies received. Having so much work on hand to attend to, may account for it. May love, joy and peace abide in the hearts of all these lovers of Jesus. We cannot recompense them, but they shall "be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Pray for me.

My Post Office address in future will be, F. H. Barbank, Dorcas Mission, 708 Lombard St., Philadelphia, Penn. Yours in Christ,

THE SHINING LIGHT. In Two Parts: 1st, The Bible for Great Folks; 2d, The Bible for the Little and the Great Folks; or, The Bible in the Family Circle. By the Rev. D. F. Newton, author of "Home-Thrusts," etc.

This is an excellent, soul-inspiring work. With the Psalmist, the author seems greatly in love with the word of God. His veneration for it is manifest on every page, as though he would attract the attention of young and old, great and small, to the Bible, as the only light that can guide them from earth to heaven. We hope the book may be extensively read, and we bespeak for it an extensive sale. One article in the book, entitled, "The Editor's Experience in searching the Scriptures," is worth the whole price of the book. This volume contains 412 pp., neatly executed, with about fifty beautiful pictorial illustrations.

Bro. E. Bellows reported as agent to procure a tent. The tent had been purchased. The cloth cost $133.00. Expense of making, etc., made the whole cost of the tent a little more than $150.00. There still remained $22.00 unpaid. On motion, the report was accepted. The following resolution was then adopted:

Resolved, That this conference, at the present session, pay the debt of $22.00 on the R. I. and E. C. tent. The money was raised and paid to Bro. E. Bellows. A collection of $19.98 was taken up to enlarge the tent. Whole amount of money raised at conference,

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. E. Smith.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—At the request of many of you, I will drop you a few lines to let you know of our blessed work. I have just returned from a short visit among the white churches of our brethren, of the same blessed hope. The first place I stopped was at Worcester, Mass., to fulfill two appointents, according to my promise made at Wilbraham campmeeting. I left home sick, and worn out, from such constant labor, since the first of May last, and felt very sorry that I was so unfit for the work that was before me. But knowing that my heavenly Father was acquainted with all my weariness and sickness, I, as usual, had to fall on our Lord, who is able to help sick folks, as well as those who are not sick. However, the first Sabbath, I found it up-hill work; it being the first visit among the Advent churches. I knew that I could not tell them any thing that they did not know; so I thought it was best to direct my discourse to those present who were not in the habit of coming to the Advent church, but came out of curiosity to hear a woman preach. Notwithstanding my nerving every effort, I could not get liberty. I had meetings all the week. On Thursday, we had fasting, and at 12 o'clock M. we had covenant prayer. In the evening, the spell broke, and every body had liberty, "sweet liberty."

On Friday evening, I related my experience in reference to my conversion. Truly the Lord was with us. On Sunday, I had free liberty, and a good time talking for Jesus. Many outsiders were convinced of the truth of our blessed hope. May the Lord keep them faithful till he comes in his kingdom.

After preaching in the evening, we had an experience meeting—a most blessed time, after which three brethren were impressed to have a season of prayer. We gave an invitation for all those that were seeking, or wished to seek Jesus, to come forward; and to our great joy, twenty-five earnest souls came forward and bowed at the feet of Jesus. Praise the Lord. He can work in his own way, and none can hinder him.

On Monday morning, I had to leave the dear ones, and go further. How sorry I was to part. I felt if I could only stay a while, there would be many who would be brought to Christ; but it was impossible for me to stay longer. I had other appointments to fill. May the Lord bless and save the church when he comes. Really, I felt it hard to part with those dear ones; especially those who had just given their hearts to the Lord. But such is life. As soon as we become acquainted, and our hearts become knit together, we have to part. The friends were very kind to me and my mission work, and gave to my poor destitute ones at home the following amounts: Sunday evening, a sister gave a $10 bill, folded up so small that I did not think it was more than a 50 cent stamp; but when I went to my room to prepare for retiring, I looked, and to my eager eye what pleasure it gave me to find that instead of 50 cents, it was $10. I could scarcely wait until morning, so that I might write to Sister Boid, and send it to her, that she might relieve the suffering poor; for I knew when I left home that they were suffering for the necessaries of life. So I sent it post haste, and received an answer from Sr. Boid, stating what she had done with it; also, how thankful those poor souls were for it.

At as early a period as possible, I inquired after the lady, but did not succeed in finding her out until I told the congregation what good it had done, and that I would be glad to know the lady who gave it. So she arose and owned up that she was doing what her Savior told her, in not letting her right hand know what her left hand did.

When I went back to the place where I was staying, and read the letter to the family, the Lord blessed it to the hearts of those that were present. When I got through with it, a dear little girl, eight years old, came and gave me $5. I said to her, What is this for? Her reply was, Give it to the poor. Then her sister, fifteen years old, gave me $5 more. They both did it with a good will. How much good it did seem to do them. I asked what this all meant. Their father told me that they had had [illegible] they thought they would draw it all out and divide it between Bro. Hastings, Bro. Burbank, and Sr. Anna E. Smith. God bless the little ones.

Next morning, I sent $10 more to Sr. Boid. If I only had time to write all that has been said, and all the prayers that have gone up on high in behalf of those that gave the money, they would feel already paid; but I have not time to write it. It is recorded on high.

I received from Sr. H. $16, from two little girls $15, a sister $5, a brother $1, a sister B. $2, Sister S. $3, and Sister R. $20; and the morning I left, I received from mother Otis $17 more. From R. I. and Eas. Conn. quarterly conference, $10. Lewis Ingalls, Abington, $1; Rufus Pike, $5; from Worcester, $1; making in all $73, and three barrels of clothing, together with a lot of bonnets. Praise the Lord. He is as good as his word. So I will trust him all the way through. When I reached home, O such bright eyes and such glad hearts, you never did see. They had prayed for me all the way. We have distributed nearly all the clothing. We have had a busy time.

I called on a family in a rear basement, which had come from Washington, and had been here four months. There were the parents and four children, in a most destitute condition. They had no chairs, carpet, or bed of any kind. There was nothing in the room but a little stove, a trunk, and an old table. They had no fire, and no money to get any. I asked one of the little children if they had had any thing to eat to-day? She replied, No. The mother was out washing. So I went to the store and bought them some bread, and something for their suppers. I bought three loaves of bread, and cut one up among the children; and if you had seen those poor, almost starved children eat their bread and sausage, you could not have stayed the tears. But I had no time to cry, and I hastened on to visit more of the same sort. I expect when the mother came home she thought an angel had been there. I also gave away the things that were in one barrel. There were twenty-five pocket handkerchiefs for our Sunday school scholars. They were needed very much. I would like to have one hundred more. They were made out of an old sheet, nicely hemmed and ironed. Has any body else one for the some purpose?

O my dear friends and readers of the Crisis, there are a thousand things I would like to tell you, but my time is limited, and my letter is too long already. By the way, I have received several letters asking me where Hackensack is. It is some twenty miles from New York, in the State of New Jersey, a place where the people have thought thus far that colored people have no souls, and have acted accordingly. Our day and night school at this mission is doing well; and the white people are learning that the colored people can be educated. We have the foundation of our new mission house ready for the masons to go to work. All we want is the money to put up the shell and the roof on it, and then we shall start our protracted meeting, and do our uttermost to save souls before Jesus comes.

Yours in the highways and hedges,

ANNA E. SMITH.

New York, Nov. 30th, 1866.

From Bro. B. P. Manning.

BRO. GRANT:—As I have returned home from a visit of twenty-nine days, I thought I would like to drop a few lines to the dear children of the Lord, and let them know how the dear saints are getting along where I have traveled. I find in some places they are rather low in their minds at this time, but I found a good state of things in other places. Bless the Lord for all his goodness to the dear children that are scattered abroad. My prayer is, O Lord, wake up thy children to a sense of their duty, for it is high time to awake, for the great day of the Lord is very near, and souls are perishing for lack of knowledge. O my dear brethren, how few there are that will be saved when Jesus comes. I can not see anything to hinder the Lord's coming any day but "the sign of the Son of man in heaven," and I do not know but that it is in the past; for I am very sure the tribes of the earth are in mourning to-day. I can not see any thing to do, more than has been done, before the Lord comes. O my dear brethren, let us lift up our heads and rejoice, for we know that our redemption draweth nigh. I do feel to praise God for the light that shines from his blessed word, and his goodness to me in giving me so good a measure of health as I now enjoy.

My dear brethren, take courage, and strive to obey God in every thing that you do; and then you will be blest of God, and enjoy free salvation. My faith was never stronger in the coming of the Lord than at this time. I do believe beyond a doubt that I shall see Jesus before 1868 passes away, and be made like him; then all of my suffering will be over for ever and ever. Amen.

Well, brethren, keep your pens moving, for you do not know how much good you do in writing out your faith, and laying it before the dear saints of the Lord. Remember me in all of your prayers. I remain your brother in Christ,

BENJ. P. MANNING.

Goffstown, N. H.

From Bro. L. Boutell.

BRO. GRANT:—I have spent some time in Connecticut, with pleasure and profit, I hope, to those of like precious faith. At Hartford, I spent two Sundays. The meetings were well attended, and there seems to be an increasing interest to hear the word of our faith. It was really a luxury to be with them, and see the faces of those old veterans, who have been through the war, and are still looking for the dawn of peace; also to see new recruits coming in to fill up the ranks. This is soul-cheering. Blessings upon Hartford.

I think a special effort at Hartford would be productive of great good, and it seems to be demanded; either by conference or protracted meetings, as they see best. Hartford should be the place from which the light of our faith, with all its soul-reviving influences, and burning love, should go forth illuminating the whole state, turning the current into the right channel, dashing on with its healthful waters, refreshing all who might taste of its sparkling flood.

At either places, I found things in an encouraging state. I am now at Springfield, Mass. Here is truly a growing interest. The meetings are well attended, harmony and love seem to abound, and a strong desire prevails among them for a progressive movement, which drones are always opposed to. They have taken Music Hall, so as to accommodate the people who wish to hear our doctrine of the soon coming of the Lord, to give life, glory, immortality and rest to the toil-worn, waiting pilgrims. They are much interested about building a chapel for worship, and I think and hope it will be accomplished; the fever runs high, and where there is a will there is a way.

The principle is true, what a man soweth, that will he also reap. Prosperity to the church of the First-born, by an increase of her liberality and faith. So mote it be.

Springfield, Mass. L. BOUTELL.

From Bro. B. Taylor.

BRO. GRANT:—How cheering the hope of the gospel looks at the present time, as we see the kingdoms of earth struggling to deliver themselves from the judgments that God has pronounced upon them, but there is no deliverance. The word must be fulfilled to the letter, and will be. The very things that look like deliverance to the world are omens that the nations must fall, and then deliverance will come to the saints of God. While the child of faith looks upon these things, it leads him to cry mightily unto God for the uprising of the church in these last moments of time; and it does encourage the hearts of the faithful to see the hearts of the brethren and sisters warm with the zeal of godliness. This thing is seen in many places now, where only a short time ago the children's hearts were cold and indifferent as to the great work of God. Even in such an ungodly place as this, he has heard prayer, and not only heard, but really answered in such a way that we dare not doubt for a moment; for as I look around me in this little church, I see some that are willing to take upon them the vows that shall make them a peculiar people in the eyes of the world; and not only this, but what confidence it does give the believers to see those that once loved the house of prayer, but have left it for the things of the world, coming back and taking up the cross right where they left it, and getting ready for the ushering in of the kingdom of our Lord and Master. These things we have been permitted to see in this little church, and we feel to say, "Not unto us, but unto thy name be all the glory now and for ever."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable Dispatches.

Paris, Dec. 10. The departure of the French fleet of war vessels and transports for Vera Cruz is now said to be fixed for next week. The vessels are full manned and provisioned and are expected to reach their destination about the middle of January.

Florence, Dec. 10. Signor Fanelo has gone to Rome on a mission from the Italian government in place of M. Vegezze. The King will open the Italian Parliament on the 15th inst. His speech is awaited with great interest as he will probably speak of the evacuation of Rome and negotiations with the Pope.

Paris, Dec. 10. It is asserted that the object which the Empress of the French has in view in the projected journey to Rome, is to supplicate the Holy Father to be reconciled with Italy.

London, Dec. 10. The precautionary measures of the British government have been so well taken that the chances of Fenian success, or even of a serious rising in Ireland, look hopeless.

Paris, Dec. 10. Serious difficulty is apprehended in Rome after the withdrawal of the French troops. It is said preparations are making by the authorities to meet the worst.

Dec. 11—Noon. The evacuation of Rome, which has been in progress for several days past, will be virtually completed to-day.

Florence, Dec. 11—Evening. The Italian government has determined upon founding large navy yards in the newly acquired Province of Venetia, to be fitted with all the appliances for building and repairing vessels. The work is to be commenced immediately.

London, Dec. 11.—A quantity of arms intended for the use of the Fenians and all the fittings of a gunshop were seized to-day at Cardiff while on their way to Ireland.

The steamer Bolivar has been seized in the Medway on suspicion of being a Fenian cruiser. A large quantity of arms and ammunition and thirty tons of gunpowder were found on board the steamer.

Rome, Dec. 11. This morning the French troops evacuated the castle of St. Angelo. The French flag was run down and the Pontifical colors hoisted. The 29th regiment has left for France. The Pope will stay at Civita Vecchia ten days.

A sudden outbreak of the cholera in Rome has filled the inhabitants with consternation. People are leaving the city in every direction. Above one hundred cases a day are mentioned, and many strangers who had gone to Rome for the winter are being scared away.

London, Dec. 12—Evening. It is rumored here and on the Continent that the Emperor of Russia has proposed to the Great Powers that they hold a conference to take into consideration the position of the Christian subjects of the sublime Porte.

A most appalling explosion occurred in the colliery at Barnsley, in the county of York. The loss of life was frightful. The bodies of over three hundred have already been taken from the mine and many others are still unaccounted for.

Paris, Dec. 13. The Empress Eugenie has finally decided to visit the Pope at Rome.

London, Dec. 13. A London telegram to the Dublin Freeman's Journal says Stephens was hourly expected in London, if not already there, and detectives were on the alert for him.

A Paris letter gives a rumor that he had arrived there, having passed through London.

Barnsley, Dec. 13. Another explosion took place this morning, while the working party were finding and drawing out the dead. Eighty of the bodies had been brought out when the second explosion took place. Several officials and a number of volunteers were in the pit, and it is feared they have all perished.

A third explosion took place at Oaks' Colliery this morning. There is no longer any hope for those in the pit. They must all be dead. It is estimated that three hundred and fifty have lost their lives by this terrible catastrophe. The mine is now on fire and the flames have burst from the main shaft with great violence. The work of drawing out the bodies of the dead has been suspended and the mine is to be flooded with water. The cause of the accident will probably remain a perpetual mystery.

The excitement among the families in the town is intense and fearful, and the works and vicinity have been a scene of wailing and despair all day. A similar accident occurred some twenty years ago at the same pit, by which seventy-three lives were lost.

Hanley, Thursday night, Dec. 13. There was a fearful explosion at noon to-day at Fox-under-the-Hill, near this town, in a coal pit belonging to the North Staffordshire Coal and Iron Company. Two hundred men went into the mine this morning, of whom only thirteen have been taken out alive, and they are badly injured. The rest, it is believed are dead. Up to the present moment forty dead bodies have been brought out. The excitement among the inhabitants is intense.

London, Dec. 14.—The awful calamities in York and Stafford excite the most painful interest. A subscription has been opened at the Mayor's for the suffering families of the victims.

London, Dec. 14. The Times this morning, in an editorial, takes a hopeful view of troubles in Ireland, and thinks there will be no serious difficulty in quelling the Fenian rebellion with the civil force alone.

Paris, Dec. 14. Under the new organization the French army, with the usual reserves, will foot up about 1,250,000 men. It is expected that such a mighty standing army in time of peace will have no good effect. There is much misgiving to the project among thoughtful men in this city.

London, Dec. 14. Intelligence has been received from Japan which announces that the civil war which has been desolating that country has been suspended, a truce having been declared between the hostile factions.

Rome, Dec. 14. The anticipated troubles in this city consequent on the withdrawal of the French troops have not occurred. The city is tranquil. The idea that the Pope has any intention of leaving the Holy City is universally abandoned.

London, Dec. 14. It is rumored here that the temporal power of His Holiness the Pope has been severed by an agreement made between the Emperor Napoleon and King Victor Emanuel.

The Jesuits are openly preparing to depart from Rome.

In retaliation for the talk of certain leading Paris papers about the downfall of the Pope, the Unita Catholica of Rome has a few words to say of the fall of the second Napoleonic Empire. It says:

"Napoleon the Third has fallen back; he is lost. He has retreated from Poland from fear of Russia; he has retreated from Germany from fear of the needle-gun; he has retreated from Mexico from fear of the United States; he has retreated from Rome from fear of Orsini and Mazzini."

DOMESTIC.

New York, Dec. 11. The World has the following special:

Mobile, Dec. 10. Col. John Fisher, formerly an officer in the Mexican army, under Comonfort and Juarez, and recently in the Confederate service, arrived in this city on the 9th inst., having left the city of Mexico on the 19th ult. and Vera Cruz on the 4th inst. He says a deputation, consisting of clergy and distinguished men and citizens, went from the City of Mexico to Orizaba to meet the Emperor. They were received by him, and the result of the interview was to induce him to change his plans and adhere to the country. The clergy promised to contribute $15,000,000, and wealthy citizens and capitalists pledged themselves for a like amount. Maximilian returned to the Capital, and there will be no interference with his movements by the French.

Measures will be immediately taken for reorganizing the army against Juarez and other Liberals. Gen. Marquis has been ordered to the command of the Department of Puebla, Gen. Miramon to that of Guanajuato, and Gen. Mejia to that of San Luis Potosi, embracing the whole section of country now occupied by the Liberal forces. He also says that it was believed the arrangements for the withdrawal of the French troops were entirely revoked and abandoned, and that the Emperor would be sustained by France.

New York, Dec. 12. The steamer Eagle, from Havana 8th inst., has arrived.

The steamer Eider, from Vera Cruz 6th inst., had arrived at Havana. She brings intelligence that Maximilian had decided not to surrender the Empire, and that a proclamation communicating said fact had appeared.

The Herald's Dublin correspondent chronicles the serious aspect which the Fenian agitation maintained in Ireland on the 28th ult. The English government offers a reward of £5000 sterling for the body of James Stephens, dead or alive.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Times writes: "The public does not need assistance to seize the salient points which will receive the attention of Congress at the present session. These are already plainly indicated. They may be classed in three features, viz: 1. Restriction of the President's power of appointment and removal. 2. Changing the sessions of Congress so as to render them more frequent, and consequently cover a greater period of time in each term. 3. Official investigation into the conduct of the President since he took the oath of office as Vice President. So much has been positively determined on, and bills or resolutions to accomplish these results are already before Congress."

Dedication at Concord, N. H.

Providence permitting, the new chapel lately erected on Washington street will be dedicated to the worship of God on Wednesday, December 19th, meeting to commence at 1½ o'clock, and continue through the week, and over the following Sabbath. Brn. H. L. Hastings and H. Pratt, with others, are to attend. Preaching brethren, are cordially invited, also brethren and sisters in the vicinity and elsewhere.

In connection with the above notice, we would say, that our place of worship is free for all the called of the Lord to come and clear their skirts from the blood of souls, by declaring "all the counsel of God." We offer free seats, and invite all, especially the poor, to come and hear the gospel, without money and without price. In this move, we have no disposition to sever, either in heart or in hand, from those who think differently, or build up a separate interest; but, as the earnest prayer of our Savior was that his people might be one, so we desire to be united with all who love him in sincerity. We hope, by the wisdom and grace which may be given us, to conduct this meeting upon gospel principles.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 566. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness, if less than 26 weeks, we charge five cents; if more than 26 weeks, six cents. From the product (which will be a fraction over the annual indebtedness) deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. E. Smith.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—At the request of many of you, I will drop you a few lines to let you know of our blessed work. I have just returned from a short visit among the white churches of our brethren, of the same blessed hope. The first place I stopped was at Worcester, Mass., to fulfill two appoints, according to my promise made at Wilbraham campmeeting. I left home sick, and worn out, from such constant labor, since the first of May last, and felt very sorry that I was so unfit for the work that was before me. But knowing that my heavenly Father was acquainted with all my weariness and sickness, I, as usual, had to fall on our Lord, who is able to help sick folks, as well as those who are not sick. However, the first Sabbath, I found it up-hill work; it being the first visit among the Advent churches. I knew that I could not tell them any thing that they did not know; so I thought it was best to direct my discourse to those present who were not in the habit of coming to the Advent church, but came out of curiosity to hear a woman preach. Notwithstanding my nerving every effort, I could not get liberty. I had meetings all the week. On Thursday, we had fasting, and at 12 o'clock M. we had covenant prayer. In the evening, the spell broke, and every body had liberty, "sweet liberty."

On Friday evening, I related my experience in reference to my conversion. Truly the Lord was with us. On Sunday, I had free liberty, and a good time talking for Jesus. Many outsiders were convinced of the truth of our blessed hope. May the Lord keep them faithful till he comes in his kingdom.

After preaching in the evening, we had an experience meeting—a most blessed time, after which three brethren were impressed to have a season of prayer. We gave an invitation for all those that were seeking, or wished to seek Jesus, to come forward; and to our great joy, twenty-five earnest souls came forward and bowed at the feet of Jesus. Praise the Lord. He can work in his own way, and none can hinder him.

On Monday morning, I had to leave the dear ones, and go further. How sorry I was to part. I felt if I could only stay a while, there would be many who would be brought to Christ; but it was impossible for me to stay longer. I had other appointments to fill. May the Lord bless and save the church when he comes. Really, I felt it hard to part with those dear ones; especially those who had just given their hearts to the Lord. But such is life. As soon as we become acquainted, and our hearts become knit together, we have to part. The friends were very kind to me and my mission work, and gave to my poor destitute ones at home the following amounts: Sunday evening, a sister gave a $10 bill, folded up so small that I did not think it was more than a 50 cent stamp; but when I went to my room to prepare for retiring, I looked, and to my eager eye what pleasure it gave me to find that instead of 50 cents, it was $10. I could scarcely wait until morning, so that I might write to Sister Boid, and send it to her, that she might relieve the suffering poor; for I knew when I left home that they were suffering for the necessaries of life. So I sent it post haste, and received an answer from Sr. Boid, stating what she had done with it; also, how thankful those poor souls were for it.

At as early a period as possible, I inquired after the lady, but did not succeed in finding her out until I told the congregation what good it had done, and that I would be glad to know the lady who gave it. So she arose and owned up that she was doing what her Savior told her, in not letting her right hand know what her left hand did.

When I went back to the place where I was staying, and read the letter to the family, the Lord blessed it to the hearts of those that were present. When I got through with it, a dear little girl, eight years old, came and gave me $5. I said to her, What is this for? Her reply was, Give it to the poor. Then her sister, fifteen years old, gave me $5 more. They both did it with a good will. How much good it did seem to do them. I asked what this all meant. Their father told me that they had had their [illegible] they thought they would draw it all out and divide it between Bro. Hastings, Bro. Burbank, and Sr. Anna E. Smith. God bless the little ones.

Next morning, I sent $10 more to Sr. Boid. If I only had time to write all that has been said, and all the prayers that have gone up on high in behalf of those that gave the money, they would feel already paid; but I have not time to write it. It is recorded on high.

I received from Sr. R. $15, from two little girls $15, a sister $5, a brother $1, a sister B. $2, Sister S. $3, and Sister R. $26; and the morning I left, I received from mother Otis $17 more. From R. I. and East Conn. quarterly conference, $10. Lewis Ingalls, Abington, $1; Rufus Pike, $5; from Worcester, $1; making in all $75, and three barrels of clothing, together with a lot of bonnets. Praise the Lord. He is as good as his word. So I will trust him all the way through. When I reached home, O such bright eyes and such glad hearts, you never did see. They had prayed for me all the way. We have distributed nearly all the clothing. We have had a busy time.

I called on a family in a rear basement, which had come from Washington, and had been here four months. There were the parents and four children, in a most destitute condition. They had no chairs, carpet, or bed of any kind. There was nothing in the room but a little stove, a trunk, and an old table. They had no fire, and no money to get any. I asked one of the little children if they had had any thing to eat to-day? She replied, No. The mother was out washing. So I went to the store and bought them some bread, and something for their suppers. I bought three loaves of bread, and cut one up among the children; and if you had seen those poor, almost starved children eat their bread and sausage, you could not have stayed the tears. But I had no time to cry, and I hastened on to visit more of the same sort. I expect when the mother came home she thought an angel had been there. I also gave away the things that were in one barrel. There were twenty-five pocket handkerchiefs for our Sunday school scholars. They were needed very much. I would like to have one hundred more. They were made out of an old sheet, nicely hemmed and ironed. Has any body else one for the some purpose?

O my dear friends and readers of the Crisis, there are a thousand things I would like to tell you, but my time is limited, and my letter is too long already. By the way, I have received several letters asking me where Hackensack is. It is some twenty miles from New York, in the State of New Jersey, a place where the people have thought thus far that colored people have no souls, and have acted accordingly. Our day and night school at this mission is doing well; and the white people are learning that the colored people can be educated. We have the foundation of our new mission house ready for the masons to go to work. All we want is the money to put up the shell and the roof on it, and then we shall start our protracted meeting, and do our uttermost to save souls before Jesus comes.

Yours in the highways and hedges,
ANNA E. SMITH.

New York, Nov. 30th, 1866.

From Bro. B. P. Manning.

BRO. GRANT:—As I have returned home from a visit of twenty-nine days, I thought I would like to drop a few lines to the dear children of the Lord, and let them know how the dear saints are getting along where I have traveled. I find in some places they are rather low in their minds at this time; but I found a good state of things in other places. Bless the Lord for all his goodness to the dear children that are scattered abroad. My prayer is, O Lord, wake up thy children to a sense of their duty, for it is high time to awake, for the great day of the Lord is very near, and souls are perishing for lack of knowledge. O my dear brethren, how few there are that will be saved when Jesus comes. I can not see anything to hinder the Lord's coming any day but "the sign of the Son of man in heaven," and I do not know but that it is in the past; for I am very sure the tribes of the earth are in mourning to-day. I can not see any thing to do, more than has been done, before the Lord comes. O my dear brethren, let us lift up our heads and rejoice, for we know that our redemption draweth nigh. I do feel to praise God for the light that shines from his blessed word, and his goodness to me in giving me so good a measure of health as I now enjoy.

My dear brethren, take courage, and strive to obey God in every thing that you do; and then you will be blest of God, and enjoy free salvation. My faith was never stronger in the coming of the Lord than at this time. I do believe beyond a doubt that I shall see Jesus before 1868 passes away, and be made like him; then all of my suffering will be over for ever and ever. Amen.

Well, brethren, keep your pens moving, for you do not know how much good you do in writing out your faith, and laying it before the dear saints of the Lord. Remember me in all of your prayers. I remain your brother in Christ,
BENJ. P. MANNING.

Goffstown, N. H.

From Bro. L. Boutell.

BRO. GRANT:—I have spent some time in Connecticut, with pleasure and profit, I hope, to those of like precious faith. At Hartford, I spent two Sundays. The meetings were well attended, and there seems to be an increasing interest to hear the word of our faith. It was really a luxury to be with them, and see the faces of those old veterans, who have been through the war, and are still looking for the dawn of peace; also to see new recruits coming in to fill up the ranks. This is soul-cheering. Blessings upon Hartford.

I think a special effort at Hartford would be productive of great good, and it seems to be demanded; either by conference or protracted meetings, as they see best. Hartford should be the place from which the light of our faith, with all its soul-reviving influences, and burning love, should go forth illuminating the whole state, turning the current into the right channel, dashing on with its healthful waters, refreshing all who might taste of its sparkling flood.

At either places, I found things in an encouraging state. I am now at Springfield, Mass. Here is truly a growing interest. The meetings are well attended, harmony and love seem to abound, and a strong desire prevails among them for a progressive movement, which drones are always opposed to. They have taken Music Hall, so as to accommodate the people who wish to hear our doctrine of the soon coming of the Lord, to give life, glory, immortality and rest to the toil-worn, waiting pilgrims. They are much interested about building a chapel for worship, and I think and hope it will be accomplished; the fever runs high, and where there is a will there is a way.

The principle is true, what a man soweth, that will he also reap. Prosperity to the church of the First-born, by an increase of her liberality and faith. So mote it be.

Springfield, Mass. L. BOUTELL.

From Bro. B. Taylor.

BRO. GRANT:—How cheering the hope of the gospel looks at the present time, as we see the kingdoms of earth struggling to deliver themselves from the judgments that God has pronounced upon them, but there is no deliverance. The word must be fulfilled to the letter, and will be. The very things that look like deliverance to the world are omens that the nations must fall, and then deliverance will come to the saints of God. While the child of faith looks upon these things, it leads him to cry mightily unto God for the uprising of the church in these last moments of time; and it does encourage the hearts of the faithful to see the hearts of the brethren and sisters warm with the zeal of godliness. This thing is seen in many places now, where only a short time ago the children's hearts were cold and indifferent as to the great work of God. Even in such an ungodly place as this, he has heard prayer, and not only heard, but really answered in such a way that we dare not doubt for a moment; for as I look around me in this little church, I see some that are willing to take upon them the vows that shall make them a peculiar people in the eyes of the world; and not only this, but what confidence it does give the believers to see those that once loved the house of prayer, but have left it for the things of the world, coming back and taking up the cross right where they left it, and getting ready for the ushering in of the kingdom of our Lord and Master. These things we have been permitted to see in this little church, and we feel to say, "Not unto us, but unto thy name be all the glory now and for ever."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable Dispatches.

Paris, Dec. 10. The departure of the French fleet of war vessels and transports for Vera Cruz is now said to be fixed for next week. The vessels are full manned and provisioned and are expected to reach their destination about the middle of January.

Florence, Dec. 10. Signor Fanelo has gone to Rome on a mission from the Italian government in place of M. Vegezze. The King will open the Italian Parliament on the 15th inst. His speech is awaited with great interest as he will probably speak of the evacuation of Rome and negotiations with the Pope.

Paris, Dec. 10. It is asserted that the object which the Empress of the French has in view in the projected journey to Rome, is to supplicate the Holy Father to be reconciled with Italy.

London, Dec. 10. The precautionary measures of the British government have been so well taken that the chances of Fenian success, or even of a serious rising in Ireland, look hopeless.

Paris, Dec. 10. Serious difficulty is apprehended in Rome after the withdrawal of the French troops. It is said preparations are making by the authorities to meet the worst.

Dec. 11—Noon. The evacuation of Rome, which has been in progress for several days past, will be virtually completed to-day.

Florence, Dec. 11—Evening. The Italian government has determined upon founding large navy yards in the newly acquired Province of Venetia, to be fitted with all the appliances for building and repairing vessels. The work is to be commenced immediately.

London, Dec. 11.—A quantity of arms intended for the use of the Fenians and all the fittings of a gunshop were seized to-day at Cardiff while on their way to Ireland.

The steamer Bolivar has been seized in the Medway on suspicion of being a Fenian cruiser. A large quantity of arms and ammunition and thirty tons of gunpowder were found on board the steamer.

Rome, Dec. 11. This morning the French troops evacuated the castle of St. Angelo. The French flag was run down and the Pontifical colors hoisted. The 29th regiment has left for France. The Pope will stay at Civita Vecchia ten days.

A sudden outbreak of the cholera in Rome has filled the inhabitants with consternation. People are leaving the city in every direction. Above one hundred cases a day are mentioned, and many strangers who had gone to Rome for the winter are being scared away.

London, Dec. 12—Evening. It is rumored here and on the Continent that the Emperor of Russia has proposed to the Great Powers that they hold a conference to take into consideration the position of the Christian subjects of the sublime Porte.

A most appalling explosion occurred in the colliery at Barnsley, in the county of York. The loss of life was frightful. The bodies of over three hundred have already been taken from the mine and many others are still unaccounted for.

Paris, Dec. 13. The Empress Eugenie has finally decided to visit the Pope at Rome.

London, Dec. 13. A London telegram to the Dublin Freeman's Journal says Stephens was hourly expected in London, if not already there, and detectives were on the alert for him.

A Paris letter gives a rumor that he had arrived there, having passed through London.

Barnsley, Dec. 13. Another explosion took place this morning, while the working party were finding and drawing out the dead. Eighty of the bodies had been brought out when the second explosion took place. Several officials and a number of volunteers were in the pit, and it is feared they have all perished.

A third explosion took place at Oaks' Colliery this morning. There is no longer any hope for those in the pit. They must all be dead. It is estimated that three hundred and fifty have lost their lives by this terrible catastrophe. The mine is now on fire and the flames have burst from the main shaft with great violence. The work of drawing out the bodies of the dead has been suspended and the mine is to be flooded with water. The cause of the accident will probably remain a perpetual mystery.

The excitement among the families in the town is intense and fearful, and the works and vicinity have been a scene of wailing and despair all day. A similar accident occurred some twenty years ago at the same pit, by which seventy-three lives were lost.

Hanley, Thursday night, Dec. 13. There was a fearful explosion at noon to-day at Fox-under-the-Hill, near this town, in a coal pit belonging to the North Staffordshire Coal and Iron Company. Two hundred men went into the mine this morning, of whom only thirteen have been taken out alive, and they are badly injured. The rest, it is believed are dead. Up to the present moment forty dead bodies have been brought out. The excitement among the inhabitants is intense.

London, Dec. 14.—The awful calamities in York and Stafford excite the most painful interest. A subscription has been opened at the Mayor's for the suffering families of the victims.

London, Dec. 14. The Times this morning in an editorial, takes a hopeful view of trouble in Ireland, and thinks there will be no serious difficulty in quelling the Fenian rebellion with the civil force alone.

Paris, Dec. 14. Under the new organization the French army, with the usual reserves, will foot up about 1,200,000 men. It is expected that such a mighty standing army in time of peace will have no good effect. There is much misgiving to the project among thoughtful men in this city.

London, Dec. 14. Intelligence has been received from Japan which announces that the civil war which has been desolating that country has been suspended, a truce having been declared between the hostile factions.

Rome, Dec. 14. The anticipated troubles in this city consequent on the withdrawal of the French troops have not occurred. The city is tranquil. The idea that the Pope has any intention of leaving the Holy City is universally abandoned.

London, Dec. 14. It is rumored here that the temporal power of His Holiness the Pope has been severed by an agreement made between the Emperor Napoleon and King Victor Emanuel.

The Jesuits are openly preparing to depart from Rome.

In retaliation for the talk of certain leading Paris papers about the downfall of the Pope, the Unita Catholica of Rome has a few words to say of the fall of the second Napoleonic Empire. It says:

"Napoleon the Third has fallen back; he is lost. He has retreated from Poland from fear of Russia; he has retreated from Germany from fear of the needle-gun; he has retreated from Mexico from fear of the United States; he has retreated from Rome from fear of Orsini and Mazzini."

DOMESTIC.

New York, Dec. 11. The World has the following special:

Mobile, Dec. 10. Col. John Fisher, formerly an officer in the Mexican army, under Comonfort and Juarez, and recently in the Confederate service, arrived in this city on the 9th inst., having left the city of Mexico on the 19th ult. and Vera Cruz on the 4th inst. He says a deputation, consisting of clergy and distinguished men and citizens, went from the City of Mexico to Orizaba to meet the Emperor. They were received by him, and the result of the interview was to induce him to change his plans and adhere to the country. The clergy promised to contribute $15,000,000, and wealthy citizens and capitalists pledged themselves for a like amount. Maximilian returned to the Capital, and there will be no interference with his movements by the French.

Measures will be immediately taken for reorganizing the army against Juarez and other Liberals. Gen. Marquiz has been ordered to the command of the Department of Puebla, Gen. Miramon to that of Guanajuato, and Gen. Mejia to that of San Luis Potosi, embracing the whole section of country now occupied by the Liberal forces. He also says that it was believed the arrangements for the withdrawal of the French troops were entirely revoked and abandoned, and that the Emperor would be sustained by France.

New York, Dec. 12. The steamer Eagle, from Havana 8th inst., has arrived.

The steamer Eider, from Vera Cruz 6th inst., had arrived at Havana. She brings intelligence that Maximilian had decided not to surrender the Empire, and that a proclamation communicating said fact had appeared.

The Herald's Dublin correspondent chronicles the serious aspect which the Fenian agitation maintained in Ireland on the 28th ult. The English government offers a reward of £5000 sterling for the body of James Stephens, dead or alive.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Times writes: "The public does not need assistance to seize the salient points which will receive the attention of Congress at the present session. These are already plainly indicated. They may be classed in three features, viz: 1. Restriction of the President's power of appointment and removal. 2. Changing the sessions of Congress so as to render them more frequent, and consequently cover a greater period of time in each term. 3. Official investigation into the conduct of the President since he took the oath of office as Vice President. So much has been positively determined on; and bills or resolutions to accomplish these results are already before Congress."

Dedication at Concord, N. H.

Providence permitting, the new chapel lately erected on Washington street will be dedicated to the worship of God on Wednesday, December 19th, meeting to commence at 1½ o'clock, and continue through the week, and over the following Sabbath. Brn. H. L. Hastings and H. Pratt, with others, are to attend. Preaching brethren, are cordially invited, also brethren and sisters in the vicinity and elsewhere.

In connection with the above notice, we would say, that our place of worship is free for all the called of the Lord to come and clear their skirts from the blood of souls, by declaring "all the counsel of God." We offer free seats, and invite all, especially the poor, to come and hear the gospel, without money and without price. In this move, we have no disposition to sever, either in heart or in hand, from those who think differently, or build up a separate interest; but, as the earnest prayer of our Savior was that his people might be one, so we desire to be united with all who love him in sincerity. We hope, by the wisdom and grace which may be given us, to conduct this meeting upon gospel principles.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your accounts stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 606. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness, if less than 26 weeks, charge five cents; if more than 26 weeks, six cents. From the product (which will be a fraction over the actual indebtedness) deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

I LOVE JESUS.

TUNE.—Song of Deliverance.

BRO. GRANT:—The following lines were composed by Bro. O. C. Cunningham, of Concord, N. H. It is the first from his pen; but thinking it might comfort some of the children of God, I take the liberty to send it for publication, if you think proper.

O, how I love my Jesus,
Who's bought my liberty,
And paid a heavy ransom,
And now I know I'm free.
CHO.—"Palms of victory, crown of glory,
Palms of victory we shall bear."

He saw me bound by Satan,
With chains of dreadful power;
But mighty to deliver me,
He bid me sin no more.

He found me pressed with poverty,—
How wretched was my state;
Till my dear Jesus raised me
To a heavenly state.

O, how I love dear Jesus,
He's better far than gold;
Houses, land and brethren,—
More than a hundred fold.

He never forsakes in danger,
Though many foes are near;
His mighty arm supports me,
So I'll never, never fear.

I oft have been so sinful,
And grieved my dearest friend;
But yet he freely pardons,
And loves me to the end.

O may I be like Jesus,
With spirit just and true,
And faith that will not falter,
To keep the prize in view.

We soon shall see fair Canaan,
Embrace our heart's desire,
And rise amid the ransomed
To join the heavenly choir.

Then let us run with patience,
Nor wish our trials less;
Till, standing on Mount Zion,
We shall all things possess.

The glory there unfading
Shall deck the immortal brow;
And reigning with our Savior,
We'll never sorrow know.

For the World's Crisis.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL.

Doctors of divinity puzzled, not understanding the Scriptures, nor the power of God—ignorant of our faith and hope—glimmerings of light.

During the session of the "Massachusetts General Conference," held at Northampton with the "First Congregational Church," Rev. Zachary Eddy, D. D., pastor, Sept. 11th, 12th, and 13th, Rev. Dr. Hopkins, President of "William College," read, by appointment, an essay on "The Outpouring of the Spirit in the Latter Days." The reading of this essay was followed by a spirited discussion, in which Rev. J. P. Cleveland, D. D., Rev. E. Marvin, D. D., Rev. Zachary Eddy, D. D., Rev. A. P. Marvin, Rev. G. M. Wellman, President Stearns, Rev. E. P. Perkins, Rev. C. L. Woodworth, Rev. Geo. Trask, and Rev. A. C. Thompson, D. D., took part.

The main points of the essay which we shall notice, and which were made the subject of discussion, were the following:

1. AS TO THE HOLY SPIRIT.

"Christ having ascended, the way was prepared for the descent of the Spirit, and from that time till this the Spirit has been abroad in the earth, not in his miraculous agency, which is incidental and temporary, but as the author of revivals of religion, of individual conversions, and of the sanctifying agency which is indispensable to the upbuilding of the kingdom of God."

"There are at the present time remarkable providential preparations, such as have never been known or approximated before for a rapid diffusion of truth, and so for bringing all men, through the truth and by the power of the Spirit, into sympathy with each other, and into subjection to the will of God. Many passages of Scripture favor this view; and according to it, the pouring out of the Spirit in the latter days is yet to come, and is to result in universal peace and righteousness."

From the concluding statements, beginning with the remark that "all men, through the truth and by the power of the Spirit," we must dissent, and we can not find the "many passages" which "favor this view."

The prophecy of Joel (chap. 2: 28–32), had its special fulfillment in the beginning of the present dispensation, and includes the gospel day, as is evidently explained by the apostle Peter: "This is that which was spoken of by the prophet Joel," etc. Acts 2: 14–21. It will not do, therefore, to refer to that prophecy in proof of a future "pouring out of the Spirit in the latter days, yet to come," when an inspired apostle has declared its fulfillment in an especial degree on "the day of Pentecost," and the days following. We could have wished that Dr. Hopkins had cited us to the "many passages" to which he refers.

In discussing the essay, Dr. Cleveland remarked: "As the result of much investigation, he fully believed in great events prior to the final display of the Holy Spirit." We should have been thankful, exceedingly, if Dr. Cleveland had given us some scriptures as the foundation for his belief in "the final display of the Holy Spirit." Especially since Dr. Marvin, who followed him, said that "the general views brought out in the essay were those generally held, and that the world is to be subdued to Christ by the power of truth, as administered by the Spirit." For such a faith and general expectancy and hope, the Scriptures should not be wanting certainly.

The inquiry of Dr. Wellman was right to the point: "Are we encouraged by the history of the past to rely upon the Holy Spirit for the final triumph of the gospel?" That is the point. Are we? The marvellous and even miraculous power and effusion of the Holy Spirit on "the day of Pentecost," and the days following, during the preaching of Christ's chosen apostles, "God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Spirit, according to his own will" (Heb. 2: 4), failed in the conversion of the world which is anticipated; and certainly no outpouring of the Spirit since has been followed by any such results, nor in any measure exceeded that age of miracles and wonders."

What can we hope for, then, in the future, or how be "encouraged by the history of the past" to look "for the final triumph of the gospel" in "the conversion of all men to God"? "God visits" the Gentile world in his gospel "to take out of them a people for his name."—Acts 15: 14. And we conceive that the "final triumph of the gospel" will be fully accomplished when "all that believe" are saved; and sing the "new song, saying, Thou art worthy; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."—Rev. 5: 9. If this falls of accomplishment, then will the gospel prove a failure, and of a "final triumph" [illegible] but not until then.

Another inquiry [illegible]

asked by this divine: "Is Christ to come before, or after the millennium? is he to introduce a new dispensation; or is his kingdom to triumph under the dispensation of the Holy Spirit?"

Ah! that's the question. When that is determined according to the Scriptures, and not the theories, and opinions, and traditions of men, the future in promise and prophecy will be understood by these "guides." The doctor's faith, however, was that "the cause of Christ was to triumph under this dispensation." But how can this be the case with the teaching of the Master to the contrary? "The wheat and tares grow together until the harvest." "The harvest is the end of the world." Matt. 13: 24–43. And also the teaching of Christ's apostle? "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived."—2 Tim. 3: 13. Martin Luther reiterated the same sentiment against the modern fable of a world's conversion: "The older the world, the worse."

2. AS TO THE COMING OF CHRIST.

"The question turns upon the relative agency of the Son and Spirit in this great work. In the opinions of many, not the Spirit, but Christ's coming personally, is the chief agent in the restoration of the world." To this the essayest objects thus: "A suspension of the dispensation of the Spirit, at or near the present point, must fail to bring to Him due honor in that one great work which we know is to be accomplished."—(Essay.)

From the statement of Dr. Hopkins, it is apparent that our faith and hope are not understood by him. If these were better understood by the church at large, we have reason to believe that their views would undergo a great change relative to the future, and the wide divergence that now exists between us would greatly lessen, if not altogether cease. And may it not be that as Adventists we have been in a measure remiss in duty in not making more plain the clearly revealed fact that both Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit are the great agents in the work of reconstruction; and that both will be present and employed "in the times" and work of restitution? We will therefore observe, that in the scripture, Acts 3: 19–21, the apostle alludes to another "times of refreshing" still future, in view of which he urges men to "repent and be converted"; manifestly that they might be prepared to share in, and be participators of the blessings of those "times."

But mark! those "times of refreshing" are not to occur in time. They take place at the epoch of the return of "Jesus Christ," and in "the times of restitution." We quote the passage entire:—"Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heaven must receive (retain) until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets, since the world began."—Acts 3: 19–21.

From this passage we are not taught to look in time—during the gospel dispensation, for "an augmented influence of the Holy Spirit," under whose "agency the world will be converted to God," as maintained by spiritual millennialists. The convicted sinners in the beginning of the gospel day were exhorted to "repent and be converted," in prospect of the glorious "refreshing," yet future, to occur at the second coming of the Messiah, and in "the times of restitution of all things." Surely, it could not be expected that those converted sinners would survive and live in mortality to witness that day, and share in its glories and blessings! By a resurrection to life "at the last day," could they possibly participate in the glories of those coming "times"?

We believe in a future outpouring of the Holy Spirit eclipsing the day of Pentecost; but not until "God shall send Jesus Christ," or not until "the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken."

However, the work of the Holy Spirit, then to be effected, is far different from that of the conversion of men from sin to holiness, or a moral change produced in the hearts of men. It is one, co-operative with Christ, of reconstruction, and rebeautifying the material heavens and earth, and of "our vile bodies," or "bodies of humiliation."

The following scriptures we cite in proof of the above view, and in confirmation of St. Peter's statement: "If the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." . . . For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. . . . The creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now; and not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body." Rom. 8: 11–23. The time of this work of the Spirit is at the personal advent of Jesus Christ, and "at the resurrection of the just." John 5: 28, 29; 6: 39; 40: 54; 2 Thess. 4: 16–18.

The Lord by the prophet Isaiah declares: "When ye see this, your heart shall rejoice, and your bones shall flourish like an herb." Read Isa. 66: 14; 5: 16–22. And by the prophet Ezekiel he says, "They say our bones are dried, and our hope is lost; but thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and shall put MY SPIRIT in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land."—Ezek. 37: 11–14. According to the inspired interpretation of St. Paul, this was "the hope" of the "twelve tribes" of Israel, and of course, as God says by Ezekiel, of "the whole house of Israel."—Acts 26: 6–8; 24: 14, 15.

A beautiful and appropriate prophecy is the following: "Upon the land of my people shall come up thorns and briers, until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest. Then judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field. And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever." Isa. 32: 15–18. O. R. FASSETT.

For the World's Crisis.

LOOK TO JESUS.

If we would keep our feet in the narrow way, avoiding the traps and snares of Satan, rise above discouragements, disappointments, and the petty trials of every day, we must look to Jesus. If we want our mind at peace with God, at peace with ourselves, let us keep it stayed on him, for "thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee."

Much of the discouragements, backslidings, and slow growth in grace in young christians arises, we think, from a habit of looking too much within themselves—watching their own feelings and frames of mind; their faith in God varying with every fit of feeling.

It is when faith is weak that we are ever prone to look at self; but we find nothing to encourage us there; there is no good thing in us, but a continual proneness to sin. Even when we would do good, evil is present with us. Good acts, kind words, and noble deeds, all of these are too often prompted by selfish, sinful motives.

The more we examine our own heart, the more are we convinced of its deceitfulness, its exceeding sinfulness in the sight of God; and the result of every effort, put forth in our own strength, to make it better, but proves how vain the attempt. Jesus alone is able to cleanse us from sin; then let us look to him. Indeed, if we have given our hearts to Jesus, what more have we to do with self. Jesus has bought us, paid the price in blood, and we are his, to be moulded as it pleases him. His the task (not ours) to purify and make us perfect. As a child of God, we have nothing more to do, but as clay in the hands of the potter, be submissive, ready to suffer all his will; willing to be just what it please him to have us be, a vessel unto honor or dishonor, and to do as the Holy Spirit bids us.

Lord, help us to look to thee, and we shall not see how great the work to do in this vile heart of ours, nor know how much pain there is to bear, but looking unto thee, thou wilt give us grace to endure all that thy loving heart sees needful to inflict.

Peter had no difficulty in walking on the water until he saw the winds and waves boisterous; then he began to sink, and cried, Lord, save me. If he had kept his eye on Jesus, he would not have seen the roughness of the sea, nor doubted God's power to make the water bear him up; but taking the eye from Jesus, to view the difficulties in the way, man loses sight of faith, and measures the strength of the Almighty by that of his own puny arm. Lord, help us to look to thee.

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

A PERSUASIVE TO CONTENTMENT.

It exhorts us to labor for contentment; this is that which doth beautify and bespangle a christian; and, as a spiritual embroidery, doth set him off in the eyes of the world.

But methinks I hear some bitterly complaining, and saying to me,—"Alas! how is it possible to be contented! the Lord hath made my chain heavy (Lam. 3: 7), he hath cast me into a very sad condition."

There is no sin but labors either to hide itself under some mask; or, if it cannot be concealed, then to vindicate itself by some apology. This sin of discontent I find very witty in its apologies; which I shall first discover, and then make a reply. We must lay it down for a rule, that discontent is a sin; so that all the pretences and apologies wherewith it labors to justify itself, are but the production of Satan's temptations.

The first apology which discontent makes is this,—"I have lost a child." Paulina, upon the loss of her children, was so possessed with a spirit of sadness, that she had like to have entombed herself in her own discontent. Our love to relations is oftentimes more than our love to religion.

1. We must be content not only when God gives mercies, but when he taketh them away. If we must in everything give thanks (1 Thes 5: 18), then in nothing be discontented.

2. Perhaps God has taken away the cistern, that he may give you the more of the spring; he hath darkened the star-light, that you may have more sun-light. God intends you shall have more of himself; and is not he better that ten sons? Look not so much upon a temporal loss, as a spiritual gain: the comforts of the world run dregs; but those which come out of the granary of the Promise are purer and sweeter.

3. Your child was not given, but lent. I have, said Hannah, lent my son to the Lord. 1 Sam. 1: 28. She lent him! The Lord had but lent him to her. Mercies are not entailed upon us, but lent: what a man lends he may call for again when he pleases.—God hath put out a child to thee awhile to nurse; wilt thou be displeased if he takes his child home again? O be not discontented that a mercy is taken away from you, but rather be thankful that it was lent you so long.

4. Suppose your child was taken from you, either he was good or bad. If he was rebellious, you have not so much parted with a child as a burden; you grieve for that which might have been a greater grief to you. If he was religious, then remember, he is taken from the evil to come (Isa. 57: 1), and placed in his centre of felicity. This lower region being full of gross and hurtful vapors, how happy are those who are mounted into the celestial orbs! The righteous is taken away—in the original it is, he is gathered; a wicked child dying is cut off, but the pious child is gathered. Even as we see men gather flowers, and candy them, and preserve them by them; so hath God gathered thy child as a sweet flower, that he may candy it with glory, and preserve it by him for ever. Why, then, should a christian be discontented? Why should he weep excessively? Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me; but weep for yourselves.—Luke 23: 28. O Christian! be not discontented that thou hast parted with such a child, but rather rejoice that thou hadst such a child to part with; break forth into thankfulness. What an honor is it to a parent to beget such a child, that while he lives increaseth the joy of the glorified angels, and when he dies, increaseth the number of the glorified saints!—Luke 15: 10.

5. If God hath taken away one of your children, he hath left you more; he might have stripped you of all. He took away all Job's comforts, his estate, his children; and, indeed, his wife was left but as a cross. Satan made a bow of this rib, as Chrysostom speaks, and shot a temptation by her at Job, thinking to have shot him to the heart. Curse God, and die, said she.—Job 2: 9. But Job had upon him the breastplate of integrity; and, though his children were taken away, yet not his graces; still he is content, still he blessed God. O, think how many mercies you still enjoy! Yet our base hearts are more discontented at one loss, than thankful for a hundred mercies.

God hath plucked one bunch of grapes from you; but how many precious clusters are left behind?

"But it was my only child, the staff of my age, the seed of my comfort, and the only blossom out of which the honor of an ancient family did grow."

1. God hath promised you—if you belong to him—a name better than of sons and daughters.—Isa. 56: 5. Is he dead that should have been the monument to have kept up the name of a family? God hath given you a new name; he hath written your name in the book of life. Behold your spiritual heraldry; here is a name which cannot be cut off.

2. Hath God taken away thy only child? He hath given thee his only Son; this is a happy exchange. What needs he complain of losses, that hath Christ? He is the Father's brightness (Heb. 1: 3), his riches (Col. 2: 9), his delight (Psa. 45: 1). Is there enough in Christ to delight the heart of God? and is there not enough in him to ravish us with holy delight? He is wisdom to teach us, righteousness to acquit us, sanctification to adorn us; he is that royal and princely gift; he is the bread of angels (Psa. 78: 25), the joy and triumph of saints; he is all in all. Why, then, art thou discontented? Though thy child be lost, yet thou hast Him for whom all things are loss.

3. And lastly, let us blush to think that nature should seem to outstrip grace. Pulvillus, a heathen, when he was about to consecrate a temple to Jupiter, and news was brought to him of the death of his son, would not desist from his enterprise; but with much composure of mind, gave orders for a decent burial.

THERE IS A HEAVENLY LAND.

There is a heavenly land where all the angels stand,
Looking over, over from the bright golden strand;
They beckon to the saints, from Canaan's happy shore—
"Be ready, be ready, the Savior's at the door."

I see their golden wings, and hear their heavenly song,
They cast their golden crowns, (amid the happy throng)
To King Immanuel; and lowly bend the knee
With all the happy throng, the happy throng so free.
CHO.—There is a heavenly land, etc.

Come, join our happy band, and gain the heavenly land,
Where tears are wiped away, and sorrows have an end;
Jerusalem you'll see, her streets of solid gold,
Her gates of shining pearl, so glorious to behold.
CHO.—There is a heavenly land, etc.

Come along, poor sinner, O with us come along,
And mortify your pride, and turn from every wrong;
The gospel sound obey, and you'll escape the fire,
And sing the heavenly song, and join the heavenly choir.
CHO.—There is a heavenly land, etc.

Believe in Jesus Christ, the loving Son of God,
Be humble and devout, and ever kiss the rod;
Be faithful to your vows, and wrestle at the throne
As Jacob did of old, who prevailed all alone.
CHO.—There is a heavenly land, etc.

Jesus will receive you, and wash your garments white,
A harp of gold he'll give, the crown of life so bright;
For ever freed from sin, from trouble and from strife,
Unfading joys in heaven, and everlasting life.
CHO.—There is a heavenly land, etc.

A GOOD NAME.

Always be more solicitous to preserve your innocence, than concerned to prove it. It will never do to seek a good name as a primary object. Like trying to be graceful, the effort to be popular will make you contemptible. Take care of your spirit and conduct, and your reputation will take care of itself. The utmost that you are called to do, as the guardian of your reputation, is to remove injurious aspersions. Let not your good be evil spoken of, and follow the highest examples in mild and explicit self-indication. No reputation can be permanent, which does not spring from principle; and he who would maintain a good character, should be mainly solicitous to maintain a "conscience void of offence toward God and toward man." THE "HOME," MONEY, ETC.

A letter was received from a brother in Christ yesterday, which has led me to write this article. He wishes to know what has become of the money that was sent for the Home. An article appeared in the Crisis of last week, from the pen of Bro. Charles Goodrich, in which he stated, concerning Sr. Anna E. Smith's mission, of New York,—"She supports herself and family by her own efforts, independent of all her mission work. Other missionaries have to first support themselves out of the donations they receive, and then the balance goes to sustain their mission." The italics are mine.

Probably that article was not written with either the knowledge or consent of Sister S., for there are several mistakes in it, which she would not let go before the public knowingly. But it is not my business to correct them. Neither do I accuse Bro. Goodrich of wilfully misrepresenting facts, nor do I wish to injure either party, but I write to relieve the anxiety of a few. It was originally my purpose to pay no attention to any misstatements that might be made, but the letter that I have referred to stirred me to write.

It is a fact that I have not supported myself out of funds that have been sent for the Home, or other missionary work. The brethren in Philadelphia have clothed me, and given me the means to pay my board, so that I have not lived upon the mission funds at all. I have also had money sent from various quarters for my personal use, and so stated in the letters which I have received.

I have received in all, toward the "Home," $1150.00. One brother, who had given $100.00 toward the object, wished it to be withdrawn and given to the poor at once. This was done, leaving a balance of $1050.00 in the Home fund. $50.00 of that money have been spent for the children under my care, during the last nine months. There were three boys and three girls, being an average of $8.30 apiece. I think no one will complain of that. Then $1000.00 was left for the Home.

A description of how the Home has been obtained has already been sent to the Crisis. The following expenditures have been made toward furnishing the house, etc.:

Paid for whitewashing seven rooms, walls and ceiling, some done over twice, some of the rooms quite large, $24.00. Paid for house cleaning, scouring paint, floors, closets, windows, etc., etc., $8.00. Paid expressman for moving things into the Home, $6.00; lumber for coal and chip bin, $8.50; 12 tons of coal at $7.60 per ton, $91.00; 75 sheets, 4 feet wide and over 2 yards long, at 75 cents apiece, $56.25; 13 iron bedsteads, at $5.50 apiece, $71.50; iron bedstead for matron's room, $7.00; 12 husk mattresses at $4.25 apiece, $51.00; 1 husk mattress, $4.00; 1 husk mattress lined on one side with hair, for matron's room, $8.00. The 12 bedsteads are 36 inches wide and 6 feet long; the one for the matron's room is the same length, but 4 feet wide. The other is 30 inches wide. 13 bedspreads at $1.00 each, $13.00. 6 pieces of English calico for children's Sunday dresses, at 21 cts. per yard, 182 yards in all, $38,22; 1 piece of unbleached cotton cloth (English upland cotton), to line the waists of the dresses to make them warm, in all 36 yards, at 25 cents per yard, $9.00; 3 dozen knives and forks, at $1.33⅓ per dozen, $4.00; 4 large blank books and two small ones to keep the records of the mission work in, $7.60; 175 pieces of crockery, $40.66; 5 doz. iron spoons, large and small, $2.34; 3 largest sized tubs, at $2.00 each, $6.00; 2 medium sized, at $1.75, $3.50; 1 smaller one, $1.50; 4 clothes lines, at 25 cts. each, $1.00; 2 washboards, 90 cts. for the two; 12 doz. clothespins, at [illegible] cts. per dozen, 36 cts; 12 pillows for bed, at 62½ cts., $7.50; saw, 75 cts.; screw driver, 35 cts.; hatchet, 75 cts; 2 ft. rule, 25 cts; tack hammer, 20 cts.; claw hammer, —; chisel, 25 cts.; 4 lbs. nails, 32 cts; 16 door-knobs, $1.08; 1 coal shovel, $1.25; matting for reception room, $11.00; dust pan and brush, 35 and 60 cts.; 2 scrubbing brushes, 50 cts. each, $1.00; 2 water buckets, 37½ cts. each, 75 cts.; broom 45 cts.; soap 50 cts.; soda 30 cts; kindling wood $2.50; 2 papers of tacks, 16; 200 stamped envelopes, $4.96; 1 bag of salt 25 cts.; 1 coal hod $1.25; 2 coal hods, 87½ cts. each, $1.75; lantern 1.50; tin can 25 cts. These things amount to $503.27, leaving a balance of $496.73. Out of this sum that remains I have to pay for tin-roofing the cook room, a building 9 by 14 feet, $15.00, just the cost of the materials. I must have a new top to the cooking stove, the range is being overhauled, a stove is to be bought for the matron's room, and stove pipe entire for the matron's, cooking, and school-room stoves. Then I have to buy a lot of second-hand chairs, tables, and bureaus. Also to buy materials for under garments for girls, and for night dresses. I have also bought a sewing-machine at $60.00, to do most of the great amount of sewing that will have to be done for the children connected with the Home and the mission generally. Taking out the bill for the sewing-machine, it leaves us $436.00 to buy what I have already noticed that we must have, also tin and wooden ware, repairing glass in the house, getting plain curtains for the windows. Then we must lay in a stock of provisions. Shoes and stockings are also to be purchased for the children.

Other pieces that I have written give further information. I have tried to do the best that can be done. Many of the things have been purchased at wholesale prices, and near the first cost. Every thing will be done that can be done for the colored children under our care.

I wish to have no other mission neglected for this. Let every brother and sister do as the Lord directs. The Lord has sent me into this field to do his work. I expect trials, hardships, temptations, backbitings, jealousies, slanders, and the like. Christ suffered from all these, and more; and if he who was harmless and undefiled so suffered, what better treatment can I, the chief of sinners, expect. Yet I have a multitude of friends, from Maine to Kansas. Encouraging letters come from all quarters. My begging is done at the throne of grace. The matter of giving lies between the Lord and his people. I have confidence in the Almighty. He will provide. My cares are many, but his grace is sufficient. Yours, etc., in the highways and hedges, FRANCIS H. BURBANK.

DON'T YOU DO IT!

And do you not be so simple as to allow any body to persuade you to do it; if you do you will rue it, wish you had not done it, and try speedily to have it undone, or "done back again": i. e., do not go and move your stoves in your meeting-house from the door up to the pulpit. WE did have ours transferred; and after having tried it, we would be willing to give the man that had it done more than what the pipe came to, if he or any one else would only move them half way back again. Men are always prone to go to extremes, and this stove movement is after "that sort." In those houses we have seen, the stoves were placed about midway from the door to the desk, and they certainly gave the most agreeable temperature to the whole room of any stove arrangement that we have ever seen.

But, what is of vastly more importance, is to have the sexton (and if you have not got one, make one at once, or else act in that capacity yourself) light the fires (in cold weather) from two to three hours before meeting time, and then the entire room can be equalized in temperature, all be comfortable, and nobody freeze or roast.

HELPING THE PREACHER.

Dr. Beecher once said to an old lady, who had expressed her wonder to him that she was permitted to live, as she could not do any more good, "You are doing a great deal of good; you help me to preach every Sunday." She was greatly surprised, and inquired how it could be. "In the first place," said he, "you are always in your seat on the Sabbath, and that helps me; in the second place, you are always wide awake, and you look right into my face, and that helps me; in the third place, I often see the tears running down your face, and that helps me very much."

MUTUAL FORBEARANCE.

The house will be kept in a turmoil where there is no toleration of each other's errors. If you lay a single stick of wood in the grate, and apply fire to it, it will go out; put on another stick, and they will burn; and half a dozen, and you will have a blaze. There are other fires of a kindred nature. If one member of the family gets into a passion, and is let alone, he will cool down, and possibly be ashamed and repent. But oppose temper to temper, pile on all the fuel, draw in others of the group, and let one harsh answer be followed by another, and there will be a blaze which will consume them all.

A QUEER OLD LADY.

How different people appear at different times, as, when we are sick or well, rejoicing or mourning, laughing or weeping. A few days since, I met an old lady, who nodded very familiarly to me, and yet I hesitated to call her by name, lest I should miscall it.—She looked old, and yet young; soft and smiling, and yet wore stern frowns. She was fair in face, yet her hands were iron. It seemed as if the wind would blow her away, and yet she moved with the strength of an elephant.

"Why, sir," said she, "you seem to stare at me as though you had seen me a thousand times before."

"That may be, madam; but I never saw you so loaded down with all sorts of things. I am curious to know about them. Would it be rude if I should ask you a few questions?"

"Not at all. Ask away."

"Well, what are you going to do with those small, thin, ladies' shoes?"

"Why, make the ladies wear them, to be sure."

"Not in this cold, wet season? Why, I can hardly keep my feet warm in these thick, double-soled boots. I must have over-shoes. How can they wear such thin, cold-catching shoes?"

"O, sir, I have only to bring them to them, and they never hesitate a moment. They know me!"

"And those little half-dresses, hanging on your arm?"

"They are to put on little children in cold weather, to walk out in—naked at the knees, naked at the neck, and hardly covering half the body. You can't think how eager parents are for these dresses."

"What have you in this little tin box?"

"Losenges, sir; troches, hoarhound candy—things that always go with thin shoes and thin dresses. And this bright red box, sir, contains what is called 'conscience salve,' which I always keep on hand to rub on the conscience when any one feels that he has done wrong in obeying me. It's in great demand, sir, and a certain cure."

"Pray, madam, what are those screws for?"

"Why, to pinch the feet, and make them look small, without regard to corns and bunions. They can't wear those dear little shoes except they have these pinchers to go with them."

"And that great heap of books in your arms?"

"Those! They are the latest, most exciting, and the weakest, most silly novels. But I hand them out, and shake my head with a smile, and crowds read them."

"Well, madam, I'm very inquisitive, I know, but I do want to know what you have in that bag thrown over your shoulder."

"A great variety of valuables—such things as 'late suppers'—in great demand, and which send people to the grave early, and thus make room for more. Then there are 'late hours,' and 'late rising,' and all manner of hair-dressing, and expensive dressing—things that ladies must have, even if their husbands fail. Here are diamond pins and rings—just the thing to stir up envy and create extravagance. Here are gold watches, cigars, meerschaum pipes, gold-headed canes, eye-glasses, and all manner of things to suit all manner of people. And I laugh and coax, and frown and command, till I get them to wear and use them, and do just what I please. Now I have stopped to talk with you a few moments; don't you see what a crowd have gathered around me—low necks, thin shoes, muslin dresses, tight boots; some on crutches, some coughing, some breathing short, all crowding to get near me, and when I move you will see how they all run, and rush, and crowd after me. O, sir, I am the great power of the world. I rule kings and queens, beggars and philosophers. Don't you see?"

"Truly, madam, truly. And now may I ask your name?"

"Name! FASHION, sir; my name is MRS. PREVAILING FASHION! I thought every body knew me!"—Rev. John Todd, D. D.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

FEMALE DRESS.

BY DIO LEWIS, M. D.

The subject is vitally important. Beside it, diet, exercise and baths sink into insignificance. My pale-faced countrywomen are dying for lack of room, freedom; they are being stifled.

Dress reformers proclaim short skirts as the remedy. This is well. The short skirt is an improvement—a movement upward, but of no consequence compared with the readjustment of the dress about the middle of the body. That part contains the vital organs. Is a man strong? it is because the middle of his body is strong. Is a woman vigorous? it is because the middle of her body is developed and active.

The changes needed in woman's dress are the following, and I believe their importance is in the order named:

1. The dress about the waist is to be very loose, without whalebones or other stiffening, and the skirts carried with suspenders over the shoulders.

2. The arms and legs are to be so warmly dressed as to maintain a healthy circulation.

3. The skirts to fall to the knee.

I have said that the importance of these several changes is in the order named. The lungs, heart, liver and stomach, which together make up the fountain of life, must have room, or the vital forces must halt. With the corset and tight-lacing, these organs are reduced one-third in size and two-thirds in motion.

Health and equilibrium are interchangeable terms. Whoever, whatever living thing has defective circulation has defective health. Flannels, cotton padding, thick shawls, cloaks and furs piled upon the chest, while the legs are covered with a single thickness of cotton cloth surrounded by a balloon in the shape of a hoop, steams the chest and freezes the legs. The legs and arms, separated so far from the centre of the body, surrounded by the cold air, need, to say the least, as much clothing as the body, and ought to have one or, in cold weather in this climate, two thicknesses of knit woolen. Women complain to me of headache, tell me their blood is all in their head and chest, while their feet are as cold as ice. With the fashionable dress how can it be otherwise? Let them cover the limbs with one or two thicknesses of warm flannel, and the feet with a warm dress, and the head and chest will be immediately relieved.

The short skirts, although in importance to health the least vital of these three changes, is nevertheless very important. The skirt should fall a little below the knee. The pants should be the large Turkish pants, which, made long enough to fall to the ankle, and fastened at the bottom by being drawn close about the ankle with a slight elastic cord, should then be drawn up to the place usually occupied by the garter, and pulled down to the middle of the calf of the leg. When going out into the cold air the exposed part of the leg should be covered with a patent leather anklet, and during the cold season of the year that part of the leg should be covered with two thicknesses of woolen. While all this peculiar arrangement is, in point of convenience and protection, less satisfactory than the straight pants, such as gentlemen wear, I nevertheless advise it, because it is very easy to introduce the short dress with these pants, and very difficult to introduce what is known as the Bloomer costume. For example: in my school at Lexington, Mass., I had more than a hundred fashionable young ladies last winter, all of whom wore constantly during the school year the short dress, the gymnastic costume, while all the fashionable ladies of the village outside of the institution adopted the same dress. Indeed, it is almost rare to see in Lexington a lady with a long dress. An attempt to introduce the Bloomer costume, I am sure, would have proved a failure, not in our own house, perhaps, but in its influence outside. All through our part of the country, when we go out to ride, we see ladies in the short dress. Indeed, some of the clergymen, who observed that our young ladies changed for the long dress on going to church, came to me to say that they hoped I would allow them to come in their short dresses, for they liked very much to see them. A single lady appearing in the streets of Boston in the Bloomer costume attracts a crowd of boys, while twenty of our young ladies can go into Boston without remark or notice. The fact is, we men and boys are very jealous of our breeches, but the gymnastic costume does not involve that garment, and so we lords of creation give our consent to its adoption by our sisters.—Herald of Health.

EATING BETWEEN MEALS.

There is scarcely a dietetic habit more common among the people of this country, or one that is more injurious to health, and that tends more to break down the integrity of the digestive organs, than that of eating between meals.

This habit is almost universal with the children of the present day. Parents generally have imbibed the mistaken idea that children must eat much oftener than adults—that they should eat at any and at all times of the day, or as often as they may fancy that they are hungry.

This habit probably does more than any other one thing to lay the foundation for those much dreaded diseases, liver complaint and dyspepsia, with all their train of evils. Physiology determinately establishes for us certain general principles in regard to diet, to which we must give heed, or serious results inevitably follow. The fact is fully established by physiology that the digestive organs need regular periods of rest, just as much as any other organ, or portion of the vital domain, and without it they must fail.

In eating between meals, we necessarily interfere with the digestion of the previous meal, interrupting its progress, and at the same time adding an extra amount of labor for the already heavily taxed digestive organs to perform, and rob them of that rest that nature demands; for if we eat but a piece of pie, a crust of bread, or even an apple, the entire process of digestion has to be gone through with, just the same as if we had taken a full meal.

Now the time requisite for fully and perfectly digesting an ordinary meal, is at least five hours, and no food of any kind should be introduced into the stomach while this important process is going on, lest it be interrupted, or so hurried that the food does not remain in the small intestines, a sufficient length of time for its nutriment to be taken up and conveyed to the thoracic duct preparatory to its entering the blood.

The true philosophy is, that the human stomach (at least at any time after the person has arrived at the age of two or three years) needs as many hours of rest out of the twenty-four as it labors. If this be true, what the effect must be of so eating between meals as to cause the stomach to labor incessantly for at least eighteen hours out of every twenty-four, I leave the candid reader to judge.—Health Reformer.

BISHOP WHATELY'S BRAIN TONIC.

A hard thinker, he required compensating sleep. Man from first to last is fighting a battle with death, through the tissues. These are wasted by labor, but as long as they can be fully renewed by food, the man lives and is well. Otherwise he decays and dies. So with the brain; it weakens under continued protracted labor, particularly at night. Sleep restores it to strength and fresh inclination and capacity for work. If sleep fails to do this, or if sufficient sleep be not allowed for the repose and invigorating of the brain, its powers decay, and even insanity may supervene through overwork, especially at undue times. No one knew this better than Whately, who may be said to have slept as fast as he could. Idle people are not to take this as a justification of their sluggardism. When Whately felt fatigue from overtaxing the brain in the day-time, he would close his books, and a quarter of an hour after, you might have seen the following instructive spectacle:

The first occasion on which I ever saw Dr. Whately (observes a correspondent) was under curious circumstances. I accompanied my friend Dr. Field to visit professionally some members of the archbishop's household at Redesdale, Stillorgan. The ground was covered by two feet of snow, and the thermometer was down almost to zero. Knowing the archbishop's character for humanity, I expressed much surprise to see an old laboring man, in his shirt-sleeves, felling a tree "after hours" in the demesne, while a heavy shower of sleet drifted pitilessly on his wrinkled face. "That laborer," replied Dr. Field, "whom you think the victim of prelatical despotism, is no other than the archbishop curing himself of a headache. When his grace has been reading and writing more than ordinarily, and finds any pain or confusion about the cerebral organization, he puts both to flight by rushing out with an ax, and slashing away at some ponderous trunk. As soon as he finds himself in a profuse perspiration he gets into bed, wraps himself in Limerick blankets, falls into a profound slumber, and gets up buoyant.—Life of Whately.

I LOVE JESUS.

TUNE.—Song of Deliverance.

BRO. GRANT:—The following lines were composed by Bro. O. C. Cunningham, of Concord, N. H. It is the first from his pen; but thinking it might comfort some of the children of God, I take the liberty to send it for publication, if you think proper.

O, how I love my Jesus,
Who's bought my liberty,
And paid a heavy ransom,
And now I know I'm free.
CHO.—"Palms of victory, crown of glory,
Palms of victory we shall bear."

He saw me bound by Satan,
With chains of dreadful power;
But mighty to deliver me,
He bid me sin no more.

He found me pressed with poverty,—
How wretched was my state;
Till my dear Jesus raised me
To a heavenly state.

O, how I love dear Jesus,
He's better far than gold;
Houses, land and brethren,—
More than a hundred fold.

He never forsakes in danger,
Though many foes are near;
His mighty arm supports me,
So I'll never, never fear.

I oft have been so sinful,
And grieved my dearest friend;
But yet he freely pardons,
And loves me to the end.

O may I be like Jesus,
With spirit just and true,
And faith that will not falter,
To keep the prize in view.

We soon shall see fair Canaan,
Embrace our heart's desire,
And rise amid the ransomed
To join the heavenly choir.

Then let us run with patience,
Nor wish our trials less;
Till, standing on Mount Zion,
We shall all things possess.

The glory there unfading
Shall deck the immortal brow;
And reigning with our Savior,
We'll never sorrow know.

For the World's Crisis.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL.

Doctors of divinity puzzled, not understanding the Scriptures, nor the power of God—ignorant of our faith and hope—glimmerings of light.

During the session of the "Massachusetts General Conference," held at Northampton with the "First Congregational Church," Rev. Zachary Eddy, D. D., pastor, Sept. 11th, 12th, and 13th, Rev. Dr. Hopkins, President of "William College," read, by appointment, an essay on "The Outpouring of the Spirit in the Latter Days." The reading of this essay was followed by a spirited discussion, in which Rev. J. P. Cleveland, D. D., Rev. E. Marvin, D. D., Rev. Zachary Eddy, D. D., Rev. A. P. Marvin, Rev. G. M. Wellman, President Stearns, Rev. E. P. Perkins, Rev. C. L. Woodworth, Rev. Geo. Trask, and Rev. A. C. Thompson, D. D., took part.

The main points of the essay which we shall notice, and which were made the subject of discussion, were the following:

1. AS TO THE HOLY SPIRIT.

"Christ having ascended, the way was prepared for the descent of the Spirit, and from that time till this the Spirit has been abroad in the earth, not in his miraculous agency, which is incidental and temporary, but as the author of revivals of religion, of individual conversions, and of the sanctifying agency which is indispensable to the upbuilding of the kingdom of God."

"There are at the present time remarkable providential preparations, such as have never been known or approximated before for a rapid diffusion of truth, and so for bringing all men, through the truth and by the power of the Spirit, into sympathy with each other, and into subjection to the will of God. Many passages of Scripture favor this view; and according to it, the pouring out of the Spirit in the latter days is yet to come, and is to result in universal peace and righteousness."

From the concluding statements, beginning with the remark that "all men, through the truth and by the power of the Spirit," we must dissent, and we can not find the "many passages" which "favor this view."

The prophecy of Joel (chap. 2: 28–32), had its special fulfillment in the beginning of the present dispensation, and includes the gospel day, as is evidently explained by the apostle Peter: "This is that which was spoken of by the prophet Joel," etc. Acts 2: 14–21. It will not do, therefore, to refer to that prophecy in proof of a future "pouring out of the Spirit in the latter days, yet to come," when an inspired apostle has declared its fulfillment in an especial degree on "the day of Pentecost," and the days following. We could have wished that Dr. Hopkins had cited us to the "many passages" to which he refers.

In discussing the essay, Dr. Cleveland remarked: "As the result of much investigation, he fully believed in great events prior to the final display of the Holy Spirit." We should have been thankful, exceedingly, if Dr. Cleveland had given us some scriptures as the foundation for his belief in "the final display of the Holy Spirit." Especially since Dr. Marvin, who followed him, said that "the general views brought out in the essay were those generally held, and that the world is to be subdued to Christ by the power of truth, as administered by the Spirit." For such a faith and general expectancy and hope, the Scriptures should not be wanting certainly.

The inquiry of Dr. Wellman was right to the point: "Are we encouraged by the history of the past to rely upon the Holy Spirit for the final triumph of the gospel?" That is the point. Are we? The marvellous and even miraculous power and effusion of the Holy Spirit on "the day of Pentecost," and the days following, during the preaching of Christ's chosen apostles, "God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Spirit, according to his own will" (Heb. 2: 4), failed in the conversion of the world which is anticipated; and certainly no outpouring of the Spirit since has been followed by any such result; nor in any measure exceeded that age of miracles and wonders."

What can we hope for, then, in the future, or how be "encouraged by the history of the past" to look "for the final triumph of the gospel" in "the conversion of all men to God"? "God visits" the Gentile world in his gospel "to take out of them a people for his name."—Acts 15: 14. And we conceive that the "final triumph of the gospel" will be fully accomplished when "all that believe" are saved; and sing the "new song, saying, Thou art worthy; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."—Rev. 5: 9. If this fails of accomplishment, then will the gospel prove a failure, and of a "final triumph"; but not until then.

Another inquiry equally important was asked by this divine: "Is Christ to come before, or after the millennium? is he to introduce a new dispensation; or is his kingdom to triumph under the dispensation of the Holy Spirit?"

Ah! that's the question. When that is determined according to the Scriptures, and not the theories, and opinions, and traditions of men, the future in promise and prophecy will be understood by these "guides." The doctor's faith, however, was that "the cause of Christ was to triumph under this dispensation." But how can this be the case with the teaching of the Master to the contrary? "The wheat and tares grow together until the harvest." "The harvest is the end of the world." Matt. 13: 24–43. And also the teaching of Christ's apostle? "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived."—2 Tim. 3: 13. Martin Luther reiterated the same sentiment against the modern fable of a world's conversion: "The older the world, the worse."

2. AS TO THE COMING OF CHRIST.

"The question turns upon the relative agency of the Son and Spirit in this great work. In the opinions of many, not the Spirit, but Christ's coming personally, is the chief agent in the restoration of the world." To this the essayest objects thus: "A suspension of the dispensation of the Spirit, at or near the present point, must fail to bring to Him due honor in that one great work which we know is to be accomplished."—(Essay.)

From the statement of Dr. Hopkins, it is apparent that our faith and hope are not understood by him. If these were better understood by the church at large, we have reason to believe that their views would undergo a great change relative to the future, and the wide divergence that now exists between us would greatly lessen, if not altogether cease. And may it not be that as Adventists we have been in a measure remiss in duty in not making more plain the clearly revealed fact that both Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit are the great agents in the work of reconstruction; and that both will be present and employed "in the times" and work of restitution? We will therefore observe, that in the scripture, Acts 3: 19–21, the apostle alludes to another "times of refreshing" still future, in view of which he urges men to "repent and be converted"; manifestly that they might be prepared to share in, and be participators of the blessings of those "times."

But mark! those "times of refreshing" are not to occur in time. They take place at the epoch of the return of "Jesus Christ," and in "the times of restitution." We quote the passage entire:—"Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heaven must receive (retain) until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets, since the world began."—Acts 3: 19–21.

From this passage we are not taught to look in time—during the gospel dispensation, for "an augmented influence of the Holy Spirit," under whose "agency the world will be converted to God," as maintained by spiritual millennialists. The convicted sinners in the beginning of the gospel day were exhorted to "repent and be converted," in prospect of the glorious "refreshing," yet future, to occur at the second coming of the Messiah, and in "the times of restitution of all things." Surely, it could not be expected that those converted sinners would survive and live in mortality to witness that day, and share in its glories and blessings! By a resurrection to life "at the last day," could they possibly participate in the glories of those coming "times"?

We believe in a future outpouring of the Holy Spirit eclipsing the day of Pentecost; but not until "God shall send Jesus Christ," or not until "the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken."

However, the work of the Holy Spirit, then to be effected, is far different from that of the conversion of men from sin to holiness, or a moral change produced in the hearts of men. It is one, co-operative with Christ, of reconstruction, and rebeautifying the material heavens and earth, and of "our vile bodies," or "bodies of humiliation."

The following scriptures we cite in proof of the above view, and in confirmation of St. Peter's statement: "If the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." . . . For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. . . . The creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now; and not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body." Rom. 8: 11–23. The time of this work of the Spirit is at the personal advent of Jesus Christ and "at the resurrection of the just." John 5: 28, 29; 6: 39; 40: 54; 2 Thess. 4: 16–18.

The Lord by the prophet Isaiah declares: "When ye see this, your heart shall rejoice, and your bones shall flourish like an herb." Read Isa. 66: 14; 5: 16–22. And by the prophet Ezekiel he says, "They say our bones are dried, and our hope is lost; but thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and shall put MY SPIRIT in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land."—Ezek. 37: 11–14. According to the inspired interpretation of St. Paul, this was "the hope" of the "twelve tribes" of Israel, and of course, as God says by Ezekiel, of "the whole house of Israel."—Acts 26: 6–8; 24: 14, 15.

A beautiful and appropriate prophecy is the following: "Upon the land of my people shall come up thorns and briers, until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest. Then judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field. And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever." Isa. 32: 15–18.

LOOK TO JESUS.

If we would keep our feet in the narrow way, avoiding the traps and snares of Satan, rise above discouragements, disappointments, and the petty trials of every day, we must look to Jesus. If we want our mind at peace with God, at peace with ourselves, let us keep it stayed on him, for "thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee."

Much of the discouragements, backslidings, and slow growth in grace in young christians arises, we think, from a habit of looking too much within themselves—watching their own feelings and frames of mind; their faith in God varying with every fit of feeling.

It is when faith is weak that we are ever prone to look at self; but we find nothing to encourage us there; there is no good thing in us, but a continual proneness to sin. Even when we would do good, evil is present with us. Good acts, kind words, and noble deeds, all of these are too often prompted by selfish, sinful motives.

The more we examine our own heart, the more are we convinced of its deceitfulness, its exceeding sinfulness in the sight of God; and the result of every effort, put forth in our own strength, to make it better, but proves how vain the attempt. Jesus alone is able to cleanse us from sin; then let us look to him. Indeed, if we have given our hearts to Jesus, what more have we to do with self. Jesus has bought us, paid the price in blood, and we are his, to be moulded as it pleases him. His the task (not ours) to purify and make us perfect. As a child of God, we have nothing more to do, but as clay in the hands of the potter, be submissive, ready to suffer all his will; willing to be just what it please him to have us be, a vessel unto honor or dishonor, and to do as the Holy Spirit bids us.

Lord, help us to look to thee, and we shall not see how great the work to do in this vile heart of ours, nor know how much pain there is to bear, but looking unto thee, thou wilt give us grace to endure all that thy loving heart sees needful to inflict.

Peter had no difficulty in walking on the water until he saw the winds and waves boisterous; then he began to sink, and cried, Lord, save me. If he had kept his eye on Jesus, he would not have seen the roughness of the sea, nor doubted God's power to make the water bear him up; but taking the eye from Jesus, to view the difficulties in the way, man loses sight of faith, and measures the strength of the Almighty by that of his own puny arm. Lord, help us to look to thee.

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

A PERSUASIVE TO CONTENTMENT.

It exhorts us to labor for contentment; this is that which doth beautify and bespangle a christian; and, as a spiritual embroidery, doth set him off in the eyes of the world.

But methinks I hear some bitterly complaining, and saying to me,—"Alas! how is it possible to be contented! the Lord hath made my chain heavy (Lam. 3. 7), he hath cast me into a very sad condition."

There is no sin but labors either to hide itself under some mask; or, if it cannot be concealed, then to vindicate itself by some apology. This sin of discontent I find very witty in its apologies; which I shall first discover, and then make a reply. We must lay it down for a rule, that discontent is a sin; so that all the pretences and apologies wherewith it labors to justify itself, are but the production of Satan's temptations.

The first apology which discontent makes is this,—"I have lost a child." Paulina, upon the loss of her children, was so possessed with a spirit of sadness, that she had like to have entombed herself in her own discontent. Our love to relations is oftentimes more than our love to religion.

1. We must be content not only when God gives mercies, but when he taketh them away. If we must in everything give thanks (1 Thes 5: 18), then in nothing be discontented.

2. Perhaps God has taken away the cistern, that he may give you the more of the spring; he hath darkened the star-light, that you may have more sun-light. God intends you shall have more of himself; and is not he better that ten sons? Look not so much upon a temporal loss, as a spiritual gain: the comforts of the world run dregs; but those which come out of the granary of the Promise are purer and sweeter.

3. Your child was not given, but lent. I have, said Hannah, lent my son to the Lord. 1 Sam. 1: 28. She lent him! The Lord had but lent him to her. Mercies are not entailed upon us, but lent: what a man lends he may call for again when he pleases.—God hath put out a child to thee awhile to nurse; wilt thou be displeased if he takes his child home again? O be not discontented that a mercy is taken away from you, but rather be thankful that it was lent you so long.

4. Suppose your child was taken from you, either he was good or bad. If he was rebellious, you have not so much parted with a child as a burden; you grieve for that which might have been a greater grief to you. If he was religious, then remember, he is taken from the evil to come (Isa. 57: 1), and placed in his centre of felicity. This lower region being full of gross and hurtful vapors, how happy are those who are mounted into the celestial orbs! The righteous is taken away—in the original it is, he is gathered; a wicked child dying is cut off, but the pious child is gathered. Even as we see men gather flowers, and candy them, and preserve them by them; so hath God gathered thy child as a sweet flower, that he may candy it with glory, and preserve it by him for ever. Why, then, should a christian be discontented? Why should he weep excessively? Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me; but weep for yourselves.—Luke 23: 28. O Christian! be not discontented that thou hast parted with such a child, but rather rejoice that thou hadst such a child to part with; break forth into thankfulness. What an honor it is to a parent to beget such a child, that while he lives increaseth the joy of the glorified angels, and when he dies, increaseth the number of the glorified saints!—Luke 15: 10.

5. If God hath taken away one of your children, he hath left you more; he might have stripped you of all. He took away all Job's comforts, his estate, his children; and, indeed, his wife was left but as a cross. Satan made a bow of this rib, as Chrysostom speaks, and shot a temptation by her at Job, thinking to have shot him to the heart. Curse God, and die, said she.—Job 2: 9. But Job had upon him the breastplate of integrity; and, though his children were taken away, yet not his graces; still he is content, still he blessed God. O, think how many mercies you still enjoy! Yet our base hearts are more discontented at one loss, than thankful for a hundred mercies.

God hath plucked one bunch of grapes from you; but how many precious clusters are left behind?

"But it was my only child, the staff of my age, the seed of my comfort, and the only blossom out of which the honor of an ancient family did grow."

1. God hath promised you—if you belong to him—a name better than of sons and daughters.—Isa. 56: 5. Is he dead that should have been the monument to have kept up the name of a family? God hath given you a new name; he hath written your name in the book of life. Behold your spiritual heraldry; here is a name which cannot be cut off.

2. Hath God taken away thy only child? He hath given thee his only Son; this is a happy exchange. What needs he complain of losses, that hath Christ? He is the Father's brightness (Heb. 1: 3), his riches (Col. 2: 9), his delight (Psa. 43: 1). Is there enough in Christ to delight the heart of God? and is there not enough in him to ravish us with holy delight? He is wisdom to teach us, righteousness to acquit us, sanctification to adorn us; he is that royal and princely gift; he is the bread of angels (Psa. 78: 25), the joy and triumph of saints; he is all in all. Why, then, art thou discontented? Though thy child be lost, yet thou hast Him for whom all things are loss.

3. And lastly, let us blush to think that nature should seem to outstrip grace. Pulvillus, a heathen, when he was about to consecrate a temple to Jupiter, and news was brought to him of the death of his son, would not desist from his enterprise; but with much composure of mind, gave orders for a decent burial.

THERE IS A HEAVENLY LAND.

There is a heavenly land where all the angels stand,
Looking over, over from the bright golden strand,
They beckon to the saints, from Canaan's happy shore—
"Be ready, be ready, the Savior's at the door.

I see their golden wings, and hear their heavenly song,
They cast their golden crowns, (amid the happy throng)
To King Immanuel; and lowly bend the knee
With all the happy throng, the happy throng so free.

Come, join our happy band, and gain the heavenly land,
Where tears are wiped away, and sorrows have an end;
Jerusalem you'll see, her streets of solid gold,
Her gates of shining pearl, so glorious to behold.
CHO.—There is a heavenly land, etc.

Come along, poor sinner, O with us come along,
And mortify your pride, and turn from every wrong;
The gospel sound obey, and you'll escape the fire,
And sing the heavenly song, and join the heavenly choir.

Believe in Jesus Christ, the loving Son of God,
Be humble and devout, and ever kiss the rod;
Be faithful to your vows, and wrestle at the throne
As Jacob did of old, who prevailed all alone

Jesus will receive you, and wash your garments white,
A harp of gold he'll give, the crown of life so bright,
For ever freed from sin, from trouble and from strife,
Unfading joys in heaven, and everlasting life.

A GOOD NAME.

Always be more solicitous to preserve your innocence, than concerned to prove it. It will never do to seek a good name as a primary object. Like trying to be graceful, the effort to be popular will make you contemptible. Take care of your spirit and conduct, and your reputation will take care of itself. The utmost that you are called to do, as the guardian of your reputation, is to remove injurious aspersions. Let not your good be evil spoken of, and follow the highest examples in mild and explicit self-indication. No reputation can be permanent, which does not spring from principle; and he who would maintain a good character, should be mainly solicitous to maintain a "conscience void of offence toward God and toward man." THE "HOME," MONEY, ETC.

A letter was received from a brother in Christ yesterday, which has led me to write this article. He wishes to know what has become of the money that was sent for the Home. An article appeared in the Crisis of last week, from the pen of Bro. Charles Goodrich, in which he stated, concerning Sr. Anna E. Smith's mission, of New York,—"She supports herself and family by her own efforts, independent of all her mission work. Other missionaries have to first support themselves out of the donations they receive, and then the balance goes to sustain their mission." The italics are mine.

Probably that article was not written with either the knowledge or consent of Sister S., for there are several mistakes in it, which she would not let go before the public knowingly. But it is not my business to correct them. Neither do I accuse Bro. Goodrich of wilfully misrepresenting facts, nor do I wish to injure either party, but I write to relieve the anxiety of a few. It was originally my purpose to pay no attention to any misstatements that might be made, but the letter that I have referred to stirred me to write.

It is a fact that I have not supported myself out of funds that have been sent for the Home, or other missionary work. The brethren in Philadelphia have clothed me, and given me the means to pay my board, so that I have not lived upon the mission funds at all. I have also had money sent from various quarters for my personal use, and so stated in the letters which I have received.

I have received in all, toward the "Home," $1150.00. One brother, who had given $100.00 toward the object, wished it to be withdrawn and given to the poor at once. This was done, leaving a balance of $1050.00 in the Home fund. $50.00 of that money have been spent for the children under my care, during the last nine months. There were three boys and three girls, being an average of $8.30 apiece. I think no one will complain of that. Then $1000.00 was left for the Home.

A description of how the Home has been obtained has already been sent to the Crisis. The following expenditures have been made toward furnishing the house, etc.:

Paid for whith-washing seven rooms, walls and ceiling, some done over twice, some of the rooms quite large, $24.00. Paid for house cleaning, scouring paint, floors, closets, windows, etc., etc., $8.00, Paid expressman for moving things into the Home, $6,00; lumber for coal and chip bin, $8.50; 13 tons of coal at $7.00 per ton, $91.00; 75 sheets, 4 feet wide and over 2 yards long, at 75 cents apiece, $56.25; 13 iron bedsteads, at $5,50 apiece, $71.50; iron bedstead for matron's room, $7.00; 12 husk mattresses at $4.25 apiece, $51.00; 1 husk mattress, $4.00; 1 husk mattress lined on one side with hair, for matron's room, $8.00. The 12 bedsteads are 36 inches wide and 6 feet long; the one for the matron's room is the same length, but 4 feet wide. The other is 30 inches wide. 13 bedspreads at $1.00 each, $13.00. 6 pieces of English calico for children's Sunday dresses, at 21 cts. per yard, 182 yards in all, $38,22; 1 piece of unbleached cotton cloth (English upland cotton), to line the waists of the dresses to make them warm, in all 36 yards, at 25 cents per yard, $9.00; 3 dozen knives and forks, at $1.33⅓ per dozen, $4.00; 4 large blank books and two small ones to keep the records of the mission work in, $7.60; 175 pieces of crockery, $40.66; 5 doz. iron spoons, large and small, $2.34; 3 largest sized tubs, at $2.00 each, $6.00; 2 medium sized, at $1.75, $3.50; 1 smaller one, $1.50; 4 clothes lines, at 25 cts. each, $1.00; 2 washboards, 90 cts. for the two; 12 doz. clothes-pins, at 3 cts. per dozen, 36 cts; 12 pillows for bed, at 62½ cts., $7.50; saw, 75 cts.; screw driver, 35 cts.; hatchet, 75 cts; 2 ft. rule, 25 cts; tack hammer, 20 cts.; claw hammer, —; chisel, 25 cts.; 4 lbs. nails, 32 cts; 18 door-knobs, $1.08; 1 coal shovel, $1.25; matting for reception room, $11.00; dust pan and brush, 35 and 60 cts.; 2 scrubbing brushes, 50 cts. each, $1.00; 2 water buckets, 37½ cts. each, 75 cts.; broom 45 cts.; soap 50 cts.; soda 30 cts; kindling wood $2.50; 2 papers of tacks, 16; 200 stamped envelopes, $4.96; 1 bag of salt 25 cts.; 1 coal hod $1.25; 2 coal hods, 87½ cts. each, $1.75; lantern 1.50; tin can 25 cts. These things amount to $503.27, leaving a balance of $496.73. Out of this sum that remains I have to pay for tin-roofing the cook room, a building 9 by 14 feet, $15.00, just the cost of the materials. I must have a new top to the cooking stove, the range is being overhauled, a stove is to be bought for the matron's room, and stove pipe entire for the matron's, cooking, and school-room stoves. Then I have to buy a lot of second-hand chairs, tables, and bureaus. Also to buy materials for under garments for girls, and for night dresses. I have also bought a sewing-machine at $60.00, to do most of the great amount of sewing that will have to be done for the children connected with the Home and the mission generally. Taking out the bill for the sewing-machine, it leaves us $436.00 to buy what I have already noticed that we must have, also tin and wooden ware, repairing glass in the house, getting plain curtains for the windows. Then we must lay in a stock of provisions. Shoes and stockings are also to be purchased for the children.

Other pieces that I have written give further information. I have tried to do the best that can be done. Many of the things have been purchased at wholesale prices, and near the first cost. Every thing will be done that can be done for the colored children under our care.

I wish to have no other mission neglected for this. Let every brother and sister do as the Lord directs. The Lord has sent me into this field to do his work. I expect trials, hardships, temptations, backbitings, jealousies, slanders, and the like. Christ suffered from all these, and more; and if he who was harmless and undefiled so suffered, what better treatment can I, the chief of sinners, expect. Yet I have a multitude of friends, from Maine to Kansas. Encouraging letters come from all quarters. My begging is done at the throne of grace. The matter of giving lies between the Lord and his people. I have confidence in the Almighty. He will provide. My cares are many, but his grace is sufficient. Yours, etc., in the highways and hedges, FRANCIS H. BURBANK.

DON'T YOU DO IT!

And do you not be so simple as to allow any body to persuade you to do it; if you do you will rue it, wish you had not done it, and try speedily to have it undone, or "done back again": i. e., do not go and move your stoves in your meeting-house from the door up to the pulpit. WE did have ours transferred; and after having tried it, we would be willing to give the man that had it done more than what the pipe came to, if he or any one else would only move them half way back again. Men are always prone to go to extremes, and this stove movement is after "that sort." In those houses we have seen, the stoves were placed about midway from the door to the desk, and they certainly gave the most agreeable temperature to the whole room of any stove arrangement that we have ever seen.

But, what is of vastly more importance, is to have the sexton (and if you have not got one, make one at once, or else act in that capacity yourself) light the fires (in cold weather) from two to three hours before meeting time, and then the entire room can be equalized in temperature, all be comfortable, and nobody freeze or roast.

HELPING THE PREACHER.

Dr. Beecher once said to an old lady, who had expressed her wonder to him that she was permitted to live, as she could not do any more good, "You are doing a great deal of good; you help me to preach every Sunday." She was greatly surprised, and inquired how it could be. "In the first place," said he, "you are always in your seat on the Sabbath, and that helps me; in the second place, you are always wide awake, and you look right into my face, and that helps me; in the third place, I often see the tears running down your face, and that helps me very much."

MUTUAL FORBEARANCE.

The house will be kept in a turmoil where there is no toleration of each other's errors. If you lay a single stick of wood in the grate, and apply fire to it, it will go out; put on another stick, and they will burn; and half a dozen, and you will have a blaze. There are other fires of a kindred nature. If one member of the family gets into a passion, and is let alone, he will cool down, and possibly be ashamed and repent. But oppose temper to temper, pile on all the fuel, draw in others of the group, and let one harsh answer be followed by another, and there will be a blaze which will enwrap them all.

—Selected by E. P. ROBINSON.

A QUEER OLD LADY.

How different people appear at different times, as, when we are sick or well, rejoicing or mourning, laughing or weeping. A few days since, I met an old lady, who nodded very familiarly to me, and yet I hesitated to call her by name, lest I should miscall it.—She looked old, and yet young; soft and smiling, and yet were stern frowns. She was fair in face, yet her hands were iron. It seemed as if the wind would blow her away, and yet she moved with the strength of an elephant.

"Why, sir," said she, "you seem to stare at me as though you had seen me a thousand times before."

"That may be, madam; but I never saw you so loaded down with all sorts of things. I am curious to know about them. Would it be rude if I should ask you a few questions?"

"Not at all. Ask away."

"Well, what are you going to do with those small, thin, ladies' shoes?"

"Why, make the ladies wear them, to be sure."

"Not in this cold, wet season? Why, I can hardly keep my feet warm in these thick, double-soled boots. I must have over-shoes. How can they wear such thin, cold-catching shoes?"

"O, sir, I have only to bring them to them, and they never hesitate a moment. They know me!"

"And those little half-dresses, hanging on your arm?"

"They are to put on little children in cold weather, to walk out in—naked at the knees, naked at the neck, and hardly covering half the body. You can't think how eager parents are for these dresses."

"What have you in this little tin box?"

"Lozenges, sir; troches, hoarhound candy—things that always go with thin shoes and thin dresses. And this bright red box, sir, contains what is called 'conscience salve,' which I always keep on hand to rub on the conscience when any one feels that he has done wrong in obeying me. It's in great demand, sir, and a certain cure."

"Pray, madam, what are those screws for?"

"Why, to pinch the feet, and make them look small, without regard to corns and bunions. They can't wear those dear little shoes except they have these pinchers to go with them."

"And that great heap of books in your arms?"

"Those! They are the latest, most exciting, and the weakest, most silly novels. But I hand them out, and shake my head with a smile, and crowds read them."

"Well, madam, I'm very inquisitive, I know, but I do want to know what you have in that bag thrown over your shoulder."

"A great variety of valuables—such things as 'late suppers'—in great demand, and which send people to the grave early, and thus make room for more. Then there are 'late hours,' and 'late rising,' and all manner of hair-dressing, and expensive dressing—things that ladies must have, even if their husbands fail. Here are diamond pins and rings—just the thing to stir up envy and create extravagance. Here are gold watches, cigars, meerschaum pipes, gold-headed canes, eye-glasses, and all manner of things to suit all manner of people. And I laugh and coax, and frown and command, till I get them to wear and use them, and do just what I please. Now I have stopped to talk with you a few moments; don't you see what a crowd have gathered around me—low necks, thin shoes, muslin dresses, tight boots; some on crutches, some coughing, some breathing short, all crowding to get near me, and when I move you will see how they all run, and rush, and crowd after me. O, sir, I am the great power of the world. I rule kings and queens, beggars and philosophers. Don't you see?"

"Truly, madam, truly. And now may I ask your name?"

"Name! FASHION, sir; my name is MRS. PREVAILING FASHION! I thought every body knew me!"—Rev. John Todd, D. D.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

FEMALE DRESS.

BY DIO LEWIS, M. D.

The subject is vitally important. Beside it, diet, exercise and baths sink into insignificance. My pale-faced countrywomen are dying for lack of room, freedom; they are being stifled.

Dress reformers proclaim short skirts as the remedy. This is well The short skirt is an improvement—a movement upward, but of no consequence compared with the readjustment of the dress about the middle of the body. That part contains the vital organs. Is a man strong? it is because the middle of his body is strong. Is a woman vigorous? it is because the middle of her body is developed and active.

The changes needed in woman's dress are the following, and I believe their importance is in the order named:

1. The dress about the waist is to be very loose, without whalebones or other stiffening, and the skirts carried with suspenders over the shoulders.

2. The arms and legs are to be so warmly dressed as to maintain a healthy circulation.

3. The skirts to fall to the knee.

I have said that the importance of these several changes is in the order named. The lungs, heart, liver and stomach, which together make up the fountain of life, must have room, or the vital forces must halt. With the corset and tight-lacing, these organs are reduced one-third in size and two-thirds in motion.

Health and equilibrium are interchangeable terms. Whoever, whatever living thing has defective circulation has defective health. Flannels, cotton padding, thick shawls, cloaks and furs piled upon the chest, while the legs are covered with a single thickness of cotton cloth surrounded by a balloon in the shape of a hoop, creams the chest and freezes the legs. The legs and arms, separated so far from the centre of the body, surrounded by the cold air, need, to say the least, as much clothing as the body, and ought to have one or, in cold weather in this climate, two thicknesses of knit woolen. Women complain to me of headache, tell me their blood is all in their head and chest, while their feet are as cold as ice. With the fashionable dress how can it be otherwise? Let them cover the limbs with one or two thicknesses of warm flannel, and the feet with a warm dress, and the head and chest will be immediately relieved.

The short skirts, although in importance to health the least vital of these three changes, is nevertheless very important. The skirt should fall a little below the knee. The pants should be the large Turkish pants, which, made long enough to fall to the ankle, and fastened at the bottom by being drawn close about the ankle with a slight elastic cord, should then be drawn up to the place usually occupied by the garter, and pulled down to the middle of the calf of the leg. When going out into the cold air the exposed part of the leg should be covered with a patent leather anklet, and during the cold season of the year that part of the leg should be covered with two thicknesses of woolen. While all this peculiar arrangement is, in point of convenience and protection, less satisfactory than the straight pants, such as gentlemen wear, I nevertheless advise it, because it is very easy to introduce the short dress with these pants, and very difficult to introduce what is known as the Bloomer costume. For example: in my school at Lexington, Mass., I had more than a hundred fashionable young ladies last winter, all of whom wore constantly during the school year the short dress, the gymnastic costume, while all the fashionable ladies of the village outside of the institution adopted the same dress. Indeed, it is almost rare to see in Lexington a lady with a long dress. An attempt to introduce the Bloomer costume, I am sure, would have proved a failure, not in our own house, perhaps, but in its influence outside. All through our part of the country, when we go out to ride, we see ladies in the short dress. Indeed, some of the clergymen, who observed that our young ladies changed for the long dress on going to church, came to me to say that they hoped I would allow them to come in their short dresses, for they liked very much to see them. A single lady appearing in the streets of Boston in the Bloomer costume attracts a crowd of boys, while twenty of our young ladies can go into Boston without remark or notice. The fact is, we men and boys are very jealous of our breeches, but the gymnastic costume does not involve that garment, and so we lords of creation give our consent to its adoption by our sisters.—Herald of Health.

EATING BETWEEN MEALS.

There is scarcely a dietetic habit more common among the people of this country, or one that is more injurious to health, and that tends more to break down the integrity of the digestive organs, than that of eating between meals.

This habit is almost universal with the children of the present day. Parents generally have imbibed the mistaken idea that children must eat much oftener than adults—that they should eat at any and at all times of the day, or as often as they may fancy that they are hungry.

This habit probably does more than any other one thing to lay the foundation for those much dreaded diseases, liver complaint and dyspepsia, with all their train of evils. Physiology determinately establishes for us certain general principles in regard to diet, to which we must give heed, or serious results inevitably follow. The fact is fully established by physiology that the digestive organs need regular periods of rest, just as much as any other organ, or portion of the vital domain, and without it they must fail.

In eating between meals, we necessarily interfere with the digestion of the previous meal, interrupting its progress, and at the same time adding an extra amount of labor for the already heavily taxed digestive organs to perform, and rob them of that rest that nature demands; for if we eat but a piece of pie, a crust of bread, or even an apple, the entire process of digestion has to be gone through with, just the same as if we had taken a full meal.

Now the time requisite for fully and perfectly digesting an ordinary meal, is at least five hours, and no food of any kind should be introduced into the stomach while this important process is going on, lest it be interrupted, or so hurried that the food does not remain in the small intestines, a sufficient length of time for its nutriment to be taken up and conveyed to the thoracic duct preparatory to its entering the blood.

The true philosophy is, that the human stomach (at least at any time after the person has arrived at the age of two or three years) needs as many hours of rest out of the twenty-four as it labors. If this be true, what the effect must be of so eating between meals as to cause the stomach to labor incessantly for at least eighteen hours out of every twenty-four, I leave the candid reader to judge.—Health Reformer.

BISHOP WHATELY'S BRAIN TONIC.

A hard thinker, he required compensating sleep. Men from first to last in fighting a battle with death, through the tissues. These are wasted by labor, but as long as they can be fully renewed by food, the man lives and is well. Otherwise he decays and dies. So with the brain, it weakens under continued protracted labor, particularly at night. Sleep restores it to strength and fresh inclination and capacity for work. If sleep fails to do this, or if sufficient sleep be not allowed for the repose and invigorating of the brain, its powers decay, and even insanity may supervene through overwork, especially at undue times. No one knew this better than Whately, who may be said to have slept as fast as he could. Idle people are not to take this as a justification of their sluggardism. When Whately felt fatigue from overtaxing the brain in the day-time, he would close his books, and a quarter of an hour after, you might have seen the following instructive spectacle:

The first occasion on which I ever saw Dr. Whately (observes a correspondent) was under curious circumstances. I accompanied my friend Dr. Field to visit professionally some members of the archbishop's household at Redesdale, Stillorgan. The ground was covered by two feet of snow, and the thermometer was down almost to zero. Knowing the archbishop's character for humanity, I expressed much surprise to see an old laboring man, in his shirt-sleeves, felling a tree "after hours" in the demesne, while a heavy shower of sleet drifted pitilessly on his wrinkled face. "That laborer," replied Dr. Field, "whom you think the victim of [illegible], is no other than the archbishop curing himself of a headache. When his grace has been reading and writing more than ordinarily, and finds any pain or confusion about the cerebral organization, he puts both to flight by rushing out with an ax, and slashing away at some ponderous trunk. As soon as he finds himself in a profuse perspiration he gets into bed, wraps himself in Limerick blankets, falls into a profound slumber, and gets up buoyant.—Life of Whately.

I LOVE JESUS.

TUNE—Song of Deliverance.

BRO. GRANT:—The following lines were composed by BRO. G. C. Cunningham, of Concord, N. H. It is the first from his pen; but thinking it might comfort some of the children of God, I take the liberty to send it for publication, if you think proper.

O, how I love my Jesus,
Who's bought my liberty,
And paid a heavy ransom,
And now I know I'm free.
CHO.—"Palms of victory, crown of glory,
Palms of victory we shall bear."

He saw me bound by Satan,
With chains of dreadful power;
But mighty to deliver me,
He bid me sin no more.

He found me pressed with poverty,—
How wretched was my state;
Till my dear Jesus raised me
To a heavenly state.

O, how I love dear Jesus,
He's better far than gold;
Houses, land and brethren,—
More than a hundred fold.

He never forsakes in danger,
Though many foes are near;
His mighty arm supports me,
So I'll never, never fear.

I oft have been so sinful,
And grieved my dearest friend;
But yet he freely pardons,
And loves me to the end.

O may I be like Jesus,
With spirit just and true;
And faith that will not falter,
To keep the prize in view.

We soon shall see fair Canaan,
Embrace our heart's desire,
And rise amid the ransomed
To join the heavenly choir.

Then let us run with patience,
Nor wish our trials less;
Till, standing on Mount Zion,
We shall all things possess.

The glory there unfading
Shall deck the immortal brow;
And reigning with our Savior,
We'll never sorrow know.

For the World's Crisis.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL.

Doctors of divinity puzzled, not understanding the Scriptures, nor the power of God—ignorant of our faith and hope—glimmerings of light.

During the session of the "Massachusetts General Conference," held at Northampton with the "First Congregational Church," Rev. Zachary Eddy, D. D., pastor, Sept. 11th, 12th, and 13th, Rev. Dr. Hopkins, President of "William College," read, by appointment, an essay on "The Outpouring of the Spirit in the Latter Days." The reading of this essay was followed by a spirited discussion, in which Rev. J. P. Cleveland, D. D., Rev. E. Marvin, D. D., Rev. Zachary Eddy, D. D., Rev. A. P. Marvin, Rev. G M. Wellman, President Stearns, Rev. E. P. Perkins, Rev. C. L. Woodworth, Rev. Geo. Trask, and Rev. A. C. Thompson, D. D., took part.

The main points of the essay which we shall notice, and which were made the subject of discussion, were the following:

1. AS TO THE HOLY SPIRIT.

"Christ having ascended, the way was prepared for the descent of the Spirit, and from that time till this the Spirit has been abroad in the earth, not in his miraculous agency, which is incidental and temporary, but as the author of revivals of religion, of individual conversions, and of the sanctifying agency which is indispensable to the upbuilding of the kingdom of God."

"There are at the present time remarkable providential preparations, such as have never been known or approximated before for a rapid diffusion of truth, and so for bringing all men, through the truth and by the power of the Spirit, into sympathy with each other, and into subjection to the will of God. Many passages of Scripture favor this view; and according to it, the pouring out of the Spirit in the latter days is yet to come, and is to result in universal peace and righteousness."

From the concluding statements, beginning with the remark that "all men, through the truth and by the power of the Spirit," we must dissent, and we can not find the "many passages" which "favor this view."

The prophecy of Joel (chap. 2: 28–32), had its special fulfillment in the beginning of the present dispensation, and includes the gospel day, as is evidently explained by the apostle Peter: "This is that which was spoken of by the prophet Joel," etc. Acts 2: 14–21. It will not do, therefore, to refer to that prophecy in proof of a future "pouring out of the Spirit in the latter days, yet to come," when an inspired apostle has declared its fulfillment in an especial degree on "the day of [illegible]," and the days following. We could have wished that Dr. Hopkins had cited us to the "many passages" to which he refers.

In discussing the essay, Dr. Cleveland remarked: "As the result of much investigation, he fully believed in great events prior to the final display of the Holy Spirit." We should have been thankful, exceedingly, if Dr. Cleveland had given us some scriptures as the foundation for his belief in "the final display of the Holy Spirit." Especially since Dr. Marvin, who followed him, said that "the general views brought out in the essay were those generally held, and that the world is to be subdued to Christ by the power of truth, as administered by the Spirit." For such a faith and general expectancy and hope, the Scriptures should not be wanting certainly.

The inquiry of Dr. Wellman was right to the point: "Are we encouraged by the history of the past to rely upon the Holy Spirit for the final triumph of the gospel?" That is the point. Are we? The marvellous and even miraculous power and effusion of the Holy Spirit on "the day of Pentecost," and the days following, during the preaching of Christ's chosen apostles, "God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Spirit, according to his own will" (Heb. 2: 4), failed in the conversion of the world which is anticipated; and certainly no outpouring of the Spirit since has been followed by any such results; nor in any measure exceeded that age of miracles and wonders."

What can we hope for, then, in the future, or how be "encouraged by the history of the past" to look "for the final triumph of the gospel" in "the conversion of all men to God"? "God visits" the Gentile world in his gospel "to take out of them a people for his name."—Acts 15: 14. And we conceive that the "final triumph of the gospel" will be fully accomplished when "all that believe" are saved; and sing the "new song, saying, Thou art worthy; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."—Rev. 5: 9. If this fails of accomplishment, then will the gospel prove a failure, and of a "final triumph"; but not until then.

Another inquiry equally important was asked by this divine: "Is Christ to come before, or after the millennium? is he to introduce a new dispensation; or is his kingdom to triumph under the dispensation of the Holy Spirit?"

Ah! that's the question. When that is determined according to the Scriptures, and not the theories, and opinions, and traditions of men, the future in promise and prophecy will be understood by these "guides." The doctor's faith, however, was that "the cause of Christ was to triumph under this dispensation." But how can this be the case with the teaching of the Master to the contrary? "The wheat and tares grow together until the harvest." "The harvest is the end of the world." Matt. 13: 24–43. And also the teaching of Christ's apostle? "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived."—2 Tim. 3: 13. Martin Luther reiterated the same sentiment against the modern fable of a world's conversion: "The older the world, the worse."

2. AS TO THE COMING OF CHRIST.

"The question turns upon the relative agency of the Son and Spirit in this great work. In the opinions of many, not the Spirit, but Christ's coming personally, is the chief agent in the restoration of the world." To this the essayest objects thus: "A suspension of the dispensation of the Spirit, at or near the present point, must fail to bring to Him due honor in that one great work which we know is to be accomplished."—(Essay.)

From the statement of Dr. Hopkins, it is apparent that our faith and hope are not understood by him. If these were better understood by the church at large, we have reason to believe that their views would undergo a great change relative to the future, and the wide divergence that now exists between us would greatly lessen, if not altogether cease. And may it not be that as Adventists we have been in a measure remiss in duty in not making more plain the clearly revealed fact that both Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit are the great agents in the work of reconstruction; and that both will be present and employed "in the times" and work of restitution? We will therefore observe, that in the scripture, Acts 3: 19–21, the apostle alludes to another "times of refreshing" still future, in view of which he urges men to "repent and be converted"; manifestly that they might be prepared to share in, and be participators of the blessings of those "times."

But mark! those "times of refreshing" are not to occur in time. They take place at the epoch of the return of "Jesus Christ," and in "the times of restitution." We quote the passage entire:—"Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heaven must receive (retain) until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets, since the world began."—Acts 3: 19–21.

From this passage we are not taught to look in time—during the gospel dispensation, for "an augmented influence of the Holy Spirit," under whose "agency the world will be converted to God," as maintained by spiritual millennialists. The convicted sinners in the beginning of the gospel day were exhorted to "repent and be converted," in prospect of the glorious "refreshing," yet future, to occur at the second coming of the Messiah, and in "the times of restitution of all things." Surely, it could not be expected that those converted sinners would survive and live in mortality to witness that day, and share in its glories and blessings! By a resurrection to life "at the last day," could they possibly participate in the glories of those coming "times"?

We believe in a future outpouring of the Holy Spirit eclipsing the day of Pentecost; but not until "God shall send Jesus Christ," or not until "the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken."

However, the work of the Holy Spirit, then to be effected, is far different from that of the conversion of men from sin to holiness, or a moral change produced in the hearts of men. It is one, co-operative with Christ, of reconstruction, and rebeautifying the material heavens and earth, and of "our vile bodies," or "bodies of humiliation."

The following scriptures we cite in proof of the above view, and in confirmation of St. Peter's statement: "If the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." . . . For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. . . . The creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now; and not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body." Rom. 8: 11–23. The time of this work of the Spirit is at the personal advent of Jesus Christ, and "at the resurrection of the just." John 5: 28, 29; 6: 39; 40; 54; 2 Thess. 4: 16–18.

The [illegible] by the prophet Isaiah declares: "When ye see this, your heart shall rejoice, and your bones shall flourish like an herb." Read Isa. 66: 14; 5: 16–22. And by the prophet Ezekiel he says, "They say our bones are dried, and our hope is lost; but thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and shall put MY SPIRIT in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land."—Ezek. 37: 11–14. According to the inspired interpretation of St. Paul, this was "the hope" of the "twelve tribes" of Israel, and of course, as God says by Ezekiel, of "the whole house of Israel."—Acts 26: 6–8; 24: 14, 15.

A beautiful and appropriate prophecy is the following: "Upon the land of my people shall come up thorns and briers, until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest. Then judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field. And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever." Isa. 32: 15–17.

LOOK TO JESUS.

If we would keep our feet in the narrow way, avoiding the traps and snares of Satan, rise above discouragements, disappointments, and the petty trials of every day, we must look to Jesus. If we want our mind at peace with God, at peace with ourselves, let us keep it stayed on him, for "thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee."

Much of the discouragements, backslidings, and slow growth in grace in young christians arises, we think, from a habit of looking too much within themselves—watching their own feelings and frames of mind; their faith in God varying with every fit of feeling.

It is when faith is weak that we are ever prone to look at self; but we find nothing to encourage us there; there is no good thing in us, but a continual proneness to sin. Even when we would do good, evil is present with us. Good acts, kind words, and noble deeds, all of these are too often prompted by selfish, sinful motives.

The more we examine our own heart, the more are we convinced of its deceitfulness, its exceeding sinfulness in the sight of God; and the result of every effort, put forth in our own strength, to make it better, but proves how vain the attempt. Jesus alone is able to cleanse us from sin; then let us look to him. Indeed, if we have given our hearts to Jesus, what more have we to do with self. Jesus has bought us, paid the price in blood, and we are his, to be moulded as it pleases him. His the task (not ours) to purify and make us perfect. As a child of God, we have nothing more to do, but as clay in the hands of the potter, be submissive, ready to suffer all his will; willing to be just what it please him to have us be, a vessel unto honor or dishonor, and to do as the Holy Spirit bids us.

Lord, help us to look to thee, and we shall not see how great the work to do in this vile heart of ours, nor know how much pain there is to bear, but looking unto thee, thou wilt give us grace to endure all that thy loving heart sees needful to inflict.

Peter had no difficulty in walking on the water until he saw the winds and waves boisterous; then he began to sink, and cried, Lord, save me. If he had kept his eye on Jesus, he would not have seen the roughness of the sea, nor doubted God's power to make the water bear him up; but taking the eye from Jesus, to view the difficulties in the way, man loses sight of faith, and measures the strength of the Almighty by that of his own puny arm. Lord, help us to look to thee.

Vergennes, Vt. E. S. BENTON.

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

A PERSUASIVE TO CONTENTMENT.

It exhorts us to labor for contentment; this is that which doth beautify and bespangle a christian; and, as a spiritual embroidery, doth set him off in the eyes of the world.

But methinks I hear some bitterly complaining, and saying to me,—"Alas! how is it possible to be contented! the Lord hath made my chain heavy (Lam. 3: 7), he hath cast me into a very sad condition."

There is no sin but labors either to hide itself under some mask; or, if it cannot be concealed, then to vindicate itself by some apology. This sin of discontent I find very witty in its apologies; which I shall first discover, and then make a reply. We must lay it down for a rule, that discontent is a sin; so that all the pretences and apologies wherewith it labors to justify itself, are but the production of Satan's temptations.

The first apology which discontent makes is this,—"I have lost a child." Paulina, upon the loss of her children, was so possessed with a spirit of sadness, that she had like to have entombed herself in her own discontent. Our love to relations is oftentimes more than our love to religion.

1. We must be content not only when God gives mercies, but when he taketh them away. If we must in everything give thanks (1 Thes 5: 18), then in nothing be discontented.

2. Perhaps God has taken away the cistern, that he may give you the more of the spring; he hath darkened the star-light, that you may have more sun-light. God intends you shall have more of himself; and is not he better that ten sons? Look not so much upon a temporal loss, as a spiritual gain: the comforts of the world run dregs; but those which come out of the granary of the Promise are purer and sweeter.

3. Your child was not given, but lent. I have, said Hannah, lent my son to the Lord. 1 Sam. 1: 28. She lent him! The Lord had but lent him to her. Mercies are not entailed upon us, but lent: what a man lends he may call for again when he pleases.—God hath put out a child to thee awhile to nurse; wilt thou be displeased if he takes his child home again? O be not discontented that a mercy is taken away from you, but rather be thankful that it was lent you so long.

4. Suppose your child was taken from you, either he was good or bad. If he was rebellious, you have not so much parted with a child as a burden; you grieve for that which might have been a greater grief to you. If he was religious, then remember, he is taken from the evil to come (Isa. 57: 1), and placed in his centre of felicity. This lower region being full of gross and hurtful vapors, how happy are those who are mounted into the celestial orbs! The righteous is taken away—in the original it is, he is gathered; a wicked child dying is cut off, but the pious child is gathered. Even as we see men gather flowers, and candy them, and preserve them by them; so hath God gathered thy child as a sweet flower, that he may candy it with glory, and preserve it by him for ever. Why, then, should a christian be discontented? Why should he weep excessively? Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me; but weep for yourselves.—Luke 23: 28. O Christian! be not discontented that thou hast parted with such a child, but rather rejoice that thou hadst such a child to part with; break forth into thankfulness. What an honor it is to a parent to beget such a child, that while he lives increaseth the joy of the glorified angels, and when he dies, increaseth the number of the glorified saints!—Luke 15: 10.

5. If God hath taken away one of your children, he hath left you more; he might have stripped you of all. He took away all Job's comforts, his estate, his children; and, indeed, his wife was left but as a cross. Satan made a bow of this rib, as Chrysostom speaks, and shot a temptation by her at Job, thinking to have shot him to the heart. Curse God, and die, said she.—Job 2: 9. But Job had upon him the frontispiece of integrity; and, though his children were taken away, yet not his graces; still he is content, still he blessed God. O, think how many mercies you still enjoy! Yet our base hearts are more discontented at one loss, than thankful for a hundred mercies.

God hath plucked one bunch of grapes from you; but how many precious clusters are left behind?

"But it was my only child, the staff of my age, the seed of my comfort, and the only blossom out of which the honor of an ancient family did grow."

1. God hath promised you—if you belong to him—a name better than of sons and daughters.—Isa. 56: 5. Is he dead that should have been the monument to have kept up the name of a family? God hath given you a new name; he hath written your name in the book of life. Behold your spiritual heraldry; here is a name which cannot be cut off.

2. Hath God taken away thy only child? He hath given thee his only Son; this is a happy exchange. What needs he complain of losses, that hath Christ? He is the Father's brightness (Heb. 1: 3), his riches (Col. 2: 9), his delight (Psa. 43: 1). Is there enough in Christ to delight the heart of God? and is there not enough in him to ravish us with holy delight? He is wisdom to teach us, righteousness to acquit us, sanctification to adorn us; he is that royal and princely gift; he is the bread of angels (Psa. 78: 25), the joy and triumph of saints; he is all in all. Why, then, art thou discontented? Though thy child be lost, yet thou hast Him for whom all things are loss.

3. And lastly, let us blush to think that nature should seem to outstrip grace. Pulvillus, a heathen, when he was about to consecrate a temple to Jupiter, and news was brought to him of the death of his son, would not desist from his enterprise; but with much composure of mind, gave orders for a decent burial.

THERE IS A HEAVENLY LAND.

There is a heavenly land where all the angels stand,
Looking over, over from the bright golden strand;
They beckon to the saints, from Canaan's happy shore—
"Be ready, be ready, the Savior's at the door.

I see their golden wings, and hear their heavenly song,
They cast their golden crowns, (amid the happy throng)
To King Immanuel; and lowly bend the knee
With all the happy throng, the happy throng so free.
CHO.—There is a heavenly land, etc.

Come, join our happy band, and gain the heavenly land,
Where tears are wiped away, and sorrows have an end;
Jerusalem you'll see, her streets of solid gold,
Her gates of shining pearl, so glorious to behold.
CHO.—There is a heavenly land, etc.

Come along, poor sinner, O with us come along,
And mortify your pride, and turn from every wrong;
The gospel sound obey, and you'll escape the fire,
And sing the heavenly song, and join the heavenly choir.
CHO.—There is a heavenly land, etc.

Believe in Jesus Christ, the loving Son of God,
Be humble and devout, and ever kiss the rod;
Be faithful to your vows, and wrestle at the throne
As Jacob did of old, who prevailed all alone.
CHO.—There is a heavenly land, etc.

Jesus will receive you, and wash your garments white,
A harp of gold he'll give, the crown of life so bright;
For ever freed from sin, from trouble and from strife,
Unfading joys in heaven, and everlasting life.

A GOOD NAME.

Always be more solicitous to preserve your innocence, than concerned to prove it. It will never do to seek a good name as a primary object. Like trying to be graceful, the effort to be popular will make you contemptible. Take care of your spirit and conduct, and your reputation will take care of itself. The utmost that you are called to do, as the guardian of your reputation, is to remove injurious aspersions. Let not your good be evil spoken of, and follow the highest examples in mild and explicit self-indication. No reputation can be permanent, which does not spring from principle; and he who would maintain a good character, should be mainly solicitous to maintain a "conscience void of offence toward God and toward man." THE "HOME," MONEY, ETC.

A letter was received from a brother in Christ yesterday, which has led me to write this article. He wishes to know what has become of the money that was sent for the Home. An article appeared in the Crisis of last week, from the pen of Bro. Charles Goodrich, in which he stated, concerning Sr. Anna E. Smith's mission, of New York,—"She supports herself and family by her own efforts, independent of all her mission work. Other missionaries have to first support themselves out of the donations they receive, and then the balance goes to sustain their mission." The italics are mine.

Probably that article was not written with either the knowledge or consent of Sister S., for there are several mistakes in it, which she would not let go before the public knowingly. But it is not my business to correct them. Neither do I accuse Bro. Goodrich of wilfully misrepresenting facts, nor do I wish to injure either party, but I write to relieve the anxiety of a few. It was originally my purpose to pay no attention to any misstatements that might be made, but the letter that I have referred to stirred me to write.

It is a fact that I have not supported myself out of funds that have been sent for the Home, or other missionary work. The brethren in Philadelphia have clothed me, and given me the means to pay my board, so that I have not lived upon the mission funds at all. I have also had money sent from various quarters for my personal use, and so stated in the letters which I have received.

I have received in all, toward the "Home," $1150.00. One brother, who had given $100.00 toward the object, wished it to be withdrawn and given to the poor at once. This was done, leaving a balance of $1050.00 in the Home fund. $50.00 of that money have been spent for the children under my care, during the last nine months. There were three boys and three girls, being an average of $8.30 apiece. I think no one will complain of that. Then $1000.00 was left for the Home.

A description of how the Home has been obtained has already been sent to the Crisis. The following expenditures have been made toward furnishing the house, etc.:

Paid for whitewashing seven rooms, walls and ceiling, some done over twice, some of the rooms quite large, $24.00. Paid for house cleaning, scouring paint, floors, closets, windows, etc., etc., $8.00. Paid expressman for moving things into the Home, $6.00; lumber for coal and chip bin, $6.50; 13 tons of coal at $7.00 per ton, $91.00; 75 sheets, 4 feet wide and over 3 yards long, at 75 cents apiece, $56.25; 13 iron bedsteads, at $5.50 apiece, $71.50; iron bedstead for matron's room, $7.00; 12 husk mattresses at $4.25 apiece, $51.00; 1 husk mattress, $4.00; 1 husk mattress lined on one side with hair, for matron's room, $8.00. The 12 bedsteads are 36 inches wide and 6 feet long; the one for the matron's room is the same length, but 4 feet wide. The other is 30 inches wide. 13 bedspreads at $1.00 each, $13.00. 6 pieces of English calico for children's Sunday dresses, at 21 cts. per yard, 182 yards in all, $38,22; 1 piece of unbleached cotton cloth (English upland cotton), to line the waists of the dresses to make them warm, in all 36 yards, at 25 cents per yard, $9.00; 3 dozen knives and forks, at $1.33⅓ per dozen, $4.00; 4 large blank books and two small ones to keep the records of the mission work in, $7.60; 175 pieces of crockery, $40.66; 5 doz. iron spoons, large and small, $2.34; 3 largest sized tubs, at $2.00 each, $6.00; 2 medium sized, at $1.75, $3.50; 1 smaller one, $1.50; 4 clothes lines, at 25 cts. each, $1.00; 2 washboards, 90 cts. for the two; 12 doz. clothes-pins, at 3 cts. per dozen, 36 cts; 12 pillows for bed, at 62½ cts., $7.50; saw, 75 cts.; screw driver, 35 cts.; hatchet, 75 cts; 2 ft. rule, 25 cts; tack hammer, 20 cts.; claw hammer, —; chisel, 25 cts.; 4 lbs. nails, 32 cts; 18 door-knobs, $1.08; 1 coal shovel, $1.25; matting for reception room, $11.00; dust pan and brush, 35 and 60 cts.; 2 scrubbing brushes, 50 cts. each, $1.00; 2 water buckets, 37½ cts. each, 75 cts.; broom 45 cts.; soap 50 cts.; soda 30 cts; kindling wood $2.50; 2 papers of tacks, 16; 200 stamped envelopes, $4.96; 1 bag of salt 25 cts.; 1 coal hod $1.25; 2 coal hods, 87½ cts. each, $1.75; lantern 1.50; tin can 25 cts. These things amount to $508.27, leaving a balance of $496.73. Out of this sum that remains I have to pay for tin-roofing the cook room, a building 9 by 14 feet, $15.00, just the cost of the materials. I must have a new top to the cooking stove, the range is being overhauled, a stove is to be bought for the matron's room, and stove pipe entire for the matron's, cooking, and school-room stoves. Then I have to buy a lot of second-hand chairs, tables, and bureaus. Also to buy materials for under garments for girls, and for night dresses. I have also bought a sewing-machine at $60.00, to do most of the great amount of sewing that will have to be done for the children connected with the Home and the mission generally. Taking out the bill for the sewing-machine, it leaves us $436.00 to buy what I have already noticed that we must have, also tin and wooden ware, repairing glass in the house, getting plain curtains for the windows. Then we must lay in a stock of provisions. Shoes and stockings are also to be purchased for the children.

Other pieces that I have written give further information. I have tried to do the best that can be done. Many of the things have been purchased at wholesale prices, and near the first cost. Every thing will be done that can be done for the colored children under our care.

I wish to have no other mission neglected for this. Let every brother and sister do as the Lord directs. The Lord has sent me into this field to do his work. I expect trials, hardships, temptations, backbitings, jealousies, slanders, and the like. Christ suffered from all these, and more; and if he who was harmless and undefiled so suffered, what better treatment can I, the chief of sinners, expect. Yet I have a multitude of friends, from Maine to Kansas. Encouraging letters come from all quarters. My begging is done at the throne of grace. The matter of giving lies between the Lord and his people. I have confidence in the Almighty. He will provide. My cares are many, but his grace is sufficient. Yours, etc., in the highways and hedges, FRANCIS H. BURBANK.

DON'T YOU DO IT!

And do you not be so simple as to allow any body to persuade you to do it; if you do you will rue it, wish you had not done it, and try speedily to have it undone, or "done back again": i. e., do not go and move your stoves in your meeting-house from the door up to the pulpit. WE did have ours transferred; and after having tried it, we would be willing to give the man that had it done more than what the pipe came to, if he or any one else would only move them half way back again. Men are always prone to go to extremes, and this stove movement is after "that sort." In those houses we have seen, the stoves were placed about midway from the door to the desk, and they certainly gave the most agreeable temperature to the whole room of any stove arrangement that we have ever seen.

But, what is of vastly more importance, is to have the sexton (and if you have not got one, make one at once, or else act in that capacity yourself) light the fires (in cold weather) from two to three hours before meeting time, and then the entire room can be equalized in temperature, all be comfortable, and nobody freeze or roast.

HELPING THE PREACHER.

Dr. Beecher once said to an old lady, who had expressed her wonder to him that she was permitted to live, as she could not do any more good, "You are doing a great deal of good; you help me to preach every Sunday." She was greatly surprised, and inquired how it could be. "In the first place," said he, "you are always in your seat on the Sabbath, and that helps me; in the second place, you are always wide awake, and you look right into my face, and that helps me; in the third place, I often see the tears running down your face, and that helps me very much."

MUTUAL FORBEARANCE.

The house will be kept in a turmoil where there is no toleration of each other's errors. If you lay a single stick of wood in the grate, and apply fire to it, it will go out; put on another stick, and they will burn; and half a dozen, and you will have a blaze. There are other fires of a kindred nature. If one member of the family gets into a passion, and is let alone, he will cool down, and possibly be ashamed and repent. But oppose temper to temper, pile on all the fuel, draw in others of the group, and let one harsh answer be followed by another, and there will be a blaze which will enwrap them all.

A QUEER OLD LADY.

How different people appear at different times, as, when we are sick or well, rejoicing or mourning, laughing or weeping. A few days since, I met an old lady, who nodded very familiarly to me, and yet I hesitated to call her by name, lest I should miscall it.—She looked old, and yet young; soft and smiling, and yet wore stern frowns. She was fair in face, yet her hands were iron. It seemed as if the wind would blow her away, and yet she moved with the strength of an elephant.

"Why, sir," said she, "you seem to stare at me as though you had seen me a thousand times before."

"That may be, madam; but I never saw you so loaded down with all sorts of things. I am curious to know about them. Would it be rude if I should ask you a few questions?"

"Not at all. Ask away."

"Well, what are you going to do with those small, thin, ladies' shoes?"

"Why, make the ladies wear them, to be sure."

"Not in this cold, wet season? Why, I can hardly keep my feet warm in these thick, double-soled boots. I must have over-shoes. How can they wear such thin, cold-catching shoes?"

"O, sir, I have only to bring them to them, and they never hesitate a moment. They know me!"

"And those little half-dresses, hanging on your arm?"

"They are to put on little children in cold weather, to walk out in—naked at the knees, naked at the neck, and hardly covering half the body. You can't think how eager parents are for these dresses."

"What have you in this little tin box?"

"Lozenges, sir; troches, hoarhound candy—things that always go with thin shoes and thin dresses. And this bright red box, sir, contains what is called 'conscience salve,' which I always keep on hand to rub on the conscience when any one feels that he has done wrong in obeying me. It's in great demand, sir, and a certain cure."

"Pray, madam, what are those screws for?"

"Why, to pinch the feet, and make them look small, without regard to corns and bunions. They can't wear those dear little shoes except they have these pinchers to go with them."

"And that great heap of books in your arms?"

"Those! They are the latest, most exciting, and the weakest, most silly novels. But I hand them out, and shake my head with a smile, and crowds read them."

"Well, madam, I'm very inquisitive, I know, but I do want to know what you have in that bag thrown over your shoulder."

"A great variety of valuables—such things as 'late suppers'—in great demand, and which send people to the grave early, and thus make room for more. Then there are 'late hours,' and 'late rising,' and all manner of hair-dressing, and expensive dressing—things that ladies must have, even if their husbands fail. Here are diamond pins and rings—just the thing to stir up envy and create extravagance. Here are gold watches, cigars, meerschaum pipes, gold-headed canes, eye-glasses, and all manner of things to suit all manner of people. And I laugh and coax, and frown and command, till I get them to wear and use them, and do just what I please. Now I have stopped to talk with you a few moments; don't you see what a crowd have gathered around me—low necks, thin shoes, muslin dresses, tight boots; some on crutches, some coughing, some breathing short, all crowding to get near me, and when I move you will see how they all run, and rush, and crowd after me. O, sir, I am the great power of the world. I rule kings and queens, beggars and philosophers. Don't you see?"

"Truly, madam, truly. And now may I ask your name?"

"Name! FASHION, sir; my name is MRS. PREVAILING FASHION! I thought every body know me!"—Rev. John Todd, D. D.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

FEMALE DRESS.

BY DIO LEWIS, M. D.

The subject is vitally important. Beside it, diet, exercise and baths sink into insignificance. My pale-faced countrywomen are dying for lack of room, freedom; they are being stifled.

Dress reformers proclaim short skirts as the remedy. This is well. The short skirt is an improvement—a movement upward, but of no consequence compared with the readjustment of the dress about the middle of the body. That part contains the vital organs. Is a man strong? it is because the middle of his body is strong. Is a woman vigorous? it is because the middle of her body is developed and active.

The changes needed in woman's dress are the following, and I believe their importance is in the order named:

1. The dress about the waist is to be very loose, without whalebones or other stiffening, and the skirts carried with suspenders over the shoulders.

2. The arms and legs are to be so warmly dressed as to maintain a healthy circulation.

3. The skirts to fall to the knee.

I have said that the importance of these several changes is in the order named. The lungs, heart, liver and stomach, which together make up the fountain of life, must have room, or the vital forces must halt. With the corset and tight-lacing, these organs are reduced one-third in size and two-thirds in motion.

Health and equilibrium are interchangeable terms. Whoever, whatever living thing has defective circulation has defective health. Flannels, cotton padding, thick shawls, cloaks and furs piled upon the chest, while the legs are covered with a single thickness of cotton cloth surrounded by a balloon in the shape of a hoop, steams the chest and freezes the legs. The legs and arms, separated so far from the centre of the body, surrounded by the cold air, need, to say the least, as much clothing as the body, and ought to have one or, in cold weather in this climate, two thicknesses of knit woolen. Women complain to me of headache, tell me their blood is all in their head and chest, while their feet are as cold as ice. With the fashionable dress how can it be otherwise? Let them cover the limbs with one or two thicknesses of warm flannel, and the feet with a warm dress, and the head and chest will be immediately relieved.

The short skirts, although in importance to health the least vital of these three changes, is nevertheless very important. The skirt should fall a little below the knee. The pants should be the large Turkish pants, which, made long enough to fall to the ankle, and fastened at the bottom by being drawn close about the ankle with a slight elastic cord, should then be drawn up to the place usually occupied by the garter, and pulled down to the middle of the calf of the leg. When going out into the cold air the exposed part of the leg should be covered with a patent leather anklet, and during the cold season of the year that part of the leg should be covered with two thicknesses of woolen. While all this peculiar arrangement is, in point of convenience and protection, less satisfactory than the straight pants, such as gentlemen wear, I nevertheless advise it, because it is very easy to introduce the short dress with these pants, and very difficult to introduce what is known as the Bloomer costume. For example: in my school at Lexington, Mass., I had more than a hundred fashionable young ladies last winter, all of whom wore constantly during the school year the short dress, the gymnastic costume, while all the fashionable ladies of the village outside of the institution adopted the same dress. Indeed, it is almost rare to see in Lexington a lady with a long dress. An attempt to introduce the Bloomer costume, I am sure, would have proved a failure, not in our own house, perhaps, but in its influence outside. All through our part of the country, when we go out to ride, we see ladies in the short dress. Indeed, some of the clergymen, who observed that our young ladies changed for the long dress on going to church, came to me to say that they hoped I would allow them to come in their short dresses, for they liked very much to see them. A single lady appearing in the streets of Boston in the Bloomer costume attracts a crowd of boys, while twenty of our young ladies can go into Boston without remark or notice. The fact is, we men and boys are very jealous of our breeches, but the gymnastic costume does not involve that garment, and so we lords of creation give our consent to its adoption by our sisters.—Herald of Health.

EATING BETWEEN MEALS.

There is scarcely a dietetic habit more common among the people of this country, or one that is more injurious to health, and that tends more to break down the integrity of the digestive organs, than that of eating between meals.

This habit is almost universal with the children of the present day. Parents generally have imbibed the mistaken idea that children must eat much oftener than adults—that they should eat at any and at all times of the day, or as often as they may fancy that they are hungry.

This habit probably does more than any other one thing to lay the foundation for those much dreaded diseases, liver complaint and dyspepsia, with all their train of evils. Physiology determinately establishes for us certain general principles in regard to diet, to which we must give heed, or serious results inevitably follow. The fact is fully established by physiology that the digestive organs need regular periods of rest, just as much as any other organ, or portion of the vital domain, and without it they must fail.

In eating between meals, we necessarily interfere with the digestion of the previous meal, interrupting its progress, and at the same time adding an extra amount of labor for the already heavily taxed digestive organs to perform, and rob them of that rest that nature demands; for if we eat but a piece of pie, a crust of bread, or even an apple, the entire process of digestion has to be gone through with, just the same as if we had taken a full meal.

Now the time requisite for fully and perfectly digesting an ordinary meal, is at least five hours, and no food of any kind should be introduced into the stomach while this important process is going on, lest it be interrupted, or so hurried that the food does not remain in the small intestines, a sufficient length of time for its nutriment to be taken up and conveyed to the thoracic duct preparatory to its entering the blood.

The true philosophy is, that the human stomach (at least at any time after the person has arrived at the age of two or three years) needs as many hours of rest out of the twenty-four as it labors. If this be true, what the effect must be of so eating between meals as to cause the stomach to labor incessantly for at least eighteen hours out of every twenty-four, I leave the candid reader to judge.—Health Reformer.

BISHOP WHATELY'S BRAIN TONIC.

A hard thinker, he required compensating sleep. Man from first to last is fighting a battle with death, through the tissues. These are wasted by labor, but as long as they can be fully renewed by food, the man lives and is well. Otherwise he decays and dies. So with the brain; it weakens under continued protracted labor, particularly at night. Sleep restores it to strength and fresh inclination and capacity for work. If sleep fails to do this, or if sufficient sleep be not allowed for the repose and invigorating of the brain, its powers decay, and even insanity may supervene through overwork, especially at undue times. No one knew this better than Whately, who may be said to have slept as fast as he could. Idle people are not to take this as a justification of their sluggardism. When Whately felt fatigue from overtaxing the brain in the day-time, he would close his books, and a quarter of an hour after, you might have seen the following instructive spectacle:

The first occasion on which I ever saw Dr. Whately (observes a correspondent) was under curious circumstances. I accompanied my friend Dr. Field to visit professionally some members of the archbishop's household at Redesdale, Stillorgan. The ground was covered by two feet of snow, and the thermometer was down almost to zero. Knowing the archbishop's character for humanity, I expressed much surprise to see an old laboring man, in his shirt-sleeves, felling a tree "after hours" in the demesne, while a heavy shower of sleet drifted pitilessly on his wrinkled face. "That laborer," replied Dr. Field, "whom you think the victim of prelatical [illegible], is no other than the archbishop curing himself of a headache. When his grace has been reading and writing more than ordinarily, and finds any pain or confusion about the cerebral organization, he puts both to flight by rushing out with an ax, and slashing away at some ponderous trunk. As soon as he finds himself in a profuse perspiration he gets into bed, wraps himself in Limerick blankets, falls into a profound slumber, and gets up buoyant.—Life of Whately.

"DEATH IS THE GATE TO ENDLESS JOY."—Watts.

What says Apostle Peter?
His words dost thou forget?
"For David into heaven
Is not ascended yet."
How read bold Paul's epistles?
Please tell us what they say:
"Henceforth a crown of righteousness
He'll give me in that day:

"And not unto me only,
The crown laid up above,
But unto all them also
That his appearing love."
How speaks good Job, the patient?
His words we ponder o'er,—
"Man lieth down, nor rises
Till the heavens be no more."

Hark! list! a voice from Patmos
Thus speaks, oh church, to thee,—
"Behold I come, and quickly,
And my reward with me."
Amen, even so, Lord Jesus,
With anxious heart we wait
The day of resurrection,—
Of "endless joy" the gate.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL.

Doctors of divinity puzzled, not understanding the Scriptures, nor the power of God—ignorant of our faith and hope—glimmerings of light.

(Concluded.)

Let us pause here and inquire, What "land" is this? "Upon the land of my people," etc. It is a land under the curse, of course; for upon it "shall come up thorns and briers." It may refer to the land of Palestine especially given to Israel; and it includes the whole earth, by promise to "Abraham and his seed," which seed "is Christ," and "all in Christ." "For if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."—Gal. 3: 16–18, 26–29. "All the land," unbounded, including the four cardinal points of the compass, was given in covenant everlasting to them. How long shall the curse remain "upon the land"? "Until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high," etc., etc. This is plain as the noon-day. And this pouring out of the Spirit is not synchronous with the one predicted by the prophet Joel; but occurs "in the times of the restitution of all things"—or restoration—or regenesis,—and when God shall "make all things new"; "and there shall be no more curse."—Rev. 21 and 22.

Certain is it, that it is when "a king shall reign in righteousness."—Isa. 32: 1. And he does not thus reign as King, until he returns at his second advent to judge the nations and the world in righteousness; "until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ; who in his times he shall show, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords." 2 Tim. 6: 14, 15; 4: 1; Luke 21; 27, 31; 19: 15; Dan. 7: 13, 14, 27.

"Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty; they shall behold the land. . . . . Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down. . . . The Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our Lawgiver, the Lord is our King . . . and the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick. The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity."—Isa. 33: 17–24. This is a prophecy that is to be fulfilled in an immortal and sinless kingdom, and in "the world to come"; and anticipated in "the promise to Abraham and his seed." "By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country. For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."—Heb. 11: 9, 10. Read also Isa. 35: 1–4; 55: 13; 25: 6–9; especially where the restitution, the resurrection, and the Lord's coming are clearly and most beautifully set forth as occurring at one and the same epoch; and which is quoted by St. Paul to be fulfilled "at the sound of the last trump."—1 Cor. 15: 50–58. Compare Isa. 9: 6, 7; 11: 3–9; 65: 17–25; which prophecies are to be fulfilled in the New Earth, and accordingly subsequent to the final conflagration. 2 Pet. 3; Rev. 21.

To this view of the personal advent, to complete thus the work of redemption, Dr. Hopkins in his Essay objects: "A suspension of the dispensation of the Spirit at, or near the present point, must fail to bring due honor in that one great work which we know is to be accomplished. . . . It cuts short and supersedes the work of the Spirit."

Rev. E. Marvin, D. D., in the discussion of the essay remarks: "The question of Christ's second coming, as discussed in a literal sense, inspires us in its materialism; in its spiritual sense it is elevating. I am afraid to hear of, or consider possible, any diminution of the office work of the Holy Spirit."

The obscure view in the minds of these divines respecting the teaching of the Scriptures relative to the future hope of the church, and as held by us, is truly lamentable. When will they emerge from darkness into light? This blindness of faith led a certain Doctor of Divinity in the city of Boston a few years since to make the unjustifiable remark: "The doctrine of the second personal coming of Jesus Christ immediately to judgment is an insult to the Holy Spirit."

If possible, to enlighten these men and the church at large, though we are but worms, little, and small,—yet we have much faith,—let us state again, as we have already shown from the Scriptures, that "the ministration of the Spirit" having begun, will never terminate, no more than the blessings of the New Covenant having begun on the death of the Testator, and the cross, terminate. It reaches, like those favored blessings, into "the world to come." The work of the Spirit is not to be "suspended"—"cut short"—"superseded"—nor "diminished" by the coming of Jesus Christ.

Rev. Dr. Eddy in his remarks shows that there are glimmerings of light. Let us take courage while we hear him: "The work of the Holy Spirit is not to be superseded; while the departure of Christ was necessary to the gift of the Spirit, his coming may be necessary for the completion of his work."

To this view we most heartily agree. And yet is it not strange that Dr. Eddy should be so puzzled about the manner of Christ's coming? He remarks that he "could not define the character of Christ's advent—what kind Christ's coming was to be; yet he believed in a manifestation, a something which shall end the reign of antichrist." I would inquire of the Doctor, Of what "character" was "the departure of Christ"? And how can he possibly be perplexed as to "what kind" Christ's coming was to be, when the angels were so definite upon this very point? "THIS SAME JESUS, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like MANNER as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts 1: 11. The analysis of this language bids defiance to mistake. And so does the apostle's language,—"The Lord himself shall descend from heaven."—1 Thess. 4. 16.

And why should Dr. Eddy "believe in a manifestation, a something which shall end the reign of antichrist," other than the real Christ himself, when the apostle is so very explicit as to say, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ"; and then, "that man of sin," "the son of perdition," "that wicked," "the Lord shall destroy with the brightness of HIS COMING"?—2 Thess. 1st and 2nd chaps.

Dr. Hopkins (the Essayist) followed Dr. Eddy in remarks in which he admitted that "he had not given the subject of the personal advent that critical study which it demanded." This was a candid admission, and we hope that himself and others who composed that association will hereafter be induced to give it due consideration. Dr. Hopkins "knows" one thing, and that is, "Christ will come in his own time and manner." So we all believe, and believe more,—that he has revealed both the "time" and the "manner." 1 Pet. 1st ch. He also confesses his "inability to answer some of the arguments advanced by the millennarians." These concessions do honor to Dr. Hopkins, and we do hope and pray for his further enlightenment in the truth.

President Stearns said: "The difficulties in the discussion of this question were Biblical. He believed in the second coming of the Son of man—not physically, perhaps, . . . it will be in the coming of the Holy Ghost, in the power of the Holy Spirit exerted without measure. . . . There need be no difficulty in praying for the second coming of Christ, and for the Holy Spirit, for they are one and the same thing. Let us not fail to cry, 'Come, Lord Jesus.'"

Alas! this is darkness itself. "If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch." There is no escaping. "The second coming of the Son of man not physical"! What was the character of the first? St. Peter says, "These things which God before showed by the mouth of all his holy prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled." And adds, "He shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you, whom the heaven must retain, until the times of the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, since the world began."—Acts 3: 18–21.

Does President Stearns take the ground that the first of these advents in fulfillment of the prophets was literal and physical, and the second not? By what rule of interpretation, or mode of exegesis? St. Paul affirms also, "Now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. . . . And unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—Heb. 9: 26–28. Was the one event physical, and the other to be "the coming of the Holy Ghost exerted without measure; for the second coming of Christ and the Holy Spirit are one and the same thing"? Let shame and confusion of face blush upon the cheeks of such "blind guides" of the church and her young ministry!

Who is "the Son of man," that we should look for him? To whom does Jesus himself refer when he says, "They shall see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory"?—Luke 21: 27.

Dr. Barnes, in his Notes on Daniel 7: 13, has well said, "Son of man is used in the New Testament when applied by the Savior to himself, there is an undoubted reference to this fact—that he sustained a peculiar relation to our race; that he was in all respects a man; that he was one of us; that he had so taken our nature on himself that there was a peculiar propriety that a term which would at once designate this should be given to him." And is this fact to be overlooked and ignored? John Knox boldly affirmed his faith when he said, "Has not the Lord Jesus, for whom we have suffered, carried up our flesh into heaven? and will he not so come again? Yes, and with expedition." Nor will the true church be betrayed into the belief that "the second coming of Christ and the Holy Spirit are one and the same thing"; and that when they join in the catholic cry, "Come, Lord Jesus," they pray for the descent of the Holy Spirit! No. The Lord in his glorified humanity will come in answer to prayer and in fulfillment of promise.

Amid the perplexity of the discussion, Rev. Mr. Wellman said that he "wished that the essayist of the morning (Dr. Hopkins) would grapple with the subject, as the whole question was one of Biblical interpretation." But how can Dr. Hopkins do this, unless he gives the subject a second investigation, since he confessed that he "had not given the subject that critical study which it demanded"; and an "inability" to meet the arguments "of millennarians." We join in the wish expressed, and hope that Dr. Hopkins will yet "grapple with the subject" in the light and spirit and order of true "Biblical interpretation." We have nothing to fear, but all to hope for in such a contest.

Upon the work which the Holy Spirit as an agent is yet to effect, Dr. Hopkins has a glimmering of light:—"The threefold distinction in the Godhead is intimated by the mention of the Spirit of God in the very opening of the Bible, and that a clue is perhaps given to the work was then both constructive and reconstructive in material things, so now the work may be for the production of moral beauty and order." But why reason so? If one office work of the Holy Spirit is constructive and reconstructive in material things; and as at "the beginning" the Holy Spirit was engaged with the Father and the Son in the work of creation (Gen. 1st and 2nd chapters), why may we not expect his agency in the "restitution of all things," or regenesis? Especially as Dr. Hopkins adds, "That its analogy with the work of the Spirit of God in the construction of the first creation would seem to require that it should go on to its completion."

It is from the teaching of analogy and Scripture that we are led to look for a reconstruction or restitution of our globe to its Eden state, and at the return of our divine Lord and Redeemer. The great agency in the bringing about of this most desirable and happy and eternal end of physical, moral, and intellectual perfectness and glory, is the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit evermore, and in all things one and inseparable, world without end. Amen. O. R. FASSETT.

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

THE SECOND APOLOGY ANSWERED.

The second apology that Discontent makes is,—"I have a great part of my estate melted away, and trading begins to fail."

God is pleased sometimes to bring his children very low, and cut them short in their estate: it fares with them as with that widow who had nothing in her house save a pot of oil. 2 Kings 4: 2. But be content.

1. God hath taken away your estate, but not your portion. This is a sacred paradox. Honor and estate are not a part of a christian's jointure; they are rather accessories, than essentials, and are extrinsical and foreign; therefore the loss of these cannot denominate a man miserable: still the portion remains,—The Lord is my portion, saith my soul. Lam. 3: 24. Suppose one were worth a million of money, and he should chance to lose a pin off his sleeve; this is no part of his estate, nor can we say he is undone: the loss of sublunary comforts is not so much to a christian's portion as the loss of a pin is to a million.—These things shall be added to you (Matt. 6: 33), they shall be cast in as overplus. When a man buys a piece of cloth, he hath an inch or two given into the measure. Now, though he lose his inch of cloth, yet he is not undone; for still the whole piece remains. Our outward estate is not so much in regard of the portion, as an inch of cloth is to the whole piece; why then should a christian be discontented, when the title to his spiritual treasure remains? A thief may take away all my money that I have about me, but not my land; still a christian hath a title to the land of promise. Mary hath chosen the better part, which shall not be taken from her. Luke 10: 42.

2. Perhaps, if thy estate had not been lost, thy soul might have been lost; outward comforts do often quench inward heat. God cannot bestow a jewel upon us, but we fall so in love with it, that we forget him who gave it. What pity is it that we should commit idolatry with the creature! God is forced sometimes to drain away an estate: the plate and jewels are often cast overboard to save the passenger. Many a man may curse the time that ever he had such an estate; it hath been an enchantment to draw away his heart from God. Some there are that will be rich, and they fall into a snare. 1 Tim. 6: 9. Art thou troubled that God hath prevented a snare? Riches are thorns. Matt. 13: 7. Art thou angry that God hath pulled away a thorn from thee? Riches are compared to thick clay.—Hab. 2: 6. Perhaps thy affections, which are the feet of the soul, might have stuck so fast in this golden clay, that they could not have ascended up to heaven. Be content. If God stop outward comforts, it is that the stream of our love may run faster another way.

3. If your estate be small, yet God can bless a little. It is not how much money we have, but how much blessing. He that often curseth the bags of gold, can bless the meal in the barrel, and the oil in the cruise. What if thou hast not the full fleshpots? Yet thou hast a promise—I will bless her provision (Psa. 132: 15), and then a little goes a great way. Be content; thou hast the dew of a blessing distilled. A dinner of green herbs, where love is, is sweet—I may add, where the love of God is. Another may have more estate than you, but more care; more riches, less rest; more revenues, but withal more occasions of expense. He hath a greater inheritance, yet perhaps God doth not give him power to eat thereof (Eccl. 6: 2); he hath the dominion of his estate, not the use; he holds more, but enjoys less. In a word, thou hast less gold than he, perhaps less guilt.

4. You did never so thrive in your spiritual trade; your heart was never so low, as since your condition was so low; you were never so poor in Spirit, never so rich in faith. You did never run the ways of God's commandments so fast, as since some of your golden weights were taken off. You never had such trading for heaven in all your life. You did never make such adventures upon the promises, as since you left off your sea adventures. This is the best kind of merchandize. O christian, thou never hadst such incomes of the Spirit, such spring-tides of joy: and what though weak in estate, if strong in assurance, be content. What you have lost one way, you have gained another.

5. Be your losses what they will in this kind—remember, in every loss there is only a suffering; but in every discontent there is a sin; and one sin is worse than a thousand sufferings. What! because some of my revenues are gone, shall I part with some of my righteousness? Shall my faith and patience go too? Because I do not possess an estate, shall I not therefore possess my own spirit? O learn to be content!

For the World's Crisis.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE INQUIRING.

I propose to give a few verses from an old translation of the New Testament.

1 Cor. 15: 22:—"For as by Adam all the human race was subjected to mortality, so by Christ Jesus shall all the pious dead be entitled to immortality." 23d:—"But every one in this restitution in a regular gradation is raised. Christ was the first that rose from death to immortality; the next will be the virtuous christians, at his glorious advent."

Praise the Lord! that will soon take place.

24th:—"Subsequent to this will be the final dissolution of the globe—which event will take place; but not till after he hath surrendered up his kingdom to God, even the Supreme Father; not till after he hath totally crushed and demolished every hostile dominion, every opposing civil power and secular sovereignty."

25th:—"For he must retain his kingdom until he hath brought all his adversaries prostrate at his feet."

26th:—"The last foe he shall dethrone and annihilate is DEATH." Praise the Lord for the assurance that death will be annihilated for ever. But when will it be? will it be when Christ comes and commences his work of restitution?

If we prefer the wisdom of man to answer, which places in the past what God puts in the future, viz., the "one thousand years" of Rev. 20th, then the question has already been answered, but not to satisfy me.

For one, I have read and re-read on this subject of doing away with the reign of Christ for the time specified by the Revelator, and have candidly listened to the best arguments presented by those who take that view, for some years; but must confess I have failed to see any harmony or sticking-together of that theory. For example, Satan, or the old devil, was bound in 792, and in 1792 was loosed, making Rev. 12th and 20th to refer to the same character, and the 18th and 19th chapters refer to events just preceding the coming of Christ; in fact, the 19th introduces us to him who comes riding on the white horse, when the marriage of the Lamb and his wife takes place. Then when we come to the 20th, from the 1st verse to the 11th, we are to leap backwards for nearly eleven hundred years in the past; then when we come to the 11th verse, and on to the end of the chapter, which speaks of the dead small and great standing before God, we are then to take this great leap over eleven hundred years (nearly) into the future. This is the course I have seen taken by one who is a strong advocate of the thousand years in the past, and one, too, whom I love as a devoted christian. The theory seems unsound to me, and unscriptural.

A MAGNIFICENT SIGN.

"And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind."—REV. 6: 13.

Our readers cannot fail to peruse with startling interest the fine description of the last November shower of meteors, which we give below from the leading British journal at London. Particular attention is called to the splendid conception of the heavens being swept as with "a mighty wind:" The very language of John, as above. The possible occurrence of a shower of burning stones, at some future day, is a terrible thought, and suggests at once Josh. 10: 11, and the near fulfillment of Psa. 18: 12, and Rev. 16: 21. Truly great events are at the door! D. T. T.

THE METEORIC SHOWER.

A Magnificent Display of Shooting Stars.

From the London Times of Nov. 15.

In the night between Tuesday and yesterday, they who chose to watch, and were not discouraged by the doubts of astronomers, were rewarded with a spectacle which cannot be imagined or forgotten. The sky was unusually clear, and, till about an hour before midnight, it made no sign, and the eye turned in vain to the east, as men look at a fortress that will not give the challenge. But when the irregular circle of stars that had been indicated by former observers had well cleared the horizon, and moved some points to the south, first one meteor then another shot across the sky in various regions and with various directions, but plainly from that one quarter. The spectator had soon counted half-a-dozen; then he felt sure he had seen thirty; then six or seven in a minute; then they appeared faster than he could count them. Then there came two or three together; then not less than a dozen of all kinds. Some shot across the heavens, leaving long, bright, and lingering trains, the star itself seeming to explode and instantly disappear. Some darted as quickly and as bright, but without trains. Some struck the sight, like sparks from a forge, everywhere at once. Some seemed to fall, over trees or houses, bright to the last, but with the ruddy hues of a lower atmosphere. Look where we would it was the same; in the far west, and throughout the entire north, there was either the bright glancing speck of light or the long train, or what seemed an actual ball of light, that illuminated the country, and was slow to die away. As the night advanced these meteors chased one another across the sky, following in one another's track, or running side by side. The heavens seemed alive with this unwonted host. There were times when it seemed as if a mighty wind had caught the old stars, loosed them from their holdings, and swept them across the firmament. The Olympian himself might have been supposed on his throne launching his bolts against an offending or forgetful world. There he was all but visible, for at that one place there were meteors that appeared, only as spots to disappear, or to traverse only just as much space as would show motion. That, in fact, was the very pathway of all this artillery, which was thus foreshortened like a column of soldiers, as seen by those that have to bear the brunt. In the course of two or three hours there must have been many thousands of these visitors, usually so rare. Even when the sky became partially overcast, they still showed themselves at every opening, and shone through the vail of clouds. Few, indeed, who saw it had ever seen the like, or could ever expect to see it. As to the sounds commonly heard on these occasions—the explosions, the hissings and the rumbling—we cannot speak, for the wind was high, and it must be remembered that the stillness ascribed by poets to the night has utterly left this isle, for hardly is there a spot where it is not possible any hour of the night to hear several mail or luggage trains. . . .

Once in a human generation, and thrice in a century—for in this matter man and the material universe seem strangely in accord—this earth has to encounter an immense cloud of stones revolving round the sun, in an orbit of the same size as its own, but in a contrary direction. This cloud of stones is believed to constitute a sort of ring, diffused over the whole orbit, like a great highway of rolling or flying stones, though not in uniform density. However, there is no escaping them, whatever they are, for the breadth of this highway or stream is compared to the moon's orbit, and it takes two or three successive years, we should say, successive Novembers, for the earth to enter and clear it. These stones enter our atmosphere with a velocity of forty miles a second, and destroy themselves, as it were, by their own violence, for, when once arrested by our grosser air, they are instantly melted and dissipated in the air. That process, however, is only possible with very small stones, estimated by grains, for an aerolite of only a few pounds could only have its surface affected by such a momentary operation. Is it quite impossible that some day the earth may have to encounter more bulky metal, more comparable to our mundane artillery? Showers of stones there have been; and there evidently is no limit to their size either in history or in science, for the laws which govern the movement of every body in our solar system apply equally to all sizes and all substances, from this earth to a grain of dust, from a mass of metal to a vapor. Here is a shower of missiles, of unknown weight, and inconceivable velocity, always in motion from some unknown battery, and every human generation has to run the gauntlet. Will this atmosphere of ours always prove an absolute protection, and turn off these bolts, as merit is said to do the shafts of envy and detraction? That is a question at least to be thought of."

For the World's Crisis.

A CONFESSION; OR, THE SECRET OUT.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—In all honesty of soul before God, to whom I must one day give account, I now wish, as I consider it my duty, to confess unto salvation what I believe from the heart, of that form of doctrine which was taught by Paul the apostle, and by Jesus Christ, that "the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous unto good works." And again the apostle says, "Dearly beloved, I beseech you, as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul."

Now in consideration of the apostle's teaching us to abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul, I am led to inquire, what is that which wars against the soul? And the answer comes home in solemn tone,—every thing which contaminates, and defiles, or destroys the physical law of our nature; and destroys sensibility, by the which the soul is enslaved. And is it a sin thus to violate the law of our being? Yes. And why? Because the law of God forbids it, and every transgression of the law is sin, and shall receive a just recompense of reward. What is the reward of sin? Death is the penalty or reward of sin unrepented of. O the importance, then, of searching the Scriptures; for "in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me," says Jesus Christ.

Eternal life is rewarded unto all who repent of sin, and turn therefrom to serve the living God. But do none of those sin who break off and turn to serve the living God? Yes, if they let down their watch and become careless of his commands. What then? Will such have eternal life? No! unless they again repent, and become obedient to God's righteous commands. Then our advocate is with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, who is now at the right hand of the Father, pleading with him for us, until he bestows upon us the grace or favor of repentance. And then our hearts begin to melt before him in deep contrition for all our shortcomings in duty; then, in this our time of need, he looks with pitying eye upon us, and forgives us all our sins for Jesus' sake, and bids us go in peace and sin no more, and restores unto us the joy of his salvation.

So long as we are his obedient children, he gives us grace to overcome the sinfulness of our nature, and consequently all inclination to fulfill the lusts of the flesh is hereby subdued; hence, so far as all our fleshly lusts, which incline us to transgress God's righteous law, or the law of our being, are subdued or destroyed, so far we are enabled, by the grace of God, to work the work of righteousness, which it is quietness and assurance forever; and bring forth the fruits of the Spirit, which are "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law." And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lust. If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit, that we may be able to escape the corruption that is in the world through lusts. And besides this, "giving all diligence; add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. For if these things be in you and abound, they make you that you shall be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; but he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall."

Now, brethren and sisters, my reasons for writing these things are to show you wherein I have come short of glorifying God, by obedience to his plain command, to abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul, and show you that the reason of my fall has been for want of giving all diligence to make my calling and election sure. For you see, by the word of God, that if I had diligently, as commanded, searched the Scriptures, wherein we think we have eternal life, having my heart fully set within me to live out the principles therein contained, thereby making sure my calling and election, I never should have fallen into sin, but should have learned and obeyed the injunction of the apostle, to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made me free, and should not have suffered myself to be brought into bondage to the lust of the flesh; but should have gone on to perfect holiness in the fear of God, which is our reasonable service. But for want of instruction in the way of righteousness, and being ignorant of the Scriptures, which throughout teach purity, ignorantly, and soon after my conversion to God, I formed the sinful habit of taking snuff; and I followed the practice of it pretty thoroughly for about eighteen years.

But before I proceed farther, I wish to say, that, previous to my conversion, I was altogether uninstructed in those things pertaining to a godly life, so afterwards I had the lesson to learn; and if I had given more earnest heed to the sure, unerring word of God, and far less heed to the example of the professed church, I should have learned much faster, having been taught of Jesus Christ. But as regrets will not mend the past, I leave it; endeavoring to improve the future by rendering due service to God.

At the age of sixteen years, in the year 1831, in the month of March, I gave my heart to God, and he for Christ's sake forgave my sins, and brought me out of nature's darkness into the marvellous light and liberty of the gospel of Christ. I then for a time enjoyed the constant favor of God, and sought every opportunity wherein I could render him some service. But ere long, without thinking that any harm could come from it, I commenced, with others, just merely for amusement's sake, to take snuff, not knowing that it was a violation of the law of our nature, hence a transgression of God's righteous law. I soon found I had acquired a lusting after it, and it imperceptibly grew upon me, until I had not power or will to overcome it. I freely indulged myself in its practical use for nine years, before I ever thought there was, or could be sin it, or that it had the least effect upon my religious enjoyment.

About this time, a Methodist paper, called Zion's Herald, was providentially put into my hands, which contained an "Old Lady's Dream." She died and went to heaven's gate, and met the porter, and inquired of him if her name was recorded in the Lamb's Book of life. He returned and looked, and came back with the intelligence that he could not find it. She was not satisfied, and she sent him back again and again. The third time he came saying he had found it, but it was so obscured by tobacco smoke he could hardly discern it. When I read that, I thought that her dream was to show her the sin of using tobacco in any form; and if it was a sin for her to use it, why not for me? From that time forth, at times, I would think I would give it up, and would make an effort to do so, but would fail at every successive trial; and all this while I tried to serve God, and very many times in doing the commands of God in other respects, I enjoyed his favor, his Spirit witnessing with mine, showing me that I was accepted of him, and owned as his child; but the times when I enjoyed this manifestation of his love were transient and short; hence I constantly had my ups and downs, sometimes hoping, sometimes doubting, and hardly ever at rest.

But should you ask, why all this? I answer, because I ignorantly was living in the constant violation of the command to put away all filthiness of the flesh, and perfect holiness in the fear of God; and I think that if God had been like man he would have got out of patience with me for this one transgression, in less than eighteen years, and would not have blessed me even when I did do right. But our God is infinitely too good to be unkind; and he blesses us always in doing right, and withdraws the light of his countenance when we do wrong. O the wonderful forbearance of God!

But for nine years after reading the "Old Lady's Dream," I took snuff, sometimes feeling condemned, and sometimes not, and for a number of years after I embraced the Advent faith; and once in the time I went to a campmeeting in Westford, Ct., at which meeting there was much said upon the use of snuff and tobacco, so much that many thought the good effect of the meeting was destroyed by it, because so many seemed to be so stirred against it; and I was exceedingly tried about it, and asked the opinion of some in regard to its use. Some said it was wrong to use tobacco in any form; others said it would never shut any one out of the kingdom of God. So that served to strengthen me in the use of snuff; but still I never rested quietly about it afterwards, until I concluded I must give it up, and the more I tried to do so the less it seemed to be in my power or ability to yield to the decision; until one night, after having a very great trial over it, in which I wept and prayed much, and then retired to rest, when I dreamed I saw a little lad, of some ten or twelve years, who was almost constantly intoxicated with spirituous liquor, and he seemed to feel badly because he drank so much, but he said he had no power to overcome it. His sad condition excited my pity, and I went and threw my arms around his neck, and began to expostulate with him. He said he did not want to drink, but the strength of habit was so great he could not give it up; and I then told him he needed help, and I would help him.

The excitement in my dream awoke me, and as soon as my eyes were fairly open, I saw my own true condition and likeness. Thus I became convinced that, unless I gave up the use of snuff, I should be lost; for it was my idol, the first thing in the morning, and the last at night, and at all other times; and I had no power to overcome it, and unless the Lord helped me to overcome it I must die under its influence. I besought the Lord most earnestly to help me give it up, and take away all appetite for it. The next day I took up my box, took out of it one pinch of snuff, and attempted to take it, but threw it away, and placed my box again on my work-table, as I then followed sewing, and said with the full determination, by the help of God, never to take it up again; and by his grace I never have, neither have I ever wanted it; and to God be all the glory.

But a few days after, I went to Wilbraham to a campmeeting, and after I had gone, my mother found my box where I had left it, and thought I had forgotten it, and should be uneasy without it, consequently the next day she brought it to me; but I did not take it, and have never seen it since. I have never had one desire to take a pinch of snuff since, and the Lord blessed me wonderfully in giving it up; and after I had got the victory over it, I enjoyed such constant peace as I never did before, for a few years, until after I was married. Then I was ere long prevailed to go to smoking tobacco for the cure of dyspepsia. How soon the habit began to grow upon me, and very soon I found myself as much, or more attached to it than I was to snuff. It had a more powerful tendency to destroy my peace of mind, by the effect it had upon my nerves; for it served to weaken and so inflame my nervous system, that I many times lost power to control my mind; hence, in time of trial, care and perplexity, and labor more abundant than I had seeming strength, I often lost my patience, and felt as though my lot was intolerable. But there was no help, except in removing the cause; and the cause at this time was not suspected to be that of using tobacco, for I constantly made use of it, thinking thereby to gain strength to enable me to perform my daily labor. Much of the time, too, I felt that it was wrong to use it, but then I would try to justify myself in it, on account of using it for medicine.

But with me the sin did not stop with the mere use of it, although that was the chief cause or foundation of my inability for patient endurance of the trials which came upon I was constantly under the influence of this poisonous narcotic; for it surely is a most insiduous foe to the well-being of man in every respect; it is a species of intemperance which is injurious to body and mind, and demoralizing in its tendencies, and is polluting in its effect upon everything, not only the victim's own self, but the earth and air, temples of worship, and the bodies of men, temples of the Holy Ghost. It pollutes one's whole being, and, what is worst of all, constantly narcotized victims do not perceive it, until they are persuaded to give it up, and come fairly out from under the influence of the filthy practice.

The constant use I made of tobacco kept me nervous and irritable, and constantly chafing and fretting. And instead of seeking earnestly, by prayer, daily supplies of grace at the hand of God, as was my duty, I sought to obtain strength by the use of tobacco; but instead of gaining strength in this way, I lost it, both physically and spiritually, and my prayer became weak and faithless, until at length it became wholly suspended for a time, and I became perfectly unhappy, because I could neither enjoy the favor of God or the world; although I always endeavored to do right, as far as I understood what was right, for my family and all others; but so far as really glorifying God in such a condition, I did it not; although I honestly desired to, and could be satisfied with nothing short; but I then was altogether ignorant of the true cause of all my derangement in these matters, and little suspected that the use of tobacco was the secret of the whole. But thanks be to God forever more that the secret is fairly out, and I am free in Christ Jesus my Lord. But before I found out the secret I was most sorely chastened of the Lord.

"DEATH IS THE GATE TO ENDLESS JOY."—Watts.

What says Apostle Peter?
His words dost thou forget?
"For David into heaven
Is not ascended yet."
How read bold Paul's epistles?
Please tell us what they say:
"Henceforth a crown of righteousness
He'll give me in that day;

"And not unto me only,
The crown laid up above,
But unto all them also
That his appearing love."
How speaks good Job, the patient?
His words we ponder o'er,—
"Man lieth down, nor rises
Till the heavens be no more."

Hark! list! a voice from Patmos
Thus speaks, oh church, to thee,—
"Behold I come, and quickly,
And my reward with me."
Amen, even so, Lord Jesus,
With anxious heart we wait
The day of resurrection,—
Of "endless joy" the gate.

For the World's Crisis.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL.

Doctors of divinity puzzled, not understanding the Scriptures, nor the power of God—ignorant of our faith and hope—glimmerings of light.

(Concluded.)

Let us pause here and inquire, What "land" is this? "Upon the land of my people," etc. It is a land under the curse, of course; for upon it "shall come up thorns and briers." It may refer to the land of Palestine especially given to Israel; and it includes the whole earth, by promise to "Abraham and his seed," which seed "is Christ," and "all in Christ." "For if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."—Gal. 3: 16–18, 26–29. "All the land," unbounded, including the four cardinal points of the compass, was given in covenant everlasting to them. How long shall the curse remain "upon the land"? "Until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high," etc., etc. This is plain as the noon-day. And this pouring out of the Spirit is not synchronous with the one predicted by the prophet Joel; but occurs "in the times of the restitution of all things"—or restoration—or regenesis,—and when God shall "make all things new"; "and there shall be no more curse."—Rev. 21 and 22.

Certain is it, that it is when "a king shall reign in righteousness."—Isa. 32: 1. And he does not thus reign as King, until he returns at his second advent to judge the nations and the world in righteousness; "until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ; who in his times he shall show, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords." 2 Tim. 6: 14, 15; 4: 1; Luke 21; 27, 31; 19: 15; Dan. 7: 13, 14, 27.

"Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty; they shall behold the land. . . . . Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down. . . . The Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our Lawgiver, the Lord is our King . . . and the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick. The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity."—Isa. 33: 17–24. This is a prophecy that is to be fulfilled in an immortal and sinless kingdom, and in "the world to come"; and anticipated in "the promise to Abraham and his seed." "By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country. For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."—Heb. 11: 9, 10. Read also Isa. 35: 1–4; 55: 13; 25: 6–9; especially where the restitution, the resurrection, and the Lord's coming are clearly and most beautifully set forth as occurring at one and the same epoch; and which is quoted by St. Paul to be fulfilled "at the sound of the last trump."—1 Cor. 15: 50–58. Compare Isa. 9: 6, 7; 11: 3–9; 65: 17–25; which prophecies are to be fulfilled in the New Earth, and accordingly subsequent to the final conflagration. 2 Pet. 3; Rev. 21.

To this view of the personal advent, to complete thus the work of redemption, Dr. Hopkins in his Essay objects: "A suspension of the dispensation of the Spirit at, or near the present point, must fail to bring due honor in that one great work which we know is to be accomplished. . . . It cuts short and supersedes the work of the Spirit."

Rev. E. Marvin, D. D., in the discussion of the essay remarks: "The question of Christ's second coming, as discussed in a literal sense, inspires us in its materialism; in its spiritual sense it is elevating. I am afraid to hear of, or consider possible, any diminution of the office work of the Holy Spirit."

The obscure view in the minds of these divines respecting the teaching of the Scriptures relative to the future hope of the church, and as held by us, is truly lamentable. When will they emerge from darkness into light? This blindness of faith led a certain Doctor of Divinity in the city of Boston a few years since to make the unjustifiable remark: "The doctrine of the second personal coming of Jesus Christ immediately to judgment is an insult to the Holy Spirit."

If possible, to enlighten these men and the church at large, though we are but worms, little, and small,—yet we have much faith,—let us state again, as we have already shown from the Scriptures, that "the ministration of the Spirit" having begun, will never terminate, no more than the blessings of the New Covenant having begun on the death of the Testator, and the cross, terminate. It reaches, like those favored blessings, into "the world to come." The work of the Spirit is not to be "suspended"—"cut short"—"superseded"—nor "diminished" by the coming of Jesus Christ.

Rev. Dr. Eddy in his remarks shows that there are glimmerings of light. Let us take courage while we hear him: "The work of the Holy Spirit is not to be superseded; while the departure of Christ was necessary to the gift of the Spirit, his coming may be necessary for the completion of his work."

To this view we most heartily agree. And yet is it not strange that Dr. Eddy should be so puzzled about the manner of Christ's coming? He remarks that he "could not define the character of Christ's advent—what kind Christ's coming was to be; yet he believed in a manifestation, a something which shall end the reign of antichrist." I would inquire of the Doctor, Of what "character" was "the departure of Christ"? And how can he possibly be perplexed as to "what kind" Christ's coming was to be, when the angels were so definite upon this very point? "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like MANNER as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts 1: 11. The analysis of this language bids defiance to mistake. And so does the apostle's language,—"The Lord himself shall descend from heaven."—1 Thess. 4. 16.

And why should Dr. Eddy "believe in a manifestation, a something which shall end the reign of antichrist," other than the real Christ himself, when the apostle is so very explicit as to say, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ"; and then, "that man of sin," "the son of perdition," "that wicked," "the Lord shall destroy with the brightness of HIS COMING"?—2 Thess. 1st and 2nd chaps.

Dr. Hopkins (the Essayist) followed Dr. Eddy in remarks in which he admitted that "he had not given the subject of the personal advent that critical study which it demanded." This was a candid admission, and we hope that himself and others who composed that association will hereafter be induced to give it due consideration. Dr. Hopkins "knows" one thing, and that is, "Christ will come in his own time and manner." So we all believe, and believe more,—that he has revealed both the "time" and the "manner." 1 Pet. 1st ch. He also confesses his "inability to answer some of the arguments advanced by the millennarians." These concessions do honor to Dr. Hopkins, and we do hope and pray for his further enlightenment in the truth.

President Stearns said: "The difficulties in the discussion of this question were Biblical. He believed in the second coming of the Son of man—not physically, perhaps, . . . it will be in the coming of the Holy Ghost, in the power of the Holy Spirit exerted without measure. . . . There need be no difficulty in praying for the second coming of Christ, and for the Holy Spirit, for they are one and the same thing. Let us not fail to cry, 'Come, Lord Jesus.'"

Alas! this is darkness itself. "If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch." There is no escaping. "The second coming of the Son of man not physical"! What was the character of the first? St. Peter says, "These things which God before showed by the mouth of all his holy prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled." And adds, "He shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you, whom the heaven must retain, until the times of the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, since the world began."—Acts 3: 18–21.

Does President Stearns take the ground that the first of these advents in fulfillment of the prophets was literal and physical, and the second not? By what rule of interpretation, or mode of exegesis? St. Paul affirms also, "Now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. . . . And unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—Heb. 9: 26–28. Was the one event physical, and the other to be "the coming of the Holy Ghost exerted without measure; for the second coming of Christ and the Holy Spirit are one and the same thing"? Let shame and confusion of face blush upon the cheeks of such "blind guides" of the church and her young ministry!

Who is "the Son of man," that we should look for him? To whom does Jesus himself refer when he says, "They shall see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory"?—Luke 21: 27.

Dr. Barnes, in his Notes on Daniel 7: 13, has well said, "Son of man is used in the New Testament when applied by the Savior to himself, there is an undoubted reference to this fact—that he sustained a peculiar relation to our race; that he was in all respects a man; that he was one of us; that he had so taken our nature on himself that there was a peculiar propriety that a term which would at once designate this should be given to him." And is this fact to be overlooked and ignored? John Knox boldly affirmed his faith when he said, "Has not the Lord Jesus, for whom we have suffered, carried up our flesh into heaven? and will he not so come again? Yes, and with expedition." Nor will the true church be betrayed into the belief that "the second coming of Christ and the Holy Spirit are one and the same thing"; and that when they join in the catholic cry, "Come, Lord Jesus," they pray for the descent of the Holy Spirit! No. The Lord in his glorified humanity will come in answer to prayer and in fulfillment of promise.

Amid the perplexity of the discussion, Rev. Mr. Wellman said that he "wished that the essayist of the morning (Dr. Hopkins) would grapple with the subject, as the whole question was one of Biblical interpretation." But how can Dr. Hopkins do this, unless he gives the subject a second investigation, since he confessed that he "had not given the subject that critical study which it demanded"; and an "inability" to meet the arguments "of millennarians." We join in the wish expressed, and hope that Dr. Hopkins will yet "grapple with the subject" in the light and spirit and order of true "Biblical interpretation." We have nothing to fear, but all to hope for in such a contest.

Upon the work which the Holy Spirit as an agent is yet to effect, Dr. Hopkins has a glimmering of light:—"The threefold distinction in the Godhead is intimated by the mention of the Spirit of God in the very opening of the Bible, and that a clue is perhaps given to the work was then both constructive and reconstructive in material things, so now the work may be for the production of moral beauty and order." But why reason so? If one office work of the Holy Spirit is constructive and reconstructive in material things; and as at "the beginning" the Holy Spirit was engaged with the Father and the Son in the work of creation (Gen. 1st and 2nd chapters), why may we not expect his agency in the "restitution of all things," or regenesis? Especially as Dr. Hopkins adds, "That its analogy with the work of the Spirit of God in the construction of the first creation would seem to require that it should go on to its completion."

It is from the teaching of analogy and Scripture that we are led to look for a reconstruction or restitution of our globe to its Eden state, and at the return of our divine Lord and Redeemer. The great agency in the bringing about of this most desirable and happy and eternal end of physical, moral, and intellectual perfectness and glory, is the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit evermore, and in all things one and inseparable, world without end. Amen. O. R. Fassett.

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.

THE SECOND APOLOGY ANSWERED.

The second apology that Discontent makes is,—"I have a great part of my estate melted away, and trading begins to fail."

God is pleased sometimes to bring his children very low, and cut them short in their estate: it fares with them as with that widow who had nothing in her house save a pot of oil. 2 Kings 4: 2. But be content.

1. God hath taken away your estate, but not your portion. This is a sacred paradox. Honor and estate are not a part of a christian's jointure; they are rather accessories, than essentials, and are extrinsical and foreign; therefore the loss of these cannot denominate a man miserable: still the portion remains,—The Lord is my portion, saith my soul. Lam. 3: 24. Suppose one were worth a million of money, and he should chance to lose a pin off his sleeve; this is no part of his estate, nor can we say he is undone: the loss of sublunary comforts is not so much to a christian's portion as the loss of a pin is to a million.—These things shall be added to you (Matt. 6: 33), they shall be cast in as overplus. When a man buys a piece of cloth, he hath an inch or two given into the measure. Now, though he lose his inch of cloth, yet he is not undone; for still the whole piece remains. Our outward estate is not so much in regard of the portion, as an inch of cloth is to the whole piece; why then should a christian be discontented, when the title to his spiritual treasure remains? A thief may take away all my money that I have about me, but not my land; still a christian hath a title to the land of promise. Mary hath chosen the better part, which shall not be taken from her. Luke 10: 42.

2. Perhaps, if thy estate had not been lost, thy soul might have been lost; outward comforts do often quench inward heat. God cannot bestow a jewel upon us, but we fall so in love with it, that we forget him who gave it. What pity is it that we should commit idolatry with the creature! God is forced sometimes to drain away an estate: the plate and jewels are often cast overboard to save the passenger. Many a man may curse the time that ever he had such an estate; it hath been an enchantment to draw away his heart from God. Some there are that will be rich, and they fall into a snare. 1 Tim. 6: 9. Art thou troubled that God hath prevented a snare? Riches are thorns. Matt. 13: 7. Art thou angry that God hath pulled away a thorn from thee? Riches are compared to thick clay.—Hab. 2: 6. Perhaps thy affections, which are the feet of the soul, might have stuck so fast in this golden clay, that they could not have ascended up to heaven. Be content. If God stop outward comforts, it is that the stream of our love may run faster another way.

3. If your estate be small, yet God can bless a little. It is not how much money we have, but how much blessing. He that often curseth the bags of gold, can bless the meal in the barrel, and the oil in the cruise. What if thou hast not the full fleshpots? Yet thou hast a promise—I will bless her provision (Psa. 132: 15), and then a little goes a great way. Be content; thou hast the dew of a blessing distilled. A dinner of green herbs, where love is, is sweet—I may add, where the love of God is. Another may have more estate than you, but more care; more riches, less rest; more revenues, but withal more occasions of expense. He hath a greater inheritance, yet perhaps God doth not give him power to eat thereof (Eccl. 6: 2); he hath the dominion of his estate, not the use; he holds more, but enjoys less. In a word, thou hast less gold than he, perhaps less guilt.

4. You did never so thrive in your spiritual trade; your heart was never so low, as since your condition was so low; you were never so poor in Spirit, never so rich in faith. You did never run the ways of God's commandments so fast, as since some of your golden weights were taken off. You never had such trading for heaven in all your life. You did never make such adventures upon the promises, as since you left off your sea adventures. This is the best kind of merchandize. O christian, thou never hadst such incomes of the Spirit, such spring-tides of joy: and what though weak in estate, if strong in assurance, be content. What you have lost one way, you have gained another.

5. Be your losses what they will in this kind—remember, in every loss there is only a suffering; but in every discontent there is a sin; and one sin is worse than a thousand sufferings. What! because some of my revenues are gone, shall I part with some of my righteousness? Shall my faith and patience go too? Because I do not possess an estate, shall I not therefore possess my own spirit? O learn to be content!

For the World's Crisis.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE INQUIRING.

I propose to give a few verses from an old translation of the New Testament.

1 Cor. 15: 22:—"For as by Adam all the human race was subjected to mortality, so by Christ Jesus shall all the pious dead be entitled to immortality." 23d:—"But every one in this restitution in a regular gradation is raised. Christ was the first that rose from death to immortality; the next will be the virtuous christians, at his glorious advent."

Praise the Lord! that will soon take place.

24th:—"Subsequent to this will be the final dissolution of the globe—which event will take place; but not till after he hath surrendered up his kingdom to God, even the Supreme Father; not till after he hath totally crushed and demolished every hostile dominion, every opposing civil power and secular sovereignty."

25th:—"For he must retain his kingdom until he hath brought all his adversaries prostrate at his feet."

26th:—"The last foe he shall dethrone and annihilate is DEATH." Praise the Lord for the assurance that death will be annihilated for ever. But when will it be? will it be when Christ comes and commences his work of restitution?

If we prefer the wisdom of man to answer, which places in the past what God puts in the future, viz., the "one thousand years" of Rev. 20th, then the question has already been answered, but not to satisfy me.

For one, I have read and re-read on this subject of doing away with the reign of Christ for the time specified by the Revelator, and have candidly listened to the best arguments presented by those who take that view, for some years; but must confess I have failed to see any harmony or sticking-together of that theory. For example, Satan, or the old devil, was bound in 792, and in 1792 was loosed, making Rev. 12th and 20th to refer to the same character, and the 18th and 19th chapters refer to events just preceding the coming of Christ; in fact, the 19th introduces us to him who comes riding on the white horse, when the marriage of the Lamb and his wife takes place. Then when we come to the 20th, from the 1st verse to the 11th, we are to leap backwards for nearly eleven hundred years in the past; then when we come to the 11th verse, and on to the end of the chapter, which speaks of the dead small and great standing before God, we are then to take this great leap over eleven hundred years (nearly) into the future. This is the course I have seen taken by one who is a strong advocate of the thousand years in the past, and one, too, whom I love as a devoted christian. The theory seems unsound to me, and unscriptural.

A MAGNIFICENT SIGN.

"And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind."—Rev. 6: 13.

Our readers cannot fail to peruse with startling interest the fine description of the last November shower of meteors, which we give below from the leading British journal at London. Particular attention is called to the splendid conception of the heavens being swept as with "a mighty wind:" The very language of John, as above. The possible occurrence of a shower of burning stones, at some future day, is a terrible thought, and suggests at once Josh. 10: 11, and the near fulfillment of Psa. 18: 12, and Rev. 16: 21. Truly great events are at the door! D. T. T.

THE METEORIC SHOWER.

A Magnificent Display of Shooting Stars.

From the London Times of Nov. 15.

In the night between Tuesday and yesterday, they who chose to watch, and were not discouraged by the doubts of astronomers, were rewarded with a spectacle which cannot be imagined or forgotten. The sky was unusually clear, and, till about an hour before midnight, it made no sign, and the eye turned in vain to the east, as men look at a fortress that will not give the challenge. But when the irregular circle of stars that had been indicated by former observers had well cleared the horizon, and moved some points to the south, first one meteor then another shot across the sky in various regions and with various directions, but plainly from that one quarter. The spectator had soon counted half-a-dozen; then he felt sure he had seen thirty; then six or seven in a minute; then they appeared faster than he could count them. Then there came two or three together; then not less than a dozen of all kinds. Some shot across the heavens, leaving long, bright, and lingering trains, the star itself seeming to explode and instantly disappear. Some darted as quickly and as bright, but without trains. Some struck the sight, like sparks from a forge, everywhere at once. Some seemed to fall, over trees or houses, bright to the last, but with the ruddy hues of a lower atmosphere. Look whe[illegible] we would it was the same; in the far west, and throughout the entire north, there was either the bright glancing speck of light or the long train, or what seemed an actual ball of light, that illuminated the country, and was slow to die away. As the night advanced these meteors chased one another across the sky, following in one another's track, or running side by side. The heavens seemed alive with this unwonted host. There were times when it seemed as if a mighty wind had caught the old stars, loosed them from their holdings, and swept them across the firmament. The Olympian himself might have been supposed on his throne launching his bolts against an offending or forgetful world. There he was all but visible, for at that one place there were meteors that appeared, only as spots to disappear, or to traverse only just as much space as would show motion. That, in fact, was the very pathway of all this artillery, which was thus foreshortened like a column of soldiers, as seen by those that have to bear the brunt. In the course of two or three hours there must have been many thousands of these visitors, usually so rare. Even when the sky became partially overcast, they still showed themselves at every opening, and shone through the vail of clouds. Few, indeed, who saw it had ever seen the like, or could ever expect to see it. As to the sounds commonly heard on these occasions—the explosions, the hissings and the rumbling—we cannot speak, for the wind was high, and it must be remembered that the stillness ascribed by poets to the night has utterly left this isle, for hardly is there a spot where it is not possible any hour of the night to hear several mail or luggage trains. . . .

Once in a human generation, and thrice in a century—for in this matter man and the material universe seem strangely in accord—this earth has to encounter an immense cloud of stones revolving round the sun, in an orbit of the same size as its own, but in a contay direction. This cloud of stones is believed to constitute a sort of ring, diffused over the whole orbit, like a great highway of rolling or flying stones, though not in uniform density. However, there is no escaping them, whatever they are, for the breadth of this highway or stream is compared to the moon's orbit, and it takes two or three successive years, we should say, successive Novembers, for the earth to enter and clear it. These stones enter our atmosphere with a velocity of forty miles a second, and destroy themselves, as it were, by their own violence, for, when once arrested by our grosser air, they are instantly melted and dissipated in the air. That process, however, is only possible with very small stones, estimated by grains, for an aerolite of only a few pounds could only have its surface affected by such a momentary operation. Is it quite impossible that some day the earth may have to encounter more bulky metal, more comparable to our mundane artillery? Showers of stones there have been; and there evidently is no limit to their size either in history or in science, for the laws which govern the movement of every body in our solar system apply equally to all sizes and all substances, from this earth to a grain of dust, from a mass of metal to a vapor. Here is a shower of missiles, of unknown weight, and inconceivable velocity, always in motion from some unknown battery, and every human generation has to run the gauntlet. Will this atmosphere of ours always prove an absolute protection, and turn off these bolts, as merit is said to do the shafts of envy and detraction? That is a question at least to be thought of."

For the World's Crisis.

A CONFESSION; OR, THE SECRET OUT.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—In all honesty of soul before God, to whom I must one day give account, I now wish, as I consider it my duty, to confess unto salvation what I believe from the heart, of that form of doctrine which was taught by Paul the apostle, and by Jesus Christ, that "the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous unto good works." And again the apostle says, "Dearly beloved, I beseech you, as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul."

Now in consideration of the apostle's teaching us to abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul, I am led to inquire, what is that which wars against the soul? And the answer comes home in solemn tone,—every thing which contaminates, and defiles, or destroys the physical law of our nature; and destroys sensibility, by the which the soul is enslaved. And is it a sin thus to violate the law of our being? Yes. And why? Because the law of God forbids it, and every transgression of the law is sin, and shall receive a just recompense of reward. What is the reward of sin? Death is the penalty or reward of sin unrepented of. O the importance, then, of searching the Scriptures; for "in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me," says Jesus Christ.

Eternal life is rewarded unto all who repent of sin, and turn therefrom to serve the living God. But do none of those sin who break off and turn to serve the living God? Yes, if they let down their watch and become careless of his commands. What then? Will such have eternal life? No! unless they again repent, and become obedient to God's righteous commands. Then our advocate is with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, who is now at the right hand of the Father, pleading with him for us, until he bestows upon us the grace or favor of repentance. And then our hearts begin to melt before him in deep contrition for all our shortcomings in duty; then, in this our time of need, he looks with pitying eye upon us, and forgives us all our sins for Jesus' sake, and bids us go in peace and sin no more, and restores unto us the joy of his salvation.

So long as we are his obedient children, he gives us grace to overcome the sinfulness of our nature, and consequently all inclination to fulfill the lusts of the flesh is hereby subdued; hence, so far as all our fleshly lusts, which incline us to transgress God's righteous law, or the law of our being, are subdued or destroyed, so far we are enabled, by the grace of God, to work the work of righteousness, which it is quietness and assurance forever; and bring forth the fruits of the Spirit, which are "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law." And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lust. If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit, that we may be able to escape the corruption that is in the world through lusts. And besides this, "giving all diligence; add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. For if these things be in you and abound, they make you that you shall be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; but he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall."

Now, brethren and sisters, my reasons for writing these things are to show you wherein I have come short of glorifying God, by obedience to his plain command, to abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul, and show you that the reason of my fall has been for want of giving all diligence to make my calling and election sure. For you see, by the word of God, that if I had diligently, as commanded, searched the Scriptures, wherein we think we have eternal life, having my heart fully set within me to live out the principles therein contained, thereby making sure my calling and election, I never should have fallen into sin, but should have learned and obeyed the injunction of the apostle, to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made me free, and should not have suffered myself to be brought into bondage to the lust of the flesh; but should have gone on to perfect holiness in the fear of God, which is our reasonable service. But for want of instruction in the way of righteousness, and being ignorant of the Scriptures, which throughout teach purity, ignorantly, and soon after my conversion to God, I formed the sinful habit of taking snuff; and I followed the practice of it pretty thoroughly for about eighteen years.

But before I proceed further, I wish to say, that, previous to my conversion, I was altogether uninstructed in those things pertaining to a godly life, so afterwards I had the lesson to learn; and if I had given more earnest heed to the sure, unerring word of God, and far less heed to the example of the professed church, I should have learned much faster, having been taught of Jesus Christ. But as regrets will not mend the past, I leave it; endeavoring to improve the future by rendering due service to God.

At the age of sixteen years, in the year 1831, in the month of March, I gave my heart to God, and he for Christ's sake forgave my sins, and brought me out of nature's darkness into the marvellous light and liberty of the gospel of Christ. I then for a time enjoyed the constant favor of God, and sought every opportunity wherein I could render him some service. But ere long, without thinking that any harm could come from it, I commenced, with others, just merely for amusement's sake, to take snuff, not knowing that it was a violation of the law of our nature, hence a transgression of God's righteous law. I soon found I had acquired a lusting after it, and it imperceptibly grew upon me, until I had not power or will to overcome it. I freely indulged myself in its practical use for nine years, before I ever thought there was, or could be sin it, or that it had the least effect upon my religious enjoyment.

About this time, a Methodist paper, called Zion's Herald, was providentially put into my hands, which contained an "Old Lady's Dream." She died and went to heaven's gate, and met the porter, and inquired of him if her name was recorded in the Lamb's Book of life. He returned and looked, and came back with the intelligence that he could not find it. She was not satisfied, and she sent him back again and again. The third time he came saying he had found it, but it was so obscured by tobacco smoke he could hardly discern it. When I read that, I thought that her dream was to show her the sin of using tobacco in any form; and if it was a sin for her to use it, why not for me? From that time forth, at times, I would think I would give it up, and would make an effort to do so, but would fail at every successive trial; and all this while I tried to serve God, and very many times in doing the commands of God in other respects, I enjoyed his favor, his Spirit witnessing with mine, showing me that I was accepted of him, and owned as his child; but the times when I enjoyed this manifestation of his love were transient and short; hence I constantly had my ups and downs, sometimes hoping, sometimes doubting, and hardly ever at rest.

But should you ask, why all this? I answer, because I ignorantly was living in the constant violation of the command to put away all filthiness of the flesh, and perfect holiness in the fear of God; and I think that if God had been like man he would have got out of patience with me for this one transgression, in less than eighteen years, and would not have blessed me even when I did do right. But our God is infinitely too good to be unkind; and he blesses us always in doing right, and withdraws the light of his countenance when we do wrong. O the wonderful forbearance of God!

But for nine years after reading the "Old Lady's Dream," I took snuff, sometimes feeling condemned, and sometimes not, and for a number of years after I embraced the Advent faith; and once in the time I went to a campmeeting in Westford, Ct., at which meeting there was much said upon the use of snuff and tobacco, so much that many thought the good effect of the meeting was destroyed by it, because so many seemed to be so stirred against it; and I was exceedingly tried about it, and asked the opinion of some in regard to its use. Some said it was wrong to use tobacco in any form; others said it would never shut any one out of the kingdom of God. So that served to strengthen me in the use of snuff; but still I never rested quietly about it afterwards, until I concluded I must give it up, and the more I tried to do so the less it seemed to be in my power or ability to yield to the decision; until one night, after having a very great trial over it, in which I wept and prayed much, and then retired to rest, when I dreamed I saw a little lad, of some ten or twelve years, who was almost constantly intoxicated with spirituous liquor, and he seemed to feel badly because he drank so much, but he said he had no power to overcome it. His sad condition excited my pity, and I went and threw my arms around his neck, and began to expostulate with him. He said he did not want to drink, but the strength of habit was so great he could not give it up; and I then told him he needed help, and I would help him.

The excitement in my dream awoke me, and as soon as my eyes were fairly open, I saw my own true condition and likeness. Thus I became convinced that, unless I gave up the use of snuff, I should be lost; for it was my idol, the first thing in the morning, and the last at night, and at all other times; and I had no power to overcome it, and unless the Lord helped me to overcome it I must die under its influence. I besought the Lord most earnestly to help me give it up, and take away all appetite for it. The next day I took up my box, took out of it one pinch of snuff, and attempted to take it, but threw it away, and placed my box again on my work-table, as I then followed sewing, and said with the full determination, by the help of God, never to take it up again; and by his grace I never have, neither have I ever wanted it; and to God be all the glory.

But a few days after, I went to Wilbraham to a campmeeting, and after I had gone, my mother found my box where I had left it, and thought I had forgotten it, and should be uneasy without it, consequently the next day she brought it to me; but I did not take it, and have never seen it since. I have never had one desire to take a pinch of snuff since, and the Lord blessed me wonderfully in giving it up; and after I had got the victory over it, I enjoyed such constant peace as I never did before, for a few years, until after I was married. Then I was ere long prevailed to go to smoking tobacco for the cure of dyspepsia. How soon the habit began to grow upon me, and very soon I found myself as much, or more attached to it than I was to snuff. It had a more powerful tendency to destroy my peace of mind, by the effect it had upon my nerves; for it served to weaken and so inflame my nervous system, that I many times lost power to control my mind; hence, in time of trial, care and perplexity, and labor more abundant than I had seeming strength, I often lost my patience, and felt as though my lot was intolerable. But there was no help, except in removing the cause; and the cause at this time was not suspected to be that of using tobacco, for I constantly made use of it, thinking thereby to gain strength to enable me to perform my daily labor. Much of the time, too, I felt that it was wrong to use it, but then I would try to justify myself in it, on account of using it for medicine.

But with me the sin did not stop with the mere use of it, although that was the chief cause or foundation of my inability for patient endurance of the trials which came upon I was constantly under the influence of this poisonous narcotic; for it surely is a most insidious foe to the well-being of man in every respect; it is a species of intemperance which is injurious to body and mind, and demoralizing in its tendencies, and is polluting in its effect upon every[illegible]ing, not only the victim's own self, but the earth and air, temples of worship, and the bodies of men, temples of the Holy Ghost. It pollutes one's whole being, and, what is worst of all, constantly narcotized victims do not perceive it, until they are persuaded to give it up, and come fairly out from under the influence of the filthy practice.

The constant use I made of tobacco kept me nervous and irritable, and constantly chafing and fretting. And instead of seeking earnestly, by prayer, daily supplies of grace at the hand of God, as was my duty, I sought to obtain strength by the use of tobacco; but instead of gaining strength in this way, I lost it, both physically and spiritually, and my prayer became weak and faithless, until at length it became wholly suspended for a time, and I became perfectly unhappy, because I could neither enjoy the favor of God or the world; although I always endeavored to do right, as far as I understood what was right, for my family and all others; but so far as really glorifying God in such a condition, I did it not; although I honestly desired to, and could be satisfied with nothing short; but I then was altogether ignorant of the true cause of all my derangement in these matters, and little suspected that the use of tobacco was the secret of the whole. But thanks be to God forever more that the secret is fairly out, and I am free in Christ Jesus my Lord. But before I found out the secret I was most sorely chastened of the Lord.

THE CLOSE OF THE YEAR.

This is our last visit to our friends this year. Before we can greet you again, the events of 1866 will be closed forever. Does the final historic page of our lives end with the words "well done"? Do we see any place where we can do better, if we live another year? Then let us now resolve, in the strength of the Lord, it shall be done. Let there be no delay. All things indicate that we have but little more time to amend our ways.

It is well to make a thorough review of the past, asking the Lord to show us wherein we have failed, and to make the path of duty plain before us, and to give a firm purpose to do it. We should not be satisfied unless we make positive progress in divine life every year. Have we made any during the year now about closed? Do we love Jesus any better than we did one year ago? Are we any more dead to the world and its fashions? Are we any more patient and kind in our families, long-suffering and forbearing, meek and gentle? Are we satisfied with the manner in which we have lived? If not, let us begin at once to do just right, as far as we know how; then we shall have the constant smile of our Redeemer, which is worth more than all the gold the world affords.

The past year has been one of much interest to the student of prophecy, but we think the one to come will be filled with still greater events. Many have known scenes of bitter sorrow. Loved ones who greeted us with a wish for "a happy new year" at the dawn of 1866, are now sleeping in death. We hear their prayers and songs no more. Their seats in the family circle are vacant. Sad nights of weeping have been experienced, and lonely hours of weary watching by the sick bed. Whose turn will come next? That lovely child, whose happy tones were the joy of the household, is now covered with earth. The garments remain, but the dear one has been embraced by death. The companion of your youth, around whose heart your affections have fondly twined, lies in the graveyard. Home has been desolated by the enemy. The widow's tears have bedewed the spot where the dear one sleeps in peace, awaiting the resurrection voice of the Coming One. We hail his approach with rapturous joy. Come and spoil the grave, and relieve the captives of death.

NEW YEAR'S GIFT.

Now is a good time to make arrangements for a New Year's gift to your friends. Have you not some friend who does not have the Crisis to read, who might receive great benefit, as well as comfort, by its weekly perusal? Many have made such presents in time past, and have seen blessed results. Friends, who had no interest in the glorious hope we love so well, are now rejoicing in it, because some kind friend sent them the Crisis to read.

Then, is there not some poor saint in your neighborhood, whose heart would be gladdened the year round if he or she could only have the reading of our paper? Just make them a new year's gift of the Crisis, and thus add greatly to the lonely pilgrim's comfort. Will you do it? Say yes, and send at once. You will not be sorry, and it may be the means of saving a soul from death.

"FORGIVE . . . EVERY ONE."—Matt. 18: 35.

Do we wish to be forgiven all our past offences before the new year begins? Then we must forgive all who have trespassed against us. Read the following from the lips of Jesus: "If ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your, trespasses."—Matt. 6: 14: 15. "Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven."—Lk. 6: 37.

Let us "forgive . . . every one." Make clean work of it, and enter the new year free in the Lord.

RULES OF LIFE.

As most feel anxious to begin the new year just right, and to live better than ever before, we would propose the following rules, which we published one year ago. We think none will be sorry if they adopt and keep them:—

By the help of the Lord, I am resolved—

1. To speak evil of no one.
2. To speak no unkind words to any one.
3. To bear every thing patiently.
4. To avoid all joking.
5. To forgive every one.
6. To return good for evil.
7. To judge no one.
8. To allow no evil imaginations.
9. To give one tenth of all I receive.
10. To do all to the glory of God.

BAD HABITS.

Doubtless some who read this may be conscious of indulging in bad habits, from which they wish to be free. Now is a good time to break loose from their bondage. Come, resolve that they shall not accompany you into another year. Bid them an eternal farewell, and then look to the Lord for help to keep the enemy in subjection. Jesus is soon coming, and if we are ready, we must be "without spot and blameless." We must "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord," or we shall not be fit to go to "the marriage of the Lamb." None but the pure will be there.

Leave the cider and brandy, gin and whiskey, rum and tobacco, evil speaking, evil surmising, evil concupiscence, backbiting, joking, impatience, unkindness, judging, and every other evil habit, and let them keep your company no more. Leave these weights, be free in Jesus, and on New Year's morning rise happy in his love. Do not hesitate. Say yes, I will do it for Jesus' sake and in his strength. Be an overcomer, and "inherit all things." Do, we entreat you, make no excuse. You can do it,—say, I will. May God bless you with the good decision.

A LARGE ARMY.

It has been observed that Napoleon very often talks the opposite of what he means, in order to blind the people. For some time he has been talking "peace," and the importance of establishing peace principles among the nations. It has been repeatedly published that he was about to reduce his army to a peace footing, having not more than 600,000, which was thought to be a large number. Whenever we hear such reports, we may reasonably conclude that he is about preparing for war, but does not wish the nations to know it lest they should also make preparations.

After all the talk about his peace movements, the fact at last comes out as follows:

"Paris, Dec. 14. Under the new organization the French army, with the usual reserves, will foot up about 1,250,000 men. It is expected that such a mighty standing army in time of peace will have no good effect. There is much misgiving to the project among thoughtful men in this city."

Now the truth comes out that, instead of reducing his army, he has doubled it, and is prepared for some great movement, which will take place in due time.

The talk about his poor health, and purpose to abdicate his throne in favor of his son, we think are only items in his shrewd policy to keep the other nations from discovering his deep-laid plans to gain new power. His neighbors would say, If he can not live but a short time, and intends to abdicate next year, after his great fair, we do not need to worry about his movements, as he will not be likely to undertake any war with other powers. We think they will find at last that he is master of the game, and that he has outwitted them at every point. A short time will develope some new features in the history of this wonderful man.

INTEMPERANCE.

Facts show, beyond all controversy, that intemperance is rapidly increasing, as well as all other vices. A large proportion of the young are sipping at the drunkard's bowl, little aware of the consequences that may follow. The unparalleled use of tobacco contributes largely towards this result; because it creates an appetite for stimulating food and drinks. Thousands of young men are being ruined every year by tobacco and intoxicating drinks. The tide of intemperance is rising rapidly on every side. He who stands against it must not expect an easy or pleasant task. He may have to encounter his brethren in the church, and even ministers of the gospel. These things ought not so to be. Every christian should be "a pattern of good works." We are accountable for our influence over others. Is our example worthy of imitation? Would we like to have all do as we do? If they should, would it make them better than they are now?

The foregoing was suggested by the following, from one of our exchanges:

"Is an apology for entering the temperance department of the publishing field necessary? If so, let our readers find one in the facts that there are to-day three hundred thousand drunkards in the United States—that there are to-day two hundred thousand good wives being widowed—that to-day eight hundred thousand children are being orphaned and beggared—that aside from the other cost of intemperance, money enough has been expended for intoxicating drinks in the year 1866 to build the Pacific Railroad from St. Louis to San Francisco—that the time expended in loafing around drinking saloons, in drunken sleeps, in jails and other places, in consequence of intoxication, is enough to prepare the road for the rolling stock—that the penalties paid by drunkards for theft, burglary, arson, murder and every other shade of crime, committed under the influence of strong drink, is enough to furnish the road with rolling stock."

LUKE 20: 36.

"Neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

De Wette's version is as follows:—"For they cannot die any more; they are angel-like, and are sons of God, because they partake in the resurrection."

The following is Martin Luther's version:—"For they cannot henceforth die; for they are like unto the angels, and children of God, because they are children of the resurrection."

QUERY.

MR. EDITOR:—A reader of your paper would like your views of the state and consciousness of the wicked after death. How are they made conscious of punishment? We wish your answer to be given in your own language, of course founded on your understanding of the matter, as taught in the Bible.

We suppose the inquirer means by the word "death" "the second death," which is "the wages of sin." The punishment does not consist in being conscious of it, but in being put into an eternal unconscious state; or, in other words, in being eternally dead, and by this means deprived of all the blessings of the living. The wages of sin is not dying, but "death," which is the end of dying; hence the punishment does not begin till the criminal is dead. When he is dead, all consciousness ceases. It is a great mistake to suppose there can be no punishment unless one is conscious of it. Is it true that one can have no blessings without being conscious of them? But few realize the worth of their blessings received from the Lord. Would it be no punishment if we should knock another down and render him unconscious for a week? Is it no loss to be deprived of consciousness for a week? Would it be none to be cut off from life eternally?

THE DECEIVED ONES.

BRO. GRANT:—If the wicked are destroyed at the coming of the Lord, who are the nations that Satan shall go out to deceive after the thousand years? or, are the thousand years in the past, as some teach? I should like to have it explained, if you see fit.

B. FINNEY.

When the thousand years are expired, we understand the Scriptures to teach that the wicked dead are raised, and at the same time Satan is loosed from his prison, and goes out to deceive them again, by persuading them they can take the "camp of the saints," which the redeemed have enjoyed for a thousand years, while Satan had been bound, and the wicked were in the prison house of death, to be brought forth and judged after they come forth from their graves.

The language of the scripture shows that Satan does not deceive any one during the thousand years; but "when they are expired," after "the rest of the dead" live "again," he has one more opportunity to deceive them. It appears that the deception consists in persuading them that they can take "the camp of the saints," and thus possess the kingdom; but they find a stronger arm opposed, and are not allowed to cause any harm to the redeemed.

LIKE FROGS.

If Spiritualism is one of the frog-like spirits, from whose mouth did it proceed? from the dragon, the beast, or the false prophet? and what are the two other spirits?

J. SMALL.

We do not understand that Spiritualism "is one of the frog-like spirits," but that the "unclean spirits" of demons, as they are called in the Scriptures, operate through "the dragon," "the beast," and "the false prophet." Spiritualism uses the powers, represented by these symbols, to carry forward its purposes. It speaks through them, by means of three spirits, or demons, who, as leaders among them, use the dragon, beast, and false prophet, to carry forward their anti-christian work.

QUERY.

BRO. GRANT:—I've noticed by the reading of the Crisis, that you are expecting that Rome will fall before Christ comes; if that is so, and the unconscious state of the dead is true, will you please to explain Rev. 18:20?

LEVI TUTTLE.

We do not see that Rev. 18: 20 is opposed to the view that Rome may fall before the coming of Christ. Rome is symbolized by "a woman," see Rev. 17. "The beast" that carried the woman, may live after the woman, or church at Rome, has fallen. In other words, the civil power, represented by "the beast" that carried the woman, may continue after the fall of its rider, which appears to be the teaching of the Scriptures.

The verse under consideration reads as follows:—

"And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshiped the image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone."

There is nothing about the "woman" or the church at Rome in this passage; hence she may have fallen before the events of this verse are accomplished.

WHAT WILL BECOME OF THE POPE?

The eyes of the world are turned to the condition of the Pope. There are various speculations as to what he will do now the French troops are gone. Our conviction is that he will come to his end at Rome. His condition is a critical one, but we think he does not yet realize his perilous condition. His advisers are at their wits' ends to know what to do or say. The whole system is like Sampson shorn of his locks, in the hands of the Philistines—helpless. Yet it is very hard for that power which has ruled the monarchs of earth, and been supported by kings, and flattered by nations, to acknowledge that it is now in a helpless condition, at the mercy of its enemies; but such is the fact.

In the Catholic for Dec. 8th, 1866, is an article from the London Universal Express, in which the writer says:—

"Italy is free. But what then? It does not necessarily follow that a free Italy must be a Piedmontese Italy. Italy free from foreign influence does not, as a mere matter of fact, mean Italy governed by Victor Emanuel. To be sure the Bourbons have gone from Naples and Tuscany and Parma, as they will go by and by from Spain—for the doom of the Stuarts is over them. But there is somebody in Italy who will never go—who will be with Italy for "all time"—who makes holy by his very presence a great and sacred land—who has made for Italy all its christian greatness after Rome's Pagan greatness died out—the Pope.

There he is—a feeble old man—with no royal heritage, no kingly descent. The blasphemous absurdity of "the divine right of Kings," originated by England's royal fool, is not claimed by him; he knows only of that divine right which the successors of the apostles have conferred upon him—the successors of the Apostle's Prince. He represents eighteen hundred years of succession undisturbed; when kings and princes fade from the world's history, the spiritual chiefs who follow after him will laugh at the "old wife's tale" which rings in our ears now—that the Papacy is destroyed."

The Pope and his sympathizers feel as did the last king of ancient Babylon, just before his fall, that it cannot be true that the end of such a great power is at hand. The past success of the Papal system makes its present supporters confident.

The writer in the Express goes on to say:

"Italy cannot do without the Pope. All her greatness is connected with that name. . . . But this dynasty of eighteen hundred years—is it to be swept away so easily? No; its history makes the thought a folly. Think of the monarchies, the various forms of government, which have vanished in those eighteen centuries, and then think of it, strong, firm, immutable, all that time—ever seeming to be swept in the whirlpool of human passion—ever rising triumphant above the storm. When Attilla thundered at the gates of Rome, men thought that the knell of the Papacy had been sounded. When the Bourbons climbed the walls, and Clement took refuge in the tomb of Adrian, fools believed that the dynasty of the Popes had ended. Ravenna and Avignon had a like story to tell; but the Papacy flourished still—ever feeble, ever insulted, ever outraged, but ever triumphant over the devil and his aids.

Did it not seem that the Papacy was gone—wiped out forever—when the first Napoleon was triumphant and Pius was a prisoner at Fontainebleau; and yet did not that wonderful man say that the Pope was to be treated with as if he were the ruler of two hundred thousand armed men? Yet the splendid Corsican died a miserable death on the calcined rock of St. Helena. To-day, the heir of his glories is the supporter of the Pope; he rejoices to see Italy free from the Alps to the Adriatic, but not Italy ruled by the dull materialism of Turin or the senile folly of Florence. Guiseppe, Garibaldi and the other Joseph chased the Vicar of Christ from Rome eighteen years ago; but he is there again and they are gone.

And so it will ever be. No matter what dynastic changes take place in Europe—no matter how Bourbon and Hapsburgh, or Hohenzollern may come or go, the glorious dynasty of the Popes will flourish still; for to them alone eternal truth has said:—'Behold I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world!'"

The "Massachusetts Christian Convention," composed of members of the various evangelical churches of this and other States, held meetings in Tremont Temple, in this city, on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week. We thought it a good time and place to distribute the tract, "Plain Truths." So on Wednesday, at the close of the afternoon session, aided by four earnest brethren, with our arms full of tracts, we gave to about fifteen hundred different persons one tract each. The tracts were received kindly by ministers and laymen, the earnest, active, working portion of the various churches of which they were members. It was a good field in which to scatter the truth as contained in this tract. May the Lord help us, so that we all may be constantly on the lookout, ready at all times for every good word and work.

"LET US PRAY."

So the minister devoutly utters in solemn Sunday service. "Let us pray." Now us includes a plural number: how many do the praying? The minister suits the action to the word and petitions the throne of mercy both for himself and the people. But what does the church and people do? It pains us to say it,—a few, very few, pray. They let the poor servant in the pulpit pray for them, and sometimes—not always—pay him for it, and so serve and worship God by proxy. Too often he performs the lonesome task of praying alone in the midst of a multitude. He tries to climb up, and lift the inert mass of souls with him. The task is hard. They don't lift or push. He fails to reach the blessing, and perhaps a poor dry sermon follows. Whose fault is it? Must he do all the work and find fire and fuel for the entire congregation?

We deem it duty to rebuke this irreverence in the house of God. It is written that the Lord's house shall be called the "house of prayer." And this don't mean that christians shall make it the house of visiting, of gossiping, of listlessness, of indolence, of prayerlessness, and of sleeping. In a great many congregations, I have seen some during prayer sit up straight in their seats, some gazing idly around the house, some staring at the minister, some turning the leaves of a book, others would just nod a little, a few bow down the head on the hands, and fewer still kneel before high heaven and the most awful being ever adored or addressed. And whether they bow the head or kneel, very few pray with or for the preacher. We may loudly boast of our freedom, but better that we serve God as do the Episcopals, and all pray and worship by the book, than continue this form and irreverent mockery in our places of solemn, religious worship, to which we repair each Sunday to seek a preparation for the judgment.

Some years ago, it was "Voted, that the kneeling posture during prayer, in divine service, is the proper one." And this vote was unanimously passed by an Advent church, and the pastor said "Amen" to it. How many more such churches will go and do likewise? And how many christians, after reading this, will get humble and devout enough to pray for themselves in the time and house of prayer, and in doing so assume that posture which is everywhere enjoined in the Bible, and so unite in spirit, purpose, manner, and heart with the leader of the service when he kneels before the Almighty Maker of heaven and earth, and reverently says, "Let us pray"?

"GIVING UP THE GHOST."

The phrase at the head of this article is probably supposed to teach the immortality of the spirit of man,—the assumption being that this ghost or spirit is the intelligent, rational, thinking, inner man, and that its being given up, or yielded up, or returned to the Almighty Giver at death, is a proof of its deathlessness. And on this assumption is built the notion of rewards and punishments, or a heaven and hell after and in death, which notion has come to be so widely received among christian people as that death is made a thing to be coveted by the good, and Christ's second coming is well nigh lost sight of in the belief that about all that is gained at and by his advent, is received, bestowed upon, or shared in during the intermediate state. I propose to examine and dissect the above phrase in the light of "the Scriptures of truth," and by the aid of the best critics and scholars, and, if possible, to discover and set forth just what "giving up the ghost" does mean.

We observe that the Hebrew words translated into the expression under consideration are, 1, Gah-vah, rendered die, died, dying, dead, perish, gave up the ghost, yielded up the ghost, etc. 2. Nophakh-nephesh, used but twice, and found in Job 11: 20 and Jer. 15: 9, and rendered giving up, and hath given up the ghost.

In the Greek New Testament the equivalent term is, 1, Expnao, rendered uniformly gave up the ghost; and, 2, Ekpsuko, rendered gave up and yielding up the ghost. No other words save the four noted above are thus translated, though it is evident there are passages having the same meaning. That the reader may be assisted to a fair understanding of the (usus loquendi, or) general usage of these terms, we present from the Englishman's Hebrew, as also the Greek Concordance, every text where the above words are found, as follows:—

Gah-vah. Num. 17: 12, saying, behold, we die. Num. 20: 3, Would God that we had died. Num. 20: 29, saw that Aaron was dead. Josh. 22: 20, that man perished not alone. Sam. 1: 19, mine elders gave up the ghost. Num. 17: 13, shall we be consumed with dying? Num. 20: 3, when our brethren died. Gen. 6: 17, that is in the earth shall die. Gen. 7: 21, and all flesh died. Gen. 25: 8, Then Abraham gave up the ghost. Gen. 25: 17, and he gave up the ghost and died. Gen. 35: 29, And Isaac gave up the ghost. Gen. 49: 33, and yielded up the ghost. Job 3: 11, did I (not) give up the ghost. Job 10: 18, O that I had given up the ghost. Job 13: 19, I shall give up the ghost. Job 14: 10, yea, man giveth up the ghost. Job 27: 5, till I die. Job 29: 18, I shall die in my nest. Job 34: 15, all flesh shall perish together. Job 36: 12, and they shall die without knowledge. Psa. 104: 29, they die and return to their dust. Zech. 13: 8, shall be cut off and die. Psa. 88: 15, 16, I am afflicted and ready to die.

Nophakh-nephesh. Job 11: 20, the giving up of the ghost: (marg., or, a puff of breath.) Jer. 15: 9, she hath given up the ghost.

Ekpneo. Mark 15: 37, loud voice, and gave up the ghost. Mark 15: 39, and gave up the ghost. Luke 23: 46, he gave up the ghost.

Ekpsuko. Acts 5: 5, fell down, and gave up the ghost. Acts 5: 10, and yielded up the ghost. Acts 12: 23, of worms, and gave up the ghost.

The italicised English words indicate the Hebrew and Greek terms, and the common reader has now before him every form, tense, mood, and change of the peculiar phrase, as used in all places in the Holy Bible. I now call especial attention to the scripturally stated fact, that "giving up the ghost" is an event which happens alike to the Lord Jesus Christ, the patriarchs, good men, bad men, priests, elders, kings, infants at birth, the leviathan, beasts, birds, fish, cattle, and reptiles. This being indisputably true, if the ghost or spirit given up at death argues immortality in the being who gives it up, then not only men but all other creatures in earth, air, and sea, are immortal, for all possess that which at death is alike given or yielded up, and which something is denominated a "ghost." Carrying out the theory, we would be compelled to believe that every dead thing from the mastodon to the mite has its disembodied ghost! This would be Swedenborgianism and Spirit-ism enough to suit the million. But are common sense people ready to believe the inevitable conclusions based on their own premises? If not, then they must look about for some other definition of the death-extorted, yielded up, and hence disembodied ghost, than that which makes it the deathless spirit, the departed, but real man.

How does the reader like the first, and hence the primary and literal usage of our term in Gen. 6: 17,—"to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven; and every thing that is in the earth (gah-vah) SHALL DIE"? Remember that "to die" is to "give up the ghost"; and does the text say the dying do any more than "breathe out" that which God "breathed into" the first man and all men, viz., "the breath of life"? And is not this declared in Job 11: 20 to be but "a puff of breath"? And when this is done, shall we not be constrained to accept Ps. 146: 4 as a stubborn, immutable truth—"His breath goeth forth, HE (the man) re-turneth to his earth"? Please ponder this article well, till we come to the subject again in a future number.

ROIZEDON.—2 Pet. 3: 10.—No. 2.

"The heavens shall pass away with a great noise."—PETER.

"The heavens being on fire shall be dissolved."—2nd PET. 3: 12.

"And the heaven departed as a scroll"—rolled together.—REV. 6: 14.

The divine methods by which the fearful roizedon or passing away of the atmospheric heavens with a crushing roar, and their dissolution, may be accomplished, is set forth by the celebrated christian philosopher, Thomas Dick, L. L. D., who writes:—"How this appendage to our world—the aerial heaven—may be dissolved, or pass away with a mighty noise, it is not difficult to conceive, now that we have become acquainted with the nature and energies of its constituent parts. One essential part of the atmosphere contains the principle of flame; and if this principle were not counteracted by its connection with another ingredient, or were it let loose to exert its energies without control, instantly one immense flame would envelope the terraqueous globe, which would set on fire the foundations of the mountains, wrap the ocean in a blaze, and dissolve not only coals, wood, and other combustibles, but the hardest substances in nature. It is more probable that when the last catastrophe of our globe arrives, the oxygen and nitrogen, or the two constituent principles of the atmosphere, will be separated by the interposition of almighty power. And the moment this separation takes place, it is easy to conceive that a tremendous concussion will ensue, and the most dreadful explosions will resound throughout the whole of the expanse which surrounds the globe, which will stun the assembled world, and shake the earth to its foundations. For, if, in chemical experiments, conducted on a small scale, the separation of two gases, or their coming in contact with the principle of flame, is frequently accompanied with a loud and destructive explosion, it is impossible to form an adequate idea of the loud and tremendous explosions which would ensue were the whole atmosphere at once dissolved, and its elementary principles separated from each other and left to exert their native energies. A sound as if creation had burst asunder, and accompanied the next moment with a universal blaze, extending over sea and land, would present a scene of sublimity and terror, which would more than realize all the striking descriptions given in Scripture of this solemn scene."

Or as that very able and popular New York journal, the Scientific American, said in 1846: "There is one view of the subject, which makes it appear miraculous that such an event has not occurred long ago. The fact has already become familiar with people of ordinary intelligence, that a mixture of hydrogen gas with common atmospheric air, is highly inflammable, and will burn with a greater or less degree of violence according to the quantity of hydrogen in the compound. It is also well known that there is a constant emission of hydrogen from vegetation, and from the decomposition of various substances; and that this gas, being extremely light and buoyant, has a tendency to rise to the surface of the atmosphere. There is therefore no reason to doubt that immense quantities of this inflammable compound abound in the upper regions of the air, and that nothing more than a spark of electric fire would be required to envelope the world in flames. The only circumstance which has hitherto prevented such conflagration, is that the region of concentrative and excitable electricity is several miles below that of the inflammable air: yet there are no defined laws or theory to show any security against the occurrence of an aerial conflagration at any moment."

All the above statements are worth thinking of. Put forth boldly and authoritatively, and never to our knowledge contradicted, they are both astounding and alarming. And as the scroll like departure of the heavens is next in order in the series of aerial or celestial signs or events to occur after the great star-showers—already witnessed by this generation—it would seem to furnish evidence for the whole church of God every where to look for and confidently expect the coming of the Son of man and the day of judgment, which his presence will inaugurate. Let us "watch."

For the World's Crisis.

"BLESSED BE YE POOR."

This was my first thought when I received Bro. Chamberlain's letter, dated the 7th of this month. O yes, blessed are the poor, whose hearts are open to those in need, who can divide of their little store to those who suffer want. Blessed be the Lord our God, that in our ranks there is a people, though poor, who are rich in faith and heirs of an everlasting crown. I rejoice that I am associated with such a purchased people, who are zealous of good works. Thanks be unto God that some have their treasure in heaven.

I would now express my thanks to those poor saints who so heartily responded to my appeal in behalf of Bro. Chamberlain; and I assure you that I would not have made it if I were able to do all I desire. I do not want to be understood that I am in need of any thing; my God has bountifully supplied me; but, suffering from general debility, I have not been able to do a full day's work on my little farm for many years; consequently, I can not always do what I wish; and therefore made the appeal, not thinking at the time that the loving poor would be the chief donors. Jesus will soon come and reward those who have bowels of compassion.

Bro. C.'s letters received were nearly all from the poor. One was from a poor and destitute old man seventy-six years of age, who has been waiting since 1843 for the coming of the Lord. Another was from a poor disabled soldier, who is trying to do good. I am impressed that his name is in the Lamb's book of life, as a faithful soldier of Jesus Christ.

O, ye rich ones, think of a poor young sister, who earned a dollar by washing, sending it to a poor brother in Christ. Surely the Lord is well pleased with such a noble sacrifice. May her heart be washed from every stain. But my heart yearns over the poor lame brother, with a wife almost blind, and a very poor, feeble brother, and a poor brother subject to fits, and a poor sick sister, and others who did what they could, whose names are in the book of life. I ask, what would we do as a people without the poor believers among us? They are the moving power that moves the everlasting God by their prayers to shower blessings on the laborers in this holy cause. The Lord will bless them, because they are his faithful servants, who have given up their all for their precious Savior. I say, thanks be unto God for the worthy poor among us. Jesus says, "Blessed are the poor," and David said, "Blessed is he that considereth the poor." Men covet riches, but no where in the Bible does it say, Blessed are ye rich; but it is written, "Woe unto you that are rich."

I would say, in the name of my Master, to those who have much of this world's goods, you stand in slippery places. Take heed, lest you fall. Riches bring a snare, and many lusts which cause men to forget the poor and needy. How apt we are, with an abundance, to lean upon it instead of God.

Bro. Chamberlain wants a situation. Perhaps the Lord might bless some man, and all that he hath, if he would make an opening for him. Who can do it? F. CORKER.

THE LITTLE WANDERER'S HOME.

That the brethren and sisters may be more fully informed concerning the lease of the house for the above object, I pen these lines. There has been a slight modification of the agreement between the Friends, or Quakers, and myself, that was mentioned in last week's Crisis. I have now the paper, or instrument containing the lease, in my possession, which reads as follows:—

"Memorandum of Lease made this twenty-fourth day of the Twelfth month, A. D. 1866, by and between Marmaduke C. Cope and Thomas Williamson, of the one part, and Francis H. Burbank, of the other part, as follows, viz:—

"The said Marmaduke C. Cope and Thomas Williamson, in consideration of the rent, covenants, conditions, and agreements herein expressed and contained on the part and behalf of the said Francis H. Burbank, to be paid, complied with, and performed, have demised and let unto him, the said Francis H. Burbank, the brick messuage and premises, No. 708 Lombard street, in the city of Philadelphia, from the date hereof, for and during such term as may hereafter at the discretion of either party be determined, and ended by giving to the other party three months previous notice to that effect; and which premises during the term of the demise, it is understood shall be occupied and used only for the moral reform and improvement of destitute colored children, and as a day school for the inmates and other colored children of the neighborhood who may have no other school to attend, and an evening school for colored persons.

"And the said Francis H. Burbank has agreed that so long as he shall continue to occupy the said premises, and until the demised term thereof shall be ended as aforesaid, he will, at his own expense, keep and maintain the premises in good order and repair; will pay the gas bills and water rent of the same; will admit such colored children from time to time inmates of the house as the lessees may require, not exceeding at any one time six in number, without charge therefor; will supply therein temporary accommodations for such colored children as may be sent from the South to the Orphan Asylum at Burlington, New Jersey; and will also pay to the said lessees, or one of them, rent for the said premises at the rate of fifty dollars yearly, in equal quarterly payments, during the continuance of the term of the demise, if such payment shall be demanded.

"In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto set their hands and seal, the day and year first above written.

"Sealed and delivered in the presence of

M. C. COPE,
THOS. WILLIAMSON,
F. H. BURBANK."

Thus you see that the house is leased to me as any other parties might have leased one to me under the same circumstances. Our Home will be opened publicly on Thursday evening, January 3d, 1867. Though we are but partially fitted up, we have four children in the Home, and two more coming in in a day or two, and three or four more next week. An old gentleman and his wife, who have been taking care of the house while it was vacant, will move out this week, then we shall finish house-furnishing with dispatch.

The police have just sent a little twelve-year old octoroon (one-eighth colored) girl to me. She was wandering about the streets. She had come to this city from Trenton, N. J., to see her mother, and found when she got to Philadelphia that her mother had just gone to Trenton. She had been living with her grandfather. Not finding her mother, and knowing no one, she wandered about until picked up by the police, kept a night at the station house, and then brought by one of the city employees to our home. We shall keep her until we write to her mother and get word from her what to do with her. Sr. Helginson has set her to work sewing carpet rags.

We will depend upon the Lord for means to carry on our mission work. We have no pledges for help, except such as the Lord gives in his precious Word, and they are sufficient. Again I ask you to pray to the Lord with me, that I may have wisdom and knowledge for my manifold cares and duties. Yours, etc., loving Christ's appearing,

REPORT OF THE WESTERN NEW YORK CHRIS. CONF.

BRO. GRANT:—The Western New York Christian Conference, according to appointment, met at Dansville, N. Y., Nov. 23d. There was a good representation of brethren and sisters from different places on Friday. Friday night, Bro. Turner preached a stirring discourse from 2 Peter 3: 14. The heartfelt testimonies of the dear ones that followed, showed that they had come together in the name of the Lord. The Lord was with us. The meeting started with power.

Saturday, 9½ A. M. Met for business, for reports of ministers, etc. Bro. Burr, having arranged to move to a western field of labor, offered his resignation as Secretary of the Conference. The following resolution was adopted, and the writer appointed in his stead:

Resolved, That we accept the resignation of Bro. Burr, as Secretary of this Conference, and extend to him our thanks for his untiring efforts put forth among us in winning souls to Christ, and bringing men to a knowledge of the truth. We also recommend him to the church West, as one that will do you good, and one that you need have no fears of bringing discord or division; but one that will labor to build you up, and prove a blessing to you under God."

Bro. Blake, from Bristol, Ontario Co., who had been a licensed exhorter in the Wesleyan Methodist church, having been brought to the light of truth, asked for a license to go forth and preach the gospel of the kingdom. It was voted to receive him, and give him a letter of commendation.

I will not burden our paper with the reports of the brethren, but suffice it to say, that their reports show that they have not been idlers in the vineyard, but that the Lord is with them, and blesses their labors, and many in Western New York have been brought to Jesus, and the cause is onward, and rising higher and higher. The meeting was one of great interest and deep feeling, and, although preaching was appointed at 1 P. M., this meeting did not close till half an hour after that.

2 P. M. Great reinforcements of brethren and sisters came in from adjoining towns.—Meeting opened with prayer by Bro. Newell. Preaching by Bro. Miles, from 1 Cor. 13: 13, on charity. Profitable and timely discourse.

6 P. M. We met again for prayer and conference before preaching. Great interest. About fifty spoke for Jesus, after which Bro. J. W. Taylor preached a good discourse from Luke 19: 10, showing what Adam lost, and what Jesus was to restore when he comes.

Sunday. The following ministers were present: C. B. Turner, Wm. A. Fenn, M. R. Miles, B. P. Stevens, C. F. Sweet, F. Burr, A. C. Newell, J. W. Taylor, and about sixty brethren and sisters from the surrounding country. Met at 9 A. M. for a love feast, and truly it was a feast of love. Outsiders could look on and say truly, see how these christians love one another. I never have seen such a consecration of all upon the altar in this section as at this meeting.

10½ A. M. Preaching by Bro. Sweet. Text, Rom. 3: 3, showing that unbelief would not "make the faith of God without effect."

1 P. M. Bro. Fenn expounded unto us the prophecies concerning the five universal kingdoms. Four were past, and the fifth about to be established in their stead. After which, eighty-four came around the table of the Lord to commemorate his death and sufferings, and thus "show forth the Lord's death till he come."

6 P. M. Met again for prayer and conference before preaching. Hall crowded. Good feeling. I have no doubt but many that were looking on really wished they were christians, and enjoyed what so many seemed to enjoy. I feel if our brethren would bring all their labors directly to bear on the conversion of sinners, that a great many more would be brought to Jesus. Our brethren, seeing such a departure from "the faith," are in danger of pointing their guns in the wrong direction, and thus sinners are neglected.

7½ P. M. Bro. Turner preached a very interesting discourse from 2 Tim. 2: 19, showing that those who preach going to heaven at death, without waiting for the resurrection, strike a blow at the foundation of God. "Nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure." After the sermon, Bro. Ira Allen, of Honeye, D. Cogswell, of Dansville, and H. H. Brown, of Allen, were ordained to the ministry. Ordination prayer by Bro. Turner, right hand of fellowship by Bro. Sweet, charge by Bro. Fenn.

Thus closed the best conference we have ever had in Western New York. I pray God to be with us more and more, and make us a blessing to the people, and unite us more and more, so that we may successfully labor for the salvation of sinners till Jesus comes.

A. P. Moore, Sec.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Swanosburg.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to say a word in your beloved paper about the effects of the labors of our dear Bro. Hook in Shelburne. Notwithstanding all the opposition that the enemy could bring to bear against our brother, God's truth has triumphed. A mighty work has commenced in Shelburne, that will never be finished until the Lord comes in the clouds of heaven. Thank the Lord for his truth. I, for one, can say with Peter, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead"; and there are many more besides me in this place rejoicing in the same "blessed hope."

I opened my house for a prayer meeting, and it was full. It was a heavenly season. One dear sister, seventy-three years of age, says she has been serving the Lord for thirty years, and never enjoyed such a happy time before. Bro. Hook's dear old friend Fewonegaly, the Italian, came out rejoicing in the Lord. I mention this for the encouragement of our dear Bro. Hook. Backsliders are being reclaimed. Bless the good Lord. We are having meetings from house to house, and the Lord is blessing us wonderfully. To him be all the glory. We have meetings four times a week, and truth is spreading.

The two brothers that Bro. Hook buried in the liquid tomb are rejoicing in the Lord, and there are two or three more waiting for Bro. Hook to come back, that they may go and do likewise. Almost every one I talk with wants to know if Bro. Hook is coming back. May the Lord strengthen our dear brother, so that he may come back; and you, dear Bro. Grant, with him. There are many here that want to see and hear you. May the Lord direct you to come with the fulness of the gospel of Christ. Yours waiting for redemption,

A. B. Swanesburg.

Shelburne, N. S., Dec. 5th, 1866.

From Bro. C. P. Whitford.

Bro. Grant:—There is a home, thank the Lord, where the weary shall find rest. I feel that amid earth's manifold disquietudes, its crosses and its losses, that I can with joy look forward to that blessed hour when there shall be no more sin, and therefore no more sorrow. And when I think of that blessed time, when God shall terminate the tears of a weeping world, my heart cries out, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." Will not our chief ground of rejoicing then be, that there will be no more sin to cause them? Then every tear shall be wiped from every eye, and then may I be permitted to know all that is comprehended in the holy beatitude, how "blessed" indeed are "the pure in heart," who are to "see God."

I am trying to "walk with Jesus in newness of life." And the new life which I have received "by the Spirit," urges me to higher attainments and more heavenly aspirations. When I look at the world, I find its pleasures are fading, its hopes delusive, its friendships perishable. Hence I am solemnly and habitually impressed by the surpassing magnitude of "the things not seen."

I desire to live near to Jesus, and then I shall live near all his people, looking forward to that blessed time when we shall see eye to eye and heart to heart,—no jarring or discordant note to mar the everlasting ascription of "blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever."

Addison, Vt. Chas. P. Whitford.

From a Baptist Brother.

Bro. Grant: Dear Sir,—For some months past I have had a very great desire for a crumb of the bread of life; but as I have failed in my efforts to obtain any thing that I think would nourish a hungry soul, my anxiety has led me to think much of the past and present state of religious movements; and in the midst of my anxiety, the "World's Crisis" has become an inmate of my family, through the means of my wife, who subscribed for that valuable paper about a year ago. Since that time, it has been a welcome visitor in my family.

My wife embraced the Advent faith in 1854. I am a member of the Baptist church. Our place of worship is now with the Freewill Baptists; but as I have listened to the reading of your paper, I become daily more and more convinced that God's Spirit is among your people. It has rested for some months with weight on my mind to write you on this subject, hoping that you might send us some one who would hold a meeting with us a few days in succession, that our souls might be fed with the bread of life. There are quite a number of people here of the Advent faith, and others that I have consulted, who feel anxious to have some one come here, and hold a few meetings with us, and we will try and do the best we can with them. We should like to have some one come on the first Sabbath of the month, as our place is destitute of preaching every first Sabbath.

Yours in brotherly love,

East Andover, N. H. Isaac White.

From Bro. E. McCullock.

Bro. Grant:—The work of the Lord is still going on in this place. We baptized four to-day, making seven in all of late, three of whom had formerly been Universalists; and others are waiting for an opportunity to go forward in this ordinance of the Lord's house. Sinners are still inquiring, "What must I do to be saved?" and the work of getting ready for the judgment seems to have taken deep hold of the minds of the people generally. Many that have backslidden from God are being reclaimed. Pray for us.

Savoy, Dec. 9th. E. McCullock.

From Bro. J. Bower.

Bro. Grant:—The "Crisis" comes to us richly laden with the good news of good things to come. How cheering to hear from home, to know we are almost there. Glory to God for the promised rest, and the signs that bespeak it near.

I am doing what I can to spread the glorious news here in the backwoods of Michigan, and prepare a bride for my Master's Son, who will be ready when he comes. May we be directed into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for his Son. Amen. Yours looking for the Bridegroom.

Cato, Mich. John Bower.

From Bro. C. B. Turner.

Brethren in the East:—The Lord is doing a good work here, and my labors are so abundant that I must postpone my tour east until some future time. The brethren in this State who have written to me must be patient. I will answer your calls as soon as the Lord opens the way. I am all packed up, and on the altar, waiting for Jesus. Glory! he is coming. C. B. Turner.

Rogersville, Dec. 17th, 1866.

Sr. Jane D. Ellis, Montpelier, Vermont, writes:—"For your encouragement, I wish to say that the weekly visits of your excellent paper are like cold water to the thirsty soul. I should feel sorry to miss a single number.

Three years ago nearly, I became acquainted at the "Granite State Cure" with a few who loved the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ. Their views of Bible truths were entirely new to me. Daily intercourse with them for weeks and months only served to win my love; for I felt they had the Spirit of Christ. I had been a professor of religion many years, yet I was convinced they enjoyed what I had never experienced. It was there I first saw the Crisis. When I left the Cure I became a subscriber, since which I have been a constant reader.

Dear brethren, I do feel that I can never be thankful enough for the light I have received. The Bible is indeed a new book. It is daily my meat and drink to read the Scriptures. I feel that Jesus is my Savior, and that in and through him alone I may hope for eternal life. I have never seen an Advent preacher. I very seldom meet one of like precious faith. By my acquaintances and members of the church with which I still stand connected, my new views are only looked upon as heresy. Under these circumstances, you can realize how dear to me is the Crisis. I have no permanent home, and with poor health can earn but little. But God is my Father. In him will I trust. Through Jesus I hope to overcome, and soon all the trials and sorrows of earth will be forgotten. A tenth of all I receive is the Lord's. I enclose fifty cents for F. H. Burbank, missionary in Philadelphia. May God bless abundantly all who thus labor in the 'highways and hedges.'"

Sr. B. Crandall, Deer Park, Ill., writes: "Having been privileged the past summer in reading your valuable paper—'The World's Crisis,' I wish to subscribe for it for six months. My pecuniary circumstances will not allow me to subscribe for a longer period at present, having been left with three little boys—the elder ten years—depending upon me for maintenance; and having nothing to do so with but feeble hands and a ready will, and looking to God for the remainder.

I have hailed the coming of your paper the past summer with joy, wishing to be an earnest seeker after truth, as given us in the Holy Scriptures, and loving to hear the testimonies of the dear saints of the Lord, thereby feeling that I am not the only one that has to contend with trials and temptations in this lonely pilgrimage.

What a glorious victory will be ours when 'in the strength of Israel's God' we shall be enabled to shout 'victory' over the last besetting sin, and enter triumphantly into the 'promised rest.' What a wise provision is this of our heavenly Father, that the sorrows and trials incident to us in this life should wean us from the world and point us to a better country, an heavenly one. O for an increasing zeal in the Master's work. The more I study God's holy word, the more do I prize it, and the more desirous am I to know the truth as it is given to us by inspiration of God. Fresh beauties do I daily see in it, and, God being my helper, I mean to be led by the Spirit into all truth."

Bro. E. W. Waters, Habbardsville, N. Y. writes:—"The Crisis is so very instructive and edifying, that I cannot see how I could do without it. Its faithful visits admonish me of my obligation to God, and its publishers. I could say much in its praise. I have been to a school of afflictions that has taught me to trust in God, but I find the Crisis a great help to me in my poverty and afflictions. And as witnesses are multiplying on every hand, directing us to look for our absent Lord, I cannot give any idea of my feelings, but I tremblingly hope to be ready. I send $1.00 towards the Crisis. I wish I had means, I would send for tracts. I wish I had an assortment of your tracts."

[You shall have them.—Ed.]

Bro. J. H. Stannard, Hamilton, C. W., writes:—"I really like your paper. Though I am a Wesleyan Methodist, and read the 'Christian Guardian,' yet I feel it a loss when the 'Crisis' does not come. Our ministers are entirely silent on the second coming of Christ."

For the World's Crisis.

THE FESTIVE SEASON.

This is the season of the year
When many greet their friends so dear;
Donation parties, fairs and feasts,
And most of this to feed the priests.
The church with debts do run behind,
A pleasant way to pay they find;
Preacher and people, strange to tell,
Unite in all, and love it well.
The tables now are loaded down
With the best there is throughout the town;
Then soon goes out an urgent call—
Come to the feast, they say, to all;
Only a quarter at the door,
But then we hope you'll leave much more,
A lottery, auction, and little box,
And then, you know, 'tis "orthodox."
Music you'll hear, come up just now,
Do with us go and gently bow;
Come right along, don't stop to doubt,
You'll find religion on this route.
The good and bad, yes, every kind,
Sweet pleasures here to-night will find;
This is the place for foe and friend,
For all will justify the end.
Unwise for those who do look back,
For sure they'll think 'tis not the track;
They see their Leader good and great,
He's with the poor, this is his fate.
The beasts have holes, the birds a nest,
The Son of man, no where to rest,
Was seldom welcomed to a feast
By rich or noble, scribe or priest.
Into his word I look, and find
A feast for poor, and halt, and blind;
No recompense here for the just,
They wait till brought back from the dust.
The followers in this heavenly way
Do love their neighbors every day;
The poor from them they never spurn,
But for their good the pocket turn.
Religion, loving, good and pure,
Will keep us in this way, I'm sure;
And when the work of grace is done,
We all shall find our Eden home.

Obituaries.

Walker. Died in Southampton, Long Island, Dec. 11th, 1866, Bro. Stephen H. Walker, aged fifty-five years and eleven months.

Bro. Walker has for twenty-eight years past been a professor of the religion of Christ, and for more than half that time has believed in the near coming of Christ to judgment, and to set up his everlasting kingdom. His walk has been such as not to give the lie to his profession, but has shown, by keeping the commands of Christ, that he loved him. He was not one day on the mountain top, and the next in the valley of despondency; but with the plow of faith, drawn by meekness and gentleness, steered his way for the kingdom. Our first acquaintance with him was some eight or nine years ago, when coming to this place to teach school, and ever after that time have admired him as a christian brother, better than we often find; so even, true, and faithful to every duty that was known to him.

His loss will be felt by his native brethren in every way, as he was a member of the Shinnecock tribe of Indians. He was the best man among them to look after their best interests as a people; but the little church looking for the Lord will miss him still more, as he was the foremost in their prayer meetings, except when Bro. Lee (their pastor) could be with them.

Bro. Walker was at Wilbraham camp one year ago last campmeeting, but was not very well then, and has been going down ever since, spitting blood and having a bad cough, until this last October, when he was taken bleeding at the lungs, and bled until he was senseless, continuing very feeble until the 11th of December, when he sank down in stupor, and fell asleep in Jesus. We visited him often in the last weeks of his sickness, and always found him trusting in the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. His funeral was attended by Bro. Lee, speaking from 1 Thess. 4: 18.

Bro. W. leaves five children to mourn his loss. The Lord sanctify this affliction to them, and help them to so live that they may meet their father in the kingdom of glory. In behalf of the friends,

Addison Wheeler.

Hodgkin. Died at Massena, N. Y., Dec. 12th, 1866, Ira Hodgkin, Jr., aged twenty-one years.

A young man of fair name, of steady habits, of inventive genius, obedient and tender as a son and brother, and generally beloved. He had never publicly accepted christianity, but the hope is fondly cherished that as he sought it by prayer, so he found Christ in the dying day. This bereavement is particularly afflictive to his parents and sisters, for he was an only son, and their earthly hope and promise. Never did we address a more sympathising, tearful, and solemn congregation, than that which gathered Dec. 16th to bury the noble youth. Text and subject improved, Heb. 9: 27.—"But after this, the judgment." D. T. T.

Davis. Fell asleep in Jesus at Warner, N. H., Dec. 5th, Sr. Betsey R., wife of Bro. Moses B. Davis, aged forty-three years.

Bro. and Sr. Davis have long been known as prominent and faithful believers in the soon coming of the Lord and its kindred doctrines, and the toilworn servant of Christ found a hearty welcome at their pilgrim home, and a willing heart and ready hand to administer to their comfort. But Sr. Davis sleeps in Jesus. Her work is done. She rests in hope, and waits the resurrection morn. God grant it may not be long. Sermon by the writer, from Psa. 16: 9. Joseph W. White.

Jameson. Died at Bradford, N. H., Sept. 29th, Lizzie, also, Nov. 15th, Ellen, twin daughters of Bro. John W. and Sr. Miranda Jameson, aged fourteen years.

And yet again cruel death has entered the family of Bro. and Sr. Jameson, and the stroke is a severe one; but they mourn not as those that have no hope. God grant that they may be an unbroken family on the other shore, where parting scenes shall never come, and sorrows ne'er be known.

Joseph W. White.

Tower. Died in Savoy, Dec. 18th, Hattie, youngest daughter of Orrin and Florinda Tower, aged seven years and eight months.

She sleeps in Jesus. Words of comfort by the writer, from 1 Thess. 4: 13. E. M'Cullock.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable Dispatches.

Rome, Dec. 18. Cardinal Antonelli has expressed his regret to Mr. King, the American Minister, for the article which appeared in the official journal of Rome denying the statement made by the Holy Father in regard to Canada. Cardinal Antonelli explains that what the Pope intended to say was, that if the Canadas were to be given up by Great Britain, it was better that they should fall into the hands of the United States than into those of the Fenians. With this explanation the Minister of the United States was entirely satisfied.

London, Dec. 18. It is reported that the fortifications on all the frontiers of France are being strengthened, and that new ones are projected.

La Valetta, Malta, Dec. 18. The U. S. man-of-war Swatara has left here for Alexandria, Egypt, where she will take on board the assassin Surratt, and immediately sail for America.

It is rumored that a treaty of commerce between Austria and France was finally concluded at Vienna.

It is said that a strong feeling exists in the Austrian army in favor of making Maximilian Emperor of Austria.

The Berlin correspondent of the London Times says that notwithstanding all asseverations to the contrary in the Austrian official press, it may be regarded as a positive fact that troops are about to be concentrated in Gallicia. Some of the regiments detailed for the service are already under marching orders.

Florence, Dec. 21. It is said the Pope is satisfied with the tone of the speech made by the King at the opening of the National Parliament.

The National Committee of Rome have issued a proclamation advising the people to await calmly the hour of certain triumph.

The first conference for the arrangement of the relations between the Holy See and the Kingdom of Italy has been held.

It is rumored that owing to the unpopularity of the recently proposed scheme for the reorganization of the French army, it will either be withdrawn or greatly modified.

The French Empress some time since accepted a gift of one hundred and seventy-eight sewing machines from the head of a great manufacturing house at Paris, and has distributed them among needy women in various parts of the empire.

Garibaldi and the Cretans.—Our foreign exchanges say that the Garibaldian legionaries, finding their occupation gone in Italy, are turning their attention toward the assistance of the Christians of the Levant. A detachment has already reached Syra, a larger body has landed on the Piræus, and the General himself has offered his sword to the Athens committee. The letter in which this offer was made, says:

"I have written to Dolfi to see what arms we have, whatever they may be, they shall all be placed at your disposal. Oh, how I wish to do something for those poor Cretans! I am in despair at being reduced to idleness, I belong to your cause. I shall be there, if I am called—even though I come in a basket. As much as possible foment diversions on the mainland, and dispose of me always."

This letter was followed by a gift of six hundred rifles, which are probably only a beginning, and the General will in all probability follow them at an early date.

New York, Dec. 19. The Herald's New Orleans special of the 18th says a city of Mexico correspondent, who has just arrived here, reports that on the 2d inst. Marshal Bazaine issued a manifesto in reply to the Emperor's determination to remain, stating that in future the French troops would remain perfectly neutral, taking no part in Mexican affairs.

☞ The nominal total strength of the Papal army at the present date is 15,257 men.

☞ The glass required for the Paris Exhibition next year would cover an extent of twenty acres.

☞ A silver mine in Greece, which suspended operations 2294 years ago, has been purchased and is now being worked by a French company.

For the World's Crisis.

A SONG IN THE NIGHT.

Hitherto, O Lord, thy hand hath helped me,
 And still, though clouds of darkness hover, will I sing;
For through the cloud rifts tokens bright of day I see,
 And thus my offering glad of praise I bring.

Early thy chastening hand outstretched was,
 And pangs of sorrow rent my infant breast,
Yet, ah! the hand that chastened held me too,
 And led me nearer to the fold of rest.

But dull mine ear to hear, and dim mine eye
 To recognize thy dealings kind and true;
Then thou didst spread a veil in mercy out,
 And hid the dazzlings of earth's light from view.

Still didst thou view my steps, too feebly bent
 Unto the goal where endless honors lie,
And terrible in thy great power didst shroud
 In rayless darkness all my earthly sky.

Now from the night of dim despair I raise
 My head, long bowed in anguish deep, severe,
And view beyond the darkness hovering down,
 A sky lit up with heaven's radiance clear.

And faith renews her flame within my breast,
 Burning serenely while she bids me raise,—
Though tempests howl and night hours linger still,
 Unto the all ruling power,—a song of praise;

Praise that the hand of might that guides vast worlds
 In mercy bows, then lifts earth's frail worms up,—
Praise that he guards the flickering flame, and gives E'en Achor's* valley for a door of hope.

Praise unto Him whose wondrous power e'en now
 Turns back my death bound feet to life again;
And to this mortal frame, of health imparts
 A portion fair, for dire disease and pain.

All praise to thee, my God, I daily cry,
 And lift my joyful song the while I prove,
Though earth doth fail, thy ever faithful word,
 The resurrection power in might and love.

O, Giver great of every perfect gift,
 Both joy and grief shall bring sweet peace to thee;
We'll trust and praise thee through all time, and through
 The circlings endless of eternity.

So. Sodus. CARRIE HILL.

REPORT OF PROGRESS.

From Maine to Canada; Wells, Me., and the Methodists; Kennebunk Port; Biddeford; Portland; Yarmouth; G. T. R. R.; Canada once more; A long walk at midnight; Barnston; Appointment at Way's Mills. The Baptist minister at Barneston; Preaching for the Baptists.

Since our last was written, we have enjoyed the privilege of meeting with a few of the choice ones who are waiting for the Lord at Wells, Me. We arrived there Sept. 28th, and remained over the Lord's day. We received a hearty welcome from Bro. and Sister Dow and their daughter, and were invited to the freedom of their home. It was a good home. Nothing stinted about the privileges. We enjoyed a good horse at our disposal, with the opportunity of visiting the beach, where old ocean roars out his deep bass anthem, reminding us of the ages of eternity, where one cycling wave is like another, as though rolling out of itself in endless duration.

To us a visit to the ocean is full of interest. We seem to get nearer the high and holy, the Almighty, infinite Father, when we approach the far-stretching, expansive, blue deep, which he holds in the hollow of his hand. We thought of the treasures that have been committed to the billows; of the stately ships that have gone down, down the fathomless depths, with their crews of human beings, who now are keeping their dead watch below; and like a mighty inspiring power came to us the sublime declaration of the seer of Patmos, when he saw the throne of judgment set, and the sea gave up the dead that were in it; and we felt an earnest longing to see the day when, standing by those old billow-tossed shores, we might behold the great deep, in obedience to the Almighty's mandate, bearing to the shore all who now sleep in duress vile in his caverns, alive and ready for the judgment. And then we looked forward to another period, when John's prophetic eye saw "no more sea," and there will be no more sea of water, but in that land of blessedness it will be as the poet tells us—

"The glory of God, like a boundless sea,
Will bathe that immortal company."

That sea will never engulph and drown human beings as thou, old hoary sea, hast done.

Lord's day, Sept. 30th, we preached by invitation in the Methodist pulpit, and with good liberty. There is sometimes some embarrassment in preaching in pulpits where the interpretation of the word is so radically different, where almost always we must give expositions that are not those endorsed and approved by the denomination for whom we preach. We do not feel specially obligated, when invited to preach thus, to take subjects directly opposed to the tenets of these denominations. We do not feel condemnation if we do not give them the strongest meat we have; but we must preach consistently with our convictions of truth, and we did on that occasion, and received some hearty responses in so doing. We generally receive courteous attention from the ministers of the sects whom we meet, and are glad when we find those who love Christ more than creed, and can labor with christians, forgetting what their name may be.

This minister seemed of that sort, and as he gave us his hand with a hearty shake when after a good free time in a prayer meeting, he said, "Bro., I wish we could labor here together in a protracted meeting; I think we might have a revival." We should have been pleased to do so had circumstances permitted; as nothing pleases us more than to labor with God's faithful servants for the salvation of poor, precious, dying sinners; but we will be free in Christ to preach his truth, and if we can not do it in the pulpits of the churches, we will go out into the highways and hedges.

We returned home with Bro. Dow and family, and on the following day he kindly made and gave wife a good, substantial pair of shoes, serviceable for pilgrims' wear as we journey over the world's highway. Bro. D. then took us to Kennebunkport, where we remained two evenings, and enjoyed a pleasant time with the brethren there. We took the stage and went on to Biddeford, where we spent two evenings more, and then Bro. Libby's express took us to the depot, and we went on to Portland, where we spent the Lord's day, Oct. 7th.

We had never visited the brethren in Portland before; and though we did not feel well satisfied with our preaching, we enjoyed the society of the brethren very much. It is true that we seldom preach to our own satisfaction. It takes a great amount of egotism to to make a man self-sufficient as to his preaching ability; and sometimes, when in addition to this dissatisfaction one feels there are embarrassing trials, it is hard work to preach; but Paul's plan of glorying in infirmities is a good one, and we feel a pleasure in doing duty under the most trying circumstances, knowing that even then our labor shall not be in vain in the Lord. The brethren in Portland supplied us liberally with means to go forward on our journey, and we left them grateful that they had not let the poor pilgrims go without means to provide for their present wants.

Winter is coming, and we have neither overcoat, flannels, shawl, cloak, furs, or other winter garments; but we will gladly suffer from cold and snow, as the Lord wills, expecting soon to be where want will be unknown.

Tuesday evening, Oct. 9th, we spoke to a small congregation in Yarmouth, Me. We spent the night with Bro. Humphrey's pleasant family, and enjoyed some happy interviews with Bro. and Sr. York, and Bro. and Sr. Bailey. We were sorry to find Sr. Bailey's health feeble. O how many of God's dear ones know by experience what suffering means. They share largely in the results of the fall, but how patient and uncomplaining they are. It is blessed, as we are called often to witness these sacred scenes of suffering, to learn of these patient ones, whom God so blesses with his wondrous sustaining grace, the way to trust and not be impatient, but lean on Jesus and find sweet repose. The sick room is the most profitable to us of all the places we visit, and we can well afford to turn aside from all other scenes to sit there for awhile, and appreciate the beautiful lines of Dr. Young, who tells us that "The chamber where the good man meets his fate,

Is privileged beyond the walks of common life,
Quite on the verge of heaven."

Wednesday, Oct. 10th, we took the cars once more for a long ride of nine hours for Canada, to visit Sr. McKinstry's friends, and preach as duty should require. We have spent several years in the Canadian dominions preaching the word, and laboring while thus preaching, like Paul, with our hands. There are many good brethren and sisters in Her Majesty's dominions, who love the appearing of Jesus; and the prospect of meeting them and friends in the flesh, made our long ride quite tolerable. We arrived in Coaticook at eleven o'clock P. M.; and finding no team in waiting for us (those whom we expected to meet us having come at the wrong time and left), we had but one course to pursue. Money we had none, so we could not go to the inn; and there were no brethren very near the station; so we decided to take a midnight walk home, a distance of nine miles. The road lay through forests, among farms, and through one small village. The winds moaned through the trees, black clouds floated over head, and heavy night reigned unrivaled. The people about us were wrapped in deep slumber; but we felt quite prepared for the walk, after the long ride, and so wife and self sang some pilgrim songs, and beguiled our journey by repeating some sweet prose. Dangers walk in the darkness, but God protected his people; and we knew that though in these last days men lie in wait for blood, and often break out in their evil work, yet God would protect, and we would trust him and not be afraid. There was nothing to disturb us, and we arrived at our destination safely before the break of day, glad to find friends well, and to greet them once more.

We had the privilege of speaking on two Lord's days at Way's Mills, where we have previously met the dear waiting ones, and we enjoyed blessed gospel liberty in speaking, and pleasant christian communion. We did not go empty away. We also formed a pleasant acquaintance with Bro. Nott, the Baptist minister of the place (Barnston). He invited us on two or three occasions to speak for him. We did so, and although at such times we do not feel bound to say what we know is contrary to the creed of the churches where we are, and give them the strongest meat we have; yet we will not shrink from the truth, but, God helping, we will speak it in love and righteousness; and so on these occasions we presented practical subjects, and used the literalistic system of exposition, when it came in our way. We also preached in the neighborhoods where Advent ministers do not often go, and tried to preach truth and get the people interested in being ready for the coming of Jesus. O for the deep, solemn conviction of the great truths of these days, and a vigilant wakefulness to duty, and a sweet communion with God, so that when Jesus comes we may be ready.

NUMBER THIRTY-FOUR.

CAPTIVITY OF THE TEN TRIBES.

After the separation of the ten tribes from the house of David, when Jeroboam established his reign over them, they continually provoked the Lord with their idolatry. Jeroboam was a prince of iniquity, who taught Israel to sin, and led them into all the revolting ways of the heathen, till every mountain height was crowned with an idol altar, and every grove was profaned with incense burned to the gods of Moab and Ammon.

Still further to prevent the tribes from going up to Jerusalem to worship, this wicked prince set up golden calves in Dan and Bethel, at the extremes of his kingdom, where the people were commanded to offer sacrifice. In this manner the heart of Israel was turned away from Jehovah. The thunders of Sinai were forgotten, the commandments there given were cast aside, and the worship of the golden gods of a wicked king substituted.

Ere long that nation, for whom the Lord had performed such wonders, was on the high and broad road of idolatry, a system as dark and revolting as any nation around them that had never known the true God. The conduct of this nation seems strange, in the light of all that had been done for its advancement by the direct interposition of heaven, but, alas! human nature is strange and perverse still; it has only changed in kind.

The idolatry of Jeroboam, the wickedness of Ahab, and the abominations of Jezebel, had rendered Israel more abominable in the sight of the Lord than the heathen who had never known his name. Heaven had long borne with this nation. Generation had come and gone, king had succeeded king, still no ray of returning piety could be discovered. The kings and the people had been admonished by prophets, the divine commission had been unheeded. They had been punished by the successful invasions of their enemies, by the curtailment of their power and territory; still they turned not from the worship of the graven gods.

But this could not always be; man could not always defy heaven with his mad disobedience. The Lord had threatened to cast Israel out of his sight forever, if his counsel was not heeded. At last the cup of iniquity was full. Then the powerful Assyrians came, led by Shalmaneser, and besieged Samaria, the capital, for three years. The land of Israel was overrun by the enemy. The hills and the valleys swarmed with the Assyrians. Their advance was hardly resisted, for the Lord no longer fought for Israel. Victory no longer perched upon the banner of the tribes, as in the days of Joshua, when the nations fled before the thunderbolts of heaven.

At length Samaria, the heaven-defying city, bowed her stubborn head before the Assyrian foe. Her proud walls were thrown down, and her idol fanes were destroyed. Prince, priest and people were involved in one common fate. The ten tribes, who had revolted long time before from the more fortunate house of David, were transplanted as captives into the cities of the Medes, where the river Gozan winds its course through vale and plain, or where Chebar hastens to join the Euphrates. There they were left, far from the land of their fathers, to be lost and scattered among the nations. The Lord had rejected them, and cast them out of his presence forever. Their own land, the cities they once had inhabited, the homes they once had loved, and around which all their fondest recollections lingered, all, all were given to strangers of other and far off lands to dwell in.

Sad fall of a great people; yet they justly merited the punishment; they had rejected the God of their fathers, and they in turn were cast off. What finally became of this rejected people still remains a mystery. We catch a glimpse of them in the somewhat obscure book of Tobit, after which the wave of oblivion sweeps over them, and they are lost to our view forever. What their fate was we know not; whether they became absorbed by the Medes and Assyrians among whom they went as captives, and were with them overwhelmed in the wars that succeeded, or whether they escaped to still remoter climes, and still survive under the mask of changed circumstances and changing centuries, we have no means of knowing.

Thus we see a great nation pass away from the light of history. Its rulers seemed to have forgotten the glorious days of its rising power, had forgotten to lean on that arm of strength that had brought Israel out of bondage, and led the people for weary years thro' the desert to the land of promise. Alas for the tribes! how had their glory changed, how had their strength become weakness; when the foe came their walls alone could defend them for a time. The senseless gods to whom they madly offered sacrifice were deaf to all entreaty. And even if they did perchance breathe a prayer to Jehovah in the hour of their sore need, it was too late, they were doomed to the power of the conqueror, doomed in other lands to wander and lose their nationality.

They had worshiped long at the shrine of

"Moloch, horrid king, besmeared with blood
Of human sacrifice and parents' tears."

But Moloch so faithful served, heeded not the distress of his devotees, and Samaria was strewn with the ashes of desolation.

A BIRTHDAY MEDITATION.

DEAR READER:—I am this day ninety years of age, and am nearly past manual labor; therefore, for these four years past, on my birthday, I have written a short treatise on my former discoveries and apprehensions, to lay before the public for their consideration. I have set before them the contingent emotions that had taken place during my pilgrimage; the turnings and overturnings, the optimates—the great men, signs and wonders of a serious and peculiar nature, almost too wonderful to relate, yet strictly true. I spoke of the darkening of the sun and of the moon, the falling of the stars from heaven, wars and rumors of wars, the consternation and rebellion in our own country; and thus taking all these signs and wonders into consideration, and comparing them with the prophecies given us by the prophets of old, and the signs of the times, have caused many to believe and aver that Christ is soon coming to judge the earth, and set up his kingdom here according to his promise.

Now I would ask, who can dispute the philosophy of their opinions? However this may prove, either pro or con, who can gainsay but there is something to take place on the earth remarkably surprising; something more than has ever yet taken place since the creation of the world. And we all know we ought to prepare ourselves to meet these commotions and emergencies. We all know there is much evil in the world for us to encounter and war against. I presume the greatest difficulty lies here: the huge enemy of our souls, ever since the day of his fallen state, has been trying to ensnare and lead astray the children of God. And it seems now, as he knows his time to be short, and time is drawing near to a close, that he is in a two-fold sense trying to lead us to destruction. In this respect, he is raising up a sect, or combination, to destroy the efficacy of the Bible, in which we put our whole faith for our souls' salvation. In this present year, 1866, thus far there has been a peculiar excitement all over the world concerning what is to take place after so much tumult, war, bloodshed, and tyranny. This satanic sect, that is now set up to destroy the efficacy of the Bible, we consider to be the most artful scheme that Satan could invent or devise to ensnare us. Its intention is to destroy the gospel of Christ, if possible. There are distinguished scientific men in this work, as well as demons. And by such the adversary of souls chooses to carry on his work. Yet they take in any one who will willingly lift a finger in the cause. Therefore, we must be on our guard, lest we take the manifestations of those demons and great men for truth.

The high and learned are as apt to fall into error as the lower class of people; and perhaps more so. Noticing the movements around us, we cannot avoid the conviction that this is a peculiar day in which we live. The world seems to be in arms at the present day, for either good or evil; therefore, if we would wish to secure our souls' salvation, let us choose the good instead of the evil.

In conclusion, let me specially ask, What shall we do under all these trials and conflicts that beset us? The question is easily answered. Trust in the merits of our blessed Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and he will deliver us from all those fiery darts and shafts of the adversary, and land us in due time on the shore of eternal bliss; for he has promised in his word, that can never fail, to save all those who shall serve him and keep his commandments. Yea, he has promised them eternal life in his celestial abode, which the gates of hell can never prevail against.

Dear reader, let us look well to these things, for there is no name given under heaven among men, whereby we can be saved, but in and through the name and merits of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. I beseech all those who shall chance to read this, to give heed to it, that they may secure to themselves their souls' salvation, for the day is far spent, and the night is fast approaching, wherein no man can work. In accordance therewith, the Scriptures plainly teach us that "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest."—Eccl. 9: 10.

I NEED THEE.

I need thee, blessed Jesus,
 For I am full of sin;
My soul is dark and guilty,
 My heart is dead within.
I need thee, cleansing fountain,
 Where I may always flee;
The blood of Christ most precious,
 The sinner's only plea.
CHORUS.—I need thee,
 I need thee, I need thee.

I need thee, precious Jesus,
 For I am very poor;
A pilgrim and a stranger,
 I have no earthly store.
I need the love of Jesus
 To cheer me on my way,
To guide my doubting footsteps,
 To be my strength and stay.

I need thee, precious Jesus,
 I need a friend like thee;
A friend to soothe and sympathize,
 A friend to care for me.
I need the heart of Jesus,
 To feel each anxious care;
To tell my every trouble,
 And all my sorrows share.

I need thee, precious Jesus,
 For I am very blind;
A weak and foolish wanderer,
 Of dark and evil mind.
I need thy cheering presence,
 To tread the thorny road,
To guide me safe to glory,
 To bring me home to God.

A GLIMPSE OF GLORY.

O for more of the Holy Spirit. We want to be cleansed from all sin; we want to be pure and holy. It is our desire to be free from all sin, and from all appearance of evil. For the great day of the Lord is at hand, and unless we are clean we shall not be able to stand. "Behold the Judge standeth before the door." Therefore let us not judge one another any more, but leave judgment to him to whom it belongs. Let us bear patiently the trials of our present lot, for the time of deliverance is at hand. "Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth near." See the glorious land of rest, the home, the eternal home of the saints. The light is "like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal." And the city is pure gold, like unto clear glass. And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. "And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl; and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass."

O, what like this can move the soul to raptures! The glory of that blest abode into which we expect so soon to enter! There we shall see the King in his beauty. Let us praise his name forever. "Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." —2 Cor. 7: 1. SUSAN S. CHAMBERLAIN.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

BRO. GRANT:—The gospel of Christ is still the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth; and wherever and whenever preached faithfully, looking to the Lord for his blessing, good results will follow. For the promise is still good: "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the age." Holding fast to the promise, I am still in the faith, and intend by the grace of God to labor till the Master comes.

I left Alton Bay at the close of the meeting (which was one of profit to me), to fill an appointment with the little flock at Natick, Mass. Held meetings through the week and over Sunday. Preached on the Common at five o'clock, from Rev. 6: 17. Bro. Wyman, from the West, preached in the evening. May the good Lord bless this little band, and make them faithful. This is a new field, and the brethren here meet a good deal of opposition; but I trust they with us have learned to bear reproaches for Christ's sake.

Sept. 13th, left for Kennebunkport, where I had an engagement. Found a full house, and made the acquaintance of Brn. Mitchell and Emery, who are engaged in sounding the alarm. Preached here on Friday evening and over Sunday, to a good audience, and there was much interest. Three or four rose for prayers in the evening, who made up their minds to forsake sin and turn to God. Monday evening, preached on the kingdom of Israel, and on Tuesday evening, on the new covenant. In these subjects the brethren seemed much interested. Wednesday, 19th, started for Yarmouth, to fill an appointment for Bro. Emery; but the evening being wet and muddy, there was no meeting. Spent the time very pleasantly with Bro. and Sr. Wellcome.

Thursday, took the train for Lewiston. Arrived safe, though somewhat sick, and very hoarse. I commenced again to work for the Lord. Held meetings every evening for two weeks. This is an interesting field of labor. I came here last July for the first time. The state of religion was very low; the brethren seemed to be crushed in spirit, and their confidence almost gone; but I trusted in the Lord, and soon found he was ready to bless. The first meeting I held here there were only thirteen out, but I called on the Lord for help, and continued to labor for souls, and he heard prayer and sent the good Spirit to warm up the frozen affections of his children. The meetings became more and more interesting until now. Blessed be the Lord for all his mercies.

The brethren here have hired a hall, for the permanent worship of the Lord, and all are working in earnest for the Master. Some from the other churches have embraced the truth, and come out, which brought a shower of abuse upon my head. A Rev. gentleman paid me quite a compliment in a conversation I had with him. In speaking of our "sect," as he termed it, he classed us with Spiritualists, Universalists, infidels, and, in fact, with every thing that was bad: street preachers, loafers around inns and shops, breakers up of churches, and corrupters of the morals of community. I asked him if he meant to be personal in his remarks. He answered,—

"If you are one of those annihilationists, I mean it for you."

I asked him, if he thought us in such error, to try and set us right by giving us the light; but he "had better business to attend to. If I wanted to discuss I would find plenty of street loafers to discuss with." So, bidding him good morning, I remarked I had long since learned to suffer reproach for Christ's sake.

Since my return to Lewiston, the brethren have formed a church, taking the Bible for their creed, and adopting our covenant, making character, not creed, the test of fellowship. But some of the brethren seem to think confusion and disorder preferable to order and system, and stand aloof, fearful of the "mark of the beast," as they are pleased to term it. But since they came in gospel order, the Lord has blessed them. Our meetings have been spiritual in the true sense of the word. They have been crowded, and sinners have been convicted. God has heard their cry and sent deliverance, and on Sunday, Oct. 17th, I buried five in baptism, and in the afternoon gave them the right hand of fellowship, and added them to the church. May the Lord in mercy grant that they may be saved in the kingdom of God.

This was truly a happy day for God's children. In the evening we commemorated the Lord's death and sufferings. This was the crowning blessing. It was a duty long neglected. God's children wept for joy. But my trial was to come; when those children, just baptized, filled with the love of God, coax and pray you not to leave them. But duty calls, and we must obey. But I would say to those lambs of the flock, may the great Shepherd keep you in the hollow of his hand. Above all, watch and pray, lest you enter into temptation. God knows I love you, and speak to you as to my own children. Keep yourselves in the love of God. You shall have my prayers. Only be faithful till Jesus comes. Remember, the crown of life is for you if faithful, and may the good Lord send you men who shall watch for your best interests; who will build up and not tear down; who will preach Christ and not self. May the Lord bless you. Amen.

Monday, Oct. 8th, left Lewiston for Bath to fill an appointment there. Arrived late, but found the brethren assembled in their chapel waiting. Preached from Matt. 7: 7. A free time. Some said it was meet in season. Preached on Tuesday evening, from Jno. 3: 14. Not many out, as the other churches have united for a revival interest. Preached Wednesday evening, from 1 Thess. 4: 16. A good time. Much good feeling was manifested. The little band here are praying for a revival of the work of the Lord. May He wake up the people. Oh! how much depends upon our being faithful. Time is short. Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation.

Took the boat Thursday evening for Boston, to fill an appointment at Natick. From here I shall go to Rhode Island, where I shall labor the greater part of the winter. Brethren wishing me to preach for them, will address me at Natick, Mass., in care of J. N. Shattuck, Box 195. J. M. MUHLIO.

For the World's Crisis.

I LOVE THE TRUTH.

I can heartily endorse what Sister Weaver has said about loving the truth, and wish to say to the readers of the Crisis that I too love the truth, and cannot compromise it with error. Neither can I in presenting it to the people round off the corners, and polish it up to make it look attractive, for fear of offending those who hate and despise it. Nor can I do it up in sweetmeats in order to make it palatable, that those who swallow it are made none the wiser for it afterward. Again I cannot, when preaching it, tell the people that it makes no difference whether they believe it or not, if they are only honest. When I go where they have been having a little revival, and hear the converts get up and tell about going to heaven at death, I am inclined to think that the brethren have neglected to preach the truth as they should. O, brethren, let us preach the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and God will take care of the consequences. When sinners are converted under our labors, let us try to get enough of the truth into them, so that they will not be drawn where they will freeze to death. Again, I say, I love the present truth, and God blesses me in preaching it. Praise his name.

THE STAR SHOWER IN THE MEDITERRANEAN.

In our article on the great Star Shower in Europe (in the Crisis of Dec. 12), it was intimated that further accounts from the continent would probably tell of grander displays of celestial fireworks in Southern and Eastern Europe on the 14th of November than those seen in the north. The last arrival of London papers contain descriptions of the shower as witnessed in the Mediterranean, which seem to confirm that expectation. We give these descriptions below, prefacing them with a few additional statements as to the grandeur of the display in Great Britain.

A scientific observer on the sea coast states in the London Times, that the meteoric discharges emanating from Leo, as seen from his point of observation between 1: 15 and 2: 30, were at the rate of "at least three in every second of time, or 13,500 in one hour and a quarter," which corresponds very nearly with the estimate of Prof. Grant of Glasgow; while many observers in other places assert that, from their points of observation, they were too numerous to be counted.

Says a correspondent of a New York paper, writing from London,—"As soon as the clock struck twelve, the first avant courier appeared to herald the approach of the fiery host, following closely behind. One by one, at first, the meteor train commenced; then multiplied and multiplied, until at last the whole expanse of air and sky seemed burning with the blaze of meteoric stones. It was truly a glorious sight."

"It would be impossible," says a writer in the London Times, "to exaggerate the grandeur of the heavens between one and three o'clock. It appeared to be as if thousands of rockets were being discharged in every part." Herschell, the astronomer, calls it a "splendid shower of meteors," "most beautiful to behold, if not almost too wonderful and too surprising to describe." But to the accounts from the Mediterranean:

An observer in Malta, writing to the London Times, gives "a few particulars of this truly wonderful phenomenon," which he denominates a "prodigious shower of meteors," as it appeared in the Mediterranean, on the 14th of November, "according to the calculations and prognostications of astronomers." We quote as follows:—

"About midnight they began to fall in great numbers. From half-past one till after two, when the shower was at its maximum, there was scarcely a part of the visible heavens that was not brilliantly illuminated by the beautiful fiery shower.

"The scene was then truly grand and imposing. Fireballs and shooting stars darted from east to west across the sky with immense velocity, describing large arcs, and leaving in their paths splendid luminous trains or bands (nearly white, and sometimes of red and blue), which remained visible for a considerable time.

"The night was extremely calm and clear, so that the glancing balls and fiery bands were beautifully and vividly displayed against the clear, dark blue sky. The shower continued from midnight till 3 A. M., and during that time many thousands of meteors must have fallen within the range of our vision. Many of them were of startling size and brightness.

"The scene was one of the most sublime that I ever beheld. In fact, it was far beyond anything I ever expected to see, and it would be presumptuous in me to attempt a description. We could only continue to gaze in delighted wonder, and utter exclamations of surprise and admiration. I am quite sure that no person who witnessed the strange phenomenon will ever cease to remember it with feelings of astonishment and pleasure."

The following account from another observer in Malta appears in the same paper:—

"At 2 A. M., on the 14th inst., I was called by my brother officers to see the shooting stars. On reaching the roof of the house, the spectacle presented by the heavens was certainly most remarkable. Flashes of light appeared to traverse the firmament in various directions and in such rapid succession that they seemed quite innumerable. No two crossed each other or moved in opposite directions. All seemed to emanate from the same region—in Leo; from this centre they appeared to diverge (and pass off to different points of the compass.) They were not confined to any limited area of the firmament, but appeared in all directions, from the zenith to the horizon. It continued about four hours, commencing at 1 A. M., and lasting until five o'clock, but the greatest maximum occurred between two and three o'clock.

"Our lowest computation of their number was 200 per minute, but in all probability they were passing at the rate of 500 or 600 a minute (30,000 to 40,000 an hour). It was quite impossible to count them. As three or four observers expressed themselves,—'It was like a shower of hail.' An old soldier of twenty years service stated that he had never before witnessed so strange a sight."

This is the fourth grand shower of stars which have fallen "like showers of hail in a hail storm," since the darkening of the sun in 1780. The first was seen in America in 1799, the second in Europe and Asia in 1832, the third and grandest in America in 1833, and the fourth in Europe the present year, 1866. It is a singular fact that these all occurred on the nights of the 12th, 13th, and 14th of November. The period between these grand displays appears to be thirty-four years. The first in Europe was in 1832, Nov. 13th, and the next in 1866, Nov. 14th,—thirty-four years and one day apart. Those in America were on the 12th November, 1799, and 13th November, 1833,—thirty-four years and one day apart. There is therefore, it appears to me, good reason to expect another display in America at the expiration of another thirty-four years,—that is on the night and morning of the 13th–14th of November, 1867. This will doubtless be the grandest and most startling of them all, and the last the world will ever see before the Lord comes.

FROM BEULAH.

BRO. GRANT:—I am fourteen years old. I have been in this good cause one year, and am still trying to be good, although I have trials and temptations to encounter; but the Lord says, "my grace is sufficient for thee." I do mean, by God's grace assisting me, to prove faithful, that at last I may hear it said unto me, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." I do expect in a little while to see Jesus, and then we shall see those loved ones who have been laid away, where we never more shall part. Thank the Lord for the blessed promises, that those who "sleep in Jesus will God being with him." I will try from day to day to live better, and do every duty, and at last be saved in his everlasting kingdom. BEULAH M. WHITEHEAD.

Wallingford, Ct.

Thank the Lord, Beulah, for what he has done for you. We are glad you have written. Yes, "in a little while" "we shall see those loved ones" that are now sleeping in Jesus. It will be a joyful time, when you again greet your dear father in the everlasting kingdom. It was sad news to the children of the Lord, when they heard he was dead. They remember the sweet songs he used to sing at the camp meeting. We little thought when we met and parted on the camp-ground at Wilbraham and Alton Bay, that we should hear his voice no more in this world. It does not seem as though he was dead, and sleeping in the dark grave. May the Lord help you to be good, and be ready to meet Jesus when he comes to gather the faithful ones. Love to your mother, and all the family.—EDITOR.

FORGIVENESS.

School was over, and the scholars had gone. I sat at my desk, thinking over the events of the day. Suddenly stopping my meditations, I saw a boy standing in the door. He started toward me, and then turned backward. Again, with a rapid step, he advanced, and threw himself into a low seat by my side.

"What is it, Willie?" I asked, as I looked upon his tear-stained face.

Fast falling tears were his only answer. Trying to comfort him in his secret sorrow, I placed my hand tenderly on his bowed head, and asked again—

"Willie, will you not tell me what troubles you?"

He sobbed aloud, and laying his head upon my lap, said, in broken accents—

"Oh, teacher, I don't feel fit to look at you, or to speak to you, because I disobeyed you to-day. Will you forgive me?"

"I forgive you freely, my child. I will remember it no more."

"But you cannot love me as you used to," was the sad reply.

"Willie," I said, (with difficulty keeping back my own tears,) "I never loved you as I now do. Your repentance has endeared you to me more than I can express."

Willie went home happy, and I thought, as I heard him singing far down the road, "this is a lesson for me." How often have I disobeyed my Savior, and felt ashamed to go to him with my confession. How often, when bowed in his presence, I have said, "I am not fit to speak to him, or even to approach him. Surely he cannot love me again, I have erred so often and so sadly."

Now, I thought, do I forgive Willie so freely and love him even better than before his sin, and shall I doubt that my Savior will forgive me, if I humbly ask him? Can I, an erring child, be more forgiving than my heavenly Father?

Thus, through my own affections, God taught me a lesson of his love. I, too, went home with a happy heart, singing as I went.

"Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him."—S. S. Times.

BY-AND-BY.

Here is a bit of poetry which we recommend all our young friends to learn by heart:

There is a little mischief-making
 Elfin, who is ever nigh,
Thwarting every undertaking,
 And his name is BY-AND-BY.
What we ought to do this minute,
 "Will be better done," he'll cry,
"If to-morrow we begin it"—
 "Put it off," says BY-AND-BY.

Those who heed his treacherous wooing
 Will his faithless guidance rue;
What we always put off doing,
 Clearly, we shall never do;
We shall reach what we endeavor,
 If on Now we more rely;
But unto the realms of Never Leads the pilot BY-AND-BY.

THE BURDEN BEARER.

A man, and a little boy about five years old—possessing the self-importance and self-will which are often seen in childhood—were walking homeward from a certain town; the former carrying a parcel. Presently his little companion said, "Please let me carry the parcel?"

"O, no; you are not strong enough."

"I can carry it very well, I'm sure," said the child, too eager to play the man.

"My dear child, 'tis too large for you."

"No, no, please let me have it."

"I tell you it is too large and heavy for you."

"O, no; I can carry it. Please let me have it;" using his best endeavors to lay hold on the parcel.

"Very well; you have determined it. The parcel is no burden to me; but I tell you again, it is too large and heavy for you; but as you will have it, here it is."

For about a minute he carried it most manfully.

"Ah," said his friend, "you don't mind what the people at the windows say of me! For aught you know, they may say, 'What a shame! See—that little weak boy is carrying a large parcel, and the strong man's hand is empty!' but you would have your own will!"

The little boy turned the too heavy burden over to the other arm. His friend appeared not to notice this, but said:

"Nothing short of your own will, you know, would satisfy you!"

He then turned the conversation. Back went the burden to the other arm again; but pride made no complaint. His friend talked of this and that, the relatives and friends of the child, the weather, and so on; while the little wearied one changed perpetually the self-imposed load from arm to arm. At last he said:

"It is very heavy."

"I told you so before you took it."

"It is very heavy, indeed!"

"I told you it was too heavy, and yet you would have it."

"It is very—heavy—too heavy; will you —please—carry it?"

"Surely I will! Why did you not ask me before?"

This occurred nearly twenty years ago. To this day the story serves to discipline the man who had the burdened child for his companion. It has helped him for these years to consider that it is better to roll the heavy burdens at once on God, who is the willing, the gracious burden-bearer, than carry heavy burdens one's self to God's dishonor.

It is one thing to be a ready servant of our heavenly Master; another, to carry burdens which "devour our strength," and which he never puts upon us.—The Witness.

SOME DIFFERENCE.

A few years ago, a little fellow, Eddy, not slow in roguery, complained that James had been throwing stones at him. The teacher inquired into the matter, and found the charge correct. She said to Eddy:

"What do you think you should do if you were teaching, and had such a boy as that?"

"I think I should flog him," was the reply.

Upon this, James began to fear the result, and so he filed in his complaint.

"Eddy throwed a stone at me t'other day," said he.

"Ah," said the teacher, "Is it true, Eddy, that you have been throwing stones at James?"

Eddy hung his head, and confessed it. After a little thumbing of the strings, she says:

"Well, Eddy, what do you think you should do with two such boys as you and James?"

"I think," said he, sobbing, "I should try 'em again!"—R. I. Schoolmaster.
